Nicol, Donald Ninian
Northcote,Hon. Sir H. Stafford
Parkes, Ebenezer
Pease, Alfred E. (Cleveland)
Pease, Arthur (Darlington)
Pease, Sir Joseph W. (Durham)
Phillpotts, Captain Arthur
Pierpoint, Robert
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretyman, Capt. Ernest George
Priestley,SirW.Overend(Edin.)
Pryce-Jones, Edward
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Rankin, James
Rasch, Major Frederic Carne
Renshaw, Charles Bine
Rentoul, James Alexander
Richardson, Thomas
Ridley, Rt. Hn.Sir MatthewW.
Ritchie, Rt. Hn.Chas.Thomson
Robinson, Brooke
Rothschild, Baron F. James de
Russell,Gen. F.S. Cheltenham)
Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
Saunderson, Col. Edw. James
Savory, Sir Joseph
Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
Seely, Charles Hilton
Seton-Karr, Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
Sidebottom, Wm. (Derbysh.)
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Smith, Abel (Herts)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Spencer, Ernest
Stanley, Lord (Lancs.)
Stanley, Edw. Jas. (Somerset)
Stephens, Henry Charles
Stewart,Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
Sutherland, Sir Thomas
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Talbot, John G. (Oxford Univ.)
Thorburn, Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Wm. Edw. Murray
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Usborne, Thomas
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. Howard
Warde, Lt.-Col. C. E. (Kent)
Waring, Col. Thomas
Warkworth, Lord
Warr, Augustus Frederick
Webster,SirR.E.(Isle of Wight)
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
Wharton, John Lloyd
Whiteley, George (Stockport)
Whiteley,H. (Ashton-under-L.)
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Col. R. (Dorset)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Willox, John Archibald
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wilson, J. W. (Worc'sh., N.)
Wilson-Todd, Wm. H. (Yorks.)
Wodehouse, Edmond R. (Bath
Wolff, Gustav Wilhelm
Wortley, Rt. Hn. C. B. Stuart-
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong

TELLERS FOR THE NOES, Sir William Walrond and Mr. Anstruther.

Words added.

Main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to.

Second Reading put off for six months.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday.

COUNTY COURTS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday 1st June.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC LOCAL VETO (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 2nd June.

JURORS' EXPENSES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

LAW OF LIBEL AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 30th June.

MERCHANT SHIPPING BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 30th June.

CEMETERIES RATING BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY (FOREIGN SHIPOWNERS) AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

COMMONS (REGULATION) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1894) AMENDMENT (No. 2) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 2nd June.

RIVERS POLLUTION PREVENTION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

POLICE PENSIONS AND SERVICE BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

COLONIAL SOLICITORS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

ESTATES TAIL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 18th June.

POOR LAW OFFICERS' SUPERANNUATION ACT (1896) AMENDMENT BILL.

Considered in Committee.

Clause 2,—

Committee report progress; to sit again To-morrow.

SUPPLY.

Committee deferred till Friday.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till Friday.

POLICE APPOINTMENT AND PROMOTION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

TRAWLERS' LICENSING BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday.

SMALLER DWELLINGS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND) ACT (1877) AMENDMENT BILL.

Considered in Committee.

Clause 1,—

Commitee report progress; to sit again To-morrow.

CONGESTED DISTRICTS BOARD (IRELAND) (COMPULSORY PURCHASE POWERS) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

MOTION.

MARRIED WOMEN (IRELAND).

Bill to amend the law relating to the Summary Jurisdiction of Magistrates in reference to married women in Ireland, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Maurice Healy and Mr. Dane; presented accordingly, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Monday next, and to be printed.—[Bill 261.]

GOVERNMENT OFFICES (APPROPRIATION OF SITES), 1896.

Ordered, That the Report and Evidence of the Select Committee on Government Offices (Appropriation of Sites), 1896, be referred to the Select Committee on Government Offices (Appropriation of Sites).—(Mr. Akers-Douglas.)

House Adjourned at Ten Minutes before Six o'Clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, 20th May 1897.

PROVISIONAL ORDER (SCOTLAND) BILL.

On the Order for the Second Reading of this Bill,

*LORD TWEEDMOUTH said he did not rise for the purpose of moving a hostile amendment, or to ask their Lordships to reject the Bill. He was deterred from taking this step not so much on account of the intrinsic value of the Bill, the acceptance which it was likely to meet with in Scotland, or the relief it was likely to afford to Private Bill procedure in Scotland, as from a recognition that the principles on which the measure was based were good and useful and should receive the assent of their Lordships. This Bill was one of a type too familiar of recent years—namely, a Bill founded on excellent principles which were generally accepted in the country, but often only recently adopted by supporters of the Government and agreeable to those who sat on his side of the House; and when the time came to translate these principles into a Bill they found that the work was undertaken in a timid and hesitating manner. The provisions of the Bill were so hedged in by checks and safeguards, the whole subject was so 'cribb'd, cabin'd, and confin'd,' that but little benefit was to be obtained from the principles, nor was any additional freedom conferred on those whom it was intended to benefit. He thought that Scotland had some reason to complain of the attention given by the Government to Scottish legislation. Members of the Government were very fond of pointing out the advance which their opinions had made in Scotland, but so far the Government had not been very ready to recognise that opinion in the shape of legislative coin. Last year Scotland got nothing; this year it had received the promise of a Bill dealing with Private Bill legislation; and he supposed Scotland had to accept this Bill as representing the fulfilment of that promise. He could hardly believe that when the paragraph on this point was inserted in the Queen's Speech this Bill was drafted, or was even in the minds of Ministers, because ths measure did not attempt to deal with Private Bill legislation affecting Scotland as a whole; it merely nibbled one corner of the subject. He thought that the Secretary for Scotland had shown no small amount of self-confidence in the basis he had taken for the Bill. In 1888 a strong and important Joint Committee of the two Houses sat on this subject, and after hearing much evidence and giving the subject careful consideration they agreed to a report. That report had been put aside altogether. His noble Friend had founded his Bill on a draft report presented to the Committee by himself, though he admitted that his noble Friend had the assent of three other colleagues on the Committee, Lord Colville, Sir Joseph Pease, and Lord Stalbridge. These Gentleman were well acquainted with the necessities of Private Bill legislation, but he thought that they looked at the subject rather from one point of view. They were closely connected with the greater Railway corporations, and it was known that the great Railway Companies had always considered that it was to their advantage to have all private Bills considered in London by Committees of the two Houses. They had always set themselves against any attempt to deal with these matters locally and by means of local bodies. That being the case he thought that his noble Friend should have shown a little suspicion of his supporters on the Committee. He would have done well to pay more attention to the report agreed to by the Committee rather than to have adopted the report presented by the chairman and set aside. He thought that the limited character of the Bill was well shown by its title. It was not even called a bill for dealing with Private Bill legislation. If he understood the use of a Provisional Order aright it was to allow a municipality or corporation through a Department the right to make use of the powers of an existing public Act. That seemed to him to be a very different thing from the requirements of a Private Bill which gave to a municipality or corporation powers which might be entirely novel and which were certainly not necessarily contained in any existing Act. In order to commend this new procedure to the House his noble Friend should have given a greater proof of the gain to be obtained from this Bill. He should have shown more clearly that the procedure would be more simple and less expensive The noble Lord gave no details as to the probable expense of the procedure. He should have shown also that it really would have done something effectual to relieve Members of Parliament from the burdens which at present were put upon them. In looking at the different stages which a Provisional Order or Private Bill would have to pass through he said that first of all notices would have to be given to all parties affected. Those preliminary proceedings were some of the most expensive parts of a Private Bill. Take the Glasgow Improvements Bill recently in the House of Commons. That was a Bill proposing to give the Glasgow Corporation power to deal with certain slums. It necessitated an enormous number of notices to owners and occupiers, even down to monthly tenants. These notices under an Order of the Court of Session regulating fees cost nine shillings each, and the total amount paid by the Glasgow Corporation for these notices alone was close on £1,000. One object of a Bill dealing with Private Bill legislation should be to try to cheapen its preliminary proceedings; and in this case notices might very easily have been sent out by post in registered letters to each individual at a cost of a few pence. He was told with regard to Sewerage, Gas, and Tramways Bills, similar notices were required to be given to all within a radius of 300 yards of the place where the gas works, tramway station, or sewerage place was to be erected, at a cost, also fixed by the Court of Session, of six shillings each. Thus they might have expected to find in this Bill that some process had been adopted of cheapening the preliminary stages in connection with matters only dealt with by Private Bills. Then copies of the Provisional Order had to be served out to all the Departments and laid before both Houses of Parliament. The Chairmen of Committees in both Houses next decided whether the subject was one which ought fairly to be dealt with in this Bill, or whether it should not be dealt with by Private Bill, under the old system. He imagined that this would involve the payment of certain fees to the two Houses. The next stage was that any opponent might claim to show cause before the tribunal composed of the two Chairmen of Committees and the Secretary for Scotland why the Question should not be dealt with under this Bill as a Private Bill. The opponents he imagined, would be entitled to appear before that tribunal by counsel. They would be able to bring their witnesses, and to take full advantage of that stage to show why the old system of procedure should be adopted rather than the new. The proposal having passed through this sifting process, then the Bill again came before the Secretary for Scotland, and he had the power either to refuse the proposal altogether, or he might direct an inquiry as to the propriety of assenting to the prayer of the Commission. That particular provision introduced a new stage in an unopposed Measure, because, as he read the clause, the Secretary for Scotland had no choice whatever except to refuse to allow the order to proceed or send it before the Commissioners for local inquiry. After the local inquiry had taken place, again the Order was reported to the Secretary for Scotland. Again he had the power of refusing it absolutely He had the power of confirming it, or confirming it with alterations, as might seem right to him, and then again, the Order, if so altered, had to be again lodged in all the departments, had again to be sent round to all people interested, and more time and expense in that way must necessarily be involved. After the Bill had received the Secretary for Scotland's sanction, any opponent might again come in. He might claim that instead of the Order receiving the sanction of the Secretary for Scotland by his mere fiat, there should be a confirming Bill in the Houses of Parliament. If that request were made the Secretary for Scotland was bound to introduce a confirming Bill in Parliament, and that Bill had to be referred to a Joint Committee of the two Houses of Parliament. Before that Joint Committee the whole procedure now in force before Private Bill Committees came into play. In all this he failed to see that there would be much saving in time or money, or any gain in simplicity of procedure, nor any great saving of labour to Members of Parliament as regards attendance on Committees. And for this reason, that they submitted the proposals under this Bill to a searching sifting in the earlier stages, a sifting that would cause most of the more important proposals to be treated as Private Bills and referred to select Committees of Parliament in the same way as at present. Again, would it be possible under this Bill to deal with a number of subjects in one Order, as in the case of an omnibus Bill? His noble Friend had shown ingenuity in setting up a kind of Committee of Selection, which was to select the panel from which Commissioners were to be chosen for local inquiries. If his noble Friend should succeed in finding a Committee of Selection which would have the same recognised authority as the Committee of Selection in the other House of Parliament he would deserve congratulations on his achievement, and he should be glad to help him in attaining it. He entered, however, a word of protest as to including a Sheriff or Judge on the Commissions. His own belief was that they should keep the legal element out of these Commissions altogether. They should be composed of men of affairs, and the nearer they could bring the local committee to the present constitution of Committees of Parliament the better would it be and the greater assent would there be to their decisions. He was sorry his noble Friend had not thought of a better way of obtaining the opinion of the burghs. The convention of Royal Burghs was theoretically an admirable body no doubt, but its views by no means commanded the assent of the whole of the burghs of Scotland, and, indeed, practically it had largely fallen into the hands of what he might call a clique. The fault he had to find with regard to the whole of the four members who were to act as a Committee of Selection—two being selected by conveners of counties and two by the Convention of Royal Burghs—was that all fonr would almost certainly belong to the Conservative Party. If they had such a Committee of Selection chosen entirely from one Party its decisions would not command the assent of the people of Scotland. Whether they chose rightly or wrongly it would be liable to criticism which would weaken the authority of the panel it would have to choose. What was to be the life of the Committee of Selection?

THE SECRETARY FOR SCOTLAND (Lord BALFOUR): Sub-section (d) of Section 4 is intended to cover that point. It is to be re-convened at the end of five years.

*LORD TWEEDMOUTH thought the point was not made clear. So far as appeared from the section the same four men chosen when the Act came into operation might go on to the end of all time. There had been no time since the Bill was introduced to gather any real expression of Scotch opinion with regard to it. He had endeavoured to do so, and as far as he had gathered it the general opinion of all parties was that the Bill was not sufficient, and would not satisfy the natural desires of the people of Scotland. He therefore appealed to the Secretary for Scotland to give up all idea of passing the Bill this Session. Let it be discussed and referred to a Select Committee, and after that go through its further stages; let the Bill as so amended remain before the country during the autumn, and then the House would be in a better position to deal with the subject next year. He could assure his noble Friend that he should be only too glad in a reasonable manner to give him all such assistance as he could desire, in obtaining a thoroughly good Measure for the reform of Scotch Private Bill procedure.

*THE EARL OF MORLEY (CHAIRMAN of COMMITTEES) said that he wished to acknowledge the courtesy of the noble Lord in showing him the Bill some time ago, together with the criticisms which he had received with reference to it. He could assure the noble Lord that any remarks which he might make upon the Bill, would be made in no unfriendly spirit. Of course the present system of Private Bill legislation was not ideally perfect. There were complaints, not only that it consumed too much of the time of Parliament—this did not apply to this House so much as to the House of Commons, though he found no burning desire on the part of the noble Lords to take part on Private Bill Committees; but also, and this was more important, as to the expense, delay, and inconvenience which was caused to promoters and opponents. In addition, with respect to Ireland and Scotland, there was the sentimental desire of the inhabitants of those countries to have their Private Bill legislation localised. He was strongly of opinion that with regard to Private Bill legislation generally, there were reforms which might considerably simplify and cheapen the procedure. He argued that it was very desirable, if possible, to shorten and cheapen the process of advertising and serving notices; but no noble Lord would desire that any person's property should be affected without due notice. ["Hear, hear!"] Then he believed that the system of Provisional Orders might be further extended with advantage. At present that system had been decidedly successful; but of course it covered only a small portion of ground of private legislation. He was very much struck with the increase of the application by small municipalities to Parliament for legislation. He would suggest to those who were responsible for the Local Government and Home Office administration, that some alteration and extension of the present Public Health Acts might render it absolutely unnecessary for many of these costly applications to be made. ["Hear, hear!"] As to the Bill itself, he looked upon it as a step in the direction of increasing the scope and field for Provisional Orders, and he should not be doing his duty if he did not explain to the House, what he thought the result of the Bill would be —and its scope was much wider than Lord Tweedmouth seemed to suppose. He should also suggest certain amendments, as at a later stage he would not be able to address the House. The normal system contemplated by the Bill was that Scotch Private Bills would be dealt with generally by the Secretary for Scotland and the Commission of Inquiry. There would be notices, and there was nothing in the Bill to prevent the Secretary for Scotland and his coadjutors from making such regulations as they thought fit for the issue of such notices. There would be Standing Orders which would have to be complied with, and an examiner to certify that they had been complied with. The Order would go through the local inquiry and then, if approved by the Secretary for Scotland, it became law and had the force of a statute. The only contact which these Orders in the normal state would have with Parliament was at two stages of their existence—at the tme of their birth and at the time that they assumed almost their final form, when they would be deposited in the Private Bill Offices. Bills not dealt with in this simple way would be brought before Parliament under two conditions. The first condition was when the Secretary of State and the Chairman of Committees of the two Houses should be of opinion that the Order ought to come before Parliament as an ordinary Private Bill; but in the first place an appeal to that effect should have been lodged by the promoters or by the opponents. He did not imagine that the hearings of these appeals would be expensive. The question would be decided by the Secretary for Scotland and the two Chairmen on reading the Bill, and any documents which they might call. Then again, before the Order assumed its final form, an opponent was to have an opportunity of petitioning the Secretary for Scotland and in that event the Order was to be referred to Parliament to go through the ordinary forms of a Provisional Order Bill, with this difference—that it would be submitted to a Joint Committee of both Houses instead of to a Committee of each House. The Joint Committee would have ample powers to give costs by a simple majority; and that would have a very deterrent effect upon petitioners. The effect of these proposals undoubtedly was to transfer in the case of all Bills that did not come before Parliament, all the power now vested in the Legislature to the Secretary for Scotland. ["Hear, hear"!] It was true that the Orders were to be deposited in the offices of the Chairmen of the two Houses. But the position of things now was that the Departments of the State reported to Parliament; and under these proposals that position of things would be reversed. The Chairmen would have power to report to the Secretary for Scotland, but there would be no obligation on him to attend to their recommendations. Therefore a large part of the power now vested in the Legislature would be transferred to a branch of the executive. Some persons were a little apt to leave out of sight the importance of the present procedure on unopposed Bills and the unopposed portions of opposed Bills. At present all such Bills were read before the beginning of the Session in the office of the Chairman of each House. They were noted, and the agents of the promoters were interviewed on the notes; and exception was taken to anything which appeared to be contrary to the public interest, to the practice of Parliament, or to the usual form in which Bills were presented. Points of the greatest importance almost always arose in connection with unopposed Bills, and under the proposals of Mr. Balfour neither he nor the Chairman of the House of Commons would have any opportunity of seeing the Reports of Public Departments or of interviewing the promoters and their agents. Their reading of the Bills must be much more perfunctory. Too much stress had been laid on the importance of the model Bills. They were good guides to the draftsman, but they were not intended to be rigid, and their clauses had to be adapted to new circumstances and combinations of circumstances. There was an important series of Bills this year—dealing with the laying down of electrical tramways—and with respect to these, very considerable alterations had been made in the model clauses. Then the model Bills by no means covered the whole ground of private Bill legislation. It was more important to keep to the established practice of Parliament, and to prevent provisions being put into Private Bills which ought not to be there. For instance, attempts were not infrequently made to introduce the punishment of imprisonment for a breach of the regulations of municipalities, and it had always been held that that was not a proper provision for Private Bills. Then, too, clauses were sometimes introduced extending the investments in which trustees might legally invest. All these questions were very important, they were hardly ever opposed, and they had to be dealt with with very great care and circumspection. But he would remind the House that, when he dealt with them as Chairman of Committees, he was absolutely responsible to Parliament. He was acting in large measure on the advice of an experienced legal adviser and on the reports of the public offices, and if his decisions or the decisions of the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons were wrong, they could always be appealed against in Parliament. That would not be the case with the Secretary for Scotland under this Bill, for the Bill placed him in a position much stronger and more irresponsible. There was another point in regard to the Secretary for Scotland's position—that was his relation to the other public departments. For instance, the Board of Trade had now power to issue Provisional Orders and pass confirming Acts through Parliament, though that power was limited to works the estimates of which did not exceed a certain sum. Under this Bill, as he understood it, the Secretary for Scotland would have power to order such works as the Board of Trade were now qualified to order, of any size, or of any importance; but he would not have the advantage of the expert advice which the Board of Trade enjoyed in those matters. He suggested to his noble Friend, whether it would not be possible to give within their own jurisdiction concurrent power to the Board of Trade to draw these Provisional Orders; otherwise he would be authorised to issue Orders dealing with larger matters than the Board of Trade, though he had neither the staff nor the experience to deal with them possessed by that Department. He would also remind the House that at present Bills were drawn by experienced agents, who were responsible to the House and to him for the manner in which the work was done. In future, if this Measure were passed, Bills would not be drawn by persons so experienced in Parliamentary practice and law. The result would be, that the Orders as presented to the Secretary for Scotland would require a good deal more careful revision and criticism than the Bills which were introduced into Parliament at the present time. He thought it was certain that discrepancies would arise between the Orders of the Secretary for Scotland and the Bills passed by Parliament. It was a question for Parliament to decide whether the simplification of procedure and the increased economy with which promoters would obtain their objects was not more than a compensation for this want of uniformity and this looseness of procedure. The only suggestion he could make whereby uniformity could be secured, and the control of Parliament, even in a slight degree, retained, was that all Orders, whether opposed or unopposed, should, as at present, pass through Parliament in confirming Bills, but if they had been before subject to local inquiry it should be contrary to the Standing Orders that at any stage in Parliament an opponent should appear against the Bill. He did not believe that would add to the cost or delay, and at any rate it would retain over these Bills a certain control on the part of Parliament, which would be capable of being exercised if occasion required. He was rather afraid that the noble Lord would say that this was contrary to the principle of his Bill. But he threw it out as a suggestion, and it was the only one he could make by which the control of Parliament could be retained to some extent without unnecessary expense. If that was not possible, he would at least suggest that the Secretary for Scotland should report to Parliament the proceedings taken in cases under this Bill. He was strongly in favour of the local inquiry as in matters of small moment a valuable method of getting at the truth; but in the case of large and important bills he did not expect much cheapness. He though it would be found by experience to be far more expensive to transport expert witnesses and legal advisers to distances from London and Edinburgh than it would be to transport non-expert witnesses to those centres. He did not think the experience of the Light Railways Commission was very promising in the matter of making local inquiries cheap. The panel from which the Commission was chosen was to consist of twelve men—six of them were to be versed in the matters to be dealt with and six were to be men of affairs. Was not the distinction too finely drawn between the two classes of Commissioners? He would suggest whether it would not be well to say "twelve competent persons." The second criticism he had to make in regard to the tribunal was more important. He doubted the desirableness of appointing a lawyer as Chairman of the Commission, especially one of such preponderating influence as a Judge or Sheriff. He suggested that it might be desirable on several grounds to attach a legal assessor to the Commission, who would both act as legal adviser to the Secretary for Scotland, and as a convenient medium of communication between him and the Chairmen of Committees of the two Houses of Parliament. Further, such an adviser would give some element of permanence to the Commission, for he would preserve its traditions, practices, and forms, and they were both numerous and important. Under Clause 7 it appeared to him doubtful whether the Secretary for Scotland would have any power to make modifications in an Order except those which were rendered necessary by the recommendation of the Commission; and he thought it was absolutely necessary that the Secretary for Scotland should have authority to introduce such modifications as might be required to bring a Bill into its proper and regular form. He would also like to point out to his noble Friend that under the Bill as at present the Chairmen of the two Houses would have no opportunity of seeing whether their suggestions as to Orders had been carried into effect or not. He wished to express his strong approval of the suggestion that after an Order had passed through the local inquiry it should only pass through one Committee in Parliament. He would, indeed, be very glad if eventually the system of Joint Committees of both Houses might have larger extensions than it had in this Bill. It would save a great deal of the time of Parliament, and also a great deal of expense on the part of suitors. Another point was that it rested with the opponents or the promoters of Bills to ask the Secretary of State that they should be introduced as Private Bills rather than as Orders. He ventured to think the Secretary of State or some one else ought to have the power on his own initiative to send a Bill as a Private Bill to Parliament. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not think it would occur in many cases. This year Scottish Private Bill legislation consisted altogether of 30 Bills, of which one related to a public company—and that was a class of Bill which he thought should be dealt with by Parliament—three related to large municipalities that were not included now in the Police of Scotland Act, 12 related to railways, and 14 to other matters. His own impression was that there were very few of these which would have come to Parliament; most of them would have come under the purview of the noble

Lord's Act, and, indeed, he thought a very large proportion of Scottish private legislation would be so dealt with. The effect undoubtedly would in all ordinary cases to transfer the legislative power from Parliament to the Secretary of State. He quite admitted that it was a very well considered attempt in the direction of the reform which was desired, and that it would very materially assist the Scottish suitors, especially in small and purely local matters. He could not help feeling, however, a little misgiving at so large a transference of power from the Legislature to the executive. ["Hear, hear!"] He confessed he should like to see some control in Parliament over the action of the Secretary of State for Scotland, and he saw none at all in this Bill. He should like to have seen the process of Scottish as well as English and Irish legislation cheapened and simplified, while retaining Parliamentary control, which might be exercised as the occasion arose, over that legislation. It would be interesting to see what the opinion of Scottish constituencies would be. The Bill was very important and far-reaching, because, if adopted, it would certainly be used as a precedent for other parts of the United Kingdom. He trusted his noble Friend would give them time to consider the provisions of such an important and complicated Measure. ["Hear, hear!"]

*The Earl of CAMPERDOWN said he concurred with almost every word that had fallen from the Chairman of Committees. He thought this Bill would have a larger effect and wider scope than seemed to be supposed. He wished to lay stress on the enormous power given by this Bill to the Secretary for Scotland. He quite agreed with the authors of the Bill that it was right to proceed by Provisional Order, and thought that was the only direction that was open to them. But this Bill went further, and placed in the hands of the Secretary for Scotland almost absolutely, and for the first time, the whole Private Bill business for Scotland. Hitherto the Secretary for Scotland, who, of course, changed with the Government, had had nothing whatever to do with Private Bill legislation, which had been in the hands of the two Houses, and particularly in the hands of the Chairman of Committees and the Chairman of Ways and Means. The two Chairmen, however, were placed by this Bill in a very secondary position. Even after an inquiry had taken place, the Secretary of State could refuse to issue an Order at all, and there was nothing to say that he was to give rhyme or reason for such action. He might also make modifications. He was then to send a copy of the Order to the two Chairmen, but there was no power, so far as he could see, to the Chairmen to make any alteration in the Order. He submitted that this control of Private Bill legislation was not a proper sphere at all for the Secretary for Scotland, who had ample occupation at the present time in the general supervision of public measures in Parliament, and in various very important executive duties. The powers which it was now proposed to give him would occupy his whole time, even if he were competent to deal with these matters, but he submitted the Secretary of State was not fitted to deal with them, and had no experience of anything of the kind. With regard to administrative work of this kind they had very considerable experience of the Secretary for Scotland as an official—he did not refer to the noble Lord himself—and that was by no means of a favourable character. [Laughter.] Moreover, the Chairman of Committees and the Chairman of Ways and Means were particularly well fitted to deal with this private business. He would suggest that the Secretary for Scotland should be excised almost entirely from this Bill; he referred particularly to the powers which were given him in Clause 7. Half of the members of the proposed tribunal were to be "persons versed in matters in respect of which Parliamentary powers were wont to be sought." If this meant lawyers or professional persons of some sort, he must enter a respectful protest against gentlemen of that kind being on a tribunal to decide matters of this kind. His personal experience, which he was sure would be confirmed by every Scotch Peer in the House who had anything to do with legal business in Scotland, was that an enormous amount of canvassing would be carried on by gentlemen anxious to have the six paid places for obvious reasons. In the first place, the position would give them a good deal of immediate business and some dignity, and if they obtained a position on the panel their own private business would be indirectly promoted. Everybody would feel that one of these gentlemen must be the person to employ. He would be regarded as a person very much thought of by his Lord Provost, or the Convener of his county, or the Secretary for Scotland. The proposed mode of appointment was all the worse because it was unnecessary. There were plenty of men of business and men of affairs who would be quite prepared to undertake the duties without being paid. Unpaid men were likely to be better than paid men. He hoped this portion of the Bill would be given up in Committee. He deprecated the appointment of a Judge or Sheriff. A large demand on their time would be involved, and he did not think, with every respect for the Bench, that it was necessary that that demand should be made. They did not have legal assessors on Private Bill Committees, and he believed their decisions commanded to a large extent public confidence. He hoped that the Bill would be sent to a Standing Committee. It was most desirable in the public interest that the Chairman of Committees, Lord Morley, should be in a position to advise the House with regard to an important matter of this sort, which was his own peculiar province. If the Bill were considered in Standing Committee, he hoped they would have the assistance of the Chairman of Committees. As far as he could see, the Bill was a very considerable advance. It was not an ambitious Bill. As far as he could judge, it was a sensible Bill in the principle it laid down, and he thought it was likely to confer considerable benefit on Scotland.

Lord BALFOUR said he certainly had no reason to complain of the manner in which his attempt to deal with this subject on behalf of the Government had been received by the House. There had been no attempt from any quarter to controvert the proposition that some reform in the present system was required, and the provisions of the Bill had not been strongly criticised except in points of detail by either of the two noble Lords who first addressed the House; and the noble Lord who last spoke distinctly said he thought, after the previous history of the question and the previous efforts made, there was no resource left to those who desired to attempt reform but to admit that reform by means of an extension of Provisional Order legislation. He himself came to that conclusion as far back as 1888. This was the Bill alluded to in the Queen's Speech at the commencement of the Session, and there had been no change of intention on the part of those responsible for the Bill. In regard to the shortness of time between the presentation of the Bill and the Second Reading, to get the Second Reading before Whitsuntide it was necessary, for various reasons, the noble Lord explained, to take it that day. It would be convenient that a little time should elapse between the Second Reading and subsequent stages, and no attempt would be made to take any further stage before the Whitsuntide Recess. Lord Tweedmouth was not hostile to the Bill, but exhibited a tendency to minimise the reform which would be effected by the Bill. He himself did not describe it as a larger Measure than it was, for fear of exciting expectations which it would not be possible afterwards to satisfy. But Lord Morley put the matter on its true basis. It was his intention, and he believed it was distinctly foreshadowed in the Bill, that, if it passed, the system of legislation by Provisional Order would become the rule, and the existing system, as far as Scotland was concerned, would be the exception. Directions were given in the Bill to the Secretary for Scotland and the Chairmen of Committees that if any proposal which came before them raised a question of policy or principle, it should be determined by Parliament, and the procedure would be by Private Bill. They would have to consider, not whether it was convenient for promoter or opponent that that course should be taken, but whether the questions raised were of a character and magnitude which rendered it necessary to deal with them by Private Bill. Those acquainted with the subject knew it was difficult to define all the subjects that came before Parliament in the name of Private Bill legislation, that no course was open but to give some general directions of this kind, and that any attempt to define what proposals should be dealt with one way or the other would be foredoomed to failure. The Secretary for Scotland would be associated with the Chairmen of Committees in deciding the matter. It would tend to give confidence to those in Scotland interested in the subject that the question whether procedure should be by Provisional Order or private Bill should not be decided on the prepossessions of the Chairmen of Committees of the two Houses, but that they would have the advice and the tendency of the Secretary for Scotland to modify their decision in the direction of having more Provisional Orders and fewer private Bills in the future. He would not follow the noble Lord into his complaint that there was no Scotch legislation last year. It was not quite germane to the point before the House, but he would remind him that there was such a Measure as the Agricultural Rating Bill, which applied to Scotland, and Bills which applied to England were equally to the interest of Scotland, which was also included in the Light Railways Act and other Acts passed by the Legislature last year. He thought he had now said enough with reference to the point as to the Report of the Committee of 1888 having been set aside by him. He had put aside these proposals for this reason—on three or four occasions since the presentation of that Report, schemes which were founded upon it had been submitted to Parliament, but only in one case was a Second Reading reached, and in that case when the Bill was referred to a Select Committee of the other House, it was so changed and altered that the Government of the day did not proceed with it. The real difficulty of the whole question was how they were to obtain the practical benefits of local inquiry, and at the same time preserve the effective supremacy of Parliament, and he agreed with the last speaker that the most hopeful solution of the difficulty was rather to be found in the Provisional Order system than in any other system which had been suggested. Lord Tweedmouth had told the House that the Bill to which he referred must have cost £1,000 for preliminary notices at 9s. apiece. That statement had surprised him greatly, and he thought that there must have been some special reason which they did not know for that heavy expenditure. His own impression was that such expenditure was wholly unnecessary, and that Glasgow, like other large cities employing town clerks, might have done the business at much less cost. But even if it were necessary now under the Standing Orders to spend 9s. upon each of these notices, it would not be necessary under this Bill, because power was given by it to prescribe the conditions under which notices should be given, and there was nothing to prevent its being prescribed that these notices should be sent by registered letter. One criticism which had been passed on this Measure by all those who had spoken was that there was too much of the Secretary for Scotland in the Bill. He thought that the position which it was proposed to give the Secretary for Scotland was rather misunderstood. It was not intended to give him unchecked power to do what he liked with the Bills submitted to him. As far as the opposed clauses of a Bill were concerned the intention was that the Secretary for Scotland should only make such alterations in the draft Provisional Order as were recommended by the tribunal which had heard the parties, and as far as unopposed clauses were concerned his proposal was that the Secretary for Scotland should only make such changes as he was advised by the Chairman of Committees were necessary in order to bring those clauses into conformity with the general practice of Parliament respecting Provisional Orders. If his intentions with regard to this matter were not clearly embodied in the provisions of the Bill, there would be no difficulty in amending it so as to remove all ambiguity. There was a provision in the Bill which allowed any opponent of a Provisional Order to require that it should be laid before Parliament, and he was, in addition, prepared to consider the propriety of laying the Order before Parliament upon the initiative or demand of the Chairman of Committees of either House, although by this concession he feared that he might be encouraging criticism of the Bill as a measure of reform and relief. He had been asked whether an omnibus Bill could be the subject of a Provisional Order under the Bill, and he saw nothing to prevent it. The intention, in fact, was to include what were known as omnibus Bills. Being made up of a large collection of comparatively small points, omnibus Bills constituted precisely that class of legislation which ought to be the subject of local inquiry, because such Bills seldom contained large questions of principle. The noble Earl who preceded him in the Debate had made some rather severe comments upon the proposed method of selecting the panel from whom those who were to preside over these Inquiries were to chosen, and he had criticised particularly the proposal respecting the appointment of a judge or sheriff. But it surely was desirable that there should be some one upon the tribunal who had a knowledge of the law of evidence and of legal matters. He was, however, quite willing to consider the suggestion that there should be a legal assessor instead. He had been sorry to hear Lord Tweedmouth's remarks concerning the choice of the conveners of counties as a Committee of selection. He trusted that the noble Lord would accept his assurance that when he made that choice he did not give a thought to their political complexion. He might point out that those who elected the County Councils in Scotland were almost the same as those who elected Members of Parliament. If the conveners of counties inclined more to his own political views than to those of the noble Lord, the fact remained that they were the persons best fitted in the opinion of the electorate to fill the positions to which they were returned. He could not help thinking that it was unfortunate that the noble Lord should have raised the question of the political complexion of this proposed Committee of selection, because he felt certain that political considerations would not sway the minds of those who would form that Committee, and he always noticed that when people were put into quasi-judicial positions they made fair selections without regarding the political complexion of those whom they selected. But he was not wedded to this particular method of selecting the tribunal, and if a better could be suggested, he would give it most fair and impartial consideration. He was certain, however, that any proposal to submit the matter to the Executive Government of the day would meet with great opposition, because it would at once be presumed that the appointments were to be political. Replying to his noble Friend (the Earl of Morley) he assured him that it was not his intention to assume any of the functions of the Chairman of Committees. Lord Tweedmouth had expressed the opinion that to allow the Secretary for Scotland to remit a Bill to Parliament on the Motion of one opponent was to give him too much power. He should have thought that the question of the power given to the Secretary of State would fade into insignificance when compared with so important a question as that of the right of a party desiring it to appeal to Parliament. Everybody agreed that in some form or other the retention of the ultimate control of both Houses of Parliament must be secured. The necessity for that was recognised in every Report on this subject, and by nearly every witness who gave evidence before the Committee of 1888. It was recognised, for example, by Mr. Pember, Mr. Beveridge, who was a Parliamentary agent, and by Mr. Pym, and all three were in favour of a much larger scheme of devolution than that now proposed. No man's status ought to be interfered with without the sanction of Parliament, and he would not be responsible for any scheme that disregarded that principle. He had now replied to all the points that had been raised. He was not disappointed at the reception given to the Bill. The criticisms passed upon it only proved how great were the difficulties in the way of dealing with this subject satisfactorily. He trusted that ultimately the Measure might receive the sanction of Parliament.

Lord HERSCHELL, while agreeing without reserve to the proposal that there should be a power of appeal to Parliament, suggested that a single individual ought not to be allowed to render nugatory all the proceedings already taken by the time his appeal was lodged. He also suggested whether, in order to prevent this action from being improperly taken, the Committee should not be enabled to give costs even by a majority against the person failing. It had been found to work extremely well in many cases not to give any absolute right of appeal, and yet not to leave the party without the power of appealing if he had a real case. In certain cases in the Privy Council, in order to be enabled to appeal, the party who desired it must come before the Judicial Committee and satisfy them that he had sufficient ground for appealing. The matter was always very carefully considered, and unless the Committee was satisfied that there appeared to be good ground to believe that the judgment below was wrong, the leave to appeal was refused. This course was adopted in the Clergy Discipline Act, and he believed that where it had been adopted it had worked well. Would it not be possible to adopt the idea embodied in that legislation in such a Measure as this—not to give the individual an absolute right to compel the proceedings in that House to be gone through again as if there had been no inquiry, but to require that there should be a petition presented and an inquiry into it by a Committee. This would be a practical check on any improper proceedings to get rid of the work done before, and would be a more effectual one than the mere fear of having to pay costs.

Bill Read a Second time, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

JURIES DETENTION BILL.

Considered in Committee (according to Order); Repoted without Amendment, and re-committed to the Standing Committee.

QUARTER SESSIONS JURORS (IRELAND) BILL.

Amendments reported (according to Order), and Bill to be Read 3ª To-morrow.

INFANT LIFE PROTECTION BILL [H.L.].

Report of Amendments (which stands appointed for this day) put off till To-morrow.

NAVY AND MARINES (WILLS) ACT (1865) AMENDMENT BILL.

Read 3ª (according to Order), and passed.

MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE (IRELAND).

Lord HERSCHELL asked Her Majesty's Government whether they would undertake at an early date to introduce a Bill amending the law relating to the municipal franchise in Ireland? He pointed out that towards the close of the Session in 1895 a Bill for amending the law relating to the municipal franchise in Ireland was Read a Second time in their Lordships' House, the Bill having come up from the House of Commons. On that occasion the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland supported the Second Reading of the Bill. The noble Earl said, "On his own behalf, and he believed on behalf of his colleagues, they felt as strongly as I did the necessity which undoubtedly existed for dealing with the question of the municipal franchise in Ireland;" and the noble Earl expressed his desire that the Bill should be Read a Second time. The next stage of the Bill was taken shortly before the prorogation, and then the Lord Lieutenant opposed any further proceeding with the Bill on the ground that it was impossible to discuss it at that time. He ventured to point out that if the Measure was not passed then it was extremely probable that those who had been pressing this amendment of the law for many years would have to wait as many years again before it was passed, on which remark he observed that there were cries of "No!" and "Why!" He thought that the incidents which had happened during the two years gave some answer to the "No" and the "Why!" A Division took place and the Bill was lost. The Measure was declared to be one which had the sympathy and the support of the present Government, and it was regarded by them not only as a just and desirable amendment of the law, but as one which urgently needed to be dealt with. He did not think that there could be two opinions as to either of those propositions, and he would remind the House that it had always been, as they understood, a cardinal part of the policy of the present Government, and it had been constantly reiterated by them, that any measure of Home Rule for Ireland was absolutely unnecessary, inasmuch as any just and reasonable demand for an amendment of the law would meet with speedy response from Parliament as at present constituted. So much for the general aspect of the case. Owing to the difficulty which had been experienced in obtaining any reform of the franchise by general legislation, Bills had been introduced from time to time dealing with particular Corporations, and Parliament had in several cases, in view, no doubt, of the difficulty and delay which has taken place in dealing with the general question, sanctioned the introduction into these Bills of causes dealing with the municipal franchise in the several boroughs to which they refer. These Measures had been passed into law. The precedent was followed by the introduction of similar clauses in a Bill relating to the Corporation of Dublin. The Measure came before their Lordships the other day, and by a small majority an Instruction was carried, the effect of which was to expunge those clauses from the Bill and to render certain that it would go down to the other House without them, therefore rendering it probable that the Bill would be rejected. This would of course, result in a very considerable waste of money. The money was wasted when the Bill was promoted with these clauses inserted last year, and the money would be wasted on the present occasion. It was on these special grounds that he put this question, because it seemed to him that the only thing which could prevent that waste of money was that the Government should announce their intention speedily to introduce such a Measure. If such an announcement were made and the Bill introduced, it was possible that the other House might be content to forego the course which they would otherwise likely follow, of rejecting the Bill by refusing to assent to the Amendments made by their Lordships. On the occasion he had referred to the Lord Chancellor spoke in favour of letting these clauses remain in the Bill at that time, on the ground that other Corporations had been allowed to insert such clauses in their Bills; and he believed that this view was supported by many Members of the present Cabinet.

LORD MONTEAGLE appealed to the Government to give a favourable reply, if they could see their way, to the question of the noble and learned Lord. This grievance which pressed upon these towns in Ireland was of much greater magnitude in one respect than any other grievance Ireland had to complain of, because it was peculiar to Ireland. The question of private Bill procedure was also a grievance in Ireland. The Chief Secretary, in answer to a deputation at the end of last year, gave a definite pledge that the question of private Bill legislation in Ireland should be dealt with. No such definite pledge had been given as to the municipal franchise, and he hoped the Government would now give one.

THE EARL OF MAYO did not gather from the noble and learned Lord whether he wanted the Bill spoken of by the Lord Lieutenant in 1895 or another Bill. What sort of Franchise Bill was wanted? The question was most important to the people in Ireland. He agreed that there would be a great waste of money if the Dublin Corporation Bill were rejected, and on that account only he hoped that the Bill would not be lost. The subject of Private Bill legislation, again, was a burning question in Ireland, and he hoped the Government, when the time came, would see to it, especially in view of the great costs which corporations and other bodies were put to in having to come over here to fight their case. If they could have private Bill legislation dealt with in Ireland it would be an immense thing.

THE EARL OF DENBIGH was afraid the answer he had to give would hardly be considered satisfactory by the noble and learned Lord. He could only say that the Government, although they realised that the municipal franchise question in Ireland must be dealt with sooner or later, were unable to undertake to deal with it this Session.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACTS.

*VISCOUNT TEMPLETOWN rose to ask Her Majesty's Government whether the proposed Commission on the Irish Land question would have power to examine and report upon the pledges given by the Government of the day on the passing of the Land Act of 1881; and as to whether the circumstances contemplated by Government which would raise a claim for compensation had arisen. In doing so, the noble Lord drew attention to some points in connection with the Land Acts. In the first place, he set himself to show the interdependence that exists among the various Land Acts; secondly, the difficulties of lawyers and experts in administering the Acts; and, thirdly, that there was a general consensus of opinion that there ought to be a general inquiry into the Acts, and that losses had been sustained by landlords, was supported by very great authority. With reference to the first point, he recalled the fact that when Mr. Justice FitzGibbon was examined before Mr. Morley's Commission, Mr. Morley asked (Question 2969, page 140):—

> "I think the Committee, so far as I can judge, certainly including myself, feel that unprofessional persons must be perplexed beyond measure by the enormous difficulties of construction arising from the interdependence of the various Acts which refer to one another, in and out, of which you as a Court I suppose must have felt the difficulty as we laymen. I should like to hear if you would be kind enough to tell the Committee an account of the relations of those Acts to one another, and any statement that you may care to make of the difficulties arising from those relations."

The answer of Mr. Justice FitzGibbon was as follows:—

> "I can scarcely exaggerate the difficulty that has arisen in two ways. First, from the artificial system of definition that exists in these Acts, by which we have first to learn a special language before we try to find out what the interpretation of a particular erection is, we must know the language before we proceed to interpret it, and it is a foreign language to lawyers."

Mr. Edward Carson, one of the Members for the University of Dublin, speaking at the Surveyors' Institute in London in November, 1893, was reported to have said:—

> "If there was one thing more than another that he wished to impress upon those who came into daily contact with this Question, it was that they would not approach the Question from the standpoint of English land tenure, but must consider whether more or less legislation was required, and indeed, first ascertained how existing legislation dealt with the whole matter seeing what the existing legislation was."

Again, Judge O'Connor Morris, writing in The Fortnightly Review of June, 1896, in the article, "The Irish Land Bill of Lord Salisbury's Government," said:—

> "It does not attempt to place the land system of Ireland, at least in its most important relations, on a more stable and sound foundation, or essentially to change the legislation of late years, which has torn it, it may be truly said, to pieces," and further, "a Government which commands the field of politics might have made an earnest and thorough effort to set the Irish Land System on a better basis; in its largest and most important province, to reconcile it in some measure at least with the conceptions of just and civilised law, to mitigate in part without doing violence to existing or recently acquired rights, the gross wrongs and the vexatious evils of an ill designed and revolutionary scheme of reform. Legislation of this kind, however, must have been preceded by a careful, protracted, and impartial inquiry into the present state of the Irish Land System and into the operation and effects of the Gladstonian Land Act," . . . .

Again he said:—

> "Land tenure in Ireland must be thoroughly recast if the Land System is to rest on a sound basis."

Mr. Lecky, in his work, "Democracy and Liberty," says:—

> "The Act of 1870 had many merits, but it admitted, as I believe, a dangerous and dishonest principle."

Mr. T. W. Russell was reported in The Irish Times of October 13th, 1894, to have used these words:—

> "People talk about the Act of 1881. The Act of 1870 governs it at every point."

If they looked at the Act of 1881 they found it incorporated a great part of the Act of 1870. Any provision in the Act of 1870 not inconsistent with those of the Act of 1881 remain good, and the two, by Section 57 of the Act of 1881, "shall be construed together as one Act." What did the newspaper which represents the Ulster tenants say as to an Inquiry? The Northern Wig of May 12th says:—

> "If the Government decide on recommending a Commission of Inquiry it ought to be a broad and general one, and not of mere politicians, nor of peers, nor of landlords."

When Mr. Arthur Balfour spoke the other day in the House of Commons he condemned all the Acts. What effect had that speech produced in Ireland? A friend wrote:—

> "He (Mr. Arthur Balfour) in effect said, that none of the Land Acts can be any longer defended, and that the Conservative Party which only tried to make them work, not approving of them, now see that they never will work, and must be superseded by some more statesmanlike, simple, and just legislation."

Mr. Arthur Balfour had, in the face of the country, made this tremendous admission, but, great as it was, he doubted if it was stronger, except that Mr. Arthur Balfour was the Leader of the Unionist Party in the House of Commons, than the words of The Times that the landlords of Ireland demand an Inquiry into a > "state of things which, to say the very least, is altogether without a parallel in any country, civilised or uncivilised."

Now, he might fairly ask how long was Ireland to groan under such a state of affairs? Mr. Gerald Balfour, in introducing the Irish Land Bill, referred to the Act of 1881 as nothing less than an "agrarian revolution." Were the Irish landlords not only to suffer for this revolution, of which they were not the cause, but to be punished by having their property confiscated under the laws of England into the bargain? No words of his could strengthen the overwhelming indictment pronounced by judicial authorities, by statesmen and historians and experts, against the Irish Land Acts passed by the English Legislature during the last quarter of a century, and which if they were to believe the Irish tenantry, left them no better off than they were before. So far, he claimed to have shown that the Irish Land Act of 1870 and those following were so closely knit together that if full and complete justice was to be done alike to landlords and tenants in Ireland the inquiry could not be confined to one Act only; and, further, the quotations he had given pointed to the need of a general inquiry into all the Acts to ascertain the losses suffered by landlords under all the Acts, and how compensation should be given them. He would now deal with the pledges given by the Government of the day on the passing of the Irish Land Act of 1870. Speaking of "Those who have set up perpetuity of tenure for the Irish occupier as their favourite scheme," Mr. Gladstone disclaimed anything—

> "dishonourable, anything that intends any injury to another's on their part, because we have not a doubt that they have seen that inasmuch as perpetuity of tenure on the part of the occupier is virtually expropriation of the landlord, and as a mere readjustment of rent according to the price of produce can by no means dispose of all contingencies the future may produce in his favour, compensation would have to be paid to the landlord for the rights of which he would be deprived. . . . But suppose for a moment that we put the financial difficulty out of view, what would be the effect of perpetuity of tenure upon the tenant? As I understand it, the scheme itself amounts to this—that each and every occupier, as long as he pays the rent that he is now paying, or else some rent to be fixed by a public tribunal charged with the duty of valuation, is to be secured for himself and his heirs in the occupation of the land that he holds, without limit of time. He will be subject only to this condition somewhat in the nature of the commutation of Tithe Act—that with a variation in the value of produce the rent may vary but it will be slightly, and at somewhat distant periods. The effect of that provision will be, that the landlord will become a rent charge upon what is now his own estate. The Legislature has, no doubt, the perfect right to reduce him to that condition, giving him proper compensation for any loss he may sustain in money; the State has a perfect right to deal with his social status, and to reduce him to that condition if it thinks fit. But then it is bound not to so think fit, unless it is shown that this is for the public good."

Viscount Templetown.

Did this not describe the condition of landlords and tenants in Ireland to-day? Speaking further on in the Debate, Mr. Gladstone said:—

> "Well, now, let us look closely at the case of Ireland, and see whether, in good faith, without injury to any class, we can provide a remedy for these evils. . . . . And as we have afforded the occupier improved security of tenure, so also have we afforded the landlord improved security for his rent, and improved security as we think for the better cultivation of his land."

The then Attorney General, Sir Robert Collier said in his speech of March 8, 1870:—

> "When they say that the landlord ought not to have power of ejecting the tenant except for non-payment of rent, and that the tenant has a right to remain on his holding as long as he pleases, what does that really mean but fixity of tenure—that is, that the landlord is to be deprived of his property?"

And again:—

> "I believe the effect of the Measure will be, by giving the tenant security of tenure, to give him increased motives for industry, and, by giving to the tenant security of tenure, it will, at the same time, give to the landlords an increase of rent."

Mr. Gladstone had distinctly admitted the fact that his Land Act of 1870 took away from the owners of land in Ireland a part of their property and made it over to the tenants. In his speech of April 7th, 1881, when he introduced the Act of that year, he said:—

> "With a supply of land in the market so much less than the demand, you have a state of things in which it is well worth the while of a man who has not got land as a means of obtaining a regular subsistence and livelihood, to pay for obtaining it. That willingness of the incoming tenant to pay enters distinctly into the interest of the outgoing tenant so long as he continues the tenant, as something he has to receive."

The principle of compensation was admitted by Mr. Gladstone in 1881, when he said:—

> "If, as has been said, Parliament is about to invade the property of Irish landlords, the question of compensation becomes a very serious one indeed, and one concerning which, if we are prepared to deal with it at all, we ought to speak in most decisive terms. If these classes, either or both of them, have a just claim to compensation in consequence of the manner in which these interests will be affected by this Bill, we are bound as a Parliament to give it them."

He would quote one case which showed clearly the state of affairs in Ireland. It was the case of "Bolton landlord," which was heard at Dundalk on February 11th last, to determine the true value of the holding. The holding comprised 79 acres, 2 roods, and 19 perches Irish. The rent £103. There were no improvements claimed by the tenant. The land had been let previously by the landlord to the tenant, and the tenant had paid no fine to get possession of the farm. On the hearing, the landlord produced two valuers, one of them Mr. J. J. Russell, who described the farm as in a very bad condition. He said:—

> "There is nothing in the farm which usually goes to make up what is known as a tenant-right interest—no houses, no fences, no unexhausted manures, no improvements of any kind. On the contrary, a considerable permissive waste is allowed to go on, evidently with the object of getting a low rent fixed in a year or two."

After making allowances for repairs, etc., he valued the tenant's interest, or the true value, at £83. The landlord produced another valuer, Mr. M'Ilvaine, County Court valuer, Mr. M'Ilvaine, Mr. M'Ilvaine considered the rent was too high; he estimated that it would be reduced 25 per cent. two years hence; and he considered the tenant's interest was 15 years' purchase of the reduction. In all, he estimated that tht true value would be between £400 and £500. The tenant produced two witnesses, who stated that they believed the tenant's interest was worth from £1,000 to £1,200, perhaps more. The Sub-Commissioners fixed the true value at £550. The question was, what was that £550 for? Was it not a part of the corpus of the landlord's estate, and should it not belong to him? There were no improvements claimed by the tenant. The evidence showed that the place had been grossly deteriorated, and was it reasonable and fair that a landlord, to resume possession of the farm, should pay the tenant this amount for getting his land back in a grossly deteriorated state? Surely the Act of 1881 never contemplated that the portion of the corpus of the estate of the landlord should be transferred to the tenant. Speaking as he had done, on his own behalf and on behalf of others, with a view to what was just between man and man in Ireland, and what was best for the whole community both in Great Britain and Ireland, he urged that a great wrong had been done to the Irish landlords, for which compensation was due; and, for the moment, the responsibility of action rested with Her Majesty's Government.

The Earl of DENBIGH: I can only refer the noble Viscount to the speech which was made by the Chief Secretary in another place a few days ago, in which the right hon. Gentleman stated that the proposed Commission in connection with the Irish Land Acts would be confined to inquiring into the practice and procedure of the Land Commission and the County Courts in fixing fair rents, and of the Land Commission in making advances under the Land Purchase Acts. At this moment it is impossible to give the noble Viscount any more details as to the terms of reference to the Commission, and I cannot now go into other particulars.

The Earl of MAYO said that those whose property had been dealt with would like to know as soon as possible the personnel of the Commission, the terms of reference, and the name of the Secretary to the Commission. As to the question of compensation, he believed that the Royal Commission could take that question into consideration, though it could not fix the compensation or grant it. He was glad that the matter had been brought forward.

House Adjourned at Seven o'Clock, till To-morrow, a Quarter past Ten o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 20th May 1897.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

LLANDUDNO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL BILL.

Considered as amended.

Clause 2,—

POWER TO SET APART LANDS FOR GAMES.

(1) The Council may set apart for cricket, football, golf, and other games portions of any park or place of public resort or recreation for the time being belonging to or held by them (other than the recreation ground known as the Happy Valley), and may purchase or take on lease additional lands and lay out and improve and set apart the same, or any portion thereof, for the like purposes, so, however, that all lands so set apart shall be open to the public when not in use for such games.

(2) The Council may make bye-laws for regulating the use of any lands so set apart, provided that no bye-law which shall restrict any existing right to military user shall have effect until approved by the Secretary of State for War.

(3) The Council may erect, provide, and maintain on any such lands set apart for games and recreation any pavilion or pavilions, building or buildings, or any refreshment or other room or rooms or conveniences connected therewith.

(4) The Council may make, or authorise others to make, such charges as the Council may deem reasonable for admission to such pavilions and buildings or refreshment rooms or other room or rooms or conveniences connected therewith, or may let on lease for any term not exceeding five years, any such pavilions or buildings or refreshment rooms or other room or rooms or conveniences connected therewith.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford) moved in Sub-section (2) to leave out the words "any existing right to military user" in order to insert the words "the military user in case of national or local emergency."

MR. REGINALD McKENNA (Monmouth, N.) said that, as a member of the Police and Sanitary Committee before whom the Bill had come, he objected to the proposed Amendment. When the Bill originally came before the Committee it contained the words now sought to be inserted, and they were informed that they were inserted in it at the instance of the War Office with the consent of the promoters of the Measure. The difficulty in which the Committee found themselves placed was that if they retained the words in the question they would be either sanctioning an important alteration of the law or be making a declaration of the existing law. In the latter case, of course, the words now sought to be inserted were absolutely unnecessary, and, moreover, the Committee were directly prohibited from making such a declaration by a Resolution of that House. On the other hand, if by retaining the words they would be making an alteration in the existing law, and would be conferring new powers upon the War Office, they believed that such an alteration of the law should be effected by means of a public Bill and not by a clause in a Private Measure. It was on that ground that they had struck out the words which it was now sought to reinsert. The House was aware that the Police and Sanitary Committee, although not absolutely bound to do so, felt themselves constraned to act upon certain rules of procedure, under one of which they would not allow to be introduced into a Private Bill any proposal to alter the general law of the land, unless the peculiar local circumstances were such as to induce them to make a change in that law. The question before the Committee, therefore, was, was there any peculiarity in the local circumstances of Llandudno as would entitle the War Office to have powers over the open spaces of the district other than those which they had over such open spaces in the country generally. The Committee had come to the conclusion that there were no such special circumstances in the case as would justify them in giving the special power asked for by the War Office. Had the Committee acted otherwise than they did, what reasons could they have given to the House in their Report for making this change in the general law of the land in this particular Private Bill? It it were thought desirable that the War Office should have these special powers over open spaces all over the country, the right hon. Gentleman should bring forward a public Bill upon the subject, and not seize upon the opportunity for giving them in reference to a particular locality afforded by the introduction of a private Bill. The Committee objected to the promoters of private Bills being compelled, under the threat of having their measures opposed by the War Department, to assent to any terms which the War Office might choose to impose upon them. In one instance the Under Secretary for War had written a letter to the Chairman of Committees instructing him to take such steps as he thought necessary to require a Select Committee appointed by that House to introduce into a private Bill such changes in the general law of the land which were desired by the Department without any special reasons being given for that course being adopted. On these grounds, on behalf of the Committee of which he had the honour of being a member, and also in defence of the privileges of that House, he felt it to be his duty to oppose the Amendment, and if the right hon. Gentleman pressed the matter he should be compelled to divide the House on the question. [" Hear, hear ! "]

*MR. BRODRICK said that the hon. Gentleman opposite had endeavoured to make a great deal out of what was, after all, but a very simple question. The various local authorities frequently came to that House, asking for powers to deal with open spaces in their districts, and the War Office thought it only right that in such cases power should be reserved to the Department to use the lands so dealt with for military purposes in case of local or national emergencies. The hon. Member complained that the War Office had been asking for special legislation by means of this Bill. There was no demand for special legislation at all; on the contrary, the clause had been accepted by the promoters of the Bill; as had been the case in other similar Bills. The contention of the Department was that it was necessary to reserve power to the War Office to use open spaces in case of national or local emergencies. The mayor of a town might telegraph for troops for the purpose of assisting the police in the maintenance of local order, and the troops sent in compliance with that request might find themselves without shelter and without any place but the streets to remain in. Such a state of things would be most inconvenient from every point of view. It was, moreover, usually of importance that the troops should be so placed as to be out of sight of the public and out of the range of missiles which might be thrown until their services were actually required. As there were in most instances no barracks in which they could obtain shelter for the night, it was both desirable and necessary that they should be encamped on such open spaces as were available for the purpose. In his opinion, the Committee had taken a very narrow view of their functions in connection with this matter, and had struck out these words against the wish of the promoters. He hoped that the House would insert the Amendment he had moved in the Bill. [" Hear, hear ! "]

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) said that, although he agreed that the War Office should have power to make use of open spaces for military purposes in times of local or national emergencies, he thought that such power should be conferred by a public and not by a private Bill. He believed that under the common law of the land the War Office already possessed such a power in the case, at all events, of national emergencies, and that in any case the Department would not hesitate to use the lands if necessity required. If the hon. Member opposite divided, he should vote against the Amendment. [" Hear, hear ! "]

MR. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.) hoped that the House would not accept the Amendment. He objected to pressure by the War Office being brought to bear upon small localities to consent to the insertion of such clauses in their private Bills. [" Hear, hear ! "]

MR. T. R. LEUTY (Leeds, E.) said that those who represented small districts were sure to give way to pressure from the War Office in order to smooth the way for their Billls. He trusted that the House would support the decision of their Committee to strike out these words. [" Hear ! "]

MR. W. JONES (Carnarvon, Arfon) suggested that the matter should be postponed until fuller information on the matter could be laid before the House.

*MR. SYDNEY GEDGE (Walsall) thought that the objections to the proposal of the War Office had been very much exaggerated. The War Office was not asking for additional powers. The Town Council was doing so, and the War Office proposed a limitation in the public interest. If this Amendment were rejected and the War Office required to use the lands under its common law right, it would be met by a bye-law having the force of an Act of Parliament unless it could prove the state of things at the time of passing the Act. Inter arma silent leges, and no difficulty ought to be put in the way of the troops in cases of emergency.

Question put "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Bill."

The House divided :—Ayes, 96 ; Noes, 124.—(Division List No. 211.) Words inserted.

Bill to be Read the Third time.

QUESTIONS.

FISHERY CRUISERS.

Mr. J. G. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty) : I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty if he will state the names of the cruisers engaged in protecting the interests of line fishermen off the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland respectively?

The SECRETARY to the ADMIRALTY (Mr. W. G. E. Macartney, Antrim, S.) : The vessels so employed at present are the Jackal, Daisy, Hearty, Onyx, Leda, Beatrice, and Spanker, off the coast of Great Britain, and the Flora off the coast of Ireland.

CONGESTED DISTRICTS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Mr. WEIR : I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether, in view of the fact that, under the Public Health (Scotland) Bill, the majority of the black houses in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland will be liable to be condemned as insanitary dwellings, will he consider the advisability of introducing into the Congested Districts Bill a provision rendering the crofters and fishermen assistance in the erection of suitable dwellings ?

*The LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. Graham Murray, Buteshire) : The point raised by the hon. Member will have the consideration of the Secretary for Scotland.

Mr. WEIR : I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce this Session a Bill to deal with the grant in aid of congested districts in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland ; and, if so, will he state when the Bill will be introduced ?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) : I hope this Bill will be introduced in the course of the present Session. Whether time will be found for its discussion depends upon the reception it meets with from hon. Gentlemen.

Mr. WEIR asked at what date the Bill would be introduced ?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY : I hope before Whitsuntide.

BALLINAMORE CANAL.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.) : I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, whether he can state the facts that led up to the seizure of the Ballinamore Canal ; whether there is any possibility of its redemption, considering that it forms an important link in the waterway from the north-western to the south-western counties of Ireland, and in whose hands it now is vested ; and, can he state the revenue, if any, derived from it ?

The SECRETARY to the TREASURY (Mr. R. W. Hanbury, Preston) : I regret that I cannot state the facts asked for, which led up to the seizure of this Canal—as it has never been seized. The facts as to its present abandoned condition, which are perhaps what the hon. Member desires to know, are these—It was finished in 1859 at a cost of £229,000. Of this sum the adjoining counties paid £30,000 and the remaining £199,000 was a free grant from the Exchequer. In 1860 it was handed over to local trustees. They advertised in vain for persons to establish boats upon it, and no use was made of it. Only five years later, in 1865, the Grand Jury of County Cavan formally "expressed their unanimous sense of the utter inutility of this Navigation" and earnestly hoped that the Board of Works would not oblige them to maintain it as it "had been fully proved to be totally valueless to the County." From the first there was no traffic worth mentioning, and from 1865 it was allowed to go from bad to worse, until in 1882 the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the Navigation between Coleraine, Belfast, and Limerick declared that it was in a condition of absolute uselessness. They reported that, while it would be useful as an arterial drain, it would, if restored, be of little benefit to the public for navigation, there would be no profitable traffic on it, and the local ratepayers would not support it. It is still in the hands of the local trustees, and of course no revenue is derived from the Navigation.

MR. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.): Was not that canal charged against Ireland?

MR. HANBURY: That is another question. I cannot answer it now.

POST OFFICE (LEWIS).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, having regard to fact that the Postmaster General notified on the 29th ultimo that the extension of telegraphic facilities carries with it the extension of money order and savings bank business, is he aware that while the offices at Bach, Balallan, Barvas, Crossbost, Garrabost, and Portnagurran, Island of Lewis, are open for the transaction of telegraph business, neither money order nor savings bank business is transacted at these offices; and, will he arrange for money order and savings bank business to be conducted at these offices at an early date?

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General is aware that neither money order nor savings bank business is transacted at the offices in question. It is the fact that, as a general rule, post offices which are telegraph offices do transact money order and savings bank business; but there are many exceptions to this rule, and the offices named by the hon. Member are amongst the number. As he has already been informed by letter, the transaction of money order and savings bank business can be authorised if a separate guarantee in that respect is forthcoming.

STAMP ILLUSTRATIONS.

MR. HENNIKER HEATON (Canterbury): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General,(1) whether the Mulready stamp, the black penny stamp, and other postage stamps of the whole issues are still available for postage purposes; (2) whether, for some months past, the Postmaster General and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue have insisted that stamp dealers and others shall desist from publishing miniature and other size illustrations of these stamps, in black or otherwise, in their catalogues; (3) whether it is within the knowledge of the authorities that an illustration of the Mulready stamp is being largely distributed by the promoters of the Philatelic Exhibition, of which the Postmaster General is one of the patrons; (4) whether such imitations or illustrations are contrary to the regulations specifically laid down by the Post Office permanent officials and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue; and, if so, why a special exception has been made in this particular case, whilst stringent regulations are made against illustrations brought out by English Stamp dealers; (5) whether he is aware that vast numbers of catalogues containing illustrations of English stamps made in Germany, come by post to this country, the sale of which are not, and cannot be, interfered with; and (6) whether the Post Office officials can point to any case in which fraud against the Post Office has arisen out of black illustrations of stamps which have appeared in the catalogues of English stamp dealers; and, if not, what is the reason of the present action of the Post Office?

MR. HANBURY: The answers to the first two paragraphs of the Question are in the affirmative. It became known to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue within the last few days, that an illustration of the Mulready stamp was being distributed as stated in the Question. The Postmaster General is a patron of the Philatelic Exhibition, but he was not consulted as to the issue of this imitation, and was not aware of its issue until informed of it by the Commissioners. He has informed them that he hopes no special exception will be made in favour of the Philatelic Exhibition. In preventing, as far as they can, the imitation of any postage stamps, whether of the United Kingdom, or of any colony or foreign country, the Postmaster General and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue (with whom the enforcements of the law rests) are governed by the reasons which led Parliament to pass the 7th Section of the Post Office Protection Act, 1884, and which led Her Majesty's Government to enter into Article XVIII. of the Universal Postal Union Convention of Vienna, 1891. Nothing, but certain legal doubts, removed by the decision of the High Court in "Dickens v. Gill" a year ago, have prevented a stricter enforcement of the law of which warning was given to all known stamp dealers by public notice in November 1885. In the opinion of the Postmaster General and Commissioners of Inland Revenue there is grave risk if dies capable of producing exact imitations of postage stamps in black and white are allowed to be used by unauthorised persons, and a foreign Government has more than once pressed this view upon the attention of Her Majesty's Government. It is the case that fictitious stamps and materials for making them are imported into this country. The Judges commented upon this in "Dickens v. Gill," and nothing but the want of a convenient opportunity for legislation has prevented the introduction of a clause to deal with the matter by amending the Customs Consolidation Act.

POST OFFICE ESTABLISHMENTS.

Mr. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury as representing the Postmaster General, whether, whereas under the Tweedmouth Report only two medical examinations were required for men on probation for appointment to sorterships, many who have already passed two examinations are now required to pass a third; and whether, if this be so, the Postmaster General will see his way to remove this obligation in the case of existing probationers?

Mr. HANBURY: The Tweedmouth Committee recommended that the probationary period of two years with three medical examinations should be reduced to one year with two medical examinations one at the beginning, and the other at the end of the period. Under the old system the intermediate examination was not quite so stringent as the other two, and the Postmaster General fears that it will not be possible to regard it as satisfying the requirements which the Tweedmouth Committee had in view. All concerned will, therefore, still have to undergo the final examination which is necessary before their appointments can be confirmed; but the probationers who have not passed the intermediate examination will of course be relieved from the obligation of undergoing it.

Mr. T. R. LEUTY (Leeds E.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, has the Postmaster General considered the advisability of dispensing with guarantee from officers entitled to pension, as recommended by the Tweedmouth Committee; and, has the Post Office adopted the efficiency barrier, recommended by the Committee to be imposed when the wage is forty shillings, or is it likely that it will be adopted; if so, will the Postmaster General give imformation as to the nature of the barrier?

Mr. HANBURY: The question of these guarantees is under consideration, but the Postmaster General is not yet in a position to come to any decision. The efficiency bar referred to by the hon. Member has been adopted. The terms of the certificate under which an officer can pass that bar have been communicated to the heads of branches and surveyors; they are as follows:—

> "I certify that the officer named in the accompanying schedule is fully qualified to perform the highest duties of his class; that his attendance is regular, and that his conduct is in every respect satisfactory. There are no (or the following) official records of cases reported to head quarters against him."

EDUCATION CENTRE SUPERINTENDENTS (IRELAND.)

Mr. MICHAEL FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that on application to the Intermediate Education (Ireland) Board only four copies could be obtained of a Return giving the names of centre superintendents; and whether, owing to the importance of the Return, as is shown by several hon. Members applying for the same, the Return will be laid upon the Table of the House?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): The only application made to the Commissioners of Intermediate Education for copies of the Return in question was that made by the hon. Member himself, who, I am informed, was supplied with four copies, all they had to spare at the time. The Return is not considered to be of sufficient importance to lay on the Table as a Parliamentary Paper, but I have no doubt the Commissioners, if application be made to them by other hon. Members for copies of the Return, will be prepared to procure an additional supply.

QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE.

CAPTAIN CHALONER (Wilts, Westbury): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether he can see his way to grant special passes to Members of the House of Commons on Jubilee Day, to enable them to obtain access to their stands without having to start at an unreasonable hour in the morning?

THE FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): The Question of my hon. and gallant Friend should properly have been addressed to the Home Secretary, who has desired me to say that no special passes will be given, but the police will have instructions to facilitate the passage of all those holding tickets for the House of Commons stand to their seats. Due notice will be given as to the hour at which all persons must be in their places.

COLONEL LOCKWOOD (Essex, Epping): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether, in view of the many interests represented in the cycling world, the Government will grant facilities for a monster Diamond Jubilee Cycle Demonstration, organised by the Cyclists' Parliamentary and Municipal Association, to be held in Hyde Park on Saturday 19th June; and whether, on that occasion, police could be placed on duty for the better maintenance of order along the route?

MR. AKERS-DOUGLAS: Perhaps my hon. and gallant Friend will allow me to answer this Question as it affects the Royal parks. A similar request was made to and declined by me some weeks ago. I regret that I cannot reconsider the matter, and must again refuse to authorise such a demonstration in Hyde Park.

SIR SEYMOUR KING (Hull, Central): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether, among the Members of the Colonial Services for whom seats are to be provided to view the Procession on Jubilee Day, any provision will be made for Members of the Indian Civil and Military Services?

MR. AKERS-DOUGLAS: I have promised to place at the disposal of the India Office as many seats as can fairly be allotted to that Department, and, further, to find if possible some seats for the services specially alluded to by my hon. Friend. The distribution of tickets will be made by the authorities of the India Office.

MR. J. H. YOXALL (Nottingham, W.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education if, in view of the impracticability of obtaining anything like a full attendance of children at public elementary schools during the school week ending 25th June 1897, of the consequent loss in grants payable on average attendance, and of the risk of not fulfilling the minimum number of school openings required by the code if schools be closed during the said week as well as during the customary vacations of the year, he is now in a position to intimate that in the opinion of the Committee of Council the week ending 25th June ought to be made a children's holiday, and that for school years which include that week the minimum number of school openings required as a condition of the grants will be 390 and not 400?

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): The Committee of Council will leave the matter to the discretion of the managers. There will, in ordinary cases, be no difficulty in making up the 400 openings required.

KASSALA.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs when he will be able to make any statement to the House with regard to negotiations with Italy as to the occupation of Kassala by Egypt?

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): The Italian Government, who have acted with the utmost friendliness and consideration, have informed Her Majesty's Government that they do not desire to maintain their occupation of Kassala, but are anxious to consult the convenience of the British and Egyptian Governments as to the period of withdrawal. Her Majesty's Government have expressed their cordial acknowledgments, and the matter remains under discussion between the two Governments.

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY (MODEL SCHOOLS, IRELAND).

MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Queen's Birthday, the 24th May, will be observed as a holiday in the Model Schools in Munster and throughout Ireland?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The reply to this Question is in the affirmative.

EVICTION (DURNASCALLON, COUNTY DERRY).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the circumstances which led to the eviction of James O'Neill, of Durnascallon, Desertmartin, Co. Derry, in January 1896; whether he is aware that O'Neill has applied under the Land Act of last Session to the Land Commission to use their good offices as mediators between O'Neill and his landlord with a view to his reinstatement; and whether the Land Commission took any steps to bring about the reinstatement of O'Neill; and, if so, with what result?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: O'Neill was evicted after the 1st January 1896, and the Land Commissioners have no power, therefore, to proceed with his application. The provisions of Section 47 of the Land Act of last year would only apply if the eviction had taken place before the 1st January 1896.

HONITON NATIONAL SCHOOLS.

MR. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education whether the Department has received a complaint from parents of scholars in the Honiton National School that on the 12th ultimo their children were without their knowledge taken with the other scholars to a service in St. Paul's Church, the service being held during the time allotted to religious instruction, and such parents having desired the withdrawal of their children from such instruction; and whether the Department will take steps to prevent the recurrence of a similar proceeding?

SIR J. GORST: Complaints have been received from two parents, and the Committee of Council are at present in communication with the managers of the school.

SCHOOL BOARDS (LOANS).

MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS: I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education how much of the sum of £16,522,393 stated in the Education Report for 1895–96 to have been borrowed by School Boards from the Public Works Loan Commissioners had been repaid, such information having been given in previous Reports; and whether the Department will give similar information in the Report for 1896–97?

SIR J. GORST: The amount actually borrowed from the Public Works Loan Commissioners was £17,940,913, of which £6,167,567 has been repaid. The information was omitted because misleading, a large portion of the repayments being met by re-borrowing.

MACROOM GUARDIANS (REMOVAL OF SICK PAUPERS).

MR. EDWARD BARRY (Cork Co., S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been drawn to the case of a pauper named Jeremiah Donovan, who having been a paralytic inmate of the Macroom Workhouse for eight years, was recently transferred to Clonakilty by car and rail in a most feeble and destitute condition at the expense of the Macroom Guardians; whether he is aware that the Macroom Guardians provided him with a new suit of clothes, a car to Bandon, and money for the journey, and that a relieving officer of the Clonakilty Union found it necessary to take him to hospital on his arrival at Clonakilty; and whether such transference by and at the expense of the Macroom Guardians is legal; and if not what steps will be taken to relieve the Clonakilty Union of the expense incurred in the maintenance of this pauper pending his removal to Macroom workhouse?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: My attention had not been previously directed to the circumstances attending the removal of Donovan from the Macroom workhouse. With the view of ascertaining the actual facts of the case, the Local Government Board's Inspector for the district has been instructed to hold an Inquiry, and the result of his investigation will be communicated to me in due course.

LABOURERS' COTTAGES (IRELAND).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that there is great need for labourers' cottages in the village and townland of Kilmanagh, in the Callan Union, and that the applications of two labourers in Kilmanagh named Walsh and Fitzgerald were refused by the Local Government Board inspector first on the grounds that two other cottages built by the union were not occupied for some time after the erection, and secondly that Walsh and Fitzgerald were unmarried; whether these are valid reasons for refusing to erect cottages where they are wanted; whether he is aware that in other parts of the Callan Union cottages have been erected for unmarried labourers, and that cottages are often left unoccupied for a considerable time after erection, especially in winter, to allow them to dry before being tenanted; and whether he will see that Walsh and Fitzgerald are provided with cottages?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: On the 29th March last I replied to a somewhat similar question addressed to me by the hon. Member, and to that reply I have nothing to add, except that it is not intended to alter the decision already arrived at by the Local Government Board after careful local inquiry by their inspectors.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that there is great need for labourers' cottages in the Draperstown and Baneran divisions of the Magherafelt Union; whether an inquiry was held by the Local Government Board, and a scheme for the erection of a number of cottages in these divisions sanctioned; and whether he will explain the delay in having them erected, or say when the work of building will commence, and how many houses it is intended to erect?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: A Provisional Order was issued by the Local Government Board, after due local inquiry, authorising the erection of three cottages in the Baneran electoral division and two cottages in the Draperstown division. The solicitor acting for the Board of Guardians explains that the delay in erecting the cottages has been caused by the difficulty experienced in procuring titles to the lands to be acquired and also in arranging with the Land Commission, who have charge of the lands, as to the payment of the purchase money. The matter appears, however, to be now approaching completion and further delay is not anticipated.

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether he is aware that an application for a cottage under the Labourers' Act in the electoral division of Feddyglass, in the Union of Strabane, was lodged three years ago by Samuel Brown, and that the cottage in which Brown lives has been condemned by the inspector of the Local Government Board; and (2) will he explain why his application for a cottage has been refused?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The answer to the first paragraph is in the affirmative. The reason why this man Brown's application has been refused is that he is a road contractor, and as such does not come within the provisions of the Labourers' Acts.

MR. JAMES DALY (Monaghan, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland will he state how much remains unused at the Treasury of the sum that should have been devoted for the purpose of erecting labourers' cottages in Ireland. Will he explain why fewer labourers' cottages have been built in Ulster than in any other part of Ireland; and what course he intends to take with regard to Boards of Guardians in Ulster who have not yet erected labourers' cottages?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The amount unexpended on account of labourers' cottages in Ireland is £11,963. The reasons why the Labourers' Acts have not been utilised in Ulster to the same extent as in other parts of Ireland are that fewer applications for labourers cottages have been made by labourers in the province, and that the boards of guardians there are more unwilling to admit the necessity for providing cottages under the Acts. If any cases of default on the part of a board of guardians in Ulster to put the Labourers Acts into operation are brought before the Local Government Board they will, as they have hitherto done, at once cause inquiry to be made into the merits of such cases, and, if necessary, empower their inspectors to carry out the provisions of the Acts.

TELEGRAPH OFFICE (BALCARRA, CO. MAYO).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that there is a great want for a telegraph office in Balcarra, County Mayo; and whether he proposes to take steps towards the establishment of such an office?

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster-General has not received any application for a telegraph office in Balcarra, County Mayo. He will be glad to make inquiry on the subject, and will communicate the result to the hon. Member.

LLANGOLLEN SCHOOL BOARD.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education (1) whether his attention has been drawn to the action of the Llangollen School Board in reference to the acquisition of land for a playground; (2) whether he is aware that in consequence of frequent complaints from Her Majesty's Inspector the school board in question presented a petition in 1895 to the Education Department praying for a provisional order to enable them to acquire certain land under the Land Clauses Consolidation Acts, and whether after a local inquiry the Education Department issued a Provisional Order and that it was confirmed by Parliament; (3) whether he is aware that the school board delayed carrying out the Provisional Order, and that they received in July 1896 imperative instructions from the Educational Department to acquire the land in respect to which they had obtained the Provisional Order; and the school board then asked for the sanction of the Education Department to buy a smaller quantity of land than what was specifically mentioned in the schedule of the Provisional Order, and that the Department replied in September 1896 that they must require the purchase of the whole of the land referred to; (4) will he explain why in March last the Education Department took another view of the situation and sanctioned the purchase of the lesser quantity of land; and (5) whether such an alteration in the terms of a Provisional Order, confirmed by Parliament, can be sanctioned without an amending Order?

SIR J. GORST: The facts are as stated. The consent referred to in the fourth paragraph was subject to the Board's being able legally to effect the purchase of a portion only of the land scheduled in the Provisional Order. The last paragraph is a question of law, which the Committee of Council have no authority to determine.

POLLEN ACT (LOUGH NEAGH).

MR. P. C. DOOGAN (Tyrone, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that distress and dissatisfaction subsist amongst the Lough Neagh fishermen, owing to the pecuniary loss which is inflicted upon them by the operation of the "Pollen Act," which precludes them from selling fish under eight inches in length; whether he is aware that a special meeting was held on 6th March last and reported that in the opinion of the Board of Conservators no reason exists why fishermen should not be permitted to dispose of pollen of not less than seven inches, which may legally be killed by their legal nets; and what steps, if any, will be taken to give effect to the special report of the Board of Conservators to remove the grievance of the Lough Neagh fishermen by allowing them to sell pollen from seven inches in length upwards, instead of throwing them aside to rot as they are obliged to do now under the present state of the law?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: On the 1st February last I stated in answer to a question put by the hon. Member that experiments had been made with a view of ascertaining the condition of pollen less than 8 inches in length, and that apart altogether from the consideration whether fish of less than that length would be useful as marketable commodity, the results of the experiments showed clearly that to reduce the size limit would be injurious to the pollen fisheries. The Pollen Act was passed in consequence of the enormous destruction of small and immature fish. The capture of a number of seven-inch fish is due to the fact that when the net is being drawn, the meshes become strained, and even if the mesh were smaller so as to allow for the legal capture of seven-inch fish, a number of six-inch fish would, for the same reason, be captured. Upon the information at present before me, I see no reason for an amendment of the existing law.

Mr. DILLON: As fishing is allowed would it not be better to allow the sale?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I have already given all the information I have.

CHARGE OF MURDER (OMAGH).

Mr. VESEY KNOX (Londonderry): I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland (1) whether he is aware that two young men named Maguire were tried at last Summer Assizes on a charge of murder when the jury disagreed, and again at the Winter Assizes in Belfast when the jury acquitted them; that they were again tried at Omagh Spring Assizes on a charge of larceny of money from the dead body on practically the same evidence when the jury disagreed; (2) whether they are still in prison awaiting a fourth trial, and for how long have they already been imprisoned; and (3) whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the Crown will proceed further against them?

*The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND (Mr. J. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.): The facts stated in the first part of the question are substantially accurate, save that the accused were last tried on two charges, one for the robbery of Triston when alive, and the other for robbery from his dead body. It is quite true that all the facts relied upon to establish the case of robbery were given in evidence on the trial for murder, but the main defence of the prisoners on that occasion was that the deceased was not murdered, but died from natural causes. Though the only available evidence therefore might have been insufficient to prove a case of murder, this portion of it may be conclusive on the charge of robbery. The prisoners have been in custody since the 6th of March, 1896, and are now awaiting a second trial for the offence of robbery, with which, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the charge of tbe learned judge who presided at the at the last trial, it is intended to proceed.

QUEEN'S COLLEGES (IRELAND).

Mr. J. PINKERTON (Galway): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether his attention has been directed to the Ministerial pledges given at the foundation of the Queen's Colleges, to the effect that the patronage of the Crown would be exercised to secure, if possible, the services of Roman Catholic professors and office-bearers in Galway and Cork and of Presbyterians in Belfast; (2) whether he is aware that the first President, Vice President, and office-bearers in Galway were exclusively Roman Catholic, but that at present the President and office-bearers are now exclusively Protestants; and (3) whether any steps will be taken to redeem the pledges referred to?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I am unable to find in the Ministerial statements made at the time when the establishment of the Queen's Colleges was under discussion, any pledge to the effect mentioned in the Question. I have no information regarding the statements in the second paragraph, though I am making inquiries.

MR. PINKERTON: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that no effect has been given to the pledges?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have no information.

MR. W. JOHNSTON: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that these colleges are banned by the Roman Catholic hierarchy?

[No answer was given.]

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury as representing the Postmaster General, having regard to the fact that, out of the 4,324,000 withdrawals estimated to have been made from the Post Office Savings Bank during the year 1896, only 25,000 are estimated to have been made to third persons, will he state whether it has been found necessary to make arrangements so that money withdrawn by telegraph may be paid to a third person; and, if such arrangements have been made, will he state to what extent money withdrawn by telegraph has been paid to third persons?

MR. HANBURY: Money withdrawn from the Savings Bank by telegraph can be paid to a third person in the same way as money withdrawn by the ordinary means. No separate record is kept of such cases and the Postmaster General cannot, therefore, state to what extent money withdrawn by telegraph has been paid to third persons.

PUBLICAN'S LICENCE (IRELAND)

MR. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) what ground there is for the allegation that a licensed publican, named Jolly, refused the use of his post car to the police of Tempo, on the night of 28th August 1896, when, during a dangerous riot, they demanded the use of the vehicle to send for assistance to a neighbouring station; (2) has the refusal by publicans in recent years to give their cars for the conveyance of police and emergency men to evictions been made the grounds of objection to the renewal of the said publican's licences; and (3) did the police of Tempo oppose Mr. Jolly's licence for refusing them the use of his car at a time when life and property were in danger?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The allegation referred to in the first paragraph is founded on fact, though the demand for the car was made not by the police personally, but by the barrack servant. There have been many cases in which the police opposed the renewal of publicans' licences throughout Ireland under the circumstances mentioned in the second paragraph, but I do not think there have been any such cases in recent years, as the necessity for action on the part of the police has not arisen. The police did not oppose the renewal of Mr. Jolly's licence, because it was doubtful whether the objection could be sustained, in view of the fact that the demand for the car was made, as I have stated, not by the police but by the barrack servant.

SUPPLY (ORDNANCE FACTORY VOTE).

LORD HUGH CECIL (Greenwich): I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office when the Departmental Committee appointed to inquire into the question of Superannuation will report; and, whether the Report will be published before the Ordnance Factory Vote is discussed?

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, S.): The investigation is being made by certain officials of the Department, but it is of a confidential character and their report will not be published. They hope to conclude their inquiry within a month. It involves other Departments than the War Office.

INDIAN MIDLAND AND BENGAL-NAGPUR RAILWAYS.

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India will he explain under what circumstances a portion of the interest charges in connection with the Indian Midland and Bengal-Nagpur Railways have now for some years been met out of the Famine Insurance Fund, in view of the fact that shortly after the creation of the Famine Insurance Fund the Government of India requested the sanction of the Secretary of State to meet certain interest charges in connection with protective railways from the fund; that Lord Cranbrook, the then Secretary of State, withheld his sanction on the ground that such a step would be a complete inversion of the object with which the fund was constituted; and that this decision was upheld by two Parliamentary Committees sitting in 1879 and 1884 respectively?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, Middlesex, Ealing): The general policy of the Government is that to which the hon. Member refers as having been supported by the Committees of 1879 and 1884—namely, that money shall be borrowed for such railways only as are likely to be so productive that the net receipts will cover the charge interest on the debt incurred, and that protective railways charged on the Famine Insurance Grant shall be constructed out of the revenue. In 1885, however, the Government of India found it necessary to undertake an exceptionally large scheme of railways, two of which were intended for the protection of the country against famine. The Secretary of State in Council held that the circumstances were of a special character, which could not have been contemplated by the Parliamentary Committees; and, as the Government could not themselves construct the whole of the works, and he was unwilling to delay the two urgently needed protective lines, he authorised their construction by companies, the interest being debited against the Famine Insurance Grant. When the lines came into operation, the receipts were set against the interest, and the net charge was so debited. I should add that the Indian Midland and Bengal-Nagpur Railways traverse some of the worst famine districts, and without their distributing power it would have been impossible to have kept the people alive in those districts during the past months.

LAND COMMISSION.

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the terms of reference to the proposed Royal Commission on the Irish Land Commission and the names of the Commissioners?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I am not yet in a position to made a statement on the subject.

MR. DILLON: Will he say when he is likely to be in a position to give the information?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I cannot assign a day. The hon. Member is aware that these matters take time. There shall be no unnecessary delay.

MR. MAURICE HEALY (Cork): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether the Land Commission have adopted the practice of having fair rent applications heard and the holding inspected by only one lay Commissioner in some cases because of the want of a sufficient number of Assistant Commissioners; (2) will he explain why the Land Commission have not adopted the practice in all cases; and (3) whether the present staff of Assistant Commissioners is sufficiently numerous for the work to be done, or has any representation on the subject been made to the Irish Government or the Treasury?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: In reply to the first paragraph of this Question, I have no doubt that the large number of applications is a factor in the case. The Commissioners, in the exercise of the discretion expressly invested in them by Act of Parliament, delegate the hearing of applications to one or two lay Assistant Commissioners as they they think fit. Some addition to the staff of Assistant Commissioners will shortly be made.

TURCO-GREEK WAR.

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any information has reached him in reference to atrocities alleged to have been committed by the Turkish soldiery in Epirus?

*MR. CURZON: No such information has reached Her Majesty's Government. As I have previously stated it is not possible for Her Majesty's Government to have official information at first hand of incidents of the war, as they have no representative on the spot.

MR. DILLON: Are there no British Consuls in Epirus?

*MR. CURZON: Yes; but I do not think they have been at the scene of active operations.

CHARITY SCHEME (THORNTON-IN-CRAVEN.)

MR. PHILIP STANHOPE (Burnley): I beg to ask the hon. Member for the Thirsk Division of Yorkshire whether the Charity Commissioners have decided that the Charity known as "Crowther's Charity," situated at Earby, in the parish of Thornton-in-Craven, is not a parochial charity; and if so what kind of charity they deem it to be, since the accounts of the said charity have been laid before three successive annual parish meetings, thereby complying with Section 14, Subsection 6, of the Local Government Act of 1894; and whether Section 5, Subsection 20, of the same Act applies to this charity?

THE PARLIAMENTARY CHARITY COMMISSIONER (Mr. J. GRANT LAWSON, York, N.R., Thirsk and Malton): Crowther's Charity is not in the view of the Charity Commissioners a parochial charity within the definition in the Local Government Act 1894, because its benefits are open to persons who shall at any time have resided within the parish of Thornton, and are not therefore confined to inhabitants of any single parish or otherwise, as required by that provision. The charity is, moreover, within the exemption created by Section 14 (8) of the same Act, having been founded within 40 years before the passing of the Act. The Commissioners therefore, deem the Charity to be modern and non-parochial. The Rector and Churchwardens are by the foundation the Trustees of the Charity, and Section 5 (2) (c) of the Act, to which provision it is presumed the Question refers does not, therefore, apply.

MR. PHILIP STANHOPE: I beg to ask the hon. Member for the Thirsk Division of Yorkshire whether the Charity Commissioners have arrived at a decision that the present is a suitable time for establishing Robert Windle's Free School upon a new scheme, seeing that the endowment is by foundation for a grammar school, whereas the annuity of £20 per annum is being appropriated and spent for the purpose of providing elementary education in the parish of Thornton-in-Craven; and whether it is the intention of the Charity Commissioners in their contemplated scheme to sell the said school and land connected therewith, and transfer the same when realised, together with the annuity, to some technical school or college there to be established as a scholarship?

MR. GRANT LAWSON: The Charity Commissioners do not think the present is a suitable time for making a scheme for this school. They are led to this view by the considerations mentioned in paragraph 34 of their annual Report for last year, the endowment being very small, the matter being one of some difficulty and apparently contentious, and more fit to be dealt with hereafter as part of a general system of secondary education in the district. Should a scheme eventually be made by the Commissioners it might be found necessary to adopt the course indicated in the last part of the Question.

TELEPHONE SERVICE (GLASGOW).

MR. FAITHFUL BEGG (Glasgow, St. Rollox): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury as representing the Postmaster General if he can now state the exact form of inquiry which will be held in Glasgow in connection with the request of the Corporation for a telephone licence, and their complaint regarding inefficient service against the National Telephone Company; and when the inquiry will be held?

MR. HANBURY: As the Glasgow Corporation now appear to think an inquiry unnecessary, it is, of course, also unnecessary to state more than I have already stated a few days ago, namely, that the Government were willing to agree to a public independent inquiry into the complaints made by the Corporation.

MOHILL BURIAL GROUND (CO. LEITRIM).

MR. JASPER TULLY (Leitrim, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the attention of the Local Government Board has been directed by the Mohill Board of Guardians to the action of the select vestry in desecrating the graves of the Catholics buried in the Mohill graveyard, South Leitrim, by employing men to level the graves and cart away the crosses and headstones; what action, if any, has been taken by the Local Government Board in the matter; and whether he is aware that a number of policemen were engaged in preventing the relatives of the deceased from entering the graveyard to examine the desecrated graves, and by whose authority the police were directed to pursue this course?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The attention of the Local Government Board has been directed by the Guardians to the removal of tombstones and other marks from the burial ground at Mohill. The Board have informed the Guardians that the case was not one in which the Board had legal authority to interfere, and have suggested that the parties aggrieved by the action of the churchwardens should be guided by legal advice as to the proper mode of procedure. I understand that the burial ground is vested in the Representative Church body, and it appears to me that the parties aggrieved might usefully place themselves in communication with that body. With regard to the last paragraph, I am informed that the action of the police, who promptly reported the occurrences referred to, has been strictly confined to the preservation of the public peace.

POST OFFICE (DUNDALK).

Mr. T. M. HEALY (Louth, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, how long the question of providing a new post office for Dundalk has been before the Department; whether another eligible site was recently brought before the Postal authorities; and, is there any intention of providing the long promised improvement in regard to this office during the present Administration?

Mr. HANBURY: The question of a new post office at Dundalk has been before the Department since 1893, but such sites or premises as would otherwise have been suitable could not be obtained at a reasonable cost. The necessity for a new post office at Dundalk is admitted, and for some time past endeavours have been made to obtain a suitable site or premises at a reasonable cost, but hitherto without success. A scheme, however, which apparently promises a satisfactory result, is now under consideration. The question has not yet been laid before the Treasury.

SEA FISHERIES (IRELAND).

Mr. G. MURNAGHAN (Tyrone, Mid): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) has his attention been called to the fact that the Irish fishing industry is in a very unsatisfactory condition, as shown by the return relating to the sea fisheries, lately published by the Board of Trade; (2) whether he is aware that the chief cause of the decline of this industry is due to the fact that the small Irish boats are obliged to fish near home as they can neither follow the fish to their constantly changing feeding grounds, nor when a good catch is made can it be taken to the best market; that the resources of the Irish sea fisheries remain undeveloped for want of capital; and that the number of first-class Irish boats, though always small, diminishes year by year; and (3) in view of the grave interests involved will the Government make a grant to encourage and build up this decaying industry?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: It is not correct to describe the Irish sea fisheries as being a declining industry. The Board of Trade return mentions that the quantity of fish landed on the Irish coasts in 1896 was 843,062 cwt., but explains that these figures are subject to alteration. I have now ascertained that the correct figures for 1896, which were not available when the return was published, are 986,692 cwt. These figures show an increase over former years, amounting to 41 per cent. over the quantity landed in 1895, and to 62 per cent. as compared with 1892. With regard to the number of boats employed, it is true there has been a slight decrease in the number of first-class boats, but if boats of the first, second, and third classes be taken into account it will be seen that there has been no diminution in the aggregate. In reference to the last paragraph, the hon. Member has overlooked the fact that a considerable sum of money has been expended by the Congested Districts Board on fishery schemes. The steps taken by the Board to promote the Irish fisheries are fully detailed in their various published reports, and a reference to the last report will show that down to March 31st, 1896, the total expenditure on fishery schemes amounted to £53,290.

DOG MUZZLING.

MR. J. W. LOGAN (Leicester, Harborough): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether the Board of Agriculture proposes to extend the Muzzling Order to the County of Leicester, with the exception of the petty sessional division of Belvoir: and if he will inform the House why, if the order is necessary in the county at all, a small portion of it should be exempted?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. WALTER LONG, Liverpool, West Derby): A Muzzling Order applicable to the County of Leicester, with the exception of the petty sessional division of Belvoir, was made on the 11th inst. We did not think it necessary to include the petty sessional division of Belvoir, inasmuch as its geographical position in relation to the rest of the county, and the fact that it is comparatively remote from any recent case of rabies, led us to conclude that it cannot at the present time be regarded as a dangerous area.

CRETE.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, whether the Admirals at Crete have decided not to request the Turkish troops to leave the island until the insurgents have laid down their arms?

MR. CURZON: No such decision has been taken by the Admirals.

LETTERBREEN PETTY SESSIONS.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland will he cause inquiry to be made into the circumstances under which the election for the Petty Sessions District of Letterbreen, county Fermanagh, held in January last after due advertisement, has been annulled by the Irish Government, on the allegation that the advertisement was bad, and a new advertisement and summons have been issued for another election on the 25th instant; and will he state wherein the first advertisement was bad, and if it is legally competent for the Irish Government to so change the old form of summons, by the new advertisement issued in April last, as wholly to alter the conditions for the election in this case?

*THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND: I am quite familiar with the particulars of the case, so that all further inquiry is unnecessary. The election was annulled because it was informal and irregular. A new advertisement has been issued and a fresh election is about to take place. The first advertisement omitted to state that an exception to the limit of age was made in favour of persons already acting as Petty Sessions clerks. It is in my opinion perfectly competent for the Government to take the course they did, namely, to annul the election and state expressly in the advertisement for the new election this exemption in favour of persons already holding the office of Petty Sessions clerks in another district, which it has been always the custom to act upon.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) BILL.

MR. H. SETON-KARR (St. Helens): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in view of the new and important principles and the wide-reaching effect of the Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, and the great number of men and large amount of invested capital affected thereby, the Government will postpone the Committee stage of the said Bill to a later date, in order that adequate time may be given to those affected thereby to fully and carefully consider the provisions of the Bill?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I understand my hon. Friend's Question is as to whether the Committee stage of the Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill can be deferred from Monday. This is really more a question for the House than for the Government to determine. The Government desire to meet the convenience of the House. I am extremely anxious that the Committee stage should be taken at the very earliest date—[cheers]—and I can hardly believe that any serious inconvenience will be inflicted upon any trade or any interest by taking it on Monday. If it be deferred I am afraid it may greatly interfere with the comfort of the House in connection with the Whitsuntide holidays, and I should be very sorry to bring back hon. Members for very important business on the Monday following Whit Monday. At present my idea would be that the House should indeed meet on the Monday following Whit Monday, and that during that week we should as far as possible take business of a wholly uncontroversial character—Supply, or largely Supply—and that the majority of Members need not, therefore, curtail their holidays. Of course, if we do not make much progress, if we do not finish the Committee stage of the Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, or, at all events, make so great progress that the end was within very measurable distance, I am afraid I shall have to ask the House to take that Bill in that week, which I do not think would be very convenient to hon. Members. I hope, therefore, that Members who have amendments to put down will do what, I am sure, they can do if they exert themselves—that is, frame their amendments in time for discussion in the House on Monday and following days.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Notts, Rushcliffe): Are we to understand that the right hon. Gentleman proposes to ask the House to reassemble for some business on the Monday after Whit Monday?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: As far as I can foresee from the progress of public business, that will probably be the best course.

MR. JOHN ELLIS: Is that final?

MR. SETON-KARR: May I ask whether, in the event of the right hon. Gentleman receiving representations that individual industries which are seriously affected by the Bill desire longer time to consider their amendments to that Bill, he will postpone the Committee stage?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: It is difficult to answer that question. I would point out to my hon. Friend that in any case there will be a Report stage for anything that is omitted in Committee. I still think that the general convenience of the House should be considered in this matter, and I cannot easily imagine the sort of amendment it would be impossible to construct before Monday. ["Hear, hear"!]

PORT NESS HARBOUR (LEWIS).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate, having regard to the statement made by the engineer of Port Ness Harbour works that the huge concrete blocks which fell into the harbour have not been removed owing to the weather not being suitable and that the blocks are not a source of danger to the fishermen, will he take steps to obtain information from the fishermen who are compelled to use the harbour?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: I have no reason to doubt the accuracy of the statement I made to the hon. Member last Thursday from the report of the engineer of the works, but if any authoritative representation in writing be made to the Secretary for Scotland by the fishermen on the subject he will give it his consideration.

MR. WEIR asked whether Messrs. Stevens and Co., Edinburgh, were the engineers for the harbour in question?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: Yes, Sir.

COMPENSATION ALLOWANCE (EUROPEAN AND INDIAN OFFICIALS).

SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN (Banffshire): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in view of the fact that the salaries of the European officials in Ceylon, Singapore, and Hong Kong are paid in silver currency, will he state whether any compensation allowance has been granted to them for the depreciation of silver, as has been granted by the Government of India to its European employés?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN Birmingham, W.): European officials in Ceylon are at present paid half their salaries at 1s. 6d. the rupee, and in Straits Settlements and Hong Kong at 3s. to the dollar.

SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether the Comptroller and Auditor General to the Government of India raised any objection to the payment of compensation allowance to the 40 Indian officials whose salaries are by statute fixed in rupees; and whether he took any steps to stop these payments and surcharge the officers concerned; if so, upon what grounds have these payments been continued for nearly four years?

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: Doubts as to the technical legality of the payment of exchange compensation allowance to the officers whose salaries are fixed under statute in rupees were raised, not by the Comptroller and Auditor General himself, but on two separate occasions by two of his accounting officers. The result of the doubts thus raised was a reference by the Government of India to the Secretary of State in Council; and as I have already informed the hon. Member, the matter is still under my consideration, with a view to the procuring of further legal opinions. The payments have hitherto been made in India under the impression, confirmed by legal advice, that they were not only equitable but legal, and until the question is finally decided it is obvious that no steps of any kind can be taken.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS ACT.

MR. J. W. SIDEBOTHAM (Cheshire, Hyde): I beg to ask the Attorney General whether Voluntary Schools are exempt from rates from the date on which the Voluntary Schools Act received the Royal Assent, 8th April; and whether in the case of a rate levied on 1st April, a Voluntary School would be liable for the whole half-year's rate, or for one week's proportion only?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir RICHARD WEBSTER, Isle of Wight): In my opinion the liability is complete as soon as the rate is levied, and in the case put by my hon. Friend the school is liable for the whole amount of the rate levied on April 1.

STATUTE LAW REVISION AND CONSOLIDATION BILLS.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Attorney General whether any record is kept of the proceedings of the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament on Statute Law Revision Bills and Consolidation Bills; and, if so, whether such record has been, or will be, presented to either House?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL: The Minutes of Proceedings of the Joint Committee on Statute Law Revision and Consolidation Bills are reported to the House and then printed, when the Committee makes it first Report.

LAND RATING (IRELAND).

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury when he expects to be in a position to make any statement on the subject of Irish rating and the relief grant to be applied to Ireland under the Land Rating Act of last year?

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, after the almost unanimous vote of Irish Members that was given on Thursday night, that the money that had been allocated to Ireland in 1896 should go to the relief of rates, it is the intention of the Government to proceed with the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill and the Agriculture and Industries (Ireland) Bill, under which this money would be allocated to other purposes; and, if not, whether the Government are prepared to reconsider the position taken up on Thursday night, and make provision for the reduction of agricultural local rates in Ireland on the same basis as has already taken place in England and Scotland?

MR. KNOX: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, having regard to the strong condemnation by the Press of all parties of the Government's refusal to give to Irish agricultural ratepayers the same relief as has already been given to English ratepayers, the Government will still persist in refusing equal treatment to Irish farmers?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: In reference to these Questions, I have to say that I hope to make a statement in connection with Irish business to-morrow at Question time.

INDIA (EXPENDITURE).

MR. M. M. BHOWNAGGREE (Bethnal Green, N.E.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether there is any likelihood of the Royal Commission on the Expenditure of India completing their Report before the end of the present Session; and, whether, in that case, he will give special facilities for a Debate on the Report, apart from the usual discussion of the Indian Budget?

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: I understand there is little chance of the Report being issued in time to permit of its proper consideration by the Government before the close of the Session.

MILITARY MANŒUVRES BILL.

General RUSSELL (Cheltenham): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Government have come to any decision respecting the introduction of a Manœuvres Bill this Session, so as to allow for arrangements being made in good time to permit manœuvres on an extended scale being practised next year?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I think it would be desirable to introduce this Bill in its new and, I hope, more acceptable form in the course of the present Session. Whether it will be possible to make any progress with it, will depend upon the reception it meets with. I could not promise any important fraction of Parliamentary time for its discussion.

WHITSUNTIDE HOLIDAYS (HOUSE OF COMMONS).

Dr. FARQUHARSON (Aberdeenshire, W.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, whether he can conveniently state to the House when the Whitsuntide holidays will begin?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: As I think I have already intimated, in answer to a previous question, we shall probably rise on the Friday before Whit Sunday.

Dr. FARQUHARSON: Will there be a Morning Sitting on that Friday?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: No, Sir.

Mr. HENRY LABOUCHERE (Northampton) asked if the right hon. Gentleman would tell them what was in his mind in respect to Whitsuntide? [Laughter.] He did not quite gather what holidays they were going to have.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I thought I had already informed the House that much will depend on the progress we make with the Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill. We rise on the Friday before Whit Monday. If we have either finished the Committee stage of the Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, or, as I have said, made such material progress with it that the completion of the Committee stage is obviously not a matter of any lengthened discussion, I shall then propose that the House should meet on the Monday after Whit Monday—the 14th of June. On the Monday, Thursday, and Friday, which are the only three days remaining to the Government in that week, Supply will be taken, and I shall do my best to make it of as uncontroversial a character as possible. That would enable hon. Gentlemen who are not interested in the particular Supply taken to prolong their absence from the House until the Monday following. The House would still be in Session, and I should again take Supply. That would be the Monday before the Jubilee Celebration. We shall adjourn from the Monday to the Thursday after the Jubilee Celebration. The House will see that, if that arrangement be carried out, a very large proportion of the House will not be burdened by attendance within these walls during a considerable time before the Jubilee Celebration. But the possibility of carrying out this arrangement depends on the progress we succeed in making before the Whitsuntide holidays with the Accidents Bill.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Will the right hon. gentleman say, on the supposition that the Second Reading of the Finance Bill will be taken to-night, when the Committee stage will be put down?

The FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: It must be some time after Whitsuntide.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: Under the scheme he has laid down to hand over Wednesday, the 16th, to private legislation, including a Female Suffrage Bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUGH asked whether, if the favourable progress which the First Lord of the Treasury anticipated was made, it might not be possible to meet on the Thursday week after Whit Monday. [General cheers.]

The FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: If the House showed any great enthusiasm for the transaction of public business, I would not say that such a plan would be absolutely impossible. [Cheers.]

SUPPLY (CIVIL SERVICE VOTES).

Mr. KNOX asked the Secretary to the Treasury the order in which the Irish Votes would be taken to-morrow.

MR. HANBURY said the votes for the Local Government Board and criminal prosecutions would be taken first. The votes in Class 2 would be taken in order, but those for the Chief Secretary, the Public Works Board, and Education would be postponed.

DUNGARVAN AND LISMORE RAILWAY.

MR. POWER (Waterford, E.) asked the Secretary to the Treasury if he could make any statement with regard to the negotiations which were pending between the Treasury and the Dungarvan and Lismore Railway.

MR. HANBURY said he had already told the hon. Member that they were confidential, and until a result was arrived at he could not make any statement. All he could say was that it would be arrived at before the Public Works Vote was taken.

PRISONS BILL.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool) in asking leave to introduce a Bill to amend the law relating to prisons, said this was an important measure embodying certain amendments which had been under discussion both in the House and in the country, and which, he need hardly remind the House, were the result of the recommendations of the Departmental Committee presided over by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Leeds. He could not expect to make substantial progress with the measure this Session, but he was very anxious that the House and the country should be in possession of his proposal. [" Hear, hear!"] He might say that he should couple with the Bill a memorandum explaining its objects.

Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Matthew White Ridley and Mr. Jesse Collings; presented accordingly, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Thursday next, and to be printed. [Bill 262.]

THE POLICE AND STOLEN PROPERTY.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY also asked leave to introduce a Bill to make further provision with respect to the disposal of property in the possession of the police. He said this was a small Bill which had been made necessary by the observations of the Comptroller and Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee with reference to certain property found in the possession of prisoners which, under the present law, could not be satisfactorily disposed of. Under the present law, property found in the possession of a prisoner could not be legally disposed of and restored to its owner or otherwise dealt with if it exceeded £15 in value, and was not charged to have been stolen. Consequently, a large fund had been accumulated in the hands of the Receiver of the Metropolitan Police, and the Comptroller and Auditor General having called attention to this matter before the Public Accounts Committee, the authorities had been bound to take action. As the result of a Departmental Committee certain proposals were made which had been embodied in this Bill. The object of the Bill was to enable the Court to restore such property to its rightful owner, if such owner could be found, of whatever value, and, further, to enable the police to dispose of the property and to use the proceeds for certain objects specified in the Bill if the proper owner could not be found. It also provided for a satisfactory audit, and he might add that, as far as he was aware, the proposals for the audit had the consent of the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Bill ordered to be brought in by Sir Matthew White Ridley and Mr. Jesse Collings; presented accordingly and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Thursday next, and to be printed. [Bill 263.]

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT (1870) AMENDMENT BILL.

On the Motion for the Third Reading of this Bill,

Mr. JOHN HUTTON (York, N.R., Richmond) said he desired to enter an earnest protest against the working of the Bill with regard to small rural School Boards. In the Division he represented there were no fewer than 110 elementary schools. Of these only 15 were Board Schools. Some of them were of the very poorest class in the whole country—nine of them had an average attendance of under 50—and not one of the 15 received a single shilling under the Bill. [Opposition cheers.] He should like to illustrate these schools by quoting the state of one particular school. It was in a school district situated on the moor edges, seven miles from the nearest railway station. The population at the present time was only 223, and the rateable value only £3,810. In 1876 the district was compelled to form a School Board, and built two schools—the population being more than double the present number—one to hold 70 children, the other 40. The closing of the mines caused almost the entire population to disappear, and the average attendance at those schools was now only 21 and 19. A school rate of 9d. was necessary, and the cost per child was no less than £5. 19s. 9d. He inquired whether it was possible to move an Amendment in Committee, so as to bring these Board Schools within the Bill, but was informed on the highest authority that it could not be done without also bringing in the schools in the rich towns such as London and other large cities. He was aware that the Agricultural Rating Bill of last year gave some relief to such poor districts as he had referred to; but it was relief to occupiers of land only, and was not of the slightest help to occupiers of houses as such. That, he thought, was a very great grievance of which they had a right to complain. When the Voluntary Schools Bill was passing through the House they were told again and again that the poor Board Schools would be relieved by another Bill. He had already said that the poor School Board districts in the constituency he represented must be among the poorest in the whole country, and it was a great injustice and a real grievance that they should be left out in the cold. He only hoped that his right hon. Friend the head of the Education Department would see his way to promise that in a future Session he would bring in some Bill to give substantial relief to the schools to which he had referred.

*Mr. R. W. PERKS (Lincolnshire, Louth) said he was of opinion that the fond hopes of the last speaker would not be fulfilled. Seeing that it was the declared intention of leading men on the Ministerial Benches to crush out rather than encourage Board Schools, it was not likely that the poor districts he so ably represented would get any such help as he asked for. He should not like the Bill to pass without offering his protest against its injustice. ["Hear, hear!"] It was unjust to numerous classes in the country, and the principle upon which it was based was absolutely unintelligible. Many of the great towns which bore the main burden of the assistance given under the Voluntary Schools Act, and who would have also to bear the main part of the burden under this so-called Necessitous Schools Bill, had no relief whatever, and had no share, the bulk of them, in this petty and miserable educational dole. [Opposition cheers.] The great cities of Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Birmingham, Bradford, Bristol, Cardiff, and London herself, had no share whatever, although the ratepayers were burdening themselves far more for educational work than the voluntary subscribers in rural districts and towns where the sectarian schools were now in operation. There was a further great injustice as between town and country. One would have imagined that when this small solatium—a sort of educational hush-money to the School Boards—was offered by the Education Department—a sort of conscience-money, he supposed, given in fulfilment of a pledge to do something for the Board Schools which they could not well get out of—one would have thought that when they came to distribute this small bounty, they would have exercised some ingenuity in trying to distribute it on some equitable footing as between town and country. What was the position in reference to this small grant of £110,000? There were in this country some 5,400 Board Schools. Yet, about one-third of the money distributable under the Bill went to nine towns or School Board districts. Leeds got the enormous sum of £6,788—money which would be far more justly distributed in the rural districts of Yorkshire; Hull got £1,868, and the town of Sheffield got close on £3,000. Nottingham, another very flourishing town, received close on £4,000; and Leicester £3,377. But the biggest haul was made by the district comprising West Ham, Wanstead, Walthamstow, and Leyton, which got no less than £17,500 out of this £110,000. Now was that equitable? Did it commend itself to any man of common sense? They might point to the Bill, and say that they had adopted the principle of contributing the difference between the produce of a 3d. rate and the limit of 16s. 6d. per head. But common-sense men would judge by the results. The reason why these alleged poverty-stricken districts of West Ham and the neighbourhood received this enormous bounty was due very largely to the fact that the rateable value of property there was extremely low. The standard of rateable value, he contended, was no fair index of the poverty of a district. His point was, that an enormous proportion of this money went to the towns as against the villages and rural districts. In the county of Lincoln, in the Division he represented, covering an area of over one thousand square miles, they had 175 villages, with two or three small towns, and they had something like twenty School Boards. In the whole county there were 107 School Boards. It was the custom to represent the rural districts as wholly given over to Anglican educational control. That, he was thankful to say, was not absolutely the case. It was true there were 8,000 villages in which there was only one sectarian school, and that a school of the Anglican Church, but the county of Lincoln was sufficiently enlightened to have 107 School Boards, and he trusted the day would come when the shop-keepers and farmers would throw off the ascendency of the sectarian churches of all sorts, and would combine to have their School Boards. But out of these 107 schools in Lincolnshire, only 13 received any help at all from this Bill; and in the Division he represented, out of the twenty School Boards, only one—a little Board School right up on the top of the wolds of Lincolnshire—received any help at all, that help being limited to £5. Was it reasonable to suppose that the farmers who were already rated so heavily in that distressed agricultural county would feel any enthusiasm for this Bill, or would consider that this money was being properly and equitably distributed? ["Hear, hear!" from the Opposition Benches.] He might refer to other counties. In Surrey, with 32 School Boards, only four got help; in Lancashire, with 53 School Boards, only four were assisted, and in this case the assistance was limited to 10d. per scholar. Contrast that with the 5s. per scholar given under the Voluntary Schools Act, and then ask whether there was anything like equity of treatment. Her Majesty's Government seemed to have absolutely abandoned—in fact they had refused to accept—what had been always considered to be the guiding principle or one of the guiding principles of the Act of 1870, viz., equality of treatment between the two classes of schools—Voluntary and Board Schools. He wished to point out that this Bill, coupled with the Voluntary Schools Act already passed, re-opened absolutely the whole so-called settlement of 1870. ["Hear, hear!"] He was glad to be supported in that view by his hon. Friend the Member for the city of Rochester. He was quite prepared for the Dissenting churches and communities of this country to fight their own battle and establish, if necessary, their own schools, but certainly the course which the Government had taken left the Dissenters of this country absolutely free to adopt any course they might think proper, and bring any pressure they could command upon any future Government to secure for the School Board schools of this country more adequate and reasonable assistance.

COLONEL MILWARD (Stratford-upon-Avon) was bound to support the observations of his hon. Friend the Member for the Richmond Division of the North Riding as to this being a very disappointing Bill. He had had several representations from Warwickshire, where there were comparatively few School Boards, to the effect that practically nothing was received under the Bill by poor and rural parishes. He thought the scheme was really too ingenious. He did not, as a rule, approve of ingenious ingenuity in that way, because it was generally impracticable. He thoroughly believed the Education Department wished to deal fairly, as far as money would allow, with all the School Boards they had to do with, but it did so happen under the Bill that some School Boards got excessively large sums and some poor, struggling School Boards got no money at all. The School Boards in his constituency were agricultural parishes with a large area, very much distressed, and where the School Board had been forced upon the parish by stress of circumstances. In one of them it was true that the sum of £7 was received, but the others got nothing at all. On the borders of his constituency there was a large parish, partly artisan and partly agricultural, which did require large help and which received it. He was bound to say there was a feeling of disappointment in the rural parishes at the principle upon which the money was distributed, and the fact that many poor parishes would receive so little.

Mr. LAMBERT (Devon, South Molton) regretted that hon. Members opposite did not support hon. Members on his side when they brought forward the Motion declaring that no Bill would be satisfactory to the House unless it gave the same treatment to Board as to Voluntary Schools. He rose, on behalf of the rural districts, to protest against the niggardliness of the Government in their treatment of the small rural schools. The Government had shown a strange lack of what was necessary for the educational efficiency of the rural School Board Schools. The Education Department, as the last speaker had said, no doubt wished to deal fairly with the rural Board Schools, but he believed they were hampered by the ecclesiastical tendencies of those who probably sat behind the Vice President. In his constituency in North Devon there were 31 Board Schools, containing 2,748 scholars in average attendance. The School Boards paid no less a sum than £1,600 a year in rates, or 12s. 6d. per scholar, being nearly double the average voluntary subscriptions of 6s. 10½d., and if they had been Voluntary Schools they would have received no less than £687 a year. Unfortunately they were Board Schools, and they received the miserable dole of £66 a year, or less than one-tenth the amount they would have got had they been Voluntary Schools. That was only 6d. per child as contrasted with the 5s. given to the children in Voluntary Schools. How was this gigantic grant distributed among the schools in his constituency? There were two which received between them £64 a year out of the £66, and there were two which received £1 a year each. To call that relief was ridiculous. To give a School Board £1 a year was to give it what would not be enough to buy a blackboard, and what would hardly keep the children in slate pencils. To fritter away public money in such small grants could do no good, and as a Unionist newspaper in the West of England said the other day, it was a wasteful use of public money the like of which had never before been sanctioned by Parliament. They could not say that giving a School Board in a parish £1 a year was legislation. It was a parody of all justice. It was a kind of Parliamentary pantomime with the Vice President as chief performer. In North Devon they got an average of £1. 5s. per School Board, which it was grotesque to describe as any relief. In his constituency there was a School Board parish in which the ratepayers actually paid 25s. for every scholar in average attendance, yet they got nothing in relief from this dole. It seemed to him the principle of the Bill was that the ratepayers who paid most locally received least Imperially, and those who paid the least locally received the most from the Imperial grant. In his constituency the people paid nearly double the amount of the average voluntary subscriptions in rates and yet they got only one-tenth of the amount the schools would have received if they had been Voluntary Schools. He contended that that was most injurious to all education in the country districts. If the late Government had introduced a Bill to give £600,000 to the School Boards and only £100,000 to the Voluntary Schools hon. Gentlemen opposite would have had a fit of ecclesiastical hysterics, and would have indulged in all sorts of declamations against the wickedness of the Government. He thought it would have been much wiser for the supporters of Voluntary Schools in that House to have treated all classes of schools alike, rather than to have endeavoured to cripple the School Boards. He maintained that the country districts required as much money for education as did the towns. The right hon. Gentleman, the Vice President, when he introduced the Bill of last year said that, as a general rule, while the Board Schools in the great cities had proved themselves extremely efficient in education, the Board Schools in the country had proved themselves inefficient. If that were so why give enormous sums to the towns and such small sums to the country districts? If they had wanted to improve education they should have given the money to the localities where education, according to the right hon. Gentleman, was inefficient, but the system adopted by the Government for the distribution of the grant was a gross parody upon any kind of justice in legislation.

Sir UGHTRED KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH (Lancashire, Clitheroe) regretted that expressions like those they had heard from the two hon. Members on the Government Benches, representing the feeling in two counties of England—Warwickshire and the North Riding of Yorkshire—were not given expression to upon the earlier stages of this Bill. He thought much might have been done if hon. Gentlemen opposite representing School Board districts had, on the Voluntary Schools Bill, expressed the feelings to which they were now giving utterance, as to the injustice of this unequal treatment of Board and Voluntary Schools. ["Hear, hear!"] It was a somewhat belated protest to make now, because nothing remained but to utter the protest. While they had had strong representations over and over again from his side of the House as to the wrong principle which had guided the treatment of different classes of schools by the Government, they had not had those protests at a sufficiently early time from those hon. Gentlemen on the Government side of the House who represented School Board constituencies in various parts of the country. He could assure the House from his knowledge of Lancashire that the feelings which the hon. Member for the Richmond Division of the North Riding had given expression to were shared by many of the School Board districts in that county. ["Hear, hear!"] School Boards in many small places were trying to do their duty for the education of the children, and there was an intense feeling of injustice among all parties as to the way in which 5s. per child had been distributed among Voluntary Schools, while something less than 1s. was given to Board Schools. There was no doubt that the effect of this legislation would be to unsettle the Education question, and all the vexed questions so happily settled by the Act of 1870 would be opened up. They had heard speeches from the noble Lord the Member for Rochester and his Friend Mr. Athelstan Riley, rejoicing over the settlement. He wondered whether in a few years' time the noble Lord and Mr. Athelstan Riley, who arrogated to themselves to speak in the name of the Church Party, would rejoice in the same way. Did the noble Lord suppose that this question could be left where this Bill left it? [Viscount Cranborne: "No, certainly not!"] Then he ventured to think the noble Lord would speak in a very different tone in a few years' time. He did not wish to detain the House with any prolonged observations on the Third Reading of this Bill, but he would repeat that a feeling of injustice and unequal treatment had been aroused amongst the ratepayers who had to provide the money for the School Boards. Subsequent experience of the inequality and injustice must strengthen that feeling, and he was convinced that in the future it would be necessary to review the whole question, and to take care that it was dealt with in a very different way to that in which his Government had dealt with it. ["Hear, hear!"]

The VICE PRESIDENT of the COUNCIL (Sir John Gorst, Cambridge University) said he would not reply to the general protest of the right hon. Gentleman, as it had been replied to over and over again. He rose for the purpose of making a few observations in answer to the very real grievance to which his hon. Friends the Members for Warwickshire and the Richmond Division of Yorkshire had called attention, and that was the position of the small rural School Boards with a very large area and very sparse population, in which the rateable value was low and the cost of education under the system of the Act of 1870 ran up to enormous sums. One case had been quoted in which it had reached no less a sum than £6. There was no doubt that the position of these small School Boards was a very difficult one, and that the Act of 1870, which succeeded so well in great cities, which had given London, Manchester, and Liverpool their admirable Board Schools and their high standard of education, had not worked equally successfully in the rural districts, where the cost was out of all proportion to the education given. Her Majesty's Government would be only too glad if they could induce Parliament to consent to a Measure by which they could really be placed in a more satisfactory condition; but the figures of this Bill could not have been altered so as to give a larger grant to the rural districts without making the Bill so wide as to include very large cities like London itself and imposing on the public funds sums to which no Chancellor of the Exchequer would agree. ["Hear, hear!"] Another reason was that money was not the only thing, not even the chief thing, the rural School Boards required. They required organisation a great deal more than money—["hear, hear!"]—and he ventured to say that there would never be a satisfactory condition of public education in rural districts until there were much larger areas and authorities exercising jurisdiction over much wider areas. ["Hear, hear!"] He would like to remind the House that this matter was dealt with by the Bill of last year. Clauses in that Bill were directed to giving, at all events to the ratepayers and inhabitants of those districts the opportunity of merging themselves in larger areas and of having an authority capable of taking charge of elementary education in the counties, and which would have relieved if not put an end to the grievance of which hon. Members so justly complained. ['Hear, hear!"] Of course it was not for him to complain of the action Parliament thought fit to take last year, but he wished to warn the House that they could not relieve the real grievance of these small School Boards with their scattered populations by a mere grant of public money. Even if they had the power under this Bill to give them a large grant, in an expenditure amounting to £6 a child, what would even 5s. per child do? The cost would still be £5. 15s. How much better off would they be after receiving that relief than they are now? ["Hear, hear!"] The matter could not be remedied by the drastic methods hon. Members recommended. Those who entertained a sort of fetish respect for the Act of 1870 must make up their minds that that system must be amended in certain particulars, that the small rural School Board must be put an end to, and that the authority for education must be an authority exercising jurisdiction over a wider area and able to organise and co-ordinate education in a proper manner. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. A. H. DYKE ACLAND (Yorkshire, W.R., Rotherham) said the right hon. Gentleman had dealt with the matter of federation of small School Boards, and appeared to think that was an argument against the protests made in this Bill; but this Bill did not deal with organisation. It was purely a financial Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] The right hon. Gentleman would have found that if there had been a proposal for the federation of School Boards in small areas, without anything dangerous to School Boards, there would have been no opposition from that side of the House. Therefore, he hoped the right hon. Gentleman would relieve them of any responsibility for having prevented it. It was not that part of the Bill of last year that killed it. [Cheers.] Let them have no red herring drawn across the trail with reference to last year's Bill or the needs of small School Boards under this Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] Their needs had been exemplified from both sides of the House, and hon. Gentlemen had shown how, from a financial point of view, they were made to suffer. Theirs was a perfectly fair complaint, and no amount of federation would get rid of it. The right hon. Gentleman said he would not say a word about the general protest against the Bill, because it had been replied to over and over again. He wished to know what the reply was? ["Hear, hear!"] The right hon. Gentleman said he would not deal with that, but would deal with the real grievance. He wished the right hon. Gentleman could deal with it. They all knew that the Chancellor of the Exchequer was master of the situation; but although the Chancellor of the Exchequer would never have agreed to a sum of £500,000 for School Boards, he had agreed to a sum of £600,000 for Voluntary Schools. [Cheers.] If £750,000 were the only sum available, and if it had been equally distributed between Voluntary and Board Schools, the grievance would have been largely modified. ["Hear, hear!"] The Vice President said that School Boards which had a burden of rates equivalent to £6 per child would not get much relief out of 5s. But there were School Boards, both in town and country, whose expenditure was less than £1 per child, and in these cases 5s. would be a real relief. ["Hear, hear!"] They had no power to increase the amount given under the Bill, but they were right in protesting against the insufficiency of the grant. They were right, moreover, in protesting against the irregularity and inequality which the methods of the Bill were developing and would still more largely develop as time went on. Some Boards would get relief to the extent of £1,000 in one year, and the amount would go down to £500 in the next year, and up to £900 in the year following. That unequal method would tend to wastefulness, and would irritate the ratepayers by reason of the varying demands that would be made upon them from year to year. Whether on the ground of irregularity and inequality of action, or on the broader ground of the extreme insufficiency of the grant, they must protest, as they had protested at every stage, against the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"]

*Mr. ERNEST GRAY (West Ham, N.) said he should have thought this stage of the Bill would have been taken without any discussion whatever. [Opposition laughter.] There were but few principles involved, and these had been sufficiently discussed on the previous stages. But now that the Debate had arisen, he should be sorry to see it closed without some correction of the false impression to which the statements of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Rotherham and his Friends had given rise. He could not admit that the methods of the Bill were open to the charge levelled against them by the right hon. Gentleman. Section 97 of the Act of 1870 was always open to far more serious accusations, for under it the grants did not depend on the way in which a locality had discharged its duty, but were the same whether the rate was 3d. in the pound or 2s. 6d. in the pound. That anomaly was removed by the Bill, and the relief would now be in proportion to the way in which a district discharged its duty, as well as in proportion to the necessities of the district. The Bill, in his opinion had been very skilfully drafted, and the application of its principles had been wisely bestowed over the country. He joined in the regret that the total amount was not larger, but the method of application was not, in his view, open to objection. This legislation was incomplete in itself, and must be followed at a very early date by further Measures dealing with the question of national education. The necessity for further reform did not arise from the introduction of the Bills of this Session, but from the facts of the case. The country would sooner or later have demanded a large Measure such as that introduced last Session. The disturbance of the compromise of 1870 was not caused by the present legislation, but already existed. He asked the House not to attach too much importance to the protest that had been raised, particularly from the Ministerial side, with regard to the Bill. He did not think that, with regard to some of the smaller School Boards, the protest was altogether fair or just. Reform was not to be found for these small School Boards in the amount of the grant awarded to them, but must be found in a Measure totally abolishing the small School Board, and placing educational affairs in rural districts in the hands of authorities having control over larger and wider areas than those which at present existed, and with power to levy a rate over rich and poor districts alike, so as in some way to equalise the charge throughout the country. It would be most ungracious on his part, as representing one of the districts largely benefited by the Bill, if he did not offer his cordial thanks to the Government for introducing it. He believed that many districts, both urban and rural, would look upon the Bill with a large amount of satisfaction, and that the individual ratepayer in these districts would not forget that it was from the present Unionist Government that he received this measure of relief.

Mr. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield) said that the Bill afforded a fitting opportunity for reviewing the educational policy, or no-policy, of the Government. They had had a great opportunity, arising from the fact that there was a general conviction that the Act of 1870 needed amendment; they had an able Minister of Education, and they had a large majority behind them, and there was no disposition to thwart them on the part of the Opposition. How had they used the opportunity? The Vice President of the Council had just admitted that the mere granting of additional public money would not improve the condition of the rural schools, and had described the changes which would be really effective; but the Government had not proposed any such changes. They had not raised the school age, though almost everybody admitted the necessity for doing so. They had provided no guarantees for either increased school efficiency or for the maintenance of voluntary subscriptions. A large additional grant of public money had been voted to Voluntary Schools, but without any provision for local representative control. The teachers were not to be protected, as they should be, from the exactions of their clerical taskmasters. Lastly, the admitted grievances of Nonconformists were not redressed. There would still be thousands of parishes with only a Church of England School, from which Nonconformist teachers and pupil teachers would be excluded. All these demands had been made, but not one had been conceded. Those were the Government's sins of omission. Their sins of commission were less numerous, but were still serious, for they had granted £616,000 a year to Voluntary Schools and only a paltry £110,000 to some Board Schools, and to many of them nothing. Why was such a distinction made? Two grounds had been stated. One was, that to treat both classes alike would prevent the Voluntary Schools successfully competing with Board Schools; but the Government had decisively rejected that plea in opposing the Amendment of the noble Lord the Member for Rochester in the Committee on that Bill. Nor could the other objection—the plea of poverty on the part of the Chancellor of the Exchequer—be maintained, seeing that he had had unprecedented resources at his disposal. The half million which would probably be wasted on the Navy would have been exactly sufficient to place the two classes of schools on the same footing. But the greatest mistake of the Government was the creation of non-representative bodies, which would weaken the authority of the Education Department, and many of which would, it was certain, work for ecclesiastical instead of educational ends. The educational measures of the Government were but makeshifts and temporary measures. They would do nothing to improve education, while they would create new anomalies and inflict great injustice. Mr. Forster was honoured for the Act of 1870, but the Bills of the present Government would bring to them no honour, because there was too much reason to believe that they had sacrificed educational interests to the interests of sectarianism.

Mr. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.) regretted very much that, in spite of the discouragement of last Session, the Government had not attempted to put the Education question on a surer basis. The two Education Bills which had been introduced this year did produce in many places a great number of fresh anomalies—London, for instance, was very badly treated—["hear, hear!"]—and he trusted that even during the present Parliament they might find time for legislation which would set at rest this great question. He was persuaded that the only way to solve the difficulty was for the State to take on itself the whole cost of secular teaching.

Bill read a Third time, amid cheers, and passed.

FINANCE BILL.

Order for Second Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a Second time."

*Mr. JAMES LOWTHER (Kent, Thanet) proposed to leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add instead thereof the words

> "in the opinion of this House, the existing fiscal system of the country is unequal to the continually increasing demands of the public service, and that the time has arrived for recourse being had to more varied sources of taxation."

He said that Her Majesty's Government themselves had called attention to the pressing need of an investigation of this subject, because the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his Budget speech last year, drew special attention to the difficulties which anyone occupying his position might find himself in in the event of having to find some means of adding to the revenue. It was true that the other day the right hon. Gentleman spoke in terms which betokened great confidence on his part as to the condition of our revenue at the present time, but the fact remained that no longer ago than last year the Chancellor of the Exchequer drew attention to the extremely narrow basis upon which our system of revenue was founded, and in doing so he was only following in the footsteps of his predecessor the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouthshire. Last year the Chancellor of the Exchequer said:—

> "There has been a gradual transfer of burden from the indirect to the direct taxpayer of this country. . . . . That, I think the Committee will see, has been a progressive and remarkable change. I do not say the policy is wrong. There is no doubt that under it the industry and enterprise of this country, our commerce and trade, and our wealth, have been enormously developed, and, therefore, I suppose we may say it is justified by its results. But I must point out that our system as it now stands does not add to the popular support which any Chancellor of the Exchequer can enlist in aid of economy."

The right hon. Gentleman went on to say:—

> "The indirect taxpayer of this country is very moderately burdened—indeed, very lightly burdened, if he neither drinks nor smokes. We have arrived now at this position—that in time of peace we have an Income Tax of 8d. in the pound, we have Death Duties at a point which, I suppose, hardly anybody will wish to increase, and we have indirect taxation levied only on a few articles of great consumption."

We had a system of revenue which was only capable of expansion in time of need in practically one or two directions, and he did not think his right hon. Friend, or anyone who was likely to occupy his place, would assert that our present revenue from Customs and Excise was one on the stability of which we could reckon. When the time came that the country was in a less prosperous condition, down went these sources of revenue. What had they to replace them? Nothing, as far as he could see, but the income tax. He passed over the possibility of anyone increasing the death duty. He did not think that even the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouth would suggest the possibility of augmenting the revenue in the direction of the Death Duty. That was a tax which was most unpopular in the country. It was a tax which was not only oppressive to those who had to pay it, but was the occasion of very grave inconvenience to those who, though they did not personally pay it, were indirectly interested in it on account of their employment terminating through its harsh operations. When he carried the House on to the diminution of the purchasing power of those persons, they would easily see that, from one cause or another, there was no class of society which did not, to some extent, feel the effect of the burden which these death duties had imposed. Nor from a merely revenue standpoint must sight be lost of the fact that this was a tax upon capital and not income, and that while loose cash (or "free personalty," as the Chancellor of the Exchequer styled it) had already found means of largely escaping its operation, real estate would be subjected to a steady diminution of its liability to duty through the deductions in respect of charges arising out of provisions for previous payments of that impost. Hence a shrinkage of revenues as time advances. How did they stand with regard to what he might call their general system of finance? The other day the Chancellor of the Exchequer referred to the fact that the country had doubled its income during the last 60 years, but he omitted to tell them that in the future he saw no reasonable prospect of keeping their national expenditure within even its present enlarged bounds. His right hon. Friend knew perfectly well that, year after year, the demand for an increase of expenditure went on. The House of Commons, so far from curtailing expenditure, was the direct cause of a vast deal of extravagance. ["Hear, hear!"] He thought there would be general concurrence that no limit could possibly be placed upon their Army and Navy, so far as the present was concerned, but there were many items in their Civil Service which that House would do well to more closely supervise. ["Hear, hear!"] Instead of this, the Government was egged on by Members from all quarters of the House to continually increase the national expenditure. There was one point in connection with their expenditure which he ventured to think was a matter of some danger. He had already referred to the fact that the bulk of the voters paid little or nothing in the shape of taxation. That being so, there seemed to him less chance than there otherwise would be of any effective curtailment and control of their national expenditure. The Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget speech of 1895 said:—

> "I wish to put before the Committee the present condition of our financial system. I wish to ask them to consider, at their leisure, what the position may be of a Chancellor of the Exchequer who in some future year may have to meet and continue an enormous increase of expenditure under this system of taxation, and to ask them whether they are quite sure that in such circumstances our present financial policy can be retained."

He thought his right hon. Friend did good service in addressing those words of warning to the House. It had been the fashion in many quarters to speak of their financial system as a matter which they ought to be proud of, and any idea of departing from it to any large extent was absolutely scouted in some quarters. He would remind the House that, at the present moment, their much vaunted system had produced, both in Scotland and in Ireland, the loudest protests on the ground that it was contrary to justice, and that those two countries were not fairly treated under its provisions. That being so, he hoped he should not be charged with having raised a discordant note amidst the general satisfaction with which their existing financial system was viewed. On the contrary, he thought the bulk of the House would be of opinion that the time had arrived when, in the words of his Amendment, recourse must be had to some more varied sources of taxation. They relied, in a time of peace, upon the income tax, and upon the income tax alone, to make up any deficit that might arise in their national income. He thought the Chancellor of the Exchequer and any Member of that House who took any interest in the soundness of their financial system must feel some misgiving upon that point. There could be no doubt that having recourse to the income tax as their main financial prop in a time of peace was contrary to all the axioms which had been laid down in the past. He had endeavoured to deal separately with this question so far as the revenue was concerned, as distinguished from the development of our home trade. The two subjects were different, and, in his judgment, should be kept distinct from each other. Now, as to the directions in which they might fairly look for some increase in the taxable area. Of course he should be told that there was no need for any change. He hoped he had disposed, at any rate, of that reply. The right hon. Member for West Monmouth only the other day congratulated the House and the country that "times had mended and improved," he was not quoting his actual words, but simply the purport of his observations. He said that prosperity had recurred even to agriculture, and that corn had risen in price; and he went on to say that there was an end to what he called the "miserable German scare." But the right hon. Gentleman did not speak for everyone, even of his own Party on that subject; for the late Prime Minister had drawn the attention of the country, in words which he thought were very justly weighed, to the exposure of the dangers to British trade contained in that very able work by Mr. Williams, "Made in Germany." The right hon. Gentleman appeared to be amused by his reference to that work; but he thought that whether they shared Mr. Williams's views or not, hon. Gentlemen would agree that it was a most able work, and it was one which any person who read it might derive very great instruction from. No doubt exception was taken to certain groups of statistics, and letters were written and official memoranda were published endeavouring to refute Mr. Williams's statements. In his reply, however, he demolished all his critics, including the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouth. He could only recommend the right hon. Gentleman to re-read "Made in Germany," and also to cast his eye over the very able exposure of the attempted replies which followed Mr. Williams's statement. Now, how did this question of "Made in Germany" stand? Lord Rosebery called attention to it, and he suggested that the Government should appoint a small Committee to go into the subject, and see how the facts really were. The Government did appoint a Committee. He was not sure that he could have honestly said that he thought that Committee an impartially chosen body. He thought he could have almost written the Report of one, at any rate, of its members, before the Committee began its labours. But, as far as the memorandum went, which he might say was the official reply to "Made in Germany," it practically and substantially confirmed the bulk of Mr. Williams's examination of the case; and, although it endeavoured to put a more hopeful gloss on some of the figures he quoted, it was bound to admit in the end that unless British trade was better attended to by those who were engaged in it, and unless certain steps were taken, there was a poor prospect for this country as regarded its competition with many other countries. Now, as to our produce and manufactures. There could be no doubt, of course, that the figures of to-day compared with 60 years ago showed an increase in our export trade. At the same time they showed an alarming increase in imports. They showed that we were more and more dependent upon imports of foreign goods; and that in too many cases in which we used not only to supply ourselves but were the largest exporters to all parts of the world. The imports were not only breadstuffs and raw materials, but it appeared from official statistics that £100,000,000 worth of manufactured and partly manufactured goods were annually brought into this country—goods which in every instance could be produced quite as well from our own resources at home. Now that, he thought, would be admitted to be a very serious consideration. They were told that they had, at any rate in some particular directions, maintained the superiority of England as a manufacturing and exporting country. But when they came to analyse the figures, they found that while the production of British textiles had immensely shrunk, there had been a large increase in the export of coal, which was, of course, a raw material, of pig iron, which was practically a raw material, and in machinery. Well, machinery was a form of export which the House would possibly realise carried with it very large and perhaps dangerous issues —because we were supplying other countries with the means of eventually doing without us, and of not only supplying themselves, but in many cases successfully competing with us in the markets of the world. ["Hear, hear!"] He would now, with the permission of the House, point out in what directions he ventured to suggest that recourse should be had to more varied sources of taxation. He knew it had been the habit in that House to attack the tea duties, and to say that the tea duties—and the duties on coffee, chicory, dried fruits, cocoa, and other articles would come within that category—from which we derived about 4½ millions sterling per annum, ought to be abolished or reduced. It was constantly pointed out that they were duties on articles which we do not produce in this country, and that the burden might be fairly transferred from those articles to articles which were capable of being produced at home. Now, he entirely shared those views, and the reason why he had not committed himself to supporting a Motion for the reduction of the tea duties was that because unless and until some adequate substitute was provided by means of which the consumers of tea and kindred articles should contribute to the revenue, he held that it was unsound finance to abolish them without supplying in their place some indirect taxes to which the bulk of the population would contribute. Otherwise they would be adding still more to the position that those who called the tune did not help to pay the piper. There was a Motion the other day which he could not associate himself with for abolishing the tea duties and supplying their place by taxes upon imports of foreign manufactured articles. Now, although he approved of abolishing the tea duties under proper conditions, and although he was distinctly in favour of a duty on foreign manufactures, he did not consider the one an equivalent of the other from a sound point of view of finance; and he thought it well to mention this because it might appear somewhat inconsistent not to have supported a proposal both sides of which commended themselves to one's judgment. He ventured to suggest that there was a means of providing revenue without unduly burdening the people which would enable our home products to be fairly encouraged without materially adding to the burden on the people. He had already mentioned that a hundred million's worth of foreign manufactured goods annually came into this country. A very small impost upon them would produce a very handsome addition to the national Budget. ["Hear, hear!"] And he did not think anybody would be able to make any Party cry, or to make any political claptrap out of a tax of that kind. He had no wish to shirk the issue when he was asked what tax he would propose to substitute for the tea duties. They were told the people of this country would never submit to a tax on the necessaries of life. Well, the articles included under the tea duties were certainly necessaries of life, and to transfer the impost from one branch of the necessaries of life to another would be in no shape or form an injustice to the consumers. A very moderate tax on imported corn, known as the shilling registration duty, which was most unwisely abandoned by Mr. Lowe within his Parliamentary recollection, would now produce (according to the present Chancellor of the Exchequer) something like 2½ millions. A 2s. registration duty would produce close on five millions, and, therefore, more than replace the tea duties. Would it produce any inconvenience to the consumer to transfer this charge from the grocer to the baker? If anyone was foolhardy enough to pretend a social revolution would result from the transfer, he would remind him that nearly one-half—certainly two-fifths—of the corn duty would be paid, not by the consumers of bread, but by the consumers of barley, oats, maize, etc. What would be the cost to the people of this country of this impost on corn? He had heard no less a person than the late Chancellor of the Exchequer talk about the oppressive effect of a tax upon corn. It was a stock argument that in 1812 corn went up—he thought it was only for a week or two—to about 180s. a quarter, and when the average selling price for the year was 126s. a quarter He had heard that mentioned as a specimen of the outrageous injustice of the landowning class, that the landowners in Parliament ground down the people and made them pay these huge prices for the necessaries of life on purpose to bolster up rents. Hon. Gentlemen who had looked into this point were fully aware that the high price of corn which at that time temporarily obtained was not due to any duty. In 1812 the duty was a merely nominal registration duty of about 8½d. When prices were high in the early part of the century they were not due to the imposition of duties, which were practically taken off altogether at that time, but were due to the condition of war which then prevailed, cutting off supplies from abroad, and to bad harvests. Those who said that the people of this country would be cruelly oppressed by any recurrence to the corn duties could not be aware how ridiculously small the effect would be. He himself was not in favour of any fixed duty, but of a sliding scale. However, for the purpose of argument, he would assume that under the operation of a sliding scale it happened that a duty of 5s. per quarter was imposed, which would not, according to precedent, raise the selling price by more than half the amount of such duty. Even taking it that the selling price was increased 5s., it would only mean to the bread consumer the large sum of one half-farthing per day, seven-eighths of a penny per week, or 3s. 9½d. per individual per year. He had indicated that under these conditions the tea duty might very fairly and on sound financial principles be remitted. The tea duty worked out at 2s. 3½d. per head of the population. Even if the sliding scale should involve at any given time a 5s. duty on corn, that left a balance as against the consumer of only 1s. 6d. for the whole year, and that he urged was a matter that need not alarm anyone. A 5s. duty would produce no less a sum than £12,250,000 in the year, therefore, he thought he had shown the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he could get a balance of between £7,000,000 and £8,000,000 by abandoning the tea duty and substituting a duty of 5s. upon corn. Would any one, after that, tell the House that there would be bread riots, disturbances, and all the rest, if so moderate an impost was adopted? By means of reciprocal relations with other parts of the Empire they might obtain their food supplies under conditions which would at the same time develop the resources of the Empire and secure them against being wholly dependent upon foreign food supplies. He did not wish to identify himself with the free admission of colonial produce—no colony had ever asked for it or was prepared to grant it in return—but what he did advocate was a preferential tariff under which the food stuffs and other commodities of their colonies would come into this country upon more favourable terms than those of countries outside the limits of the British Empire. He had shown that many millions were within the reach of the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he thought fit to rise superior to the prejudices which had so restricted the taxable area he had in his hands. He did not think any one would assert that it was possible to do without fresh sources of taxation for any great length of time. He could promise any Chancellor of the Exchequer who embarked upon some sounder system of finance a hearty support from the great bulk of the producers of this country, if, in the course of the financial measures, they were protected from some of the dangers to which they were now exposed from undue and excessive foreign competition. Would any hon. Gentleman deny that the pre-eminence of this country was rapidly ebbing in some of the staple industries? The cotton trade, for example, was not partaking of that general prosperity which the Chancellor of the Exchequer appeared to think prevailed all over the country, but was dwindling, and in many instances was actually being extinguished.

MR. GEORGE HARWOOD (Bolton): As connected with the cotton trade, I feel bound to say that that statement is not correct. [" Hear, hear! "] I am not speaking of my own personal experience, but from a knowledge of the trade as a whole. The Lancashire cotton trade has not dwindled, but has distinctly improved. [" Hear, hear! "]

*MR. JAMES LOWTHER replied that whatever might be the case in the hon. Gentleman's immediate neighbourhood, he feared he would not find confirmation from many other parts of Lancashire.

MR. HARWOOD: I am not speaking of my own immediate neighbourhood, but of the condition of the trade of Lancashire as a whole, of which I have fair knowledge. [" Hear, hear! "]

*MR. JAMES LOWTHER could only say that many persons largely engaged in the Lancashire cotton industry formed a very different estimate of its prospects from that of the hon. Gentleman. He had heard of instances in which private concerns had been shut down, in which machinery which was giving employment to large numbers of workmen in Lancashire had been transported to Bombay or Japan, and was now being used in the production of cheap articles in the Far East. He did not believe it could be denied that the condition of the cotton trade in this country was one to occasion great alarm. Many of the limited liability companies were getting scarcely any dividend, and even those were anxiously considering whether they should not move to places where they could carry on their businesses under more favourable conditions. He challenged the hon. Gentleman opposite to find any authority to show that capital could be so advantageously spent in Lancashire as it could be in Japan or Bombay. The truth was that not only had our great industry of agriculture shrunk, but the textile trades were also languishing, and so far from our keeping pace industrially with other countries, we were already lagging behind. He hoped that the House, while not interfering on this occasion with the financial proposals of the Government, would at any rate afford his right hon. Friend some encouragement with a view to the discovery of some varied sources of income. The Resolution would, he hoped, afford an opportunity for some suggestions being made which might be of use to his right hon. Friend. He, of course, did not ask him to take back his Budget and recast his financial system at five minutes' notice; but he thought he was justified in asking him to look at the relative progress made by other countries under different fiscal systems, to rid his mind of the idea that our prosperity during the last 60 years was due to the present system, and to consider how far he could obtain some fresh sources of taxation which would enable our financial system to rest on a more sound basis. He begged to move his Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. VESEY KNOX (Londonderry) said he rose to support not so much the speech of the right hon. Gentleman, as the actual terms of his Motion. The House had had many opportunities of discussing the incidence of direct taxation and its burden on the country, and he was one of those who believed that, on the whole, the Budget of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouthshire had effected desirable changes in the incidence of direct taxation, for it had gone in the direction of putting the heaviest on the broadest shoulders, and making the rich pay proportionately more than the poor. The reason why he supported the Motion was that he ventured in deference to bring before the House a suggestion that the time was rife in some measure to deal with indirect taxation in the same way, and to endeavour to secure that a similar proportion of indirect taxation should fall on the poorer classes. It was now the principle of all Chancellors of the Exchequer to levy as large a sum in the way of indirect taxation as possible, upon as few consumable commodities as possible; to levy it on those commodities, not in proportion to their value, but in proportion to the quantity consumed. Therefore, necessarily, the commodities selected for taxation had been those which were consumed most largely by the masses of the poorer people. Indirect taxation need not necessarily fall upon the poor than the rich. For instance, a tax was levied on silk in America and a large revenue was obtained from it.

MR. BARTLEY: How much does it bring in?

MR. KNOX: Over £2,000,000; and it brought in less than it might if there were an excise as well as an import duty. If an excise as well as a customs duty were applied in this country in the case of silk, he ventured to think that five or six millions might be raised, without materially affecting the amount consumed. There had been very little change in indirect taxation for 30 or 40 years. Thirty or forty years ago, when the commodities taxed were very much dearer than now, a fixed duty in gold was placed on commodities which the people were most accustomed to consume. As years went by those commodities had become much cheaper. That was true of all articles of taxation. It was true of beer, of tobacco, and of spirits. Therefore, the effect of the system had been that in proportion to the value of the commodity the tax had been growing heavier year by year. Ten shillings was worth more now in commodities than it was 20 or 30 years ago, and although the duties were fixed nominally, owing to the increase in the value of gold, the duties had really been steadily rising, and had become larger in proportion to the value of the commodity. For instance, the value of spirits before the duty was paid was now only 1s. 6d. a gallon, this low price being due chiefly to changes, he would not say improvements, in the method of manufacture. Thirty or forty years ago the price was something like 3s. 6d. a gallon; therefore the duty was very much heavier now in proportion to the value of the commodity. He knew that by many Free Traders it was said to be a necessary part of Free Traders that duties should be levied as specific duties and not as ad valorem duties, but he found that that notion was confined to England. The Free Trade Party, the Democratic Party, in America, was in favour of the ad valorem duty. So was the Tariff Reform Party in Canada. Why, in the face of these facts, was it considered in this country that there should be any necessary connection between specific duties and Free Trade? It might be urged that there was greater difficulty in the collection of ad valorem duties; but it would probably be found that every change made in taxes with a view to making their burden more equable would involve some increased difficulty of collection. The Liberal Party had shown themselves, in the matter of direct taxation, in favour of taxing the rich more heavily than the poor; why should they not, whenever they had the opportunity, seek to apply the same principle in regard to indirect taxation? He had never been able to understand why the same rate of duty should be charged on the common tobacco consumed by the working man and on the more expensive kinds smoked by the middle and upper classes. Indeed, when they took this and other similar cases they would find prima facie ground for thinking that in enforcing specific and not ad valorem duties, Cobden and those who acted with him were actuated by the feeling of the middle classes, whose desire was to escape as far as possible from the burden of taxation. At the present time the taxes paid by the middle classes were very small indeed when compared with those paid by the poor. A very interesting speech was made on a recent occasion by the hon. Member for the Spen Valley Division

The hon. Member had good reason for being opposed to any change in our fiscal system. He was a most ardent prohibitionist. He had no need for alcoholic liquors and wished nobody else to consume them. To him the present system was an ideal system, because it placed so large a part of the taxation upon the shoulders of those who consumed alcoholic drink. But a very large number of the teetotallers of this country consumed a good deal of alcohol without, however, contributing to the revenue. Mr. Bannister, the Government analyst, in his evidence recently before the Licensing Commission, said that he had analysed herb beer and several so-called temperance drinks, and he found that the lowest proportion of alcohol contained in any of them was 2·9 per cent., while in one case it was as high as 13·7 per cent.—very much higher than the average percentage of alcohol in ordinary beer. [Laughter.] The hon. Member for Spen Valley had advised Irishmen if they wanted to reduce their taxation to add more water to their whisky. He calculated that if they attempted to make, with the use of whisky, a liquid not more heavily taxed than beer they should have to add 63 parts of water to one of whisky. He did not know whether that would be a liquid likely to meet with a large measure of consumption. [Laughter.] But what he wanted to point out was that it would contain less alcohol than liquor which was consumed by teetotallers, and on which no duty was paid. There were three classes of liquor drinkers in these countries—Irishmen and Scotchmen who consumed whisky, the average Englishman who took his alcohol in beer, and that minority of Englishmen who took their alcohol in temperance drinks. [Laughter.] The Irishman was taxed for his alcohol about six times as heavily as the Englishman who drank beer, while the Englishman who was wily enough to take his alcohol in temperance drinks of course escaped taxation altogether. [Laughter.] He contended that we ought so to rearrange our indirect taxation that the burden would fall more heavily on the rich than on the poor; and that we should attempt to catch the teetotaller who at present escaped almost entirely from indirect taxation. [Laughter.] Incidentally such a modification would have the effect of lightening the burden which pressed upon Ireland, and that was his principal reason for suggesting it. Personally, he did not think it would be possible to entirely remove the financial injustice under which Ireland suffered without imposing different financial systems upon the two countries, but he held that while maintaining the financial union between Great Britain and Ireland, it would still be possible by some such re-arrangement of indirect taxation as he had suggested to lighten the burden which pressed so heavily upon Ireland now, and to reduce appreciably the grievance from which Ireland suffered.

*CAPTAIN PRETYMAN (Suffolk, Woodbridge) called attention to the question of the Death Duties. His complaint, he said, was not so much in regard to the amount of the charge which these duties involved upon property, as to their unequal incidence. He did not say that the total amount of property in the country taxable for Death Duty could not afford to pay the sum which those duties now produced if evenly distributed, but he did say that the present incidence of the duties, while leaving some classes of property almost untouched, fell with extraordinary hardship upon certain individuals. It had been said that it would only be fair to give those duties at least a three years' trial before the question of making an Amendment in them was raised. That period of trial had now elapsed; and the best way of approaching the subject of amending the tax was to consider whether the objects which the right hon. Gentleman the late Chancellor of the Exchequer stated he had in view in introducing that particular form of taxation had been attained. Those objects were four in number—to equalise the payments on realty in proportion to the payments on personalty; to avoid the complications and difficulties which existed under the old duties; to secure that the extremely rich, the millionaires, were "bled;" and to avoid any injury to agriculture by the imposition of the new estate duties. He asserted that not a single one of those objects had been attained, and that, on the other hand, great hardships had been inflicted by this new form of taxation. ["Hear, hear!"]

To take the minor points first, it was the common opinion amongst lawyers that greater complications and difficulties existed under the new system than had prevailed under the old; and as personal property—the form of property usually possessed by the extremely rich—was easily transferred, the millionaire was well able to avoid the new duties by transferring his property during life. ["Hear, hear!"] But a more important point was whether the equalisation of the payments in respect to realty and personalty had been attained. A nominal equality might have been attained, but certainly not a real equality. The different conditions under which realty and personalty existed had not been fairly taken into consideration. The responsibility of landlords was often talked about. The landlords did not deny that responsibility, and they were willing to act up to it. It was expensive. It included, among other things, the employment of a large number of persons about the estate, and the keeping of tenants on the land by means of improvements and reductions in rent. But no such responsibility fell upon the owner of personalty ["Hear, hear!"] Again, the peculiar indivisibility of landed property had not been taken into account. A man who had his property invested in stocks and shares had no difficulty in selling out a portion of his property in order to pay the duty, and what remained was not affected by the transaction. But a man who had his entire capital vested in a business, a trade, or a landed estate was in a totally different position. He had to break off and sell a portion of his business or property, or, on the other hand, to fully mortgage that business or property in order to pay the duty, thereby greatly reducing the value of what remained, and perhaps making it difficult or impossible to carry on the business. Then there was another point of inequality between realty and personalty. That was the power of avoidance which personalty had—the power of escaping the duty by transfer before death. The Chancellor of the Exchequer speaking in the House on May 10 said:—

> "The only other suggestion that has been made, so far as I know, is the one by the hon. Member for Northumberland, viz., that I should in some way or other stop what he characterises as an evasion of the Death Duties. I take it that he means that people are making gifts in their lives instead of leaving their property to their heirs. In my opinion, that is a very proper practice, and certainly as long as I am Chancellor of the Exchequer I will do nothing so tyrannical and so unjust as to interfere with the liberty of a healthy man to dispose of his property to whomsoever he will."

That which was a proper practice in the view of the Chancellor of the Exchequer was confined entirely to personalty, because while realty was almost invariably in settlement, personalty was almost invariably free. Evidence that avoidance was now practised in the case of personalty was to be found in the Budget speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The right hon. Gentleman stated that within the last 12 months the amount of realty upon which duty was charged had increased by ten millions sterling, while the amount of personalty on which duty was charged had decreased by ten millions sterling; and the right hon. Gentleman attributed that state of things to the avoidance of duty by personalty. ["Hear, hear!"] Further evidence of that fact was contained in a letter written to him by a friend.

> "The Act is naturally avoided as much as possible," said the writer.

> "Its intense injustice is the cause. I believe they will get less out of my small property than they would have done under the old law, for if I live another year, except the coat on my back, I shall have little else." [Laughter.] "I know one large merchant who said he should make his sons partners and buy an annuity, and damn the Bill."—[laughter]—"and I don't know one friend about here who has not done all he can to evade the Act. Sooner or later this must tell. Remember Gladstone on our Irish policy, 'I don't say an unjust law ought to be broken, but I do say it will be.'"

[Laughter and cheers.]

He would quote a very high authority on this subject, the First Lord of the Admiralty, who said, on the introduction of the Act of 1894:—

> "I was advised by the Inland Revenue that after you had reached a certain point in putting on Death Duties you would then easily reach the point where the increase of duty would not necessarily bring you in an increase of revenue. . . . A man now says, I think it better to retain the control of my money in my own hands and will leave it to my sons when I die, but if you are going to take several thousands of pounds from the family money and waste it by paying it to the Exchequer '

—that was a very strong phrase coming from an ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer —[laughter]—

"it would form a very potent motive for distributing the money during the lifetime of the testator."

He thought he had quoted sufficient authority to prove that the avoidance of the duties was and would be practised, and was a force with which they had to reckon. And in this respect these duties were only following the general law in regard to taxes of this character. Land tax originally imposed upon all property including personalty, salaries and stock in trade, was so effectually evaded by all but land that it was eventually repealed except in regard to realty, and now fell upon that class of property only. The same had occurred in regard to rates, and this was forcibly pointed out by the present Chancellor of the Exchequer when discussing the 1894 Budget, therefore—in the history of the land tax and of rates, they found precedents for this state of things. In regard to the distribution of the load on the two classes of property, the inequality was very great. They ought to consider in many cases, not only the weight or amount of the load, but the manner in which it was placed on the particular body which had to bear it and the particular condition of that body. The right hon. Gentleman opposite had acted much as would a man who insisted on putting the saddle of a horse on a camel, and distributing the burden which was to be borne in exactly the same way on both. Also this extra burden was imposed principally on realty, and so upon agriculture, at a time when agriculture was in its worst condition. The right hon. Member for West Monmouthshire denied that these duties galled the shoulders of those who paid them, and based his contention on the fact that the Estate Duty was usually paid in one sum rather than by instalments. On April 29 of this year the right hon. Gentleman said:—

"So far from the pressure being undue, and so far from the instalments being necessary, people find it more convenient to pay the Death Duties at once; is not that testimony to the fact that these funds have been provided without undue pressure on the taxpayer, and do not gall the shoulders of those who have to pay them?"

Captain Pretyman.

The right hon. Gentleman had, he believed, authorised the payments by instalments, with the idea of somewhat lightening the burden of those who had to pay them. [Sir W. HARCOURT signified assent.] Yes, but he forgot that the old duty was payable only out of income, and, therefore, payment by instalments did facilitate their payment. But this was a charge of a totally different character; it was a charge upon capital. If he could show that the actual incidence of the duty was in some cases in excess of the income available to pay it for each of the eight years in which the instalments were to be paid, he thought he should have proved the right hon. Gentleman's contention to be incorrect. In such cases the only resource of the person who had to pay the duty was either to mortgage his property or to sell a portion of it, and that was the reason why the duty was usually paid in a lump sum instead of by instalments. ["Hear, hear!"] He would take the ordinary case of a landed estate producing £10,000 a year. At 20¾ years' purchase which the right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer told them was the average assessment, it would pay on £207,500; the duty at 6½ per cent. would be £13,500, and if paid in instalments with the 3 per cent. interest it would amount to £15,000. The instalments, in round figures, would thus be about £2,000 a year for eight years. If the money was raised on mortgage a man could obtain £13,000 at a cost of about £500 a year in interest. The successor, therefore, had before him the alternative of paying £2,000 a year for eight years, or £500 a year permanent charge. But there was also another strong inducement to raise the money in this way. Supposing he died when this payment was incomplete, or shortly afterwards, that mortgage was deducted from the value of the property before the next duty was payable, and the duty of the next inheritor would be greatly reduced. In the other case, if he starved himself for eight years to pay the very large charge to the Exchequer, he became simply an unpaid agent for the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the sole purpose of placing his successor in a similar position. It was just as easy to pay off a mortgage as to pay the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and supposing a man found it convenient and easy to save his income he could do so.

*SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.): I had no idea it was so easy. [Laughter.]

*CAPTAIN PRETYMAN said perhaps the right hon. Gentleman would not think it so easy when he had finished. [Laughter.] Besides the estate duty as above, there was the succession duty to pay, which, except in the case of lineals, was a very large sum, and must be paid out of income. There were also certain charges, not mortgages, for younger children and dowagers, for which no rebate was given, and which must be paid out of income. Though in some cases these did not exist, they usually did, and were very heavy indeed. He would take, in illustration of his argument, the concrete case of a property which was in the course of paying the duties at the present time—the Rufford property, which was situated in Nottinghamshire. Within the last 15 years that property had paid no less than £88,000. He had a letter from the solicitor to the property saying that at the minimum figure the succession duty now payable would be £50,000 and the estate duty £100,000. The available net income of the property after agents' expenses had been paid was now £19,000 a year. [Sir W. HARCOURT signified dissent.] But he had it from the owner of the property in his own handwriting, and he assumed that he knew his own affairs better than the right hon. Gentleman knew them. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR W. HARCOURT: No such charge would be possible.

*CAPTAIN PRETYMAN: The right hon. Gentleman had no notion what was possible under the Finance Act. [Cheers.] When the right hon. Gentleman brought in the Act he evidently did not know the hardships it would inflict. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR H. FOWLER (Wolverhampton, E.): What is 20 years' purchase at £19,000 a year? [Ministerial cries of "Order!"] Why, £400,000.

*CAPTAIN PRETYMAN: As a matter of average that was so. But he was taking a concrete case. It was a question of fact. It was all very well to ask what would happen on the law of average.

*SIR H. FOWLER: The law prohibits it being more than 25 years purchase.

*CAPTAIN PRETYMAN: That is on gross income. Gross income is a totally different thing. [Cheers.] The Succession Duty of £50,000 in the case he was considering involved a charge on the owner of property, which must be paid out of income, of eight instalments of £6,000 a year each. He had also to pay in the form of charges to younger children and others—who had a life interest in the property chargeable with duty and aggregated with what he received—£3,500 a year. This deducted from the total income left him £9,500 a year as available income. Out of this he had to pay £100,000 in Death Duties. According to the right hon. Gentleman it would be easy to pay that in eight instalments of £12,000 a year each. [Cheers.] The right hon. Gentleman was a distinguished financier, and if he could show how eight instalments of £12,000 a year could be paid out of an income of £9,500 he would eclipse the financial feats he had previously attempted. He submitted that on a concrete case he had absolutely proved that it was impossible for the owner of this property to pay this duty by instalments, but owing to the exigencies of the case and the enormous amount of duty, he must borrow the money and pay it in a lump sum. The right hon. Gentleman, however, actually stated that the fact that it was paid as a lump sum showed it did not gall his shoulders. A letter from the owner of the property said:—

> "I think we should be quite safe in putting the number of employés whom I have been obliged to discharge from Rufford, because I cannot find money to pay them, down at 40. A very large number of these are married men with families, and the misery is very great, especially among the old ones, who feel it will be very difficult to obtain employment elsewhere."

Everyone would allow that among the glories of England were the country houses and the amenities of country life, and the right hon. Gentleman opposite had done a great deal to destroy those amenities. [Cheers.] Another gentleman wrote that he was reduced almost to beggary by the Death Duties. He had reduced his personal expenses to a minimum. He travelled third class, and it was only by discharging old servants that he could find the money. He refused to take the responsibility, and would not pay the duty. If the Chancellor of the Exchequer proceeded against him, these old servants would know that it was not of his own free will that he discharged them. ["Hear, hear!"] In what cases did these particular duties fall with extreme hardship? He would quote the prophetic words of the present Chancellor of the Exchequer, uttered when the Budget was introduced in 1894:—

> "In cases of lineal descent, the new Estate Duty will cover the Succession Duty. But where estates do not descend lineally, Succession Duty will be exacted plus the Estate Duty. That will impose an enormous additional burden upon estates of the kind I allude to (agricultural estates). It is no sufficient answer to say that these estates will only be calculated on their fair marketable value. When you have property in the country reduced to such a point as I have described, any additional burden is infinitely more killing than it is on property of larger value. It will simply ruin the holders of that property."

The case he himself had quoted bore out that contention. The right hon Gentleman further said:—

> "In my opinion, that increase of the Death Duties ought not to be made. In the circumstances of the moment it will be grossly unfair upon the owners of agricultural land."

This bore particularly on the point that, in certain individual cases, excessive hardship would fall on the owners of property owing to their having to pay on two separate scales, and on the highest scale in each instance. There must be certain cases where, both on the hereditary scale for succession duty and on the graduation scale according to the value of the property for estate duty, properties came under the highest scale for both; and in these cases it was so punishing that it ruined the holder of the property. Before these duties were imposed in 1894 the amount of duty which realty paid in proportion to personalty was one-tenth. Now it was one-fifth. That double amount represented a larger proportion than the true value of realty as compared with personalty in this country.

*SIR H. FOWLER: It includes house property.

*CAPTAIN PRETYMAN: Certainly. What answer would he receive about these hardships of which he had spoken? He would be told, in regard to settlements, that estate duty was only payable once in a settlement, and that this was such a large relief to that class of property that it had no particular right to complain. The right hon. Gentleman said when he brought in the Budget of 1894, and speaking of the additional 1 per cent. settlement duty, "in this manner we levy the same amount on the estate as if left absolutely." Therefore, that is to say, that the 1 per cent. is calculated as an absolute monetary equivalent for the duty which it has escaped, owing to the property only paying once in a settlement. So it cannot be set up as equivalent for want of equalisation or anything else. They would be told that the income tax relief given under the Budget, and the relief given under the Agricultural Rating Bill last Session were an equivalent for these particular duties. He maintained that the relief given was not one iota more—it was considerably less—than the fair proportion agricultural land should pay of these particular taxes without reference to Death Duties. That, he believed, was common to all who had studied the question from an agricultural point of view. The one could not be held up as compensation for the other. He regarded this relief in relation to the Death Duties as relief on the henwife principle. What he meant was that it was as if a henwife excused herself to the fowl, whose neck she was about to wring, by reminding it of what a good meal she had recently given to the inhabitants of the poultry yard. He regretted that an Amendment to enable the owner of life interest in real estate to transfer it without becoming liable to duty just as the owner of property in fee could transfer it, which he had put upon the Paper last Session, and which had been postponed in consideration of an undertaking then given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to pay the costs of both parties in a suit to determine the present state of the law on this point and other Amendments relating to the Death Duties, had been ruled out of order, because the Budget Resolution to amend the law relating to was founded did not contain the usual Resolutions to amend the law relating to Customs and Inland Revenue. Many regarded the present as an opportune time to ventilate the subject, and it was hoped the Amendments would have been discussed and judged on their merits. He did not know whether the difficulty could by any means be got over, but if it could, he was sure it would be the wish of the House it should be. Had this not occurred, he should not have needed to refer to particular Amendments now on Second Reading, but as the Amendments could not now be put down he would ask the House to allow him shortly to refer to them. ["Hear, hear!"] He contended that some maximum should be imposed, and suggested that no property should pay more than 15 per cent. of its capital value under the Act within a period of 16½ years, that was, half a generation. The next point on which remedy was required was that of husband and wife. At present a husband and wife were regarded as the same and one unit for the income tax, but were regarded as separate for the payment of Death Duties. The next point was a very simple one, and related to insurance policies. If any person starved his income to insure against the duties, the sum received at death was liable to duty. He suggested that where an insurance was effected in the name of the Controller of Inland Revenue, no duty should be charged upon it. Again, hardships arose in respect to aggregation. Aggregation, when combined with graduation—and to graduation as a principle he did not object—inflicted the greatest hardship. If a large sum went to A, and only a small legacy to B, B had to pay on as high a scale as A. On what principle could that particular form of duty be defended? There had recently come under his notice the case of an old female servant who was left a house of the capital value of £226, and an annuity of £20 a year, and was required to pay £60 duty. There was hardship also in regard to valuation. If an owner of property chose to settle a sum of money upon a child on marriage, the Revenue Department insisted that for purposes of duty an actual valuation should be made on his entire property. Another point concerned agricultural property. The allowances made for outgoings were absolutely and entirely insufficient; 12½ per cent. was nothing approaching a fair estimate for the necessary outgoings. ["Hear, hear!"] The Chancellor of the Exchequer might say to him, "If I yield to you on these points, where should I get the money required?" One penny of the income tax now raised two millions sterling, and he very much doubted whether, if all the suggestions he had made were carried into effect, it would cost the Chancellor of the Exchequer so much as two millions. He felt that if he had an income, it was fair and just and right he should pay a proportion of that income to the maintenance of the State, and in proportion as that income was large, so he ought to pay a large share. But what he objected to was that under the form of these duties a heavy charge was made on an individual absolutely irrespective of the fact whether he had any income to pay it out of or not. Having shown these grievances, and suggested some remedies, he ventured to say that in this particular form of taxation the very maximum amount of hardship had been imposed on individuals with the minimum of result to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He did not think it would be possible to impose a tax which could fall with greater hardship on individuals than this tax did. He did not like to accuse the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouthshire of having imposed this tax with the object of injuring those who had to pay it, but he reminded the House of what the right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary said only a few nights ago, when referring to the Workmen's Compensation Bill. The right hon. Gentleman said there were two kinds of social legislation, punitive and remedial. That remark applied also to taxation; there was punitive taxation and taxation which was levied as evenly as possible simply with the object of raising the money that the Chancellor of the Exchequer required. In the opinion of a large number of individuals, the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouthshire could not be exonerated from a desire to impose punitive taxation upon the landed classes. That, at any rate, was the impression made by speeches delivered by some of the right hon. Gentleman's supporters at the time the question was before the country. The Conservative Party had opposed the imposition of these duties, and now expected that some consideration would be given by this Government to the grievances he had enumerated. They admitted that last Session was one of stress and storm, but this year affairs were in a different position, and he and others would regret exceedingly if this opportunity could not be taken, of, at any rate, reviewing the situation. The Secretary for the Colonies, speaking in that House on the 13th of this month, said:—

> "When it is a matter of justice a small number of people have as much right to consideration as a large number."

They believed that a reconsideration of these matters was a matter of justice, and it was as a matter of justice that he ventured to commend it to the attention of the House. [Cheers.]

On the return of Mr. SPEAKER, after the usual interval,

MR. HARWOOD wished to explain a remark he made in the course of the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Thanet. He feared that his interruption might be misunderstood in particular in regard to the cotton trade. He did not wish to be understood as saying that the cotton trade was exceptionally prosperous. As one interested in the trade, it would have been distinctly unwise. What he did wish to impress on the House was that the argument the right hon.Gentleman (Mr. James Lowther) was using, that the cotton trade was declining, was illusive. When he said that the trade had certainly improved, he referred to no particular district, but to the whole trade generally. The right hon. Gentleman drew pathetic pictures of mills being dismantled and machinery being removed. Such cases, of course, had occurred in every large trade or business that did not keep abreast with the times; but to mention isolated cases of that kind proved nothing in regard to the general condition of a trade as a whole. The right hon. Gentleman endeavoured, if he might say so, to perform the operation of putting salt on a bird's tail by asking if he would recommend anyone to invest money in the cotton trade. As one interested in the trade, it would, of course, be suicidal in him to give such advice. He might be perfectly prepared to invest his own money, and the very reason why he should invest his own would be a reason why he should not advise anyone else to do the same. Had the right hon. Gentleman been in his place, he should have liked to invite him to pay a visit to Manchester, the centre of the world's cotton trade. He should be only too happy to introduce him to the Exchange, and secure him an audience; and he was sure that, whilst his unvarying humour was nowhere more appreciated than in Lancashire, his economic theories would suggest to his listeners the idea that he was a sort of economic icthyosaurus, or whatever other extinct animal he would like to be compared with. The notion that the cotton trade was languishing was absurd. Even the right hon. Gentleman's suggestion that the cotton trade was not so prosperous recently was a proof of the soundness of the fiscal system under which the country had been lately governed. The extraordinary prosperity of the trade years ago attracted more capital than could be absorbed with profit, and the consequence was that a time of prosperity was followed by a time of comparative adversity. But these large increments of capital were now being absorbed, and the trade was gradually getting steadily prosperous ; and it was, again, another instance of the soundness of the fiscal system under which we were governed. He would not attempt to follow the argument of the hon. Member who last spoke as to the Death Duties. He was not responsible in any way for that legislation, and he would not pretend to criticise its details or answer the hon. Gentleman's objections; but what he wished to impress on the hon. Member and on the House was that those who were connected with manufactures, and represented large populations had a firm conviction that the land had not borne its fair share of the national expenditure. The hon. Member said that they wanted justice. He considered that they were having justice, and that the injustice was to be found in the condition preceding this last arrangement with regard to the Death Duties. His opinion—and he knew it was shared by great numbers of the population on both sides of politics—was that under any arrangement, whatever Parliament did, the land always became ultimately the greatest beneficiaire in the prosperity and security of the country. Take, for example, the expenditure on the Army and Navy, necessary and right as it was. Who was it that, after all, benefited most by that expenditure? It was the owners of real property. Personal property was transitory; it melted away; it could be moved. But real property was the one item in the national estate which benefited most by strengthening the Army and Navy and preserving the integrity and safety of the realm; and they in the manufacturing towns held that a fair share of the expenditure on the defensive forces of the country had not hitherto been borne by those who had derived the chief benefit from it. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not, however, rise so much in regard to this matter, as he wished to call the attention of the House—and particularly that of the Chancellor of the Exchequer—to an inference from a remark which fell from the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Thanet, a remark which in substance had been made very frequently during the Debates on this Bill. The right hon. Gentleman said that they had to raise an income of 112 millions, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the most interesting speech in which he introduced the Bill, told the House that they had to raise an income of £109,750,000. He called the attention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the fact that what the right hon. Gentleman called his final balance sheet was drawn up on principles of unsound book-keeping. What the majority of the people in the country meant by national expenditure was expenditure on national objects, but not on objects which were purely matters of private business. What he objected to was the inclusion of the item for the Post Office and Telegraph Services, which was not national expenditure in the ordinary sense, but private business. The same observation applied to the Suez Canal shares, the profit of which only was shown; but what they wanted was to see what they were spending and receiving as a nation.

Mr. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.) said that if a change had been made in the wording of the Amendment, he would have been able to vote for it, but as submitted by the right hon. Gentleman he could only render it moral support. The right hon. Gentleman contemplated supplying the Chancellor of the Exchequer with more money, and he offered to give the public a present of 4½ millions at the price of levying a tax upon them of 11 or 12 millions. On the other hand, he, in opposition to the right hon. Gentleman, wanted economy introduced into the national finances. Our expenditure at present was monstrous; it was growing too rapidly. He thought that there were 17 subjects of taxation at present, but the main subjects were only four or five. Personally, he did not want a large number; he thought there might be eight. The broad principle on which he supported the right hon. Gentleman was this. When they had only a few subjects of taxation the taxes were levied on the poor people. The more the number was extended the more they caught the rich. The Chancellor of the Exchequer in his speech took the case of a poor man in 1837 and a poor man in 1897, and he showed the difference in the pressure of taxation which had taken place in that period. The right hon. Gentleman claimed that nearly all the change that had taken place had been effected by increasing the tax on property. He had had an interesting calculation upon that statement sent him by a correspondent, who pointed out that, although the tax on property had increased, the total increase since 1837 was only £29,000,000, while the increase of the taxes paid by the poorer classes was £27,500,000. The three subjects taken in this calculation were beer, spirits, and tobacco. In 1837 the total amount raised by the duties on these three articles was £16,000,000, whilst in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget the amount was put at £43,750,000. That in itself showed that the national revenue was not levied entirely at present, or, indeed, as far as it ought to be, on the increase of taxes on property. Whereas in England in 1837 the poor would have paid 12s. 8d. per head, in Ireland at the same time the taxes would only have amounted to 4s. 10d. per head. But after 60 years, whilst in England the poor man instead of 12s. 8d. paid only 7s. 4d., a great decrease, the poor man in Ireland paid 7s. 7d., or a substantial increase. The change, therefore, had not been equal all over the country, and had pressed not only on Ireland, but the change that had taken place in the spirit duty had pressed very hard on Scotland as well.

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.) said he did not think the hon. Gentleman's figures were correct, and he was bringing into the calculation articles which he did not bring in at all in the comparison he made. The articles he alluded to in his Budget statement bore the same rate of duty in England as in Ireland.

MR. LOUGH accepted the correction, but said that, at any rate, in the three articles he had referred to, there had been this growth in the tax. His point, therefore, was that a great part of the increase of taxation during the 60 years had been paid by the very poor. He could not follow the right hon. Member for Thanet in his proposal to put a duty on corn, which would make the poor man pay more in taxation than he did at present. A duty of 5s. per quarter on corn instead of increasing the selling price by half-a-crown, as the right hon. Gentleman had said, would increase it by double the amount of the duty, for the consumer would not only have to pay the net amount the Chancellor of the Exchequer levied, but a large profit on that amount as well. Instead of putting a tax on bread he would suggest as subjects for taxation silk, cider, and perry. Cider and perry were taxed until 1825 and 1830, when the tax was taken off because they were intoxicants used by the English and not by the Scotch and Irish. The right hon. Member for Thanet had recommended that a duty should be placed on all manuactured goods brought into this country, but he was of opinion that such a system would do a great deal of harm. With regard to the Finance Bill itself, it was so simple that it was difficult to criticise it. The Chancellor of the Exchequer showed that he had preserved a balance of £500,000 for contingencies. That, he submitted, was far too much. Again, with the large surplus he had the right hon. Gentleman should have made some attempt to deal with what were known as the small breakfast-table duties. Altogether, he thought a considerable reduction of taxation might have been made this year if there had been any inclination in that direction.

*SIR HERBERT MAXWELL (Wigtownshire) said all who had experience of county constituencies in 1895 could testify how general and strong was the anticipation that the injustice done to real property in 1894 would be dealt with as soon as the Unionist Party were returned to power. At that time, as his hon. and gallant Friend the Member for the Woodbridge Division had shown, the present Chancellor of the Exchequer expressed the opinion that the new Death Duties would under a certain combination of circumstances prove the ruin of owners of that class of property.

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: I distinctly stated to my constituents, and it was published throughout the country during the General Election of 1895, that, the Death Duties having been enacted, it appeared to me impossible to repeal them or to alter them in any material form.

*SIR H. MAXWELL could assure his right hon. Friend that he did not wish to appear as an unfriendly critic. [The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: "You are!"] He had no wish to adopt an unfriendly attitude towards the Chancellor of the Exchequer, but the last interruption seemed distinctly unfriendly towards himself. He ventured to say that the views which the Chancellor of the Exchequer expressed in 1894 in that House were much more widely known and deeply taken to heart by the constituencies than any he confided to his constituents in Bristol in 1895. The Leader of the other wing of the Unionist Party, the Duke of Devonshire, delivered at Buxton, on June 14, 1894, a speech which attracted widespread attention. In that speech the Duke spoke of the "enormous exactions" imposed by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer on those succeeding to landed property, which, he said, would bring about a great change in the manner in which the incomes derived from the Devonshire estates should be expended. Naturally that speech excited not unreasonable anticipations of what the policy of the Unionist Party would be should they return to power. Now, approaching, as they were, the end of the second year during which the present Government had been in office, it did not seem unreasonable that large numbers of persons throughout the country should look for some fulfilment of those expectations, which, rightly or wrongly, were founded on the action of Her Majesty's present advisers while they were in Opposition. The relief afforded in the Budget of last year to owners of valuable works of art did not touch the far wider and deeper interests of those dependent on the land for their income. In a well-known phrase, the right hon. Member for Montrose had said:—

> "Rest assured that taxation, however spread, however disguised, falls eventually on the shoulders of the industrial classes."

And the crippling of those who held the land by the imposition of undue burdens must affect those who were dependent on them. There were many hon. Members opposite who hailed with frank satisfaction anything tending to weaken the landlords. [Opposition cries of "No!"] Such sentiments had many times been frankly stated from the Benches opposite. But hon. Gentlemen who held those views ought to remember that, in striking at the landlords, who were comparatively few in number, they were wounding tens of thousands behind the landlords. ["Hear, hear!"] The Duke of Bedford—one of the largest landowners in England—had lately published a statement as to the revenues of his estates. He showed that on the two properties—Woburn and Oakley—comprising 51,600 acres, the expenditure from 1816 to 1895 had been about £4,230,500; and that after excluding all expenditure on Woburn Abbey, its park and farm, there was at present an annual loss of £7,000 on those estates; while the Death Duties on them were estimated at £65,000. If that was the result on one of the largest properties in England, it could not be considered that landlords were altogether selfish in protesting against the incidence of these Death Duties. He had recently heard of a property in the south-west of Scotland which had been in the possession of the same family from the time of the Celtic chiefs. That family had supplied many public servants to the State, many of them had occupied seats both in this House and in the Scottish Parliament before the Union. They had resided constantly on their estates, and fulfilled the ideal of country gentlemen. The gross rental was about £13,000 a year; and, the owner dying last year, the heir had to pay in Death Duties £32,000—equal to at least five years' net income from the estate. The result was that the heir was plunged into debt, and, for the very first time in the history of the property, it had to be advertised to let for sporting purposes. He might be told that the heir could sell, but what class would benefit by a forced sale? And he had yet to learn that the Conservative Party identified itself with the view that it was better for property to pass out of the hands of those who had had it so long. If the Government really sought to anticipate the end of the present land system in this country, then it must be a question with himself and others how far they would follow them in that policy. [Cheers.] For many years he had been an active Member of the Conservative Party. For 17 years he had been a Member of the House of Commons, and for six years he had held office under a Conservative Prime Minister; and he was loth to believe that the Unionist Party had adopted this unfriendly attitude to the landed interest. If they had not, but believed that, on the whole, the ownership of land as understood and practised in Great Britain had tended to the welfare and advancement of all classes connected with the land, then he urged the Government to consider what means could be taken to relieve that system from burdens which in the end must prove intolerable, and to protect it from impending dissolution. He hoped to see the Chancellor of the Exchequer adopt in 1897 or 1898 some policy which was more in harmony with the views which he and his colleagues had professed in Opposition in 1894. [Cheers.]

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: Mr. Speaker, before I allude to the general question raised by the Amendment my right hon. Friend has moved, I should like shortly to refer to the charge made against me by the hon. Member for Bolton, whom I do not now see in his place. The hon. Member referred to the mode in which the Budget accounts were presented to Parliament; and he suggested that it would be more business-like and more in accordance with what he called proper book keeping, if in future I entered in those accounts the net receipts from such services as the Post Office and the telegraphs, in place of entering on one side the expenditure and on the other the gross receipts. The hon. Member is ignorant of the fact that in 1854 Parliament, by an Act passed at the instance of Mr. Gladstone, deliberately provided for its own advantage and for the information of the country, that the statement of accounts should be furnished just as they are now. ["Hear, hear!"] It is, therefore, not in my power, without disobedience to the law, to carry out the suggestion the hon. Member has made, which, in my opinion, would be a serious disadvantage to Parliament and to the public, and which would not enable a fair account of the expenditure and revenue of the country to be presented. ["Hear, hear!"] I have found myself in this Debate in what I suppose is the invariable position of a Chancellor of the Exchequer. I have had to suffer more than once during the past Session for what has been called a disposition to too great economy. [Laughter.] Even on the very Bill that preceded this Bill this evening, there was more than one speaker who complained that, owing to my parsimony, an insufficient sum had been provided for the necessitous Board Schools of England; and I cannot but repeat, in reply to the hon. Member for Islington, the statement which I ventured to make in introducing the Budget, that the great spending department of this country now is the House of Commons itself. ["Hear, hear!"] But while expenditure is demanded from all quarters of the House for almost every conceivable object, I am in the unenviable position of being grudged taxes wherewith to meet those demands. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.] I will admit that my right hon. Friend the Member for Thanet does not grudge me taxes.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER: No; I would give you some more. [Laughter.]

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: But my right hon. Friend does not intend to devote them to expenditure. Under his well-known theories that Protection would be the best policy for this country, he invites me to repeal the tea duties, to levy a 5s. duty on corn, to levy duty on all manufactured goods, which, I think, he would find it impossible to define—["hear, hear!"]—for the great proportion of what he would call our manufactured imports are goods which are further manufactured when they arrive in this country—["hear, hear!"]—and, having given me additional revenue in that way, he proposes to devote it, not to expenditure, but to the repeal of existing direct taxation either in the way of income tax or Death Duties. I do not wish to follow my right hon. Friend into the controversy between Protection and Free Trade. He did not dwell on that this evening. I know he believes we are rapidly going down the hill. I know he believes that other countries are, owing to their policy of protection, able to compete with us on much more favourable terms; that our pre-eminence as a manufacturing country is ebbing; that we are lagging behind; and that the relative progress of other countries is greater than ours owing to their different fiscal systems. To my mind, the very fact of the enormous revenue that is raised by the present system of taxation is an answer to that charge. ["Hear, hear!"] I do not wish to weary the House, but I could go into statistics as to the comparative trade of the United Kingdom and of our great neighbours, France, Germany, and Italy, for a period of ten years which would show, first, that we have an enormous preponderance over any other country in the bulk of our trade; secondly, that the fall in prices may have been rather a source of profit than of loss to this country, because it has been a fall in prices, not only of the manufactures which we export, but of the raw materials which we import—["hear, hear!"]—and, thirdly, that although the actual value of trade may have diminished, it has diminished less in this country than in other countries. ["Hear, hear!"] I could still further show, in answer to my right hon. Friend's comparison of our imports with our exports, that not only do we receive an enormous advantage from our foreign investments coming back to us in the shape of imports, but also that we are, in fact, the carriers of the world, and that from our shipping, which amounts, I think, to half that of the whole world, we receive what is an enormous amount, equal to 100 millions a year, to pay for the import trade of this country. ["Hear, hear!"] I do not quite understand what is the object of my right hon. Friend. As I think

I have already shown, our existing fiscal system is equal to the present demands. Of course, it may be argued that the distribution of our taxation is unfair, that direct taxes should be abolished and indirect taxes substituted, or vice versâ; but I say our system of taxation is at present equal to the demand. ["Hear, hear!"] But I entirely admit, in answer to my right hon. Friend, that I do not wish to draw back in any way from what I said last year. I do think that the narrow basis of our present system of taxation may become a source of danger. In the event of a period of serious depression of trade, or, of course, much more in the event of a great war—if we should be so unfortunate as to incur it—we should have to seek for other sources of revenue besides those from which we at present draw—["hear, hear!"]—and, as I said last year, I do not envy the task of the Chancellor of the Exchequer who has to make such a search. I am not at all prepared to say that our present system of taxation, whether direct or indirect, is infallible. I am not at all prepared to say that we might not make some changes, by additional taxation upon articles now subject to taxation, by reducing taxation upon articles now subject to taxation, or by introducing additional articles into our system of taxation, which might be to the public advantage. All I say is that I am satisfied with the present system so far as the present needs are concerned. Now, the hon. Member for the City of Derry suggested that another change should be made in our system of indirect taxation; he suggested the inclusion of some articles, such as silk, within the list of dutiable articles, which, I think he would find, if he went into the matter, would not produce anything like an amount which would counterbalance the inconvenience of placing them on the Customs list. But he also made a much larger suggestion; he suggested a system of ad valorem duties in place of our existing system of indirect taxation. Now, Sir, the system of ad valorem duties was, if I may say so, knocked on the head by Mr. Gladstone, I think, in the year 1860. ["Hear, hear!"] He pointed out—I believe it was in a Budget speech—with, I think unanswerable force, how the system of ad valorem duties was a most injurious interference with the freedom of trade, how it vexed and worried all those who were concerned in trade with minute and difficult restrictions which were much more felt by them than an increase in the duty on the articles which were subject to duty. He also pointed out that it was a very important element in our system of indirect taxation that the revenue should be easy of collection, and that a system of ad valorem duties materially interfered with the facility of collection. I certainly am not prepared—plausible though the suggestion may be that it would be better to levy a higher duty on the more valuable articles—to go back to a system of ad valorem duties. [Cheers.] But, Sir, the principal event in this evening's Debate has been the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for the Woodbridge Division of Suffolk. ["Hear, hear!"] If he will permit me, I would like to say that I have seldom listened to a speech in this House with greater pleasure; it dealt with a most difficult and complicated subject, a subject which, as the right hon. Gentleman opposite knows, and I know, is one of the driest with which anyone can be called upon to deal, with a lucidity, eloquence, and ability which I think it would be very difficult to surpass. ["Hear, hear!"] I have no word to say in complaint of my hon. Friend's references to myself on this matter, and, of course, it is not for me to defend the right hon. Gentleman who sits opposite. I was an opponent, as is very well known, of the Finance Act of 1894; I opposed the increase then made to the Death Duties on two grounds—first, because I objected to an increase of Imperial taxation on real property without something being done to relieve real property, and especially agricultural land, from the burden of rates; and, secondly, I objected to the indefinite provisions of the Finance Act of 1894 with regard to the valuation of agricultural land for the purpose of the Death Duties. I think the right hon. Gentleman opposite will bear me out in saying that throughout the discussions on that Bill those were the two grounds on which I based my objection to it, and practically when it was found impossible to induce him to meet us on the first point, and when on the second point he had accepted the Amendment of my right hon. Friend the present Leader of the House, I no longer argued against the principle of the Bill. Subsequently, both in public and in private, and in speeches which certainly have been reported and which are pretty well known, I consistently maintained that so great a change in the system of Death Duties having been once established by Parliament, it could not be repealed or altered in its material particulars unless it was shown to fail in the object which it was intended to achieve. In my judgment, Sir, there were points in regard to which the Act of 1894 required amendment. I examined those points very carefully last year, and I carried through Parliament certain alterations in it. Another point of very great importance to which my hon. Friend the Member for the Woodbridge Division (Captain Pretyman) referred, is the question of the power of the owner of a life estate to free the property from Death Duty by giving away his life interest during his life. As the House is aware, I have consented on behalf of the Treasury to bear the cost of a test action to show what the law is, and that action, I believe, is now pending. I do not agree with, at any rate, some of the criticisms which my hon. Friend passed on the Finance Act of 1894. He said that it had not decreased the complications of the law relating to Death Duty. Well, Sir, I do not know that any law could decrease those complications. It doubtless, on account of the magnitude of the charge which was made, increased those complications for a considerable period after it became law, and even now the office concerned has hardly arrived at complete working order. There have been delays which are a very fair subject of complaint, but I think in future those delays will be corrected. Then my hon. Friend said that millionaires had not been caught as was intended by the right hon. Gentleman opposite. Well, Sir, that is not my experience. [Laughter.] I think I have shown to the House this year and last year that the millionaires had been very considerably caught—["hear, hear!"]—and I was very glad to hear my hon. Friend say he did not object to the millionaires being caught, because I confess I have never had very much sympathy with millionaires in this matter. ["Hear, hear!"] Then he further said that the position of realty and personalty had not been equalised. Well, you cannot entirely equalise in fact the position of realty and personalty. Some of the points which my hon. Friend alluded to in regard to this were, I think, very fair ones, but I maintain that last year we did a great deal to carry out the views which I expressed when the Finance Act of 1894 was under discussion as to the relief which ought to be given to agricultural land from rating in consequence of its being placed on an equality with personalty under the Death Duties. I thought, I confess, that the grant from the Exchequer of £1,330,000 a year, as it has proved to be, in relief of the rates on agricultural land, was a material concession, and I was rather disappointed that my hon. Friend this evening should refer to it as a very small matter. My hon. Friend referred to cases of hardship which had been caused by the Finance Act of 1894, and he quoted one which has, to some extent, come under my own observation. But, not knowing the case would be referred to, I have not had time to verify the facts. He referred to the Rufford estate, and gave figures showing that enormous sums had been paid by the several owners during the last 15 years by way of Death Duties. He spoke of it as an instance of an agricultural estate. I do not think it is quite fairly described as an agricultural estate. I am not personally acquainted with it, but I am informed that its total value, although the acreage is not large, is something like £1,000,000,and that value is mainly due to mineral or building rights. But, however that may be, the facts are these. The estate belonged to a nobleman who died in 1844, having entailed it upon his four illegitimate sons one after another and their issue. If he had wanted to hand over to the State by way of Death Duty as large a proportion of the value of the estate as was possible, he could not have taken a better course. Each of the sons being strangers in blood had to pay 10 per cent. succession duty, and the other day the present owner had to pay 10 per cent. succession duty because he inherited, not from his own father, but from the original settlor, and will have to pay a large sum by way of estate duty. I do not know how much it is, because I think the figures are not settled, but I do not think it can be as much as was suggested. But the bulk of the Death Duties paid on the estate is in no way due to the Finance Act of 1894. [Opposition cheers.] It is due to the old law passed in 1853, under which succession duty is payable by strangers in blood at the rate of 10 per cent.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER: Capital value now; not life interest.

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: That depends on the interest taken in the estate. If only a life interest were taken, succession duty would only be paid on the life interest. The bulk of the sum paid and payable on the Rufford estate has been due to the succession duty. No doubt a large sum will be payable by way of estate duty. But then it must be remembered that the estate is worth £1,000,000. [Opposition cheers.] I confess I have thought—not that it was possible to do anything which would place illegitimate children on any other footing than that of strangers in blood, because that would involve other serious alterations in the law—but that when the right hon. Gentleman, in the case of lineals, allowed succession duty or legacy duty to merge in the estate duty, he hardly went far enough. There may be ground for considering whether with regard to legacy and succession duty, in the case of those who are not lineals, there is not hardship under the present law—at any rate, in the case of brothers and sisters—and I will undertake to examine the matter and see what can be done. Generally on this subject I was very reluctant last year to deal with amendments of the Death Duties, because I felt that in attempting to relieve hardships, I might be inflicting worse hardships. The matter is so complicated that it is only with the greatest care that any change can be made. I admit that the Amendments required may not have been exhausted by the legislation of last year. There may be other points not affecting the main principle of the Act or leading to anything like a repeal of it which ought in fairness to be dealt with, and I promise they shall have my attention. My hon. Friend suggested changes which might cost something like £2,000,000 a year. How is that to be found? [Captain PRETYMAN: "A penny on the income tax!"] What he had in his mind may have been only the transfer of the burden from Death Duties to a penny in the income tax on property now subject to Death Duties. But that would be a matter of extreme difficulty. If you put a penny on the income tax all round you would tax trade in order to relieve realised property. [Opposition cheers.] I do not think that is a proposal I should like to submit to the House of Commons. For the present I have only to ask the House to deal with the Motion. I hope they will not consent to the Amendment of my hon. Friend, which I believe he is not anxious to press to a Division. If it means anything, it means the substitution of Protection for our present Free Trade system. If there be any truth in his pessimistic opinion as to the future of this country, I can only say that I believe by such substitution our fall would be certainly sooner and greater than it would be under our present system. [Cheers.]

*SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT: To-night we have on the Paper two Amendments in the names of two most distinguished supporters of the Government. My right hon. Friend the Member for Thanet has an Amendment which, if carried, would destroy the Government and their financial proposals, and that Amendment is founded upon the proposition to which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has already called attention, viz., that "the existing fiscal system of this country is unequal to the continually increasing demands of the public service, and that the time has arrived for recourse being had to more varied sources of taxation." Last year the existing fiscal system of the country produced an unexpected surplus of £5,000,000, and this year a still more unexpected surplus of about £3,000,000, and that is the condition of things in which my right hon. Friend states that the fiscal system of the country is unequal to the continually increasing demands of the public service. [Laughter.] That does not commend itself logically to my mind. The conclusion I should have arrived at is that the time had arrived, not for an increase, but for a diminution of the sources of taxation—

["hear, hear!"]—and if I have any fault to find with the financial arrangements of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, it would be that he has not drawn that conclusion in the manner I should have expected. So much for the first attack on the Government from their own supporters. Then comes the speech of the hon. Member for the Woodbridge Division of Suffolk, and I desire to associate myself with the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the well-deserved compliment he has paid to him. ["Hear, hear!"] There is no pleasure greater than to see the younger Members of the House come forward with such distinction as he has gained. [Cheers.] I myself was the principal victim of the hon. Member's attack, yet I fully share the sentiments of the Chancellor of the Exchequer; but what was the conclusion at which the hon. Gentleman arrived? The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Thanet arrived at the conclusion that we were to have a 5s. duty on corn, which, of course, would be a satisfaction to the agricultural interest. He was of opinion that a 5s. duty on corn would mean an increase of 20 per cent. in rents.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER: I suggested a sliding scale.

*SIR W. HARCOURT: I am glad the right hon. Gentleman is aware of the existence of a sliding scale, because in the course of his speech he gave some curious figures with reference to the corn duties in the earlier part of the century. The basis of that sliding scale was that there should be a minimum price of 80s. a quarter, but the time came when people were more enligtened, and some 20 years afterwards it was admitted that the agricultural interest could exist at a minimum of 60s. a quarter. ["Hear, hear!"] Well, that is the proposal of the right hon. Gentleman for the benefit of the agricultural interest; but then the Member for Suffolk concluded his speech with a proposal that the agricultural interest should be relieved from the unjust burden under which they suffered by the addition of a penny to the income tax. [Laughter.] That was to produce £2,000,000, to be devoted to the relief of the agricultural interest. When you combine these two proposals you get, I think, £5,000,000 from the hon. Member for Thanet, £2,000,000 from the Member for Suffolk, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, as he has already told us, has given them £1,500,000. That makes £8,500,000, which is the combined proposal of them all for the relief of the agricultural interest at the expense of the other interests of the country. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.] Of course, the burden of the 5s. duty on corn would fall on the consuming class, or the poorer and wage-earning class. The proposal of the Member for Suffolk is that the £2,000,000 should fall on the industrial and professional classes for the relief of the agricultural interest.

*CAPTAIN PRETYMAN: I did not say the agricultural interest particularly. I said that business and trade suffered as well.

*SIR W. HARCOURT: I thought the argument was confined to the agricultural interest, but now the hon. Gentleman says it will also go in relief of the millions. Then comes the paltry contribution of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who has given £1,500,000 to the agricultural ratepayer and nothing to the urban ratepayer. I do not intend to-night to join the band of persecutors of Her Majesty's Government, but if the House would allow me I should like to make a few brief remarks on the general aspect of the Budget. I join the Chancellor of the Exchequer in congratulating the House and the country on the immense revenue it is possible to raise under the existing system of taxation. ["Hear, hear!"] With reference to the Budget accounts, I agree that the present system is the right one—that you ought to show all the receipts on one side and all the expenditure on the other. That is exactly the complaint we have always made with reference to the system of accounts unfortunately introduced some years ago in dealing with local taxation. I admit that in consequence of our remonstrances the Chancellor of the Exchequer has greatly improved these accounts, because he shows for the first time on the official paper how much of the Imperial revenue is given to local taxation, instead of keeping it out of the account, as it had been kept out before. I was also happy to hear in his Budget speech that he always spoke of the Imperial revenue as the whole revenue, and not as revenue excluding from it that part which under the unfortunate phrase interception had been kept out of the account, and given to local taxation. In order that we should understand this thing we should speak of it as it is. The Imperial revenue of this country is not the £104,000,000 which goes into the Exchequer; it is the £112,000,000 which is raised by your taxation, of which you give away £9,000,000 to local taxation. ["Hear, hear!"] And it is not merely £9,000,000 which is given to local taxation in that form; there is also £3,000,000 on the Votes in Supply which goes in aid of local taxation, so that at this moment out of Imperial revenue local taxation receives £12,000,000. That is the actual fact, and people ought to get it clearly into their minds; and it is due only to the former confusion of the public accounts that that has not been thoroughly understood. I hope in the future the Chancellor of the Exchequer will complete the reform and bring in these local taxation contributions as what they are—as money collected as Imperial revenue and handed over as a subsidy to local taxation. I rejoice, and I think everybody ought to rejoice, in the immense yield of the present system of taxation. I entirely agree with the Chancellor of the Exchequer that it is a proof, a most signal proof, that the financial system of this country is founded on a sound fiscal and commercial basis, and also upon a sound basis of currency—[cheers]—which has made this country the principal commercial nation of the world, and the money market also for all quarters of the globe. Customs have increased. What does that prove? It proves that the wages of the people are good. The income tax has improved to an extraordinary degree. I rejoice especially in that, because, though it was my duty to increase the income tax, I introduced large allowances in the tax. I remember the First Lord of the Admiralty—I do not say unjustly—expressed his fear that that might interfere with the framework and the security of the income tax, which is one of the great pillars of the revenue. What has happened? These allowances have no doubt been a great relief to the humbler payers of the income tax, and yet so great has been the prosperity of the country that the loss, which amounted to £1,500,000 upon these allowances, has been recouped since by the increase of the tax. That included, no doubt, the allowance under Schedule A, for which the hon. Member for Suffolk said, "No, thank you." He was willing enough to accept the reduction and the relief to the agricultural interest, which amounted to £200,000 under Schedule A; but now he says, "I don't count that; that was our due anyhow." But what used to be the old argument? The old argument was—You pay higher under Schedule A because you do not pay probate duty. I set to work to equalise the two, and it was found that the one was much larger than the other. Of course, when the relief under Schedule A was given it was given in consequence of the redress of the inequality under the probate duty. The income tax shows the increase of the profits of the country. What does the increase in the Death Duties show? That evidences the increase of the accumulated wealth of the country. [Cheers.] The hon. Member for Suffolk talked of these duties being evaded, and says, "You don't get hold of the millionaires." Then where does that increase of £4,000,000 come from? Who pays that?

AN HON. MEMBER: Realty.

*SIR W. HARCOURT: Did the hon. Member read the Chancellor of the Exchequer's speech? Out of £14,000,000 paid in Death Duties, what did the agricultural interest pay?—£800,000. [Laughter and cheers.] The increase of Customs is remarkable. The Chancellor of the Exchequer estimates his Customs' receipts for the coming year at £21,500,000. Now, that is nearly £2,000,000 more than the average that has been raised by Customs for the last 15 years. It has been a standing rule of Chancellors of the Exchequer one after another that when the Customs have reached the point of £20,000,000 there has always been a relief to indirect taxation under the head of Customs. It was done in reference to the tobacco duty. It was done by the First Lord of the Admiralty in respect to the tea duty. You have now got indirect taxation under Customs really £2,000,000 higher than has been the average levied upon the people of this country. The Chancellor of the Exchequer reckoned that there would be a great diminution of the stamp duties, and I think his calculation was reasonable enough. He thought the insane Stock Exchange boom in the Kaffir Circus could not continue, and he put down his estimate of receipts for stamps by £650,000. But he received exactly the same sum this year that he did last year; and why? He has told us this remarkable fact—that that £650,000 has been made up from the stamps upon the transfer of properties in consequence of the greater dealings in the transfer, especially of real property. That, I think, is a highly satisfactory state of things. What accounts for the permanent stability of the revenue is that it depends upon averages and not upon particular receipts. My valued Friend, Sir Alfred Milner, has often spoken of the law of average as being the deity that presides over the public revenue. In astronomical observations you may find errors in the instruments, but, after all, they correct one another, and so you will find when one source of revenue has fallen off another has increased. If you look upon the whole tide of the revenue you find it is flowing in the right direction, and you may neglect the fact that in particular cases there may be a falling off, because there will be a corresponding advantage in other cases. The growth of the income tax is extremely satisfactory. I do believe that by the relief that was given in 1894 to the lower classes of income tax payers you have strengthened the income tax, inasmuch as you have made it more tolerable to those who were the less able to pay it. But, in my opinion, an income tax of 8d. is too high —[" hear, hear! "]—in time of peace—if, indeed, we live in a time of peace. It is a burden which I am not disposed with the hon. Member for Suffolk to increase. [" Hear, hear! "] As to the Death Duty, let me say it is most remarkable how that duty has conformed to the original estimate. What was the estimate I presented to the House in 1894? I said that in the first year it would yield a million. It yielded £990,000, I think. I said that in future years it would yield between £3,500,000 and £4,000,000. Last year it yielded £50,000 above £4,000,000, and this year it has yielded about £50,000 under £4,000,000. That is a most remarkable conformity with the expectation formed. The hon. Member for King's Lynn, who I notice is absent, predicted not merely that we should not get anything in addition, but that we should lose even what we had, and he preached the doctrine, I will not call it of evasion, but of handsome and liberal avoidance. [A laugh.] But he preached it to deaf ears. Some people dispose of their property in that way, but still there always remains a good deal of human nature about man, and one of the qualities of human nature is that people like to keep possession of their property. [A laugh.] Some people do dispose of their property very much to the advantage of their younger friends. I hope the hon. Member for Suffolk has benefited by the system of avoidance and evasion. [Laughter.] Still there are many people, and quite as many as we ever expected, who stick by their own. Rather more do that than we expected, because part of our calculation was that when you impose a new tax or increase an old tax you will not get quite as much as you did from the lower taxation, that there always will be a leakage. All that formed an element in the calculation. I see no reason whatever to expect that things will be very different in the future. The Chancellor of the Exchequer mentioned that this last year there had been a diminution in the amount of free personalty, but that was the very thing that was pointed out in 1894-95 by the hon. Member for King's Lynn, who said, " See, you have lost all this money by evasion." What happened the next year? It went up again and you got twice as much as you had lost before. This year you have lost again, but next year you may gain again. I am not, therefore, prepared to say that that is likely to be a continuing source of loss. The hon. Member for Suffolk referred to agricultural land. Let us see what agricultural land contributes to the death duty. Out of £14,000,000 personalty contributes £11,500,000 and realty £2,500,000, and that includes house property. How much does agricultural land contribute to the £14,000,000? £843,000. The hon. Member for Suffolk was rather indignant with me because I had referred to the fact that the owners of realty thought it more convenient to pay down on the nail than to pay by instalments, and he gave me credit, which I think was only just, that I had arranged these instalments because I thought it would facilitate the payment of the duty by the owners of real property. I was told that their land had mortgages on it; that they could not borrow, that they could not sell, and that it was impossible for the money to be raised. Therefore, I said, "Very well, let there be eight years to pay instalments." ["Hear, hear!"] Yes, but when the thing comes to be tested, £1,700,000 is paid in full and only £162,000 is paid in instalments. ["Hear, hear!"] That is one-tenth. Therefore, it is not true that the money could not be got. On the contrary, it is got, according to the hon. Member for Suffolk, with the greatest facility. The hon. Member gave the House as an illustration the case of a man who had £10,000 a year; his Death Duty was £13,000, and he borrowed it on mortgage at the cost of £500 a year; but I cannot see that a man who has an income of £10,000 a year for his mortgage, and has to pay £500 a year is doomed to everlasting ruin. The hon. Member also introduced the Rufford case, but the peculiarity of that case has been explained by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He has shown, perfectly truly, that the result of the excessive burden in that case has nothing whatever to do with the legislation of 1894. ["Hear, hear!"] It is the commonest thing for people in society to say, "Oh that abominable Budget of 1894. Just think, a man has got to pay 10 per cent. here and 8 per cent. there." But the Budget of 1894 did not impose the 10 per cent. It existed before. It did not impose the 8 per cent., because of that 4 per cent. existed before. It is nobody but the millionaire who pays 8 per cent., and, therefore, the extent to which the Budget of 1894 altered the thing is the extent between 4 per cent. and 8 per cent. arising from the properties that already paid 4 per cent.; and when they get properties of £250,000 I think they pay 7 per cent., or 3 per cent. additional. And it is really said that men who leave a property of £100,000, because, under the provisions of the Act of 1894, they have to pay 1½ per cent. more than they did before, will make away with all their property and live in absolute want! The ignorance and exaggeration which have been applied to this case are really quite inconceivable, and the figures I have given, I venture to say, are absolutely true. What of these extraordinary ruins of which I hear so much, and of which, I am happy to say, amongst my friends I see so little—and many of them have succeeded to very considerable estates? I had a letter the other day from one whom I believe to be the very richest man in the country at the present day, and who always does me the favour, when a person of considerable estate dies, to write to me to call attention to his ruin. [Laughter.] He wrote to me the other day about the succession of a friend of mine—and a friend of everybody's in this House—to an estate. "Do you know," he said, "that so-and-so will have to pay £100,000 in death duty?" I wrote back and said,—

> "I am extremely glad to hear that my dear friend and yours will have to pay £100,000 in Death Duty, because that would not be possible unless his clear income was £50,000 a year; and I did not believe he was so well-off."

[Laughter.] When we hear of these things, do let me ask the hon. Member for Suffolk to take this as a rule, and I think he will find it works out pretty accurately—that the estate duty cannot in any case exceed two years' income. ["Oh!"] The hon. Member will find that is so. Let me give his own example. He gave the example of a man with £10,000 a year; and what was the sum he had to pay? According to the hon. Member £13,000, I think. That was not one-and-a-half years' income.

*CAPTAIN PRETYMAN: What I said was that this was estate duty only, and the particular hardship to which I referred was in a case when the extreme scale of succession duty and of estate duty fell on the same person. The case I quoted was of a man with £10,000 a year, and the £13,000 he would have to pay was estate duty only. I particularly said I did not consider the amount of the duty so much the hardship as the distribution of it by all falling upon a particular individual.

*SIR W. HARCOURT: I am only concerned to defend the estate duty. You may take it as a general rule that when you are dealing with largish properties the estate duties will not exceed one and a half year's income, and that when you come to the largest properties they will not exceed two years' income, and if you have eight instalments by which to pay you cannot be called upon for more than a quarter of your income in a year. Or if, as the hon. Member suggests, the money is borrowed on mortgage it will, of course, be very much less. It is, therefore, patent that many of the statements that have been made are exaggerations showing extreme ignorance. Let me come to the great grievance voiced by the hon. Member for Suffolk. He admits that what is paid by the agricultural interest is £843,000 out of £14,000,000. But at the time when this burden was imposed a relief was given under Schedule A of £200,000, reducing the burden to £600,000. Let me put before the House the profit and loss account. I take the £800,000. As against that the agricultural interest has received from myself a humble contribution of £200,000; it has received this year in rates from the Chancellor of the Exchequer £1,330,000, it received in land tax £100,000, making in all nearly £1,700,000. Therefore, upon the balance the agricultural interest is more than £800,000 to the good. The fact is that the agricultural industry has enjoyed such advantages in the past that when those who are interested in it find themselves placed upon the same footing as other people they regard themselves, as the hon. Member for Suffolk says, as the objects of punitive legislation. The hon. Member could not have desired to impute to me any malicious intention, because he knows that punitive legislation against the agricultural interest never entered my mind. Why should it be supposed that I desired to deal with that interest differently from other interests? My own personal prejudices were rather in favour of than hostile to that interest. The agricultural interest by the legislation of the last three years has been placed in an extraordinary favoured position. It was put upon an equal footing in 1894, but it has received since that time double the amount of the burden then put upon it. It has received £1,700,000 in relief of taxation which has not been extended to other classes of the community. You have given it relief in respect of rates. You say that such relief is due to everybody, but you have not given it to everybody. You have given it only to this class on whose behalf the right hon. Member for Thanet claims that you should put a heavy duty upon corn. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has spoken very reasonably upon the subject of the Amendment of the Death Duties. I said last year and I say again that if it could be shown that there is any unfair or unjust pressure upon any particular class, there would be no one less disposed than I to object to their Amendment. I did not allow last year any feeling of amour propre to interfere with any just Amendment of the law. But, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his advisers know very well, this is a most complicated system, and if you begin to pick the mortar out of the wall you do not know how soon the whole edifice may crumble to pieces. Anybody who deals with a great tax, whether it be the death duties or the income tax, must beware how he deals with the framework of the great fisal resources of the country, and, therefore, I feel sure the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be extremely careful—however plausible the grievance may appear to be—not to make any changes which will endanger a resource which is greatly required in consequence of the high expenditure of the country at the present time, and which cannot be safely tampered with. That is all I desire to say on the subject of the Death Duties. But I have a word to say upon the manner in which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has dealt with the surplus which was at his disposal. When it was suggested on the introduction of the Budget that various taxes should be imposed, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said he was not disposed to put on any new taxes on account of the disturbance they would make to industry and to trade. In that I entirely concur, but I see no occasion for putting on additional taxes. But the Chancellor of the Exchequer had a considerable sum at his disposal this year and last year, to deal with either in grants or in relief of taxation, and he has adopted a particular plan to which I desire to call attention. I want, for the purpose of what I am now saying, to leave untouched the one-and-a-half millions which he calls his surplus this year, out of which he has provided—and very wisely provided—the improvements in the Post Office; out of which he has taken £500,000 for additions to the Navy, with which we have yet to deal; £200,000 for troops in South Africa, in regard to which the discussion is postponed, and very properly postponed, until it can be properly taken; and

£500,000, which he reserves as margin. That I do not deal with; but I deal with the surpluses which he has disposed of. Now, he has disposed, in agricultural rating and in grants to Scotland and Ireland, of £1,660,000; he has given the Voluntary Schools £600,000; he has given up in land tax £100,000; and he has made alterations in the Death Duties to the extent of £200,000. Well, that added together makes about £2,600,000. That is the manner in which he has disposed of the two and a half-millions—in round numbers—which he had to deal with after providing for the vast expenditure which has been added to the public service in the last two years. Well now, this is a night, apparently, of alternative Budgets. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Thanet has proposed a 5s. duty on corn. The hon. Member for Suffolk has made his proposal, that is an additional penny on the income tax. I claim my right, therefore, to put forward an alternative Budget—["hear, hear!"]—and a method of disposing of the £2,600,000 which I should prefer to that which has been adopted by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. There has been a great deal said about the tea duties. I am one of those who believe that the indirect taxation of this country ought to be further reduced. [Opposition cheers.] Sir, if there is anything we have learnt from that important document, the Report of the Irish Financial Commission, it is this—it has proved what anybody who has studied the subject must know to be the case—that indirect taxation presses unduly and disproportionately upon the poorer classes of the community. ["Hear, hear!"] In Ireland it presses unduly upon the whole country, because as a class they are very poor. But it is equally true in England—["hear, hear!"]—that it presses unduly upon the poorer classes of the English community. Therefore, if you want to carry out the great principle of taxation—that you should put the burden upon those who are best able to bear it and take it off those who are least able to bear it—you ought in the course of your taxation to follow the principle initiated by Sir Robert Peel and carried out by Mr. Gladstone, of diminishing the burden of indirect taxation in its proportion to direct taxation. [Opposition cheers.] Now the proportion is less grossly unjust than it was before household suffrage and when the privileged classes had the sole disposal of the taxation of the people—when they put the whole burden, or almost the whole burden, upon the masses of the people, in the shape of indirect taxation, and accepted hardly any part of that burden for themselves. ["Hear, hear!"] That was the condition of things before the year 1841. Well, we have gone on improving that until at last, as stated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his speech, 39 per cent. of the total taxation is raised now by direct taxation, but the larger proportion is raised by indirect taxation. I for one should never be satisfied until the proportions were at least made equal, which they now are not —[Opposition cheers]—and, therefore, I would seize any opportunity of diminishing indirect taxation—first of all, because it is the natural and proper method of meeting the Irish grievance—["hear, hear!"]—which unquestionably bear most unduly upon the indirect taxpayer; and you will also meet the grievances of the poorer classes of the English people by diminishing the proportion of the burden of indirect taxation. ["Hear, hear!"] I know it will shock my right hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, who wishes to increase indirect taxation. [A laugh.] That is just it. There, then, is the issue between us. Your policy ever since 1841—there is no need to go back to an antediluvian period—[laughter]—has been a policy of increasing indirect taxation in proportion to direct. Our policy is the opposite, that of diminishing indirect taxation, because it is unjust in its burden upon the poorer classes of the community. ["Hear, hear!"] Well, Sir, that being so, if I had had what the Chancellor of the Exchequer had—£2,600,000 to dispose of—I would have done what, when he had a surplus, the present First Lord of the Admiralty did, which was to take 2d. off the tea duty. [Cheers.] The First Lord of the Admiralty estimated a loss of £1,500,000 in the first year, but he only lost a million, and the Exchequer has not lost more since. I would dispose of £1,000,000 of his two-and-a-half millions and take 2d. off the tea duty, reducing it by one-half. Then I have

£1,600,000 left, and it is a very remarkable fact that that is exactly the sum which would enable you to take off a penny of the income-tax. [Cheers.] On the two occasions, now some years ago, when pennies were taken off the income-tax, you will find that the sum sacrificed in the first year was something under £1,600,000. There is a very simple Budget, but it has this advantage—that these remissions of taxation would have relieved all classes of the community. [Cheers.] It would not have affected merely the agricultural interest, though I understand that there is nothing which would have been more advantageous to the owners of land and to the country gentlemen than the relief of a penny in the income-tax. It would have gone to them in their lifetime, and it would not have been postponed until the melancholy event of their death. It would have benefited the commercial classes and the professional classes; it would have benefited, above all, those classes from whom the greatest increase of the income-tax comes—those wage-earning classes who by their thrift and industry emerge from the non-paying stratum by their improved condition in life into the income-tax paying class. Therefore, so far from agreeing with the Amendment of my right hon. Friend, who says that the time has arrived when recourse should be had to more varied sources of taxation, I should have been disposed to say that the time had arrived when the great surpluses at the disposal of the Chancellor of the Exchequer should be applied to relieve the burden of existing taxes on the people. The views of the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the subject of the income-tax are rather surprising to me, and show that he moved among classes who are much more prosperous than I habitually meet. [Laughter.] In his Budget speech the right hon. Gentleman said:—

> "There are persons in the country to whom the Income Tax is odious, although I believe they are a decreasing number."

Where does he find this decreasing number?

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: I think Mr. Gladstone discovered that in 1874.

*SIR W. HARCOURT: But where is the decreasing number? So impressed is the Chancellor of the Exchequer with this view that I saw in a speech he delivered in the North he said that the iron interest was in such a prosperous condition that he expected them to come forward and propose the addition of another penny to the income-tax. The Chancellor of the Exchequer says that he cannot reduce taxes now, but he looks forward to quieter times and a real reduction of expenditure. The right hon. Gentleman is a distinguished rural magnate; but if he expects a reduction of that expenditure he is like the gentleman in Horace, Rusticus expectat—[laughter]—and I doubt very much, although I hope he may live to the age of Methuselah and still be Chancellor of the Exchequer—[laughter and cheers]—at least so long as he belongs to the Party of which he is a leading member—whether he will see quieter times or a reduction of expenditure. The real time for reductions in taxation is when you have got a large surplus, and if you do not make a reduction in the income-tax, or tea duties when you have a large surplus, you never will. It is no use putting it off to times which may be worse and when you may not have the power of making those reductions which are now at your disposal. ["Hear, hear!"] I hope the Chancellor of the Exchequer will excuse me for having suggested a different disposal of the £2,500,000 from the one he has adopted. As he has made away with this money, I suppose the spilt milk is not now to be recovered. [Laughter.] But I hope if he has at a future time surpluses of this description and money to give away, he will not accept the advice of the hon. Member for Suffolk, in spite of the popularity of the income-tax, and although we are told that people are rushing in to pay their income-tax in consequence of the popularity of the present Administration. [Laughter.] I hope the popularity of the present Administration has some sounder basis than the enthusiasm for an 8d. income tax, and when the right hon. Gentleman has money at his disposal I hope he will not accept the advice of the hon. Member for Suffolk and add another penny to the income tax nor adopt the policy of the right hon. Member for Thanet and put a 5s. duty on corn. [Cheers.]

MAJOR RASCH (Essex, S.E.) wished to support the Amendment of the right hon. Member for Thanet. Although he could not support it in detail he could support it generally, because, while he knew perfectly well that a duty of 5s. per quarter on wheat would bring their derelict land under cultivation, and, as the right hon. member for Montrose Burghs used to say, would make the valleys of Essex smile with golden grain, he could not help thinking that a 5s. duty was a counsel of perfection that the less they asked for the better. He desired to drive home a suggestion which was made by the hon. Member for Derry City. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, as they all knew, was a supporter of the temperance cause. The right hon. Gentleman taxed the brewers, but surely he must know that those manufacturers who turned out British wines were sailing uncommonly close to the wind and were very nearly overpassing the line. He thought when the House knew how far they had gone they would consider that they had already passed the line. Hon. Gentlemen perhaps were not aware that ordinary port and sherry were alcoholised only to the extent of 6 per cent., whereas British wines were alcoholised to the extent of from 9 to 15 per cent. in order to stop secondary fermentation. Two million gallons of this stuff were turned out every year, though who drank it he did not know. There was no conceivable reason why the excise should not either charge the makers for the alcohol they brewed or make them use alcohol on which a duty of 10s. per gallon was imposed. This would bring in £100,000 a year to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, which might be allocated in relief of the agricultural interest, and as a sort of complement and supplement to the inefficient relief given that industry under the Agricultural Rating Bill of last year. His hon. Friend the Member for Woodbridge had called attention to the incidence of the Death Duties. Of course they fought the Death Duties in 1894 and got beaten, so that there was no more to be said about them. It was impossible to put the clock back, and they must make the best of the matter. The hon. Baronet, the Member for Wigtonshire, had told them a harrowing tale of an estate where the Death Duties were so crushing that the estate had to be let for the shooting rights. If the hon. Baronet would only come down to Essex he would find the landowners there uncommonly glad to let their property at 6d. per acre with the shooting rights thrown in. [Laughter.]

MR. JAMES LOWTHER asked leave to withdraw his Amendment.

SIR H. FOWLER wished, before the Amendment was withdrawn, to call attention to a serious, if not dangerous, novelty which had been introduced, he hoped by accident, into the proceedings upon the Budget Bill. He believed the general, the almost invariable, practice had been to pass a Resolution that "it is expedient to amend the laws relating to Customs and Inland Revenue." This year that Resolution was not proposed. If that was done intentionally he thought it was due to the House that it should have been informed that such an innovation was being introduced and that the House would in consequence lose an opportunity for control over the whole taxation of the year. If the incident were allowed to pass unnoticed it would be one more step in curtailing the privileges of the House of Commons by this new mode of compressing and altering Resolutions on which Bills were founded. In his opinion the House should be especially jealous of its procedure in connection with the Finance Bill. On this occasion the House found itself confined to two Resolutions, one relating to the tea duty and the other to the income-tax, which would practically render the Committee stage of the Bill a farce. He hoped some assurance would be given that what had been done would not form a precedent for the future?

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said he would simply explain what happened. He supposed it had been almost invariably the case that the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the day, besides wishing to renew the income-tax and tea duty, had desired in some particular or other to amend the law relating to customs and inland revenue, and therefore a third Resolution had been carried in addition to the two relating to the tea duty and the income-tax. This year that was not done for the simple reason that he had no alteration to propose in the law relating to customs and inland revenue. He had not the smallest desire to limit the power of moving Amendments on the Budget Bill, and he would undertake, by setting up Committee of Ways and Means, which he hoped he might be allowed to do without debate, to move the ordinary Resolution relating to customs and inland revenue in order to afford any Member the opportunity of raising any question he might desire. He hoped he might appeal to the hon. Member for East Mayo not to raise his Amendment with regard to tobacco at the present stage, on the understanding that a proper opportunity would be afforded him in Committee.

MR. DILLON thought the offer of the Chancellor of the Exchequer an extremely fair one, and he was disposed to accept it. ["Hear, hear"].

SIR J. BRUNNER (Cheshire, Northwich) asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to take into consideration the case where two people, like husband and wife, or father and son, perished together. The Death Duty ought only to be charged once in such a case.

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: I believe that unless there is clear evidence of inheritance the Death Duty can only be charged once. I do not think there is a real grievance, but if the hon. Member will put down a Question, I will give him a more satisfactory answer.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill Read a Second time, and committed for Monday next.

VOLUNTEERS BILL.

Order for Third Reading Read.

Motion made, and Question put, "That the Bill be now Read the Third time."

MR. DALY (Monaghan, S.) asked for an explanation of the Measure.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford) said that there was a matter of doubt on the point by what process fines and penalties imposed on Volunteers for not making themselves efficient were recoverable. It was absolutely necessary that this doubt should be set at rest, and that the Bill would do.

MR. HUDSON KEARLEY (Devonport) said that the Bill was introduced to meet the adverse decisions of certain magistrates on cases against Volunteers.

*MR. BRODRICK said that the Bill did not alter the law, but simply put beyond doubt the law as it stood, according to the opinions of the best lawyers.

MR. KEARLEY said that the question had been tested in the Courts, and the opinions of the best lawyers had been found to be wrong. There would be great hardship to many young men who had been induced to join the Volunteers in a moment of enthusiasm, and who were prevented from putting in the necessary amount of drill, if they could be made, by civil process, to make good to the regiments the loss of capitation grant involved by their not being efficient. Everyone knew that many young men undertook responsibilities in joining the Volunteers of which they knew nothing. He thought the War Department might be content to allow the law to remain as it was, for it worked very well. The effect of the Bill would undoubtedly be to make Volunteering unpopular, and for that reason he objected to the Third Reading.

The House divided:—Ayes, 151; Noes, 44.—(Division List, No. 212.)

Bill Read the Third time, and passed.

FOREIGN PRISON-MADE GOODS BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, Etc. [17th May] further adjourned till Monday next.

MERCHANT SHIPPING (UNDERMANNING) BILL.

Third Reading deferred till Monday next.

BERRIEW SCHOOL BILL.

Third Reading deferred till Monday next.

ISLE OF MAN (CHURCH BUILDING ACTS) BILL [H.L.].

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

SCHOOL BOARDS' EXPENSES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

LAND TRANSFER BILL [H.L.].

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

EXTRAORDINARY TITHE BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

PUBLIC OFFICES (WHITEHALL) SITE (RE-COMMITTED) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

PATENT OFFICE EXTENSION (RE-COMMITTED) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

BICYCLES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (ALDERSHOT AND FARNBOROUGH) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [1st April] further adjourned till Monday next.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES' JURISDICTION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

BURIAL GROUNDS LOANS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [11th May] further adjourned till Monday next.

LEASEHOLDERS (PURCHASE OF FEE SIMPLE) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday 1st June.

SEA FISHERIES (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 3rd June.

COTTAGE HOMES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday next.

MIDWIVES' REGISTRATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday next.

ELECTION PETITIONS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

CORN SALES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 3rd June.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Select Committee [24th March] further adjourned till Monday next.

MARKET GARDENERS' COMPENSATION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

As amended (by the Standing Committee), considered; to be Read the Third time upon Monday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1888) AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, Etc. [17th Febraury] further adjourned till Thursday next.

VEHICLES (LIGHTS) BILL.

Committee deferred till To-morrow.

ARCHDEACONRY OF LONDON (ADDITIONAL ENDOWMENTS) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [24th February] further adjourned till Monday next.

COLONIAL SOLICITORS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

POOR LAW OFFICERS' SUPERANNUATION ACT (1896) AMENDMENT BILL.

Considered in Committee; Committee report Progress to sit again upon Tuesday next.

SMALLER DWELLINGS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND) ACT (1877) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till To-morrow.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

BURIAL GROUNDS.

Select Committee nominated of Mr. Griffith-Boscawen, Mr. Robert Cameron, Viscount Cranborne, Mr. Bromley-Davenport, Mr. Goddard, Mr. Gretton, Mr. Laurence Hardy, Mr. Jebb, Sir George Osborne Morgan, Mr. Perks, Mr. Pym, Mr. H. C. Richards, Mr. J. W. Sidebotham, Mr. Carvell Williams, and Mr. Woodall.

Ordered, That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records.

Ordered, That Five be the quorum.—(Sir William Walrond.)

House Adjourned at Ten Minutes after Twelve o'Clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS

Friday, 21st May 1897.

LUNACY BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to amend the Lunacy Acts—Was presented by the Lord Chancellor; Read 1ª; and to be printed.—[No. 93.]

APPEAL IN CERTAIN CIVIL MATTERS (IRELAND) BILL.

Read 2ª (according to Order), and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

QUARTER SESSIONS JURORS (IRELAND) BILL.

Read 3ª (according to Order), with the Amendments; passed, and returned to the Commons.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT, 1870, AMENDMENT BILL.

Read 1ª; to be printed; and to be Read 2ª on Tuesday next: (The Lord President).—[No. 95.]

VOLUNTEERS BILL.

Read 1ª; to be printed; and to be Read 2ª on Monday next.—[No. 96.]

SECONDARY EDUCATION.

*LORD NORTON asked the Lord President of the Council whether he hoped to be able to introduce a Bill on Secondary Education this Session, or, if not, early next year? He pointed out that two small stopgap Measures had passed this Session on the subject of education, but, so far from satisfying the requirements of the subject, they called aloud for a better adjustment of secondary education in our national system. Advanced secondary education had not been so much added to as confused with primary education, and this confusion had damaged both primary and secondary education. Primary education was overlaid with many wholly irrelevant subjects; there was no clue to the subjects of instruction which properly belonged to it. The Elementary Code was simply a heap of confusion, and by the system of annual addition it was becoming worse confounded every year. Secondary education was equally damaged by this confusion; it was treated simply as a department of elementary instruction, or, if not, it was confused with a great variety of perfectly disconnected institutions which had the result of preventing systematic action and continuity of education. A million annually shovelled out of the Treasury into the laps of County Councils to be spent as they pleased, was an unworthy national provision for secondary education. So large a sum spent anyhow honestly for education must do some good somewhere, but as a whole this causes mischief, besides waste, as preventing better things. The idea of national education as a public undertaking to teach everybody everything is entirely new, and a wandering from former and better ideas. There is now a State ambition to undertake the whole nation's education. Only aristocratic sensitiveness shrinks from accepting it in common. It has already absorbed many small private and endowed schools, and its programme in pretension outbids Eton and Harrow. But our public provision for secondary education is properly meant for the artisan classes. As our primary provision is for a general training from infancy so our secondary should carry that general culture onwards, with special apprenticeship to various industries. Our public purse should not discharge rich manufacturers from parental responsibilities, though it may provide, by free scholarships, for clever children of the poor. In point of administration, also, he urged that, so far as the education question was to be undertaken by the State, there must be a central department instead of the half-dozen departments which were now overlapping each other in their action and competing with each other, thereby hindering anything like systematic continuity. Local authorities, too, are wanted of wider area than School Boards for secondary local requirements. He had the most perfect confidence, however, in the sound sense and judgment of the noble Duke, and in the Vice President, who, he thought, showed in his attempt at legislation last year a sense of how large the scope of the subject was; and his plans, if they had been fairly treated by the House of Commons, though they were on a scale for which the country was hardly prepared, had the materials in them to meet the requirements of the country.

THE LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (The Duke of DEVONSHIRE): I cannot agree with my noble Friend in the opinion that the large sum which was devoted a few years ago to the purposes of technical instruction, and which is being expended through the agency of the County Councils and the Borough Councils, is in any degree being wasted. On the contrary, I believe that, on the whole, the money is being very usefully applied. However, I may say that we are perfectly aware of the importance and urgency of the question to which my noble Friend has called the attention of the House, and we propose to ask Parliament to legislate upon it at the earliest possible opportunity. He has referred to the Measure which was introduced last year, and which was of much wider scope than that which was brought in this year, and I think he has referred in terms of some approval to the proposals contained in the Measure of last year, so far as they related to secondary education. Considering the time that has been devoted by Parliament already to educational questions this year, I do not entertain any hope that we shall be able to ask Parliament to deal seriously with the subject in the course of the present Session. However, I think it will probably be desirable that proposals which the Government are prepared to make on the subject of secondary education should be as long as possible before the country, and that they should receive full consideration and be discussed by those who are interested in the question. I hope, therefore, in the course of the present Session, either in this or the other House, that we shall be able to lay before Parliament in the shape of a Bill, the main proposals which were contained in the Bill of last year so far as they related to secondary education, with some amendments and additions, in order that the general views of the Government may be once more placed before the country, and that the country may be in a position to consider them during the vacation. ["Hear, hear!"]

INFANT LIFE PROTECTION BILL [H.L.].

Amendments reported (according to Order).

Clause 10,—

PROSECUTION OF OFFENCES.

Any offence under this Act may be prosecuted before a court of summary jurisdiction in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts.

THE EARL OF DENBIGH moved, after the word "prosecuted," to insert the words "and any forfeiture recoverable."

Amendment agreed to.

THE EARL OF DENBIGH moved the following new clause to follow Clause 4:—

"Any person retaining or receiving an infant under the age of two years on consideration of a sum of money not exceeding £20 paid down, and without any agreement for further payment, as value for the care and bringing up of the said infant until it is reclaimed or of an age to provide for itself, shall within 48 hours from the time of receiving such infant give notice of the fact to the local authority. If he does not give the notice required by this section, he shall be liable to forfeit the amount of any sum received by him in respect of such infant, or such less sum as the Court having cognisance of the case shall deem just, and the Court shall give directions as to the manner in which the sum forfeited shall be applied for the benefit of the infant, and shall, if necessary, cause the infant to be removed to a workhouse or place of safety, and the master of such workhouse shall receive such infant, which shall be maintained in the workhouse or place of safety until it can be otherwise lawfully disposed of."

His Lordship explained that the clause attempted to deal with people who put out infants to nurse and paid down a lump sum for them. The clause was much desired by those interested in the question, on the ground that it might act as a deterrent in such cases. The cases the Bill really sought to deal with were those in which children were put out to nurse, and a comparatively small sum was paid down which could not possibly pay for their education and proper up-bringing. Those were cases where it might reasonably be concluded that the children were put out to nurse with the idea that they would never be heard of again. The limitation of £20 would, he believed, include the greater number of cases of baby-farming which were at the root of so many of the evils connected with the trade, and would exclude the greater number of genuine cases in which well-to-do people who, being obliged to leave the country, pay down a certain sum for the care and up-bringing of the children whom they required to leave behind.

Clause read First and Second time, and ordered to stand part of the Bill; Bill to be Read 3ª on Monday next; and to be printed as amended.—[No. 94.]

House Adjourned at Five o'clock, to Monday next, a Quarter before Eleven o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 21st May 1897.

NEW WRIT.

For the County of Hants (Eastern or Petersfield Division), v. William Wickham, esquire, deceased.—(Sir William Walrond.)

PARLIAMENTARY FRANCHISE (EXTENSION TO WOMEN) BILL.

Committee deferred from Wednesday, 23rd June till Wednesday, 7th July.

QUESTIONS.

VICTORIA CROSS (TROOPER BAXTER).

GENERAL LAURIE (Pembroke and Haverfordwest): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Secretary of State for War would reconsider his decision, as announced in a memorandum which appeared in The London Gazette of 7th May, with respect to Trooper Frank William Baxter, of the Buluwayo Field Force, in which it is stated that on account of the gallant conduct of this man in having, on 22nd April 1896, dismounted and given up his horse to a wounded comrade, Corporal Wiseman, who was being closely pursued by an overwhelming force of the enemy, he would have been recommended to Her Majesty for the Victoria Cross had he survived; and, in consideration of the self-sacrificing act of devotion to his wounded comrade which cost Trooper Baxter his life, would he recommend to Her Majesty that the Victoria Cross should be conferred on the late trooper on the date of his gallant action, and that the decoration so heroically earned should be forwarded to his nearest relative?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): I can assure my hon. and gallant Friend of the full sympathy of the Secretary of State in his wish to commemorate the noble deed of Trooper Baxter; but the statutes of the Victoria Cross do not contain any provision under which a man who is already dead can be recommended for the distinction. Many cases have occurred in which the Cross would have been awarded had the soldier or sailor survived, but no exception to the rule I have stated has ever been made.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE (DUBLIN).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: On behalf of the hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick (Mr. W. FIELD), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether the report of the inquiry to which the public were not admitted, recently held in Dublin by a Departmental Committee appointed by the Government, to report what accommodation is required for a Royal College of Science for Ireland and where it should be built, and whether new buildings were required, will be laid upon the Table of the House; and (2) whether it is the intention that the College shall continue under the control of the Science and Art Department in London or whether it will be incorporated in the scheme of technical education for Ireland and to be under Irish management?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): So far as I am aware, the Committee has not yet made its Report, and until it has been received and considered, I am not prepared to say whether it will be laid on the Table of the House. I cannot at present, make any statement in reference to the inquiries in the second paragraph of the Question.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION (IRELAND).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: On behalf of the hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick, I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether it the intention of the Government to introduce this Session a Bill dealing with technical education in Ireland; and (2) whether it is the intention that the Science and Art Department thereof shall continue under the control of South Kensington or whether it will be included under Irish management.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have already answered the second paragraph of the Question. With regard to the first paragraph, I must ask the hon. Member to wait for the statement of my right hon. Friend the First Lord of the Treasury.

LOCAL LOAN FUND.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: On behalf of the hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick, I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he can state where and when and by whom the Local Loans Funds Accounts are audited; and whether a great portion of this money, £40,000,000, was issued at three per cent premium; and, whether he can state how that item was dealt with.

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston): The accounts of the Local Loans Fund are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General under section 16 of the Act 50 and 51 Vic. cap. 16, and are presented to Parliament. The total amount of Local Loans Stock created has been £40,953,767. 14s. 5d., of which there was issued at par (1887) £36,526,056. 17s. 5d., the balance of £4,427,710. 17s.0d. having been issued (in 1888 and 1889) at an average premium of £3. 10s. 9d. per cent. The premium is specially shown in the annual balance sheet (see House of Commons Paper 117 of 1897). It was (when received) employed in making advances for loans, reducing thereby the amount of stock required to be created and consequently the charge for interest.

AGRICULTURAL RATING ACT (IRELAND).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: On behalf of the hon Member for Dublin, St. Patrick, I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he can state where is the £74,000 accruing to Ireland under the Agricultural Rating Act, and if it is bearing any interest, or for what purpose it will be used?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: A sum of £74,870 has been paid to the Local Taxation (Ireland) Account under the Estate Duty Act of last year in respect of the period ended March 31, 1897. The question whether this money bears interest is one that should be addressed to my right hon. friend the Secretary to the Treasury. With regard to the disposal of the money, I can at present only refer the hon. Member to the provisions of Clause 6 of the Poor Relief Bill recently introduced.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: asked whether the Secretary to the Treasury was prepared to answer that part of his question which the right hon. Gentleman was unable to answer

[No answer was given.]

MR. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.): asked whether the right hon. Gentleman could say where this Local Loan Fund was kept, whether in Ireland or in connexion with the Treasury?

[No answer was given.]

KERRY ESTATES (RECEIVERS).

MR. M. J. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he will grant a Return showing the estates in the county of Kerry over which receivers are appointed, giving respectively the owner of the estate, name, and residence of receiver appointed?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: This Question is practically a repetition of the Question put to me by the hon. Member on the 22nd March last. I am afraid I have nothing to add to the reply given by me on that occasion.

FUGITIVE SLAVES (ZANZIBAR COAST).

SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether it is intended that the present arrangements as to slavery, and as to fugitive slaves, should continue on the Zanzibar Coast under the control of Her Majesty's Government after the abolition of slavery in the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): Under the existing arrangements on the mainland coast of the Protectorate any slaves can gain their freedom by crossing the ten-mile border into the interior. For this and for other reasons, which the limits of an answer do not provide an adequate opportunity for stating, it is not proposed to alter the arrangements on the coast.

MARYBOROUGH GAOL (PRISONER THOMAS COLLINS.)

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, with respect to the statement of evidence enclosed with the petition in favour of the release of Thomas Collins, a prisoner confined in Maryborough Prison, whether he is aware that Thomas Collins was convicted solely on an approver's evidence, and that Mr. Justice Holmes at the trial characterised the approver as a vile character; and, whether inquiries have been made to the mental and physical condition of Thomas Collins?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The prisoner named in the Question, together with four others, was tried at the Munster Winter Assizes of 1891 on the charge of conspiracy to murder. He was convicted and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. It is not the fact that Collins was convicted solely on the evidence of an approver; on the contrary there was a considerable volume of independent evidence corroborating the details of the approver's testimony. I am not aware that the learned Judge spoke of him as a vile character, though it is no doubt possible that he did. The convict was recently examined by the Medical Member of the Prisons Board, who reports that mentally he may be described as simple and that physically his health is good.

MR. FLAVIN: Surely the right hon. Gentleman must be aware if he looks at the evidence——

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

DOG LICENCE (GOVAN).

MR. JOHN WILSON (Lanark, Govan): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he is aware that the occupier of Broomloan Farm, Govan, who keeps on an average 29 cattle, has been fined for keeping a dog without a licence, although application had been made and refused for a statutory form claiming exemption; and, whether it is within the province of the Inland Revenue officer of the district to refuse to supply to an applicant the necessary form for making a declaration claiming exemption?

MR. HANBURY: The form of declaration to which the hon. Member refers is prescribed to be used by the owner of a dog "kept and used solely for the purpose of tending sheep or cattle on a farm, or in the exercise of the calling or occupation of a shepherd." The Inland Revenue officer, in refusing to receive a declaration from the applicant in this case, was acting under the instructions of the Board of Inland Revenue, who, after carefully investigating the case, satisfied themselves that the applicant was not a farmer or a shepherd, and that the dog, which was kept on his premises at 177, Broomloan Road, Govan, could in no sense be said to be kept and used solely for the purpose of tending sheep or cattle on a farm.

KERRY GRAND JURY.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that members of the Kerry Grand Jury are contractors to that body; also that men occupying the position of agents to those contractors are also members of the Kerry Grand Jury; and, if so, whether this is legal?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The Secretary of the Grand Jury, with whom I have communicated, is not aware that any member of the Grand Jury is contractor to that body; nor is he aware that agents of contractors to the Grand Jury are members of the Grand Jury.

Mr. FLAVIN: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that several members of the Kerry Grand Jury are agents of the contractors and that the secretary himself is agent to his own brother?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The reply I have given is that which I have been furnished with after inquiry. If the hon. Gentleman will bring evidence before me as to the facts he states, I will make further inquiries.

Mr. FLAVIN: Will the right hon. Gentleman allow me to give the names of the contractors? [Cries of "Order."]

[No answer was given.]

EDUCATION OFFICE (DUBLIN).

Mr. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, in view of the fact that Civil servants employed in the Education Board, Dublin, as abstractors have to perform precisely the same duties as second division clerks but without prospects of advancement, which compels them to stand almost on the same footing as boy copyists, also that many of these officials have served long periods in their several positions; whether, in case the Treasury cannot immediately accede to the request contained in their recent petitions, he can hold out any hope of improved prospects for this class of public officials in the near future?

Mr. HANBURY: I am not aware of any case in the Civil Service in which abstractors are performing precisely the same duties as second division clerks. The abstractor class was expressly created for the performance of work of a higher order than copying, but not of sufficiently advanced or responsible character to be assigned to second division clerks, and it is for such work only that the Treasury has sanctioned the employment of abstractors in various departments. If in any department the line of demarcation drawn by the Treasury had been subsequently abandoned and the work of the two classes amalgamated, as the hon. Member asserts, it is clear that the abstractors would be doing too high work and the second division too low, and the abstractors should bring the matter before the responsible head of the department as a question of internal administration. There is of course no comparison between temporary boy copyists, who cannot rise beyond 18s. a week, or be retained after reaching the age of 20, and abstractors who are permanent and pensionable officers and can rise to £150 a year. The abstractor class has only been in existence six years, so none of its members can have served long periods in that capacity. As regards their demand for improved prospects, I have nothing to add to the answers I have repeatedly given to similar proposals.

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he has received a series of resolutions from the North Dublin Union on the subject of his proposed Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill: and, can he state whether in Committee any of these resolutions would be given effect to by his assent to the changes they propose in the Bill?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The resolutions referred to have been received. I am unable at present to make any statement regarding the Poor Relief Bill.

ITALIAN ICE-CREAM VENDORS.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been called to the action of Mr. Alderman Knight in fining an Italian 10s. for selling ice-cream in the street, whilst a Scotchman who was selling fruit in the same vicinity was only fined 1s., the Alderman remarking that the Italian should be mulcted because all Italians were a nuisance; and whether he will cause inquiry to be made into all the circumstances of the case?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. JESSE COLLINGS, Birmingham, Bordesley): The Secretary of State has made inquiry and finds that the circumstances of the two cases, which are not quite correctly stated in the Question, were so different as in the opinion of the Alderman to justify the difference in treatment. The Secretary of State has no reason to think that the Alderman was wrong in the view he took. The Alderman denies that he used the expression which is attributed to him in the Question.

QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE.

MR. JOHN AIRD (Paddington. N.): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works if orders will be given to clean the public statues in the line of the proposed route on Jubilee Day?

THE FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): Yes, Sir.

MR. AIRD: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra allowance or consideration will be given to the Metropolitan Police for their arduous duties on Jubilee Day?

MR. JESSE COLLINGS: It was hardly necessary for my hon. Friend to remind the Secretary of State of what he is of course always anxious to do, namely, to acknowledge in a proper way, as has previously been done, the services of the Metropolitan Police on special occasions. It is premature, however, to make any statement on the subject now before those services have been rendered.

MR. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS, (Notts, Mansfield): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, having regard to the difficulty occupants of seats on the occasion of the Royal Jubilee procession will have in reaching them before nine in the morning, carriages may be allowed to proceed to places on the route between Westminster Bridge and Buckingham Palace up to Ten o'clock as fixed for the route on the south of the river?

MR. JESSE COLLINGS: The Commissioner is not yet in a position to say what regulations will be necessary, but the point raised by the hon. Member will not be lost sight of when they come to be made.

MR. J. CUMMING MACDONA, (Southwark, Rotherhithe): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will make arrangements so that the Royal Irish Constabulary take part in the proceedings at the coming Jubilee?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Arrangements have already been made for the participation of a mounted detachment of the Royal Irish Constabulary in the Jubilee procession on June 22nd. [Cheers.]

MR. J. H. YOXALL (Nottingham, W.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education if he is aware that on 23rd June, the day on which Her Majesty is to review some 10,000 school children on Constitution Hill, and a day for which in Nottingham and other great provincial towns Diamond Jubilee celebrations involving the presence of school children are appointed, the Science and Art Department are to hold examinations, as at present arranged, and whether, to avoid the obvious inconvenience, absence from examination, and consequent loss, he will postpone the examinations due on 23rd June until some more convenient date?

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): The Science and Art Department have received no applications for the postponement of these examinations. No change could now be made without great inconvenience to the majority of schools.

RATHKEALE UNION (ELECTION OF GUARDIAN).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the grounds upon which the Local Government Board refused to institute an Inquiry into a recent election of a Poor Law Guardian for the Mohernagh Division of the Rathkeale Union, in which the defeated candidate, Mr. William Harte, claimed a sworn Inquiry on the alleged grounds that 16 votes recorded against him were all in the same handwriting, the disallowance by the returning officer of six proxy votes, and other irregularities; and whether he will advise the Local Government Board to hold the Inquiry asked for by Mr. Harte?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The Local Government Board carefully considered the objections raised by the defeated candidate as well as the reasons for the decision arrived at by the returning officer, and came to the conclusion that there was no ground for ordering an Inquiry in this case. Objections to the return of persons as guardians are very numerous, and frequently consist of mere allegations, unsupported by evidence. No evidence was forwarded in the present case in support of the allegation made by the defeated candidate, nor was sufficient cause otherwise shown for holding an Inquiry. I see no reason, under the circumstances, for requesting the Board to reconsider their decision.

MULLINGAR UNION.

Mr. JASPER TULLY (Leitrim, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Local Government Board are aware that the medicine contract in Mullingar Union was cancelled last year as the result of a sworn Inquiry into grave irregularities which were found to exist, the accounts of the contractor not having been properly checked by the clerk of the Union, whose brother was in the employment of the contractor; and that the medicine contract has been voted this year by the friends of the clerk of the Union to the same contractor, whose tender was found to be the highest; and whether he can state what action the Local Government Board have taken in the matter?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The circumstances under which the medicine contract was terminated last year were referred to in my answer to the hon. Member's previous Question of the 26th January. I have no information regarding the occupation of the clerk's brother. The Guardians have this year given the contract to the same contractor; the tender was not shown to be the highest, and upon a comparison of the prices of the drugs most in use it would appear that three tenders were higher and five lower than the accepted tender. The Guardians are not bound to accept the lowest or any tender, and under the existing law the Local Government Board do not see their way to intervene in this matter. By Clause 39 of the Poor Relief Bill, now before the House, the Board will be empowered, however, to make regulations in respect of medicine contracts which, while continuing to the Guardians the power of selecting the contractor, will enable them to determine at a glance which tender is most favourable to the Union, a matter which they have great difficulty in deciding under the present system.

LARCENY (ALLEGED), CO. TYRONE.

Mr. JAMES DALY (Monaghan, S.): I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland whether he is aware that two brothers named Maguire, County Tyrone, are at present in prison for larceny, although substantial bail has been offered to the Crown on behalf of the Maguires to stand any further trial; and whether he can say if there are in Ireland any other prisoners besides the Maguires in prison, charged with larceny, who offered bail for their appearance?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND (Mr. J. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.): I am aware that the brothers Maguire are at present in custody charged with larceny. I am further aware that an application made to the Judge presiding at the late trial of the accused to admit them to bail was refused by him. The prisoners have not since, so far as I know, made any applications to the Queen's Bench Division to be admitted to bail as they were entitled to do. I cannot answer the latter portion of the Question; besides there are circumstances in this case which distinguish it from any other of which I have any knowledge.

PARCEL POST.

Mr. HENNIKER HEATON (Canterbury): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he has received complaints of the difficulty farmers and others encounter in sending parcels of merchandise 1 lb. in weight for the minimum price of 3d. because of the additional weight of the wrappers of paper, etc.; and whether if he cannot see his way to reduce the cost of carriage of parcels to a minimum of 1d. per lb., he will permit 1 lb. to go through the post for 2d. or 2 lb. for 3d.; if not, will he permit 1½ lbs. to go for 3d. so as to allow for packing?

Mr. HANBURY: Applications have been received from various quarters that the parcel post rates should cover slightly more than the even pound or pounds in order to allow for the weight of wrappers. The changes in the scale of rates which have been announced will to some extent meet the wishes of the hon. Member by reducing the charge on a parcel between 1 lb. and 2 lb. from 4½d. to 4d., but it is not possible to make any further concession. The weight of the packing would, of course, vary greatly according to the nature of the articles sent, and it would be impracticable to fix a margin which would be fair to all alike.

TELEGRAPH CHARGES.

Mr. HENNIKER HEATON: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether, as he has consented by special official notification to charge "sha'n't" as one word and "mother-in-law" as one word, he will so far relax the rule as to permit "Charing Cross" to go as one word in telegraphing; and whether he is aware that "Kentish Town," a postal and telegraph office, is charged two words in a telegram, but "Woodford Green" is charged as one word?

Mr. HANBURY: The anomalies which the hon. Member so frequently points out are the result of concessions. One of the words he has quoted as anomalous—"mother-in-law"—was, I believe, first dealt with as one word at the urgent request of my hon. Friend himself. [Laughter.] I think that the rule which refers to the names of places is a reasonable one. It is that the names of all separate towns and villages are treated as one word. Of course, neither Kentish Town nor Charing Cross is the name of a town or village. If that rule were departed from, it is difficult to say what might not be treated as a local name and claim the privilege.

Mr. HENNIKER HEATON: May I ask why is "stepfather" charged as two words and "grandmother" one? [Laughter.]

PROBATION OF FIRST OFFENDERS ACT.

Mr. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been called to the statement made by the Chairman of the London Sessions in charging the Grand Jury on Tuesday last, that out of a total of 204 convicted persons released ment, from 1894 down to last year, 12 only had since offended; and whether he will by circular or otherwise call the will by circular or otherwise call the attention of Justices throughout the country to the successful working of the Probation of First Offenders Act, with a view to its more frequent application?

Mr. JESSE COLLINGS: The Secretary of State has seen the very satisfactory statement by the Chairman of the London Sessions to which the hon. Member alludes. There is nothing however, in the evidence before him as to the working of the Probation of First Offenders Act and similar enactments which would lead him to suppose that Courts of Summary Jurisdiction are unmindful of the powers which they possess under those Acts, or that any new circular from the Home Office is needed in regard to the manner in which they use them.

BANKRUPTCY COURT (IRELAND).

Major JAMESON (Clare, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland is it the intention of the Government to fill the vacancy in the judicial staff of the Court of Bankruptcy in Ireland, occasioned by the death of the late Judge Miller; and, if not, what provision exists for the discharge of the business of the Court in the event of the unavoidable absence owing to illness or otherwise of the existing Judge?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The whole matter is under the consideration of the Government, and some definite decision will, I hope, soon be arrived at. The contingency mentioned in the last sentence has not arisen.

BRUSSELS ACT.

Sir JOHN KENNAWAY (Devon, Honiton): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether, in view of the fact that all the signatories to the Brussels Act are under obligation to give a certificate of freedom to all slaves entering their territories which come under that Agreement, instructions in accordance therewith have been given to Her Majesty's Agents in the British East African Protectorate?

Mr. CURZON: My hon. Friend is, I think, not quite correct in his interpretation of the Brussels Act. There is nothing in that Act compelling its signatories to give letters of freedom to all slaves entering their territories. The letters are to be given to all slaves liberated under the conditions laid down by the Act. Instructions to look to this Act for guidance have been given to Her Majesty's Agents in East Africa.

Sir C. DILKE: Does the latter part of that reply extend to the fugitive slaves' provisions?

Mr. CURZON: Oh, yes, Sir; they cover everything touched by the Brussels Act.

DEATH OF PAUPER (CITY OF LONDON).

Mr. D. CRILLY (Mayo, N.): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board if he can now inform the House as to the result of his inquiries respecting the death of the old woman, Margaret Ross, upon whose body an inquest was held in the Hackney Coroner's Court on 3rd May, when it appeared in evidence that the deceased had been an inmate of a City union workhouse, that her age was 77 years, and that she had been found dead on the previous Thursday beside the washing pail which she had been using in her work, and that the workhouse authorities had been in the habit of compelling this old woman to clean out a large ward containing twelve beds?

The PRESIDENT of the LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. Henry Chaplin, Lincolnshire, Sleaford): I have been in communication with the Guardians of the City of London on the subject, and I have also obtained copies of the depositions taken at the inquest in the case. It appeared from the medical evidence and a post-mortem examination that the death of the poor woman was instantaneous—from natural causes, and due neither to syncope nor weakness. It is not the case that the workhouse authorities compelled her to clean out a ward. She had, up to some nine days before her death, been employed in the needle-room, and it was at her own special request that she was allowed to undertake the duty of keeping a dormitory clean, as she preferred this to the more sedentary work, and said she was quite capable of undertaking it.

TOKAT MASSACRE.

Mr. J. C. FLYNN (Cork, N.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Sir Philip Currie has addressed a letter to Tewfik Pasha in reference to the recent massacre of Armenians at Tokat; whether he can state to the House the nature of this communication; and what action the representatives of the Great Powers propose to take in regard to the miscarriage of justice which has taken place?

Mr. CURZON: Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople has not yet reported to us upon the result of the investigation that has been conducted by the Turkish Commission at Tokat; nor do we know whether he has addresed a Note on the subject to the Porte. I have no doubt that we shall very shortly hear from him on the subject.

Mr. FLYNN: When shall I put a further Question?

Mr. CURZON: If the hon. Gentleman likes to put a Question down on Monday, I will try to answer it. I will let him know as soon as we hear.

SCIENCE AND ART CLASSES (IRELAND).

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education whether the new rules of the South Kensington Science and Art Department prohibit the pupils of national schools in Ireland being enrolled in the science classes; whether the teachers who are thus deprived of the result fees for science subjects are allowed an equivalent; upon what grounds and by whom were the Irish national school pupils deprived of the advantages of these science classes; and whether he will consider the advisability of re-establishing the rule which allowed the pupils of sixth and higher classes of Irish national schools to be enrolled in science classes?

Sir J. GORST: The new rule, which applies to Great Britain as well as Ireland, is intended to prevent the scholars in elementary schools from earning a double grant for a single attendance—one from the Education and the other from the Science and Art authorities. No compensation is to be paid to teachers because such an abuse of the grants is prevented. The Irish elementary pupils have as ample opportunities of learning science as those in other parts of the United Kingdom, as day scholars in the elementary schools, and as evening scholars under the Science and Art Department. No change in the rule is contemplated.

PETTY SESSIONS (MAGISTERIAL JURISDICTION).

Mr. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he can state upon what principle certain magistrates may adjudicate in all petty sessions districts in the county named in their commissions, while other magistrates in the same county are confined to certain districts only; how many magistrates in Fermanagh enjoy the privilege of sitting at all petty sessions in that county, and how many are confined to limited areas; and will any steps be taken to limit the jurisdiction in the one case, or to extend it in the other, so that the existing distinction may cease?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The Question is based upon a supposition which is erroneous. I have already explained to the hon. Member that all magistrates are expected to confine their attendance at petty sessions to the districts specified on their appointment to the Commission. The Lord Chancellor does not sanction the atendance of a magistrate at all petty sessions throughout the county.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH (COURT OF JUSTICE).

Sir WALTER FOSTER (Derby, Ilkeston): I beg to ask the Attorney General if his attention has been called to the ordinary form of English oath as administered in courts of justice; and whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce a Bill to alter the ordinary form of English oath, and to abolish the objectionable practice known as kissing the book in the administration of oaths of all descriptions?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir Richard Webster, Isle of Wight): My attention has been called to the question of the desirability of changing the form of oath, but I think that the fear of infection has been somewhat exaggerated. I would remind the hon. Member that under the provisions of the Oaths Act 1888, witnesses are now permitted to take oath in Scotch form under which it is unnecessary to kiss the book. I will, however, consider whether any further amendment of the law is required.

JUDICIARY (IRELAND).

Mr. FLYNN: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, in reference to the vacancy on the Irish Judicial Bench, caused by the death of the late Justice Barry, whether the Government will adhere to the declaration of the Chancellor of the Exchequer upon the subject of the excessive cost of the legal and judicial establishments in Ireland, and the return to Ireland of the amount by which such excessive cost is reduced?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.): The Government in no way recede from the declaration made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on this subject; but I am not in a position at this moment to make any statement with regard to the vacancy caused by the death of Lord Justice Barry.

Captain DONELAN (Cork, E.): Is it not the fact that the Irish Judicial Bench is still considerably overmanned?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: That is a general question on which many successive Governments have made declarations, and I am not sure that anything will be gained by giving a special answer.

BENEFICES BILL.

Viscount CRANBORNE (Rochester): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether it has been brought to his notice that the Benefices Bill stands the first Order for Wednesday 26th instant; and whether he can give an assurance that that day will not be taken for Government business?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: In answer to my noble Friend I have to say that it does seem certain that Wednesday the 26th instant, will be taken for Government business, the Committee stage of the Compensation to Workmen Bill. I, of course, greatly regret that my noble Friend should be deprived of that Wednesday for his Benefices Bill, especially when it happens that the Measure has my warm personal sympathy, as my noble Friend is aware. But, whatever is to be gained by the discussion of the Bill, there is little or no probability—I will put it more strongly, and say that there is no possibility—of a private Bill being passed into law at this time of the Session.

VISCOUNT CRANBORNE: May I ask whether, in view of the great importance attributed to many of the provisions of this Bill, my right hon. Friend can hold out any expectation that, in lieu of this particular Wednesday, we may have some other opportunity of discussing the Bill in the course of the Session, or, failing that, whether the Government will consider the propriety of dealing with this subject themselves in the next Session of Parliament?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: My noble Friend is a sufficiently experienced Member of the House to know that the Government can express no preference for or give advantage to any private Member's Bill. With regard to the second part of his Question, I am not in a position to give a complete answer to it at the present time, but I can assure him of the sympathy of myself and many of my colleagues on this question. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE ARMISTICE.

*MR. C. P. SCOTT (Lancashire, Leigh): I wish to ask the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs a Question of which I have given him private notice. It is whether he can state what are the terms of the armistice concluded between the Greek and Turkish forces in Thessaly, and to what period of time it extends?

MR. CURZON: In reply to the hon. Member, I regret to say that we have no official information as to the exact terms or duration of the armistice that has been concluded either in Thessaly or Epirus; but we have telegraphed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople for the details.

First Lord of the Treasury.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND).

MINISTERIAL PROPOSALS.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I have deferred from day to day during the last fortnight the making of a statement in answer to certain Questions which have been addressed to me from the other side of the House. Some of those Questions relate to the Irish Agricultural Industries Bill and other Bills now on the Paper in the name of the Government having reference to Irish administration. Others are Questions relating to the policy of the Government in connection with a grant to Ireland, based on similar lines to those adopted in the Act of last year, which gave relief to the rates on agricultural land in England. These two questions may seem at first to be little connected with each other, but in the view of the Government they are really inextricably intertwined. There are two aspects of the same policy which cannot by any possibility be separately considered. The House is aware that the Government have declared that in their view Ireland possessed no claim in strict equity to the many hundreds of thousands of pounds which would be required if the rating question were to be treated on lines similar to those adopted in England. [Irish laughter.] I am stating a question of fact. The House is aware that that was, and I may add that it still is, the attitude taken up by the Government. I am conscious that I am not in agreement with hon. Gentlemen opposite. I am aware that their opinions on the subject are shared by other Irish representatives in this House and by the great mass of public opinion in Ireland. [Irish cheers.] I am not disputing the fact, and I am not arguing the question. I am merely stating that upon the question of abstract equity the Government have not changed their minds nor do they see any reason to depart from the attitude recently taken up by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the First Lord of the Admiralty. Even if we took a different view upon this question, I think hon. Members on all sides of the House would see that there would be the very greatest difficulty in giving any large subvention in relief of local rates in Ireland until the question of local government was settled. Hon. Members opposite have asked for a great deal of new wine, but they propose that it should be put into very old bottles. [Laughter.] That is a policy which presents very great difficulties, and we are of opinion that it would not be in the power of this or any other Government to consider the question of large subventions to Irish rates apart from the question of a large modification of Irish local government. We are brought to the same result if we consider the kind of criticism levelled from more than one quarter of the House against many of the attempts at administrative reform in Ireland which have from time to time been attempted. The object of those reforms is often accepted by hon. Gentlemen opposite, but they criticise the details of the Bills in which they are embodied, and object to their passage because they say, with a certain amount of force, that the machinery now in existence is of so antiquated a character—["hear, hear!"]—that it is not possible or right to throw upon it the new duties that would necessarily be thrown upon it by the Measures in question. When I say the machinery is antiquated I am expressing no new opinion. We have, indeed, never denied that, so far as county administration is concerned, the work done by grand juries has been honest work, able and economical work. ["Hear, hear!" and "No!"] But, at the same time, we have invariably admitted that both the machinery for administering county government and poor relief in Ireland belong to a class of political machinery which we have rejected in England and Scotland, and which the great majority on this side of the House are pledged to reform in Ireland also. [Irish laughter and an HON. MEMBER: "1886!"] I hear an hon. Member say "1886!" I do not know what 1886 has to do with local government in Ireland, but I have in my mind a Bill introduced in 1892 which did not proceed very far —[laughter]—which, indeed, apart from the special political difficulty of that year, might not under any circumstances have received the general assent of the House, but which was an honest attempt on my part to deal with the special difficulties of Irish administration as they then presented themselves to me. What was the objection taken to the Bill? It was this —that while it had no doubt put Irish local government upon a broad popular basis as far as the franchise was concerned, it was hedged round and, as it were, crowded with elaborate precautions which were not required, in our opinion, in England or Scotland, and which had not been introduced in the English or Scotch Bills, but which we did think were necessary if we were to give local government to Ireland under the circumstances then existing. Consider, then, the apparent dilemma into which we are forced by this line of argument. We cannot, it would seem, give anything to Irish rates without reforming Irish local government. We cannot, owing to the special circumstances of Ireland, reform its local government without encumbering the new system with elaborate and irritating precautions. At first sight, the difficulty seems insoluble. But, on more mature reflection, it would seem that we have now presented to us an opportunity, perhaps an absolutely unique opportunity, of meeting the difficulties we have always felt in the extension of local government to Ireland, and at the same time meeting the claims which have been put forward with so much energy and eloquence by all classes of Irish opinion in the last few weeks. We believe that a plan can be devised by which both these great objects can be attained and which will secure the friendly support of every class. I do not on the present occasion intend to go into details. I am only speaking by the leave of the House. Obviously the Bill embodying such a plan cannot be introduced until next Session, but, broadly, our scheme is this. We should propose to place both the Poor Law and county administration upon a broad and popular basis—[cheers]—but, as I have explained, that can only be done if at the same time the owners of agricultural land can be relieved of the apprehension which, rightly or wrongly, they entertain with regard to the possible extravagance, perhaps unintentional, and perhaps intentional, of the new public bodies which are to be called into existence. We hold further that to attain this object the landlords must be relieved from all rural rates in the future.

I make no secret at all about it. That is a wide departure from the course which we have pursued in England or Scotland. [Irish cheers.] We think it a necessary departure. Roughly speaking, the landlords' liability for agricultural land at this moment consists of paying half the poor rates. We propose to pay that half out of the Imperial Exchequer for the future. ["Hear, hear!"] We propose also to pay half the county cess. The landlord would gain by the first and the tenant by the second of these subventions, while there is this double benefit for the two classes, it will be observed that we gain our great object, that, namely, of launching local government under circumstances which would make it palatable and safe for all classes. It may, perhaps, be objected that this gift is illusory. The tenants, on the one hand, may say, "If you give half the county cess, that is all very well as long as our judicial rents are running, but what is to happen at the end of the 15 years? Will the whole of this not be put by the action of the Sub-Commissioners into the pockets of the landlord? Will, therefore, the relief nominally intended for us not, as a matter of fact, go to the landlords?" The landlords on the other hand, may say, "What we have been afraid of in giving county government in Ireland is the extravagance, intentional or unintentional, of the popular bodies to be created. How are we protected from the extravagance if at the end of the 15 years any increase of the rates which may have occurred by the action of those bodies in the interval is to be thrown on us by the action of the Sub-Commissioners?" It will be seen, therefore, that each party contemplates, and possibly contemplates rightly, that the gift which under the plan I am now proposing would be given by the Imperial Exchequer might by the natural and legitimate action of the Land Courts be taken from them and given to the other class concerned in the cultivation of the land. And again, the tenants might say, "Though the landlords anticipate that this establishment of popular local government in Ireland will lead to extravagance, we, the tenants, take precisely the opposite view. We think that the existing system has produced an unnecessary expenditure of local funds in Ireland, and that the result of the change will not be to increase rates, but to diminish them." [Mr. T. M. HEALY: "Hear, hear!"] Of course, I do not prophesy which result will occur, but while I think the landlords should be protected from the possible extravagance of the new bodies, I think they should not be allowed to reap the benefits of the possible economy of the new bodies, and therefore I think we ought to introduce into any Bill for local government in Ireland provisions by which we should secure, first, that the tenant should reap the whole benefit of that part of the county cess which is to be given to him by the Exchequer, and, secondly, that he should reap the whole benefit of any economy he may introduce in the administration, or of any public improvements, roads, and the like, which may be made out of the county cess, after the new county government has been established. On the other hand, I think that equal precautions should be taken to prevent the landlords suffering from the extravagance which some prophets anticipate from either the inexperience or the design of the new County Councils and the new Poor Law Guardians. I do not know whether I have made these broad elements of our policy clear.

MR. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.): There is one point I should like to mention. What is proposed to be done in the cases where the landlord now pays all the poor rate?

*THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: That is the well-known case of where the rent is £4 and under. I rather avoided that as being a detail, but it is a detail of such importance that the hon. Gentleman is no doubt justified in asking me across the floor of the House a question relating to it. The present idea of the Government is in that case, as in the other, that half the poor rate should be paid by the State, and that the other half of the existing poor rate should be automatically subtracted from the rent now paid by the tenant to the landlord. Let it be noticed that if the poor rate remains as it is, no charge will be thrown upon the tenant under £4. Half the charge will be borne by the State and the other half borne by the landlord in the form of a fixed subtraction, not a varying subtraction, from his rent, depending, of course, upon the amount of the poor rate existing at the time that this reform was carried into effect. I hope I have made that fairly clear to the House, and that they will see that that very important point has not escaped the attention of the Government. Now I feel I have trespassed upon the House—[general cries of "No, no!"]—not so much indeed by the length of the statement, which I think has been as concise as the circumstances admit—["hear, hear!"]—but by asking the attention of the House to legislation which is not yet in being, and which cannot possibly be brought to their attention until we meet again in another Session—[An hon. Member: "Next Session?"]—next Session. It is, of course, a most unusual proceeding, for which I think an apology is required, but the House will see my reason. The reason is that as we have adopted this policy, the two essential elements of which are relief of rates in Ireland—general relief of rates on agricultural land in Ireland—and the establishment of popular local government in Ireland under circumstances which would prevent any of the financial abuses which have caused such widespread alarm among important sections of the community, the House will see that the policy consisting of these essential elements had to be explained before I could justify to the House the further announcement which they will no doubt have anticipated—namely, that the Irish Bills of my right hon. Friend, the Agricultural Industries Bill and the Poor Law Bill, cannot be proceeded with in the course of the present Session. We have adopted an alternative policy —[Mr. T. M. Healy: "Hear, hear!"]— inflicting, indeed, an incomparably larger charge upon the common Exchequer, but a charge which I am perfectly certain the country at large, and the Unionist Party in particular, will not grudge if they can see their way to carrying out the reform to which we are all pledged, the making of that change in Irish county government which certainly cannot be longer delayed, although it may take place under circumstances far less favourable than those which exist at present. Sir, I think that, for these reasons, the landlord and the tenant, the reformer, the politician, the Englishman, the Irishman, every class of the community, whether specially connected with Ireland or not, will be disposed to regard with favour—[Mr. T. M. Healy: "Hear, hear!"]—what I cannot but think will prove to be, all things considered, one of the greatest reforms carried out in the safest manner which have ever been suggested to the attention of this House. [Cheers.] I am, of course, ready to answer, if Mr. Speaker permits it, any question so long as it is not a question of detail, but in the meanwhile I hope I have with sufficient lucidity explained the general lines of the Government policy with regard to Ireland, and I cannot help hoping with some confidence that on all sides of the House that policy will meet with approval. [Cheers.]

Mr. EDWARD CARSON (Dublin University), rose in his place, and asked leave to move the Adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance—namely,

"the statement of the First Lord of the Treasury made this day with regard to the withdrawal by the Government of legislation proposed in reference to Ireland;"

The pleasure of the House having been signified,

Mr. CARSON said that every person who had listened to his right hon. Friend's statement would admit that in its bearing upon Ireland and the relations of this country with Ireland, no more important statement had been made in recent times. He wished to deal with that generous and sympathetic statement in the manner in which his right hon. Friend had made it. He would not discuss now the right hon. Gentleman's remark that Ireland in strictness had no claim to the money that he had announced he was prepared under certain circumstances to give in relief of the rates; it was enough for him to know that his right hon. Friend was prepared to give the money. But he thought anybody who had followed the course of events in Ireland since the recent Division on the Motion of the hon. and learned Member for Londonderry, must have come to the conclusion that the Government had taken a wise course in reconsidering their position upon the question. That was a question upon which Irish Members of all sections were unanimous, and it was a question upon which public opinion in Ireland was also unanimous, and it would be received with much gratification to-morrow that at length the Government had agreed to give Ireland the same amount of relief in agricultural rates as they gave last year to England and Scotland. ["Hear, hear!"] He supported the Motion of the hon. and learned Member for Londonderry upon the ground that he thought that as far as possible England ought to treat Ireland as one country with herself. The First Lord of the Treasury had said that if this money were given it could not be given with what he called the existing antiquated machinery. Speaking as a Unionist, he would like to see the same legislation apply to both countries as far as possible, but he should be very sorry if this antiquated machinery should be a reason for refusing this great relief to those engaged in agricultural pursuits in Ireland. The question of local government in Ireland was one that had, no doubt, been looked upon with great apprehension by many Unionists in that country, but he thought his right hon. Friend was perfectly correct when he said that a great deal of the resistance to the proposal hitherto made was made because no solution had been come to by which those who would be unrepresented would not have to pay the greater portion of the taxation levied by the local bodies. He now understood that the right hon. Gentleman was prepared to remove that apprehension by practically enacting that those who would be to a large extent, if not altogether, the representatives of the local bodies would be the persons who would have to bear the burden of the taxation. Under these circumstances, he thought it would be a narrow policy for Unionists to adopt to say they would offer any hostility whatever to the proposals for local government to Ireland. He agreed with his right hon. Friend that the present system of county government in Ireland had worked well and, he thought, economically, but he admitted it was out of date—["hear, hear!"]—and that sooner or later they must have local government in Ireland. In 1892, when his right hon. Friend proposed his Bill for the local self-government of Ireland, he spoke publicly in Ireland in favour of some such system, and he was glad his right hon. Friend had hit now upon some system by which they could, at least, look forward to having a Local Government Bill for Ireland which would not be cavilled at as putting any unnecessary safeguards upon it. He thought the time had come when they could look upon these proposals in a generous way. So far as he was concerned he should, in speaking of and discussing this question, do all he could to have an effective and proper Measure of local government in Ireland. ["Hear, hear!"] He hoped the announcement his right hon. Friend had made as to the withdrawal of the Agricultural Industries Bill for Ireland did not mean that they were not to have that Bill in some form in the future. ["Hear, hear!"] He would suggest to him that when he was framing his Local Government Bill, and when he was reconsidering the position as regarded the Agricultural Department and Industries Bill, he might find his local councils in Ireland of very great use in enabling him to establish a more satisfactory system. He could only say that, upon such consideration as he had been able to give to the proposals of his right hon. Friend, they seemed to him to be not only statesmanlike, but entirely in accordance with Unionist principles, and it was as a Unionist Member that he would gladly support them. [Cheers.]

Mr. DILLON said it could not be expected that he should express any opinion on the proposals which had just been submitted to the House by the First Lord of the Treasury. He entirely agreed with the Member for Dublin University that the statement of the First Lord was one of the most important they had listened to from an Irish point of view for many a long day. [Cheers.] He refrained from expressing any opinion as to the important proposals submitted until he had had the opportunity of consulting with his colleagues and ascertaining their views. They were, as the First Lord had told them, to have until next Session to consider his very remarkable statement, and, therefore, there was no reason for being in a hurry to commit oneself for or against the proposals. He would like to ask the right hon. Gentleman one or two questions. He would like to know what he proposed to do with the money which had already been ear-marked for Ireland, and which was known as the equivalent grant. This was now suspended between heaven and earth, without, apparently, being allocated to any object. He would also like to know whether he proposed to apply the principle of an equal or really equivalent grant to Ireland in the present year, or whether he intended that Ireland should be content, so far as the present year went, with the sum of twice £75,000. With regard to the proposals of the right hon. Gentleman, he desired to point out that of course the landowners of Ireland would get what he thought might very fairly be described as the lion's share of the grant in relief of rates.

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central): Less than one-half.

Mr. DILLON said he supposed it would have been considerably more, but he reserved his judgment on the point until a future occasion. But he desired to say that he should be prepared to make a considerable financial sacrifice for the sake of arranging a really democratic and liberal system of local government in Ireland. [General cheers.] Until they knew what kind of local government they were going to get, however, it was absolutely impossible for any Nationalist to state what would be his attitude towards the proposals. His own position would be largely influenced by the nature of the local government which was going to be offered, and if, as the price of a really democratic system, and one such as the speech of the right hon. Gentleman pointed to, they were asked to make some sacrifice which appeared to them even an unfair arrangement with regard to the landlords, he should be sorry to offer any opposition. [" Hear, hear ! "]

Colonel SAUNDERSON (Armagh, N.) said the statement of his right hon. Friend was one of the gravest character and, as far as he could see, without pledging himself in any way, he thought he and his colleagues would view it with satisfaction. [" Hear, hear ! "] He thought he could speak for some part of Ireland, and he felt that a scheme of county government such as had been adumbrated by his right hon. Friend would give very great satisfaction. [Cheers.] The only regret he had was that his right hon. Friend did not promise, on the part of the Government, to bring in a Bill next year on the lines of the one brought in by the Chief Secretary for Ireland this Session. He thought a Bill of that kind would have a very considerable effect in promoting the material prosperity of their country, and he hoped the First Lord of the Treasury would not think that because it would be necessary for the Government to bring in a Bill next year, perhaps of a complicated character, they would be forced to abandon the other Bill. [" Hear, hear ! "] He expressed his thanks to the Government for their promised scheme, which he believed would give great satisfaction. [Cheers.]

Mr. T. M. HEALY (Louth, N.) thought the First Lord of the Treasury might congratulate himself both on his statement and on the character of its reception. [" Hear, hear ! "] He thought everyone in the House would cordially endorse what the hon. Member for East Mayo had said — that, while the landlords would receive a substantial share of the bonus from the Government, there would be no opposition on that side of the House to their getting it on the understanding that the English system of franchise was conferred upon the people of Ireland. He should like to make one suggestion to the landlord party while that frame of mind continued—whether they could not fairly inaugurate the new era which they had opened up by the manner of the reception of the First Lord's statement by showing, in regard to those evicted tenants, who had been such a difficulty in the country, a slightly different temper from what they had done in the past. [" Hear, hear ! "] He would like to make one further remark to the landlord party. He was not grudging them the relief they would get. On the contrary, they helped them to get this relief, and he did not see why they should not share in the profits. [Laughter.] But he would impress on the Government that it would be well to drop this Inquiry into the Land Acts, seeing that the landlords were getting so large a sum as they were, and practically were getting it with the free will of that side of the House. His further remark was that, having struck a solid vein of common sense—and, as it was said, having struck it rich—he would suggest that the powers conferred on these local bodies should not only be large and ample in the English sense, but that they should be powers especially applicable to the case of Ireland. He thought the form of county government to be set up would enable them to deal with questions such as would have otherwise arisen under the Agricultural Board Bill, and now that Bill had been dropped he thought a great change would be made in the character of their policy. ["Hear, hear!"] The only other remark he would like to make was this. He believed that large economies could be made in the management and administration of Irish affairs. There were 159 Poor Law houses in Ireland, and in his opinion the number could be well cut down to 30 or 40. In Scotland there were only about 60. He believed that enormous reforms could be made by an improvement in the mode of collection all over the country, which was at present under a dual system; and he believed that the tenants would gain largely under the system proposed by the Government. He could only say that during his brief tenure of his seat in that House he had never known a Tory Government produce such a hopeful and auspicious statement of policy. [Cheers.]

Sir JOHN LUBBOCK (London University) said that though the important statement made by the First Lord of the Treasury primarily, of course, affected Irish Members, it also concerned England and Scotland. He congratulated his right hon. Friend on the manner in which his statement had been received by leaders of various Irish Parties, and he hoped it might not be out of place to say that he believed he would also have the support of Unionist Members representing English, and, he hoped, also Scotch constituencies. He should like to ask one question. He understood that the grant was fixed on the basis of past expenditures, so that any increase would fall on those responsible for it. [Mr. Balfour assented.] He was glad to hear the right hon. Gentleman assent, because that, of course, was very important as a protection to the Imperial Exchequer. Of course, they could not now go into details, but he believed the proposals of the Leader of the House would receive the cordial and sympathetic support of Gentlemen representing English constituencies.

Mr. J. A. RENTOUL (Down, E.) desired to say just a few words. When the Local Government Bill of 1892 was brought before the House, he was much interested in it. He travelled over nearly the whole of Ireland, and met Grand Jurors of every one of the chief counties, and he put before them the nature of the English Local Government Bill, and asked each one of them:—

> "Supposing this Bill were offered to you exactly as it stands, what would you suggest in the way of safeguards and changes?"

He took down the answers of those Grand Jurors, and in every county he found that, with the exception of one single man, there was not a Grand Juror who would not have accepted the English Bill without a single safeguard of any sort, save in one particular, and that was in reference to the rates. They were afraid of that one thing. They found, for example, to take one Barony, which would probably be the area of the Local Government elections, that in this Barony there would be 35,000 electors, while quite one-half of the rates would be paid by 26 people. That being so it was perfectly clear that it was of the utmost importance to large ratepayers that economy should be exercised in the County Council. The one fear of those Grand Jurors—who were all landlords, he need not say—had been removed by the statement of his right hon. Friend the Leader of the House. They would have taken the English Bill without a single safeguard if it had been safeguarded in that one particular, namely, that the new County Council should not be allowed to strike a higher rate than the average rate say, of the preceding three or five years, or something of that sort. Now that fear, their sole fear, had been entirely taken away, as they themselves would not have to pay, as he understood, a single penny of the rates to be laid out by the County Councils. He hoped that when this Local Government Bill was brought in it would not contain a single safeguard that was not to be found in the Scotch or English Bill; that, in point of fact, the people of Ireland would be given to see that the local bodies were to be largely in the hands of the tenants, who would be the ratepayers, and that the landlords would have nothing to fear as regarded their own pockets. He agreed with the hon. Member for North Armagh in hoping very earnestly, though he was not sure they had much ground for hoping, that the Bill which had been promised by Government—the Agricultural Industries Bill—would not be dropped, but that they might have that boon also. He certainly would be glad for their own sakes if those who insisted on a Commission to try the Land Commissioners would accept the suggestion of the hon. Member for Louth and would drop their demand for that Commission. ["Hear, hear!"] It was in the landlords' own interest entirely that he made the suggestion, because he firmly believed that the new Commission would be only a pat on the back for the present Land Commissioners, and that the reductions of rent they made after the Commission had reported would be greater and heavier than at present. He hailed with delight the statement of the First Lord of the Treasury, and he felt that there was not a single agricultural constituency in Ireland, whether Conservative or Home Rule, that would not gladly welcome it.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): It will be difficult to exaggerate the importance of the statement which the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury has made. It will be difficult, at the same time, to exaggerate the delicacy and the complicated character of the problem which the Government are going to attempt to deal with. I am sure the right hon. Gentleman will be gratified, and let me say that in all parts of the House there will be gratification, that there appears to be opened up an avenue to something like an agreement among the different sides of Irish politics upon the subject. ["Hear, hear!"] I do not say a total agreement, but still an agreement in aim and intention; and I hope the statement will be received—I am sure I am justified in saying for hon. Members on this side of the House that we shall treat the proposals of the Government, as shadowed by the right hon. Gentleman, in no carping or grudging spirit. [Cheers.] At the same time, the right hon. Gentleman has done a thing which I imagine has never been accomplished before—he will probably acknowledge the fact himself, because he has made a great part of the Queen's Speech for next Session standing at that box in the month of May. [Laughter.] There is obviously one great advantage in thus forestalling the lapse of time. There is an admirable opportunity—and it will greatly assist, I believe, in the settlement of the matter—there is an admirable opportunity for the Government to place their proposals fully before the country before they come to be dealt with by Parliament. Of course, the success of the proposals of the right hon. Gentleman, as my hon. Friend the Member for Mayo pointed out, depends largely, in fact almost entirely, upon the nature of the measure of local government to be granted to Ireland. We must all suspend our judgment upon the whole proposal until we know what is to be the character and the extent of the reform. ["Hear, hear!"] Now, would the Government be able before the end of the Session to produce a Bill for Irish Local Government—a Bill presenting their scheme, which with any modifications further experience might suggest would be the basis of their legislation next Session? There is an opportunity of doing it almost without example. The rest of this Session, as far as I understand it, will consist mostly of holiday. [Laughter and "Hear, hear!"] The right hon. Gentleman and his colleagues will therefore be relieved from close attendance in this House. They can thus devote their powers to the elaboration of this Bill. It will then be produced before the end of the Session, and everyone will be free to criticise it during the Recess. [Laughter.] The Government being a wise Government—[Ministerial cheers]—which, of course, we assume—[laughter]—will benefit by these criticisms, and next year will be able to introduce a Measure that will pass with very little difficulty through the House. [Laughter.] I draw that picture for the delectation of the right hon. Gentleman, and I think he will be well advised, seriously, if he takes the earliest opportunity of putting in shape his proposals for Irish local government, as it is clear that if those proposals are kept in the background, kept in the dark, public opinion on his scheme will have to be suspended during the whole of that time. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.) wished to thank the Government for having relieved him of some anxiety. He had repeatedly pledged himself to give Ireland practically the same form of local government as they had in England. That was the great battle-cry to which, since 1885, he had pledged himself over and over again; and he had always felt it to be a somewhat serious matter that they had not attempted to carry it out.

He was extremely glad, therefore, that Ireland was about to be given local government, and he hoped to see it done on the English system, for that, as Lord Randolph Churchill used to say, was the real beginning of a final solution of the difficulties between the two islands. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford) said he thought the First Lord of the Treasury was to be congratulated on the reception his statement had met with, not only on the Front Opposition Bench, but it might be safely said that every section of opinion in the House had been heard in the same sense. Certainly his memory would not enable him to recall any statement that had been made, either by a Conservative Government or by any other Government, which had been received with so universal an expression of agreement and satisfaction. ["Hear, hear!"] He had only risen to associate himself with the comments made from the Irish Benches upon the statement of the First Lord of the Treasury. That statement was, except in one particular, entirely satisfactory. So far as it included a certain amount of money to be given in relief of the landlords, he, for one, thought it would be exceedingly well spent if in return for that they got a free system of local government for the country, and they were bound to infer from the speech of the First Lord that the system of Government which was to be offered to Ireland would be a system of government of the fullest and freest kind, because he distinctly laid it down that the only reason which made it imperative upon him, according to his view, to insert safeguards in the Bill of 1892, would be entirely removed when the landlords had been relieved from the payment of these rates. ["Hear, hear!"] The only point he regretted in the statement of the right hon. Gentleman was where he seemed to give the go-by altogether to the claim which was propounded in the Agriculture and Industries Bill of the Chief Secretary. The comments on that Bill in that House and in Ireland all went in the direction of adverse criticism of its financial provisions, and if those provisions were remedied, then he thought there would be a general feeling amongst Irishmen in favour of some such Measure being carried. ["Hear, hear!"] That was the view of the Recess Committee, which had been considering this matter, and upon which were representatives of every section of Irish political opinion, and he sincerely trusted the shelving of the Bill for the present did not mean its abandonment by the Government, but that in the near future they might see their way to introduce such a scheme again in an amended form that would secure for it general support. ["Hear, hear!"]

Sir R. PENROSE-FITZGERALD (Cambridge) observed that the right hon. Member for the Stirling Burghs had asked that some Member representing an English constituency should get up and say he was prepared to recommend the scheme of the First Lord of the Treasury to his constituency. He would respond to that challenge, and say he was confident that the scheme would be received, not only in his own constituency, but by the vast majority of the constituencies in England, with approval. ["Hear, hear!"] He said so for this reason—in the past, whether they had voted Unionist or Separatist, their main idea had been that full and free justice should be done to Ireland in all matters where it was possible. ["Hear, hear!"] He remembered going with a deputation from County Cork to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose when he was Chief Secretary, and pointing out to him that, although the deputation embraced men of all creeds and politics, there was absolute unanimity as to the object in view. The reply from the right hon. Gentleman was that he had remarked that when it was a question of money all Irishmen were absolutely united. [Laughter.] His reason for advocating this particular scheme was that this £700,000 a year was Irish money to which the country was entitled. The Grand Jury system was to be broken up, and although Grand Jurors in general had done their work with fairness, he recognised that the time had passed when they could have such a body as that, not elected by anybody, but nominated by the Sheriff. He did not look forward with any grave apprehension to the formation of these County Council Boards in Ireland, and he believed that this would prove to be one of the best Measures Parliament had ever passed with regard to Ireland. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. VESEY KNOX (Londonderry) was anxious to hear what the Government proposed to do with the money which was due this year to Ireland. He would not be particular about the form, so long as Ireland got the money, but he hoped the Government would consider the suggestions made by the right hon. Member for Dublin University and the hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for Waterford. Whether the Government would be able to put forward their Local Government Bill this year or not, he hoped that they would consult Irish opinion during the Recess upon many important questions of machinery and procedure, as, for instance, the organisation of a better system in connection with local loans in Ireland. If the Government would spend the Recess in ascertaining the opinions of all sections of Irishmen on these questions, it would save much valuable time when they brought this Bill before the House. The landlords of Ireland, when placed in positions of trust to represent the people, had shown themselves faithful custodians of the money and interests of the ratepayers, and he ventured to think that in many of these administrative and economic matters the Government would not do wrong in taking the opinion of the Irish people, including the landlords, before finally introducing legislation. This slightly deferred financial boon which it was proposed to give to Ireland was not a small one. So far as the tenant directly was concerned, it meant half the cess, and half the cess was more than equivalent to a reduction of 1s. in the pound of his rent. It was a reduction to be gained by all the tenants without exception, and without legal costs or proceedings. Therefore he believed that the Government would find throughout Ireland that their proposals would be received on both sides with the greatest gratification.

SIR JAMES HASLETT (Belfast, N.) suggested that the Government might, by a Technical Instruction Bill, do much to assist the large industrial centres of Ireland. Notwithstanding the adverse criticism that had been passed upon the Agriculture and Industries Bill of the Chief Secretary, the general opinion of Ireland, he believed, was in favour of it. If it were possible to secure, even tentatively, until the other Boards and machinery could be set up, the money granted to Ireland, he thought it most desirable that the Government should not postpone everything until next year, but should do as much as possible in the interval. As specially representing one of the large constituencies of Ireland, he asked the Chief Secretary to consider whether he could not grant some remedial measure in connection with technical instruction, and especially in the erection of buildings. In the large centres they were confined to a rate of a penny in the pound, and that penny was not enough to pay the interest on the buildings and to equip the schools. ["Hear, hear!"] But if the Government would give some assistance for the buildings, then the rate and the voluntary subscriptions would be sufficient to carry on this most valuable means of improving the condition of the people. He did not think that the First Lord of the Treasury, who had Scotch blood in his veins, would fall into the trap of launching his Bill before the right time. He thought that the reception of the Government's proposals augured well for the future relations of the three countries.

MR. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.) said that if the right hon. Gentleman were not yet convinced of the justice of the Irish claim, it was because he had not examined it sufficiently. Every reason which applied to England applied still more strongly to Ireland. He warned the right hon. Gentleman that "the antiquated system of local government" in Ireland would have to be swept away, not only in the counties, but at the centre. The control to be exercised at Dublin over the free popular bodies must be inspired more completely by Irish opinion if the bodies were to work well. He could not join other hon. Members in urging the Government to proceed with the Board of Agriculture Bill and the small Measures which they had conceived before they made up their minds to enter upon a policy of trusting the people. They should wait for the opinion of the people before setting up a Board of Agriculture in Ireland. He congratulated the right hon. Gentleman on having grasped with boldness an excellent principle, and the right hon. Gentleman would have his best wishes in carrying his great programme to a successful issue.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY, who was received with cheers: In a very few words I can deal with the questions which have been asked me. With regard to the money which is already allocated to Ireland, Ireland will not lose it. There is a Bill hanging up that money which still stands.

MR. DILLON: Do you propose to apply it this Session?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: No; it will not be applied this Session. As to the claim of the hon. Member that the money, which would have gone to Ireland if the Bill had been passed this Session, should still go to Ireland, I am afraid that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would not look with favour on a suggestion of that character. [The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER made some remark, and The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY turned to catch the interruption, amid general laughter and cries of "He does consent!"] I did not catch what my right hon. Friend said, but I see no sign of dissent on his part from the opinion which I have expressed. [Laughter.] There is one statement which I must make, in order that there may be no misconception, as to the nature of the relief of rating which is contemplated in the Measure, the outlines of which I have sketched to the House. We propose that the English analogy shall be followed in Ireland, and the rates dealt with will not be upon buildings, but upon agricultural land alone. [Mr. LOUGH: "Not on agricultural buildings?"] No; agricultural buildings are excluded from the English Bill; and there will be no difficulty in framing the Irish Bill to carry out all the objects which I have mentioned, and yet to confine the relief to agricultural land. Incidentally I may mention that the comparative value of Irish agricultural buildings is very much smaller than that of English agricultural buildings. ["Hear, hear!"] The right hon. Member for London University asked me whether the grant was to be a fixed grant. Yes, Sir, it is. That will save the Exchequer if the rates are to rise; and if the anticipations of the hon. and learned Member for Louth are fulfilled, and the result of this new administration is to produce economy, of course, the whole of the gain will go to the Irish occupier; and, in that event, the Exchequer will be paying more than half the rates, instead of the half which it will pay in the first instance. ["Hear, hear!"] I have further been asked what is to be the fate of the Agriculture and Industries Bill, and other Measures proposed by the Chief Secretary. I cannot help feeling a certain amount of surprise at the sudden affection which has been displayed for my right hon. Friend's proposals at the moment they have to be abandoned. [Laughter.] We never know how happy our lot is until it is changed; and we never value our gifts until we lose them. [Cheers and laughter.] I was a patient auditor of the Debate on the introduction of the Agriculture and Industries Bill, and I never could have conjectured that there was such enthusiasm pervading all ranks and sections of the House in favour of the Bill. [Laughter.] We still think that it is a Measure which would be very beneficial to Ireland; but now the funds for that Bill are to be allocated differently, and I can give no pledge as to the reintroduction of the scheme. The right hon. Gentleman opposite drew a rosy picture of the progress of Irish legislation next Session, if only it were given to an expectant country in the month of July this year. I do not know whether he is anxious to find a text for his autumn campaign, or whether he thinks a holiday is more agreeably spent in reading the clauses of a Local Government Bill than in—[cries of "Golf!"]—yes, than in playing golf. [Laughter.] But I can hold out no hopes that more material will be given for discussing the Irish policy of the Government than the ample fund of information which I have supplied this afternoon. The hon. Member for Londonderry expressed the hope that in the details of the Measure, especially those parts which were wholly uncontroversial, the Government would do their best to collect Irish opinion and to follow it. I can assure hon. Gentlemen on both sides that my right hon. Friend and myself will be delighted in the preparation of the Bill to receive any suggestions, from whatever quarter, which will tend to the perfection of the Measure. I think that covers the whole ground of the short and interesting Debate which we have had, and it only remains for me to thank hon. Gentlemen on both sides of the House who have in so sympathetic a spirit received proposals which we have honestly put forward as being in our judgment for the interest of every class in Ireland. [Cheers.]

MR. CARSON asked leave to withdraw his Motion.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

SUPPLY.

[NINTH ALLOTTED DAY.]

Considered in Committee.

[The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, in the Chair.]

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES, 1897-8.

CLASS II.

1. £114,389, to complete the sum for Local Government Board, Ireland.

MR. T. M. HEALY said that he regretted to hear of the impending retirement of Mr. Cotton, one of the inspectors of the Board, under the "65 Rule." Mr. Cotton was a most faithful, zealous, and experienced public servant; he was the author of several works on local government and engineering questions; and it would be a great misfortune to lose his services under the "65 Rule." He hoped that the Treasury would arrange for an extension of Mr. Cotton's period of service.

CAPTAIN DONELAN (Cork, E.) desired again to direct the attention of the Chief Secretary to a matter which was of very considerable interest to a large number of ratepayers in Ireland, especially the ratepayers in the south of Ireland, namely, the unequal and inequitable manner in which the Exchequer grant in aid for the erection of labourers' cottages was allocated, by limiting its application to schemes carried out subsequent to 1891. He asked the Chief Secretary to reconsider his unfortunate decision, announced last Monday, that he would take no steps to remedy the injustice, for he ventured to say that in the annals of English administration in Ireland it would be difficult to discover a more palpable case of injustice than arose from the present arrangement. One would imagine that the application of the grant had been deliberately designed with a view to punishing those unions which had promptly taken advantage of the Labourers' Dwellings Act for the purpose of building cottages. In the province of Munster, which had set such an excellent example in this respect, no less than 60,192 cottages were built previous to the year 1891, or nearly twice as many as in all the rest of Ireland, and yet the majority of the Unions in the province would receive no relief whatever, because they had put the Labourers' Act into operation long prior to 1891. Two unions in his own constituency, Middleton and Youghal, were amongst the first to take advantage of the Act for the purpose of providing decent cottages for the labourers; and between the years 1883 and 1897, 206 cottages were built in Youghal at a cost of £26,000, and 198 in Middleton at a cost of £25,000. And yet because those unions carried out their schemes before 1891 they would not receive an allowance of one penny from this Exchequer grant, while those unions which in those years left the labourers in hovels unfit for human habitation were to be handsomely rewarded by receiving substantial aid from the grant. He felt confident that the mere statement of these plain, unvarnished, and undeniable facts could not but convince the Chief Secretary of the absolute necessity for taking some steps to remedy this very serious grievance by making the Act retrospective.

*MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.) said he desired to support very strongly the appeal of his hon. and gallant Friend. He found from the Returns of the Local Government Board that in the whole of the north-east of Ulster there was not one single labourer's cottage erected, while in the south and south-western districts very large numbers of cottages had been erected. From Clones to Larne and from Omagh to Newry not a single cottage had been erected, while in the union of Tipperary 435 had been erected; in Cork, 348; in Limerick, 461; in Waterford, 435; in Kanturk, 336; in Cashel, 310; In Trim, 300; in Callan, 352; and in Navan, 305. It would be a great injustice, indeed, if the unions which had put the Labourers' Act into operation early should be deprived of the advantage of the grant-in-aid, and he appealed to the Chief Secretary to supply some retrospective provisions which would extend the relief to those unions that had erected cottages prior to 1891. He desired to discuss the general policy of the Local Government Board in Ireland. The announcement made that evening by the First Lord of the Treasury made it to some extent difficult for the Irish Members to discuss the matter at any great length, because they were promised changes in the system of Irish local government which would go a long way to remedy many of the things of which they had long complained. At present, Ireland was governed by three or four gentlemen who sat in the Custom House, Dublin, in different apartments, and who rarely, if ever, consulted the right hon. Gentleman who in virtue of his position as Chief Secretary was President of the Local Government Board. He had had occasion to approach the right hon. Gentleman on matters of Local Government Board administration; and he was astonished at the ignorance of the right hon. Gentleman in respect to things which were probably done in his name. The right hon. Gentleman had no idea of the very serious orders, many of them sealed orders, issued by his subordinates in Dublin, if they were his subordinates, very vitally affecting many sacred interests in different parts of the country. Last week he had to complain to him of the compulsory closing of the Ardagh (Co. Longford) Cemetery against the wishes of the inhabitants, and of the Longford Board of Guardians; yet, when he came to question him about it, the right hon. Gentleman knew nothing of the matter. He did not blame the right hon. Gentleman. He thought it was impossible for him to fulfil the many duties which were cast upon him in his diverse capacities in that House, and accordingly he did not blame him in the matter. He was there as the Chief Secretary for Ireland, and also as the President of the Local Government Board, and he did not seem to be consulted by the other Members of that Board with regard to the onerous duties which he was supposed to perform in connection with it. He hoped one result of the promise which had been made to them that evening would be that the present centralised system of management would be radically altered, and that something in the nature of popular control in connection with the central management would be inaugurated. He hoped that instead of half-pay colonels, or retired officers and navy captains, men would be appointed in whose interest in regard to the Poor Law the public had some confidence. He complained of the class of inspectors who were appointed under the system of the Local Government Board. Men more eminently unsuited to the discharge of the duties they were supposed to perform it would be almost impossible to find, and sometimes they treated the guardians with whom they were brought in contact with very little courtesy. He did not wish to pillory anybody, but his idea was that these gentlemen were simply wage earners, and did not care a straw about the grave duties they were called on to perform. He took the instance of the union of Belmullet, the people of which were recently brought face to face with starvation. The Local Government Board were wired to, written to, and memorialised on ever so many occasions to do something to relieve the distress, but it would scarcely be believed that the only sympathy they received from the central authority was that an inspector was sent down, who rode into the district on a bicycle one morning and left the next day. He took no pains to ascertain the actual condition of the people or to make a thorough inspection of their grievances, and made a report which was entirely opposed to the state of facts that existed in the locality. When the right hon. Gentleman was called upon to make a statement on the subject he said that the report was a confidential document. He thought it was a public scandal that in a matter of vital importance, where the lives of thousands of people were at stake, the right hon. Gentleman was not in a position to have the Inquiry which was called for openly and above board, and had to rely upon such a report as could be got in this haphazard way. If the inspector in that case had been a man who sympathised with the people there would have been no necessity for the Chief Secretary to have been ashamed of publishing the Report, and relief might have been brought where it was most sadly needed. He could mention other cases in which trouble had arisen, owing to the friction which had taken place from time to time between the guardians and the arrogant inspectors of the Local Government Board. He hoped in the promised reform some effort would be made to appoint these officers, not by political or Party favouritism, but according to their qualifications as proved by examination. With reference to the present workhouse system he cited the case of the county of Longford, in which there were three workhouses. These workhouses were built in 1837, the population of the county in 1841 being 126,000. The population to-day, however, was only 52,000, but there were still the same three workhouses, while the taxation had doubled or trebled since 1841. Nobody who had read the statements in the Irish medical Press last year and the year before would say that the condition of the inmates of the workhouses was a happy one. He repudiated the statement that their condition was due to a desire on the part of the guardians to treat the inmates harshly for economical reasons. The average Irish Poor Law Guardian was not disposed to be inhumane, but he was compelled to administer certain rules framed for him by the Local Government Board, and if harm was done it was the system that was at fault. He complained of the system of dietary in the workhouses, which was in most cases entirely unsuited to the unfortunate inmates. For the most part the food consisted of coarse bread and milk and a kind of greasy water called by politeness soup. The average cost of this food was 2s. 6d. to 3s. per head. At the same cost a scale of nourishing food could be substituted which though smaller in quantity, would be more suitable and nutritious. Then the so-called infirmaries in average Irish workhouses were little better than death traps. He had visited them, so did not speak from hearsay. The rooms without light, the hard, coarse kind of plank beds which the paupers had to lie on, and the want of proper ventilation and attendance, constituted a grave scandal. The Chief Secretary might say all this was the fault of the Poor Law Guardians. But when the guardians, from motives of humanity, tried to remedy it, the Local Government Board pounced upon them, disallowed the expense, and made them pay it out of their own pockets. According to the last report of the Irish Local Government Board in 1875, on a valuation of £13,500,000, £975,000 was collected in poor rates, averaging 1s. 5¼d., of which 1s. 1¾d. was spent in relief. In 1885 the valuation had gone up to £13,878,000, and the rates collected to £1,260,000. In 1895 £1,445,000 was collected for poor rate purposes being an increase of nearly £500,000 in twenty years. While between 1875 and 1895 the population of Ireland had decreased by more than a million, the taxation of Ireland for poor law purposes had increased to the extent of £500,000. The Irish Local Government system was undermanned and overworked. Duties had been cast upon it which did not rationally or properly belong to it, and proper machinery had not been provided for the proper discharge of these duties. At the present time, under the existing Poor Law system, they had to look after the relief of the poor, the administration of the Labourers' Acts, the Public Health Act, the Registration of voters (franchise), Registration of births, deaths, and marriages, the Towns Improvement Act, the Housing of Working Classes Act, and many minor matters which required separate attention. He agreed that some things must necessarily be neglected where so many had to be attended to. But some of the matters entrusted to the Poor Law Guardians were of the greatest importance. Nothing could be of greater importance than the public health of the country. The Public Health Act was worked in Ireland principally by dispensary medical officers. He did not complain of them. In many cases they did their work with a desire to benefit the community. But the Act required considerable amendments. There were many cases which could not be brought within its scope, which should be attended to, while hardships were inflicted under it with which their hide-bound system of officialism did not know how to treat. Then the Franchise Act struck at the root of our representative system. It was according to the discharge of the duties under the Act that election to this House took place, and elections to Boards of Guardians and Town Commissioners. How were the ordinary duties peformed under the Act? He asserted on his responsibility as a Member of Parliament, that to his certain knowledge in two cases out of five no franchise forms were served at all, and if served and collected, so inefficient was the system of registration that in a great many cases men were on the list who had been dead and gone for the last five or six years. The Nationalist Members from Ireland were certainly deprived of some portion of their grievances by the statement made earlier in the evening by the Leader of the House. But the poor law system in Ireland was a very antiquated system. It did not perform effectually by any means the duties entrusted to it by Act of Parliament. The very poor of the community were not properly relieved; whilst by the way in which the system was worked officialism took more than its due share of the money, and great changes must therefore be made before the Local Government Board system in Ireland would commend itself to the Irish people. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. JAMES DALY (Monaghan, S.) drew attention to the action of the Local Government Board in Ireland. He said he considered it was a most out of date and unsympathetic body, and endeavoured in most cases to flout the wishes and desires of the Boards of Guardians throughout the country. For instance, the Board of Guardians of the Dundalk Union wanted to carry out a main drainage scheme. A large sum of money was necessarily required for the scheme, and the Board desired to carry it out as economically as possible. The Hibernian Bank offered to advance the money at 3 per cent., whereas the old bank at which they kept their account wanted 5 per cent. as well as a mortgage on the property of the Union, and also to charge interest on the overdraft. The Board thought they could do nothing better than take the money from the cheapest source and save the ratepayers 2 per cent. thereby. They accordingly informed the Local Government Board that they proposed to take the money from the Hibernian Bank and to transfer their account to that bank; but the Local Government Board said "No!" The result was that they could not borrow from the cheapest source. It was surprising to think that such a thing could occur in any country. Another matter of which he wished to complain was the unwillingness of the Local Government Board to allow pauper children to be nursed outside. His point was that by placing the children out to nurse with families, they gained a good idea of industry, and it would be found that in most cases in which servants, whereas the children who were turned to the workhouse. They became part and parcel as it were of the family with which they lived, and became good servants, whereas the children who were retained in the workhouses seldom or never came to any good, and were only fit for the gaol or some other such place. He would therefore urge the Chief Secretary to consider seriously whether the Boards of Guardians ought not to have the power to send children out to nurse. In the end it would be found that it was cheaper to do so than to keep the children in the workhouses. ["Hear, hear!"] He had a further complaint to make on the subject in the appointment of Local Government Board inspectors. The gentlemen who were now appointed knew nothing of the work they had to perform, and nearly always had to seek instruction in their duties from some workhouse officials. There was at the present time a competition amongst the inspectors as to who could send in the longest report, and the Boards of Guardians were invariably put to great trouble and pressure in connection with their reports. He would suggest to the Chief Secretary that if possible there should be promotion from amongst the ranks of Union officials. If that were done the work of the Unions would be carried out much better than it was under the present system of appointing half-pay officers, or men who, owing to political influence, were put in the position of Local Government Board inspectors. ["Hear, hear!"] The next point he wished to call attention to was the question of the erection of labourers' cottages. He came from Ulster, and, so far as this question was concerned, he was sorry to belong to that part of Ireland. In all the counties of Ulster only eight or nine cottages had been built under the Act, while in Munster as many as 6,000 had been erected, and in Connaught 91. In Ulster the unfortunate labourers lived in hovels, in a state of dirt and misery. In answer to a question of his, the right hon. Gentleman said that there remained in the Treasury a sum of almost £12,000 that had not been used for the erection of cottages, and the greater portion of that sum should have been used in Ulster if the Boards of Guardians had done their duty. He would like to know why the Local Government Board did not compel the Boards of Guardians to do their duty in this respect? The right hon. Gentleman was responsible in that House for this state of things, and he hoped he would see that the Boards of Guardians in Ulster erected cottages when application was made to them. ["Hear, hear!"] If the right hon. Gentleman went through Ireland he could not fail to notice the vast difference between the condition of labourers who lived in cottages erected under the Act and those who did not. The difference that was to be noticed in the children of these two classes of people was extraordinary. The representatives of the tenant farmers in Ireland had been fighting in that House to obtain for them the possession of their own holdings, and while they did that it was also their duty to try and get for the labourers their own houses, as it enabled them to dispose of their labour to the best advantage. ["Hear, hear!"] There was another matter which very much affected the ratepayers of Ireland, and that was with regard to the deportation of paupers. He had for a long time past been questioning the right hon. Gentleman on this subject, but, he was sorry to say, with very little result. He could not help giving the Government credit for the reply—which he attributed to the hon. Member for South Tyrone—with regard to deportation. They were perfectly satisfied with that reply, which was that the Local Government Board would invite a conference on the subject with the Scotch and English Votes, so that they might arrange some way of preventing the deportation of Irish paupers. It was then found out, after long looking for, that it was owing to the Scotch Office, which declined to interfere in the matter. Anyone who heard the answer from the Scotch Office would think that it was the Concert of Europe that was proposed, instead of a conference of the three Local Government Boards. It was impossible that this matter could go on. It was so great a grievance in 1843 that Englishmen and Scotchmen protested against there being one law for them and another law for Irishmen. Lord Londonderry, of the time, and no one would doubt his politics, opposed heart and soul that paupers who had spent the best of their days in England and Scotland, should be deported back to Ireland to districts which had never profited by a farthing from them. But it was the same thing now with regard to financial grievances—the Irish Members were voted down. In 1843 a remarkable thing happened. It was the Liberals who passed the law which allowed Irish paupers to be sent back to Ireland, and in 1897 it was a Tory Government which would not give the relief due to Ireland on the financial relations question. Whether the Government was Liberal or Tory, it was prepared to defraud Ireland. He hoped they were going to have a brighter future for Ireland, and that after the speech of the First Lord of the Treasury he hoped this would be the last time that Irishmen would have to complain of a grievance which had been going on for 45 years. They were 45 years behind England and Scotland. Surely, as they paid an equal share of the taxes for Imperial purposes, they ought to have an equal share in the grants. If they went to a Division, he should, if necessary, move the reduction of the Vote by £10,000. This was no Party question. Besides affecting English ratepayers, it was an insult and a stigma on Ireland. He would mention another matter on this question. If a pauper removed from one part of Ireland to another, not a farthing of money could the Guardians spend to remove him back to his own union. If an Englishman or Scotchman became chargeable on any union in Ireland, not one penny of the ratepayers' money could be used to send him back; but from Great Britain the rates could be used to send a man back to Ireland. Now this was an injustice.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said the hon. Member could not discuss English and Scotch matters on this Vote. That was not the proper time to discuss this grievance.

MR. DALY said the Local Government Board had taken action in this matter, and he thought there was no other occasion when this matter could be brought forward.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB (Great Yarmouth) called attention to the subject of dispensary doctors, who were not now of a character on which the remote districts could be congratulated. He did not insinuate that the right hon. Gentleman or his Department were in any way responsible for the present state of things, because everybody knew that the appointments of dispensary doctors were vested in the Dispensary Committees of Boards of Guardians. Often local and family prejudices prevailed and good men had little chance of appointment. He hoped that in any scheme of local government for Ireland the question of the appointment of dispensary doctors would not be overlooked, and that it would be placed in the hands of the County Councils or some larger bodies than the present Dispensary Committees of Boards of Guardians. He agreed with the hon. Gentleman who had just spoken that the tramp question was as difficult a one in Ireland as in England. He could not help thinking, however, that some, at least, of the difficulty would disappear in Ireland if the Guardians enforced the rules more stringently.

MR. P. J. POWER (Waterford, E.) thought it would be found that in the appointment of dispensary doctors in Ireland much the same condition of things prevailed as in England. In opening the discussion his hon. and gallant Friend drew attention to the way in which the money allocated to Irish purposes was given to the different Boards of Guardians. The reply the Chief Secretary gave the other day on this point did not commend itself to any man of justice. The Labourers' Cottages Act was passed in the early eighties, and many Boards of Guardians undertook to erect cottages under the Act. A grant was now being given to Boards of Guardians according to the number of cottages being erected. No heed, however, was paid to the cottages erected prior to 1891. That was manifestly unfair, indeed it amounted to the putting of a premium upon Boards doing little or nothing. The machinery of the Act was complicated and cumbersome, and it was only just that those Boards who undertook to put it in operation should have some benefit from their enterprise and that the ratepayers of the localities should not be fined on account of the Act being administered. As to the working of the Act he noticed from the Estimates that there were a certain number of inspectors employed by the Local Government Board, and also a certain number of engineering inspectors. When money was advanced on loan to the Boards of Guardians, the Local Government Board insisted that their inspectors should visit the cottages and see that the money had been fairly laid out. At present there were only two engineering inspectors, and the number of cottages erected, particularly in Munster and Leinster, was very great, with the result that the different Boards of Guardians were asking month after month that inspectors should be sent down to see the cottages, but were being informed by the Local Government Board that they had not sufficient staff. He was not anxious to increase the staff of the Board, but means should be found by which the cottages erected could be officially inspected. There was another point connected with labourers' cottages which he desired to mention. Several Boards of Guardians, especially in Munster, had been anxious to be empowered to give small prizes with a view to encouraging labourers to keep their cottages and garden plots in order. For some reason or other the Local Government Board had always set their faces against the idea. He did not mean to say that the cottages were badly kept now, but the offering of such prizes would, he was sure, do good. In Connaught many of the ratepayers were as poor as the labourers, and, therefore, he thought the Treasury might do something to lessen the rate of interest on the money lent. In connection with the Vote there was another matter he wished to call attention to. One of the duties of the Poor Law Commissioners was to prepare the Parliamentary and other registers. The present system of preparing the Parliamentary register in counties was absurd. In towns and cities the register was prepared by sheets, and alphabetically by sheets the system worked well. He had already brought in a Bill providing for the preparation of the Parliamentary register by townlands.

No question of Party was involved, but the change proposed would relieve the clerks of unions of a great deal of trouble, simplify the preparation of the register, and make the register more exact. The hon. Member for South Leitrim had tried his best to get the Bill through, but it was always blocked, and he believed that the Attorney General for Ireland was opposed to the Bill. What the right hon. Gentleman's reasons were for opposing it he did not know, and he trusted they would be stated.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: The hon. Gentleman is now discussing an alleged grievance that could only be remedied by legislation, and, as I have repeatedly reminded the Committee, subjects for legislation cannot be discussed in Supply.

Mr. P. J. POWER said that there was no more dismal reading than the statistics published by the Local Government Board, because they showed that the population of Ireland was decreasing, while taxation was increasing. In England there was, on the contrary, an increasing population and decreasing taxation. Allusion had been made to the question of the boarding out of children. He had some experience in Poor Law administration, having been chairman of a large Board of Guardians for some 15 years, and he could corroborate what had been said by the hon. Member on that subject. The system prevailed to a large extent in his union, and he could hardly call to mind a single case of a child's returning to the union after it had been sent out to nurse. Of course, supervision was necessary, and the people to whom children were sent must be respectable. He believed that in 99 cases out of 100 the child was regarded as a member of the family to which it was sent, and in many cases it was given the family name. The system had worked well in Waterford Union, and he hoped to see it extended. The administration of the Poor Law in Ireland compared favourably in many respects with its administration in this country. He had often heard it said that Nationalist and Catholic Board of Guardians in Ireland behaved with intolerance towards the Protestant minority, but he did not believe that the allegation could be substantiated. In the Waterford Union there were only some 12 non-Catholic inmates. They had a ward and matron to themselves, and a respectable salary was paid to a clergyman of the Church of England who administered to their spiritual wants. A room had been specially prepared at a cost of about £100 for the Protestant services. An example of that kind might, he thought, be imitated with advantage in English unions in which there were Catholics. In conclusion, he asked the Chief Secretary to do what he could to facilitate the working of the Labourers' Act, and urged that it was desirable to appoint more inspectors to superintend the erection of cottages and to see that the money devoted to the purpose was properly expended.

Mr. JASPER TULLY (Leitrim, S.) said that they had all welcomed the announcement made that day by the First Lord of the Treasury, to the effect that a new system of local government was to be established in Ireland. The antiquated machinery, as it had been called, that now existed had been the means of debasing public life in parts of Ireland. In consequence of the system of proxy voting, and of ex-officio members, the local boards in Ireland were not under the control of the majority of the people in a district. They were in the hands of cliques, and were ruled by the officials of the Departments. He knew some Boards in which the Clerk to the Union was paramount. In these Boards if any independent member tried to remedy abuses the Clerk managed to get rid of him by playing upon the prejudices and partisan proclivities of the landlords and others. That was possible, because under the proxy system one landlord had more than 30 votes, while the ordinary ratepayer had only one. They wanted a system through which the fresh air of public opinion could blow. The hon. Member for Yarmouth seemed to think that there ought to be further restraints upon public control, and that in remote districts the people, through the Dispensary Committees, ought not to be allowed to select their own medical officers; but when matters had been taken out of the hands of the people's representatives and transferred to the Local Government Board, the change had always been for the worse. The administration of the Franchise Acts in Ireland illustrated his objection to the retrogade proposals of the hon. Member for Yarmouth. By these Acts it was provided that once every year forms should be issued to every ratepayer, so that a return might be supplied of everyone entitled to be put upon the register. The officials were formerly paid according to the number of notices they issued and the number of names appearing upon the lists. In places where the people were all of the same way of thinking politically, there was really no necessity for sending out these forms, and the Guardians did not insist that the notices should be served. The Local Government Board, however, influenced by the representations of their officials, who wanted to make more money and who thought it a hardship that they should have to go to the Guardians for payment under the Franchise Acts, and that the Guardians should be entitled to refuse payment when no work had been done, instituted a new system, under which these officials were paid very highly. What was the result? In districts in Westmeath, Longford, Roscommon, and Sligo the officials, knowing that their salaries were fixed, issued no new notices at all, and allowed the registers to remain neglected. The Guardians and ratepayers were, therefore, now paying for work that was not done. He urged upon the Chief Secretary to inquire into this matter, in the interests of the ratepayers of Ireland and of the British Treasury. There was another matter to which he wished to call attention. The gentlemen who were appointed as Poor Law Inspectors varied their policy under different Governments. When a Liberal Government was in power they were as mild as sucking doves, but when a Tory Government was in office they acted like autocratic pro-Consuls determined to wipe out from existence Boards of Guardians that were not very civil and humble. The Athlone Union, for example, was dissolved because the Nationalist chairman of the Board was not sufficiently respectful to the Poor Law Inspector, but in the adjacent Union of Mullingar the Inspector was treated deferentially, and the consequence was that things were done in that union which would not be permitted elsewhere. He had put a Question to the Chief Secretary that day with regard to affairs in that Union, and he was sure the right hon. Gentleman would admit that his reply was a practical admission of the grave charges he embodied in that Question, and demanded some sort of inquiry or action on his part. Take the medicine contract. The Clerk of the Union issued two classes of advertisements, one in the local papers and another in the Dublin papers. In the advertisement published in the local papers it was made a condition that the firms tendering should send in a letter saying they were tendering. There was no such absurd condition mentioned in the Dublin papers, and, consequently, when the tenders from Dublin or Cork, or Sligo came in, the clerk held that they were informal because they had not complied with this condition, and they were never opened. The contract was given to the local contractor, in whose employment was the brother of the Clerk of the Union. The attention of the Local Government Board Inspector was called to the matter, and a sworn Inquiry was held. It was then found that, while the local contractor had charged £71 1s. for some of the items, the price given by Messrs. Leslie in their tender for the same items was only £40 10s. 11d. The result was that practically £300 or £400 was simply given away to the local contractor. What else happened? "Extras" had to be charged according to the ordinary Dublin wholesale houses' list. There was no wholesale list in this case, and the local contractor made up a wholesale list of his own and charged accordingly; and this clerk passed it. The Local Government Board, in their Report, found that the local contractor had been paid large sums for "extras" which he was not entitled to and they decided that he was unfit to have the contract. Advertisements were again issued last year, and again Dublin, Cork, and Sligo houses tendered, as well as this local contractor, and again, through the friends of this clerk, the contract was voted to the same person, in spite of the finding of the Local Government Board that he was unfit to hold a contract in that Union. In their Report last year the Local Government Board said that—

> "After a careful consideration of all the facts of the case, and having regard to the gross system of overcharging practised, they have come to the conclusion that the local contractor should not be entrusted with the supply of the medicines, and the Board must accordingly request that the Guardians will forthwith give notice to cancel the contract."

In face of these facts the right hon. Gentleman said the Local Government Board had no power to dissolve the contract.

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: Certainly not.

Mr. TULLY said that he understood it so. Then with regard to the administration of outdoor relief in the same Union. An independent Committee, which inquired into the matter, found that—

"about £1,000 a year is distributed by the relieving officer in the electoral division of Mullingar, which has put 1s. 8d. in the pound on that division, and that a considerable amount of this outdoor relief is spent in the public houses."

The Union was paying 2s. a head for outdoor relief, whereas in Belfast it was done at 1⅞d. per head, and in North Dublin at 4½d. per head. In the adjoining Union of Athlone, with almost the same population as Mullingar, the outdoor relief was only 8½d. per head of the population. The list of those who received outdoor relief showed that in many cases it was given to persons who had absolutely no claim to it. This Committee found that the list of persons who received relief should be printed quarterly and distributed among the ratepayers and posted all over the districts, but that this had not been done for a considerable time past. This was through the default of the Clerk of the Union. He thought these things were sufficient cause for personal inquiry by the Chief Secretary, for he was sure he would not tolerate any such scandal in any Union. Then with regard to the administration of the Sanitary Acts in Ireland, he thought that in any future legislation greater power should be given to the local authorities which might be set up under the machinery promised by the First Lord of the Treasury. At present the Sanitary Acts in very large parts of Ireland were practically a dead letter, owing to the limited powers of the magistrates and the guardians. He welcomed the announcement of the Leader of the House that the antiquated machinery which had produced some of the evils he had put before the House was about to be abolished, and that they were going to get something in the shape of local government as it existed in England and Scotland, which would let a little fresh air and public opinion into the affairs of Ireland.

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR said that the discussion had travelled over a large and varying area, and he would do his best to reply to the points raised. Complaint had been made that the Exchequer contribution applied retrospectively only to the year 1891. The law as it stood did not allow the application of this money to the case of cottages sanctioned before 1891, and this year had been chosen for the application of the money because it was the first year when the money was granted by Parliament as being available. He was aware that almost all the schemes carried out by the guardians in the south of Ireland had been carried out prior to 1891. But the purpose of Parliament was to encourage the building of cottages, and if the application of the money had been made retrospective to all the cottages built since the Labourers' Acts began it was clear that there would have been a far less sum of money available to encourage building cottages in other parts of Ireland. Next, complaint had been made of the administration of the Local Government Board, and particularly that the Local Government Board acted in practical independence of the Parliamentary authority of the Chief Secretary. No doubt there were a considerable number of instances in which the Local Government Board considered that it was entitled to act without consulting the Chief Secretary. It must be obvious that if the Chief Secretary was to be consulted by the Local Government Board on every question which arose, however minute and controversial, it would be a very great waste of time of the Chief Secretary. If cases arose where the Local Government Board appeared to have acted without due discretion, and those cases were brought to the attention of the Chief Secretary, they would be immediately inquired into. He did not think that it could be shown that there were many cases, even any, in which the Local Government Board had acted on its own responsibility without consulting the Chief Secretary in a matter of controversial character. As to the Armagh cemetery, he believed that the actual issue of the Order was suspended for a time, but the decision was come to in the time of his predecessor. The vague accusations which had been made against the inspectors were difficult to meet, but he could not say that he had many, or even any, complaints before the present as to the scant courtesy shown by the inspectors towards the Boards of Guardians. Nor was it correct to say that the inspectors did not take interest in their work. The Belmullet Union and the case of the inspector had been referred to, but the Report which he had received from Mr. Robinson could not be laid on the Table of the House because it was a confidential document. As to the workhouse system, he would be the last to say that he was satisfied with that system in Ireland. He had brought in a Bill the object of which was to make a thorough reform of that system in Ireland possible. It was impossible to pass that Measure this year, but he hoped sooner or later to see an amalgamation of unions which would be likely to form the best foundation for workhouse reform in other directions. The Local Government Board was continually trying to improve its administration, and he could not say that many complaints had come before him to show that the strictures of hon. Members as to dietary, ventilation, and so forth were justified. As to the desirability of adopting the system of boarding-out workhouse children, he thought its extension to Ireland would be of the greatest possible benefit, and he had included it in the Bill introduced by himself this year. ["Hear, hear!"] It was said the Boards of Guardians were overridden by the Local Government Board, and that the inspectors were engaged in rivalry as to who should suggest the most extensive and expensive works. It was absolutely inaccurate to say that there was any desire on the part of the Local Government Board to override the Boards of Guardians, nor could he admit that the inspectors were open to the charge of making recommendations intended to annoy the Boards of Guardians. It was an absolute travesty of facts. He was bound to put on record that he believed the inspectors did their duty, often difficult and delicate, in a most efficient manner. As to the suggestion that the inspectors should be appointed from the same class as the Guardians, he held that it would be unsound in principle to select men for positions of authority from the class they were to control, and he did not think that the Poor Law system of Ireland or the public interest would gain if the inspectors were drawn from a class below in intelligence and education that from which they were drawn at present. He now came to the question of the deportation of paupers. He was sorry if he had given the hon. Member for Monaghan any occasion to complain of any answer he had given him. He trusted he had never been guilty of anything like intentional discourtesy. But it was just possible that he had got tired of answering questions which drove him to say the same thing over and over again, and if he had unintentionally fallen into any apparent want of courtesy he apologised. ["Hear, hear!"] But when the hon. Member said that in this matter of the deportation of paupers Ireland was 45 years behind England and Scotland, and blamed the Government for not bringing Ireland up to a level with England and Scotland, he might remind him of what he said when the question was raised in the Debate on the Address—viz., that, in his (Mr. Balfour's) opinion, it was not a question of bringing Ireland up to a level with England, but rather the other way. It was rather the English, and still more the Scotch, system that cried out for alteration. If he received a universal expression of opinion from hon. Members for Ireland that in this matter of the deportation of paupers the law of Ireland should be changed so as to enable English and Scotch paupers to be deported from Ireland in the same way as Irish paupers were deported from England and Scotland—[cries of "No!"]—he should say that in his judgment they were making a mistake. Still, he would carefully consider such a suggestion. But he was helpless unless he had the co-operation of the Local Government Boards of Scotland and England.

Mr. DALY: Are they all under the same Government—English, Scotch, and Irish?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: No doubt they were under the same Government. But, as hon. Members knew, the law was not actually the same in the three countries, and no Minister for one part of the kingdom could act as if he was perfectly independent of the Ministers for the others. This matter must rest, in the first instance, with the Local Government Boards. Unless the Scotch Local Government Board consented to an alteration of the law such as would satisfy Ireland, he was powerless. But negotiations were going on, and he did not despair of their being successful. But it was not the fault of the Irish Local Government Board that the desires of hon. Members opposite were not given more speedy effect. [An hon. Member: "Nor of the English?"] Nor of the English. ["Hear, hear!"] A complaint had been made of the deterioration of the dispensary doctors. The alleged deterioration had been denied by the hon. Member for East Waterford. He was not able of his own knowledge to offer any opinion on the matter, but hon. Members might be assured that it should have his consideration. It was impossible, however, to suggest that the appointment of the dispensary doctors should be taken out of the hands of the properly constituted authority. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member for East Waterford made a suggestion on which he should like to say one word. He said that he thought it desirable that prizes should be offered by Boards of Guardians for the best kept labourers' cottages. Well, it might be a very good thing if prizes were offered for the best kept labourers' cottages. But it did not seem to him that that was an expenditure which should come out of the rates. It should be rather a matter for local effort. He thought it would be a very good thing indeed if private subscriptions were raised for such a purpose, as was done in many parts of England and Scotland, for it tended to give the labourers an interest in their cottages, and undoubtedly had the effect of raising their morale generally. ["Hear, hear!"] Coming to the speech of the hon. Member for South Leitrim, who made a series of charges against the Local Government Board, he thought it could hardly be expected that he should deal with them in detail. It was absolutely necessary to have warning beforehand of such matters as he had raised.

Mr. TULLY: I asked the right hon. Gentleman several questions.

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: Yes; and I answered those questions. It appeared to him most extraordinary that the hon. Member should have raised the question of the suspension of the Board of Guardians for Athlone. That matter was discussed amply when the Vote was before the House last year. The hon. Member ventured to say that the Athlone Board was wiped out because it would not submit to the will of the inspector. He did not know whether the hon. Member was present when that matter was discussed last year. Had he been present, he did not think he would have made the charge he had now made. The details had to a certain extent escaped his memory; but he did remember this, that the Board of Guardians at Athlone was removed because of their persistent refusal to appoint trained nurses, a refusal which produced disastrous results. He made a most ample and explicit statement of the action of the Local Government Board in connection with this matter last year, and after that explanation he did not think a single Member on either side of the House ventured to rise in support of the Athlone Board of Guardians, and the Motion on the subject was withdrawn. He did not wish to use strong language, but he certainly thought that a great many of the charges which were made against the officials in Ireland, whether of the Local Government Board or other departments, should not be brought forward without more careful inquiry into the facts. Those gentlemen were not present to defend themselves; their case had to be left in his hands. It did not assist officials to discharge the onerous duties which were thrown upon them to know that in this House there were so many Members who came forward and made charges against them which, the moment they were investigated, hopelessly broke down.

*Mr. Serjeant HEMPHILL (Tyrone, N.) expressed disappointment that the Chief Secretary had held out no hope of any immediate remedy on the question of deportation. It was a crying grievance, and it was not sufficient to say that because one Department in the same Government threw some difficulty in the way of other Departments, there could be no legislation. The Government, if they came to the conclusion that the law required reform, could compel the Scottish Local Government Board to acquiesce in the general views of the Administration.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Why did not you do it when you were in office?

*MR. SERJEANT HEMPHILL: Why? He believed there was a Bill actually prepared, but owing to that unfortunate vote about cordite—[laughter]—there was not an opportunity of submitting that Bill to the House. But unquestionably it was a crying grievance and ought to be promptly remedied. The question of deportation stood by itself and was not involved in the general question of Poor Law administration. A repeal of certain sections of some Acts of Parliament would obviate the difficulty and deprive the guardians of Glasgow or any other large town in Scotland or England of the power of deporting Irish paupers simply because Ireland happened to be the place of their birth.

MR. DAVID SHEEHY (Galway, S.) condemned the reply of the Chief Secretary as very unsatisfactory. At present, some unions were suffering for the diligence with which they had put in force an Act passed by this House. Was that a way to encourage them to diligence? The unions that put the Act in force for the first seven or eight years were to be excluded for that period from all the advantages offered by the Act, and that was an injustice. The question of the deportation of Irish paupers from English and Scotch workhouses was also a crying grievance, and yet, although the grievance was brought forward year after year, nothing was done to redress it.

MR. M. J. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.) referred to the large number of labourers cottages which had been built by the guardians in the various unions of Munster, and said he did not think the Chief Secretary had gone sufficiently far in his promise to look into the matter, if he did not take into account the cottages erected prior to 1891, and give some remuneration to the unions which had provided them. In this connection he read a petition from the Trade Union, addressed to the Chief Secretary, stating that under the Labourers' (Ireland) Acts, 1883 and 1885, petitioners erected 156 labourers' cottages, at an expenditure of £17,000, being one of the first unions to avail of the Acts, the district having been greatly benefited by the erection of the cottages. The ratepayers of the district had, at the same time, undertaken large liabilities and heavy yearly payments which exceptionally increased the rates on the already over-burdened ratepayers:

"A great deal of public discontent has been caused throughout the entire Union by the announcement that other unions, in which some cottages have been built under the Labourers' Acts, subsequent to the year 1891, would now receive substantial relief by way of contribution from the Exchequer grant of £40,000 a year, towards the erection of labourers' cottages, while this union, where cottages had been more largely built in the preceding years, as well as the other unions—the large majority—that voluntarily availed of the original Acts before the year 1891, would get no relief whatever from this or any other source. Your petitioners believe that the mere statement of this fact, without any enlargement on the inequality of the distribution, or the hardship of the case, will sufficiently justify this memorial. Your petitioners therefore submit that they are justly entitled to relief in the proportion of their expenditure equally with any other union in Ireland, and claim that further legislation, if it be necessary, should be introduced to give effect to their just claims."

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: From that statement it appears that further legislation would be necessary, and, that being so, the matter cannot be discussed in Committee of Supply.

MR. FLAVIN: They do not say that further legislation is necessary, but that if it be necessary. It is a question of opinion.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: It is obvious that further legislation would be necessary.

MR. FLAVIN said he would merely remark on this head that many other unions had adopted similar petitions. The Chief Secretary had stated that England, Ireland and Scotland were the three branches of the one Government, but on the question of the deportation of paupers he did not for the life of him see why Ireland should be treated on a different basis to England and Scotland. He felt as an Irishman that it was a great injury to his countrymen that they were not allowed to send back to England or Scotland the Scotch or English pauper who was living in Irish workhouses at the expense of the Irish ratepayers, while English and Scotch officials were allowed to send back to Ireland a pauper who happened to be Irish born, so that he became a burden to the Irish workhouse.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: That point has already been raised two or three times, and on every occasion I have called the hon. Member so raising it to order, pointing out that this can only be altered by legislation, and, therefore, cannot be discussed in Committee of Supply.

MR. FLAVIN did not intend to continue the discussion on that point, and he would proceed to a matter which had been brought to the attention of the Chief Secretary by a dozen and a half or two dozen resolutions, namely, the great distress which existed in the Listowel Union. The first resolution adopted by the Listowel Board of Guardians with reference to the distress was passed in the middle of November last. They then saw that, owing to the failure of the crops, distress must inevitably ensue. They summoned a special meeting to consider the matter, and after due consideration of the facts they adjourned the meeting and asked for a complete report from the ex officio as well as from the elected members of the Board, from Catholic as well as Protestant clergymen, from Conservative, Liberal, and Nationalist alike. They furnished their report to the Clerk of the Union, who forwarded a copy to the Chief Secretary for Ireland as President of the Local Government Board. After considering that report, the right hon. Gentleman was asked a question in the House of Commons on the 13th February as to whether, owing to the great distress, some relief works could not be started or assistance given to the Union. In reply, the right hon. Gentleman stated that careful inquiry had been made as to the condition of the poorer classes in the Listowel Union, and the conclusion had been arrived at that it would not be necessary to supplement the resources of the Poor Law by starting relief works. As far as he himself could see, the resources of the Poor Law Board were simply to increase the present rate of taxation, which was already sufficiently heavy, the rate in the Listowel Union, exclusive of a water rate for Listowel town, being 13s. 6d. in the pound. It was true that the inspector of the Local Government Board had reported that there was no practical distress, but this was entirely opposed to the report of all the Guardians, Protestant and Catholic, Unionist and Nationalist. Ex officio Guardians, like the late Mr. George Hewson, like Major Kidgell and Captain Leslie, reported that there was great distress. He challenged the right hon. Gentleman to contradict the statements which he had read. How could the evidence of an official who had spent all his life in Dublin be set against the evidence of all these persons in the locality?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR said that the statements read by the hon. Member consisted principally of expressions of opinion from those who would be benefited by the expenditure of the money.

MR. FLAVIN said that he had a personal knowledge of all these questions, or he would not bring them before the right hon. Gentleman. On the 28th January, the Listowel Board of Guardians sent a resolution to the right hon. Gentleman asking that relief works might be established owing to the great distress. On the 4th February and the 25th February they sent other resolutions, and on the 25th March they sent a final resolution urging that a loan of seed oats was of the greatest necessity.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR said that he did not decline to make a loan, but pointed out that if such a loan was to be made, legislation would be required. He said that he was prepared to consider the necessity of legislation if there was a general desire for it among the Unions of the West of Ireland.

MR. FLAVIN asked what the unfortunate Listowel Union was to do in the meantime? The right hon. Gentleman had done nothing for the district or the county, and the Listowel Board believed that they had a right to have their case heard on its merits. The right hon. Gentleman had not an intimate personal knowledge of the country. When he visited it, he associated with the wealthier class, and however kind and sympathetic he might be, he could not know how the poor people lived.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said that he failed to see how this was relevant to the Vote for the Local Government Board.

MR. FLAVIN said that his contention was that distress existed in the Union, and ought to be met.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said that the only way of meeting it suggested by the hon. Member was by a grant of money, which would require legislation, and could not, therefore, be discussed in Committee of Supply.

MR. FLAVIN said that his argument was that it was absolutely impossible for the local authority to meet this distress, for the rates were now 13s. 6d. in the pound. He hoped that the Chief Secretary would consider the case of those poor men who had seven or eight children to support, and who did not earn as much as 8s. a week all the year round.

[After the usual interval, Mr. GRANT LAWSON took the Chair.]

*MR. J. PINKERTON (Galway) appealed to the Chief Secretary that the Exchequer grant of £40,000 for the erection of cottages under the Labourers' Acts allocated to unions in the north of Ireland, where there was no desire evinced to put the Acts in operation, should be spent in unions in the south and west, where labourers' cottages were being largely built and were much needed. In Ballymoney and Coleraine no applications had been made for cottages. Yet if it were proposed to the guardians of those unions that the money should be spent in the south and west they would strongly oppose it. This was a "dog in the manger" policy. With regard to the conduct of the Poor Law officials in Ireland, he considered that, on the whole, they acted fairly and squarely in transactions between the guardians and the Government. He did not agree with the hon. Member for West Cavan that the lot of the inmates in workhouses had been made harder by the action of the Poor Law Inspectors. In Ballymoney the inspectors recommended that the paupers should have knives and forks, washstands and wardrobes. These things would make the standard of comfort in the workhouse greater than it was outside. Many of the ratepayers did not possess knives and forks, washstands or wardrobes. Many of them had not even pegs on which to hang their clothes. As to the appointment of paid nurses, he was anxious that the paupers should be treated with the greatest kindness, and that everything should be done to improve the condition of the aged and infirm, but it pressed hardly on the ratepayers when three trained nurses were appointed to do the work of one, assisted by the inmates, and when rooms were built and furnished to accommodate the nurses. The ratepayers were poor people and while they were anxious to make the people as comfortable as possible they had no desire that a set of useless officials should be appointed to meet the demands of the medical inspectors. This agitation in favour of paupers did not start with the ordinary inspectors. The doctors throughout Ireland were the first to raise a howl of indignation that the paupers were not properly treated. For his part, he feared the pendulum would swing too far. Money not required for labourers' cottages in the northern unions should be spent in the south and west. But not a single guardian in Ballymoney or Coleraine would release his grasp on a single penny that might otherwise cross the Boyne. There were Poor Law divisions from which not a single inmate was in the workhouse. Yet the rates charged on those divisions fell little short of other divisions when there was a considerable number of inmates in the "house." Money had not been spent legitimately, but upon a system of fostering officials. He had no desire to increase the number of officials or the red tapeism of their Department. Instead of agitating for a system which would entail further expense on the ratepayers, he would prefer to see the system modified in such a way as would entail no suffering on the inmates of workhouses, and prevent the waste of public money. The conditions of life in the southern aud western unions were entirely different from those of life in the northern unions. No one who had travelled through the south and west of Ireland could say that labourers' cottages were not required there. Yet the Government were putting a stumbling block in the path of progress as regarded the south and western unions in the interests of a part of the country which did not need a penny of the £40,000 reserved. He trusted the Chief Secretary would reconsider the matter and grant some concession to the southern and western unions.

Dr. R. AMBROSE (Mayo, W.) said he would not follow the Chief Secretary in his praises of inspectors of workhouses in Ireland. He would refer to the distress that existed in certain parts of Ireland. No person, it had been said, was in receipt of relief in the Westport Union, but in February last there were 1,320 persons relieved, which, compared with 608 in February 1896, showed an increase of 712. Nothing had been done to relieve this distress. In Achill in February 1896, 46 persons were in the receipt of outdoor relief, whereas the number in February 1897, was 417; a difference of 371. It was not only in the Westport Union that the burden was felt, but throughout the whole of County Mayo. In 1841 the population of the county was 388,887. In 1891 it was 219,034, a decrease, in the course of 50 years, of 169,853. Yet he found that the Poor Rate had almost doubled. In 1886 it was 9d.; in 1876, 11d.; in 1886, 1s. 3d.; in 1896, 1s. 1d.; and in 1897, 1s. 2d. In the Westport Union the rate was at present 2s. 2d., and in the Achill Island 4s. 6d. A remarkable speech was delivered in Paris the other day by the British Ambassador on the improvement of the condition of the masses, and the decline of pauperism; and he stated that he could give figures to show the decline of pauperism. But he left out Ireland altogether, though he could have shown that in recent years pauperism had doubled in Ireland. This condition of things was not confined to County Mayo. It was also to be found in County Galway. He had a letter in his pocket from a gentleman describing the state of things in that county, in which he said that 20 per cent. of the people for three or four months in the year—except a famine year, which was their best year, because it brought them relief work—lived on food that neither God nor man nor Nature ever meant as food for human beings. Let the Chief Secretary or his right hon. and learned and lackadaisical Friend the Attorney General for Ireland go down to the Clifden Union and see for themselves the condition of things. They would find that in that Union and outside its borders, estates had been bought up by land jobbers. He would not appeal to the right hon. Gentleman in the craving manner of some of his hon. Friends. He would demand in the name of justice that justice should be done in these localities. Let the right hon. Gentleman send down inspectors who would tell the truth. For his part, he protested against the action of the inspectors who had been sent into Mayo. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. DENIS KILBRIDE (Galway, N.) said he could not agree with the remarks of his hon. Friend the Member for Galway City. In his speech he dealt not only with Conservative Ulster, but also with Nationalist Ulster. His hon. Friend drew no line of demarcation between the two. He maintained that the two counties of Antrim and Monaghan had done what they could to redeem the character of Ulster in connection with the Labourers' Cottages Act. The reason given by one of his hon. Friends why cottages were not required in the north-east of Ulster was that the agricultural labourers in that part of the province entirely resided in the houses of the farmers. He did not pretend to be as intimately acquainted with the conditions of agricultural social life in that part as his hon. Friend, but he would like to know whether all the labourers in north-east Ulster were unmarried men, and whether married men were boarded in the houses of the farmers? ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. PINKERTON explained that what he stated was that in North-east Ulster the labourers who required cottages got them from the farmers, and preferred to do so.

Mr. KILBRIDE said that if that was so, they must differ very much in disposition from the labourers in other parts of Ireland; because he understood that the reason for introducing the Act at all was, not so much to better house the agricultural classes as to give them a feeling of independence of the farmer. While they had saved the farmers from being the slaves of the landlords, they were equally anxious to emancipate the labourers from their dependence on the farmers. Another statement made by his hon. Friend he took the strongest exception to, and that was that boards of guardians had largely increased their expenditure by substituting trained nurses for pauper nurses. He spoke with some knowledge on this subject and he unhesitatingly said that although this alteration might, in the first instance, entail some expenditure, it ultimately caused very great saving in the rates, besides offering other great advantages. It was a notorious fact that before the introduction of trained nurses the sick poor were grossly neglected. There was another point to which he wished to call attention. The Chief Secretary had over and over again said, in reply to questions, that no exceptional distress exists in any portion of the west of Ireland.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I never said that. I am quite aware that there are parts of the west of Ireland where there is distress. But it is not beyond the average, and I said there was no reason why it should not be met by the usual means.

MR. KILBRIDE said that the right hon. Gentleman based his answers on the reports of the inspectors, and over and over again it had been pointed out to him that these inspectors who reported to him did not go to the best sources of information. He did not say by any means that the Chief Secretary would not be prepared by exceptional means to prevent deaths by starvation, or to prevent starvation in a modified form; but the right hon. Gentleman had no knowledge of these facts. He could only say that he had visited the districts once or twice, and on those occasions he was met with demonstrations of regard and respect. He thought from that that there was no distress in Westport, Belmullet, or Donegal. The reason he was met with demonstrations of welcome was that the people believed that he would be able to spend some English money which might stave off the evil days of starvation. When the right hon. Gentleman sent down an inspector he should direct him to go to the best sources from which he could find out the exact condition of the country. He would strongly suggest to the right hon. Gentleman that he should insist upon these inspectors going to the ministers of religion, all the ministers of religion, to inquire as to the condition of the people, and personally visit the houses of the labourers and of the farmers where they said the distress prevailed. Let the inspectors make themselves acquainted with the Listowel Union and other kindred districts, and see the almost absolute starvation in which the people lived. These people had an absolute horror of the workhouse. These poor districts were never worse than they were now. The prospect of the season was never worse than it was now. The prospects of the potato crop on the moorlands and reclaimed bogs had not been so bad for many years, and unless they had an exceptionally favourable harvest there was no chance of an average potato crop this year. The potatoes put down in the month of March were rotted, and the soil was sodden until after the first week in May. He would say to the Chief Secretary better be wise in time. They had been told by his hon. Friend the Member for North Kerry that the local rates were 13s. 6d. in the pound. If such a state of things existed in England they would have more than words of sympathy. With regard to this £40,000 which, under the Act of 1891, was allocated for the labourers, he thought that it was unfair that they should prevent or debar those unions in the south and west of Ireland who put the Labourers' Act into operation previous to 1891 from all benefit from the provisions of the Land Purchase Act of 1891. Those unions which had acted before that year were entitled to relief under the Act of 1891, but instead of that he found that this £40,000 was largely used for the purpose of stimulating unions in Ulster and some in the west of Ireland. He thought it was due to them that he should say one word in justice to the inspectors of the Local Government Board who conducted inquiries under the Labourers' Act. They acted fairly, justly, and sympathetically with the cause of the labourers, and endeavoured to facilitate the action of the Boards of Guardians, but he was sorry to say that when an appeal was taken by the local landlords, the Higher Court almost invariably overruled the inspectors. They claimed 43 cottages, and the Local Government Board passed 27. Appeals were taken against 24 of the cottages sanctioned by the Local Government Board, and the appeals were upheld. Thus, after long and expensive litigation, the Union had only three cottages passed. The Government gave no relief under their legislative proposals as they now stood to the Unions which had put the Act in operation, but they did give it to those Unions in the north of Ireland which had refused up to the present to apply the Act. Now no reply had been made to the point raised by the hon. Member for Leitrim in regard to the Mullingar Union. The medicine contract there was cancelled last year. The Local Government Board cancelled the contract on their own motion because the tender was the highest. This year tenders were again invited, and the tender of the gentleman whose tender turned out to be the highest was accepted by the Board of Guardians. [Mr. JOHNSTON: "He was a Nationalist!"] If he was a Nationalist he was not a fit person to be allowed by the Local Government Board to be the contractor this year. The fact that his tender was cancelled last year was primâ facie sufficient reason why he should not have the contract this year. He noticed under the heading "Travelling Expenses":—

> "Actual expenses of locomotion and £1 a night and 3s. 6d. per day of not less than seven hours, when absent from headquarters on duty, to each of three auditors."

He also found:—

> "Travelling expenses, etc., of auditors of Poor Law Unions, etc. Allowance of £100 a year to each of seven auditors, to cover travelling and subsistence."

He was glad to find that the Local Government Board were not alone believers in an eight hours' day, but that they recognised a seven hours' day. What, however, he wanted to point out was that it was an extravagant waste of money to allow a servant £1 each night he slept out. He had no doubt the seven men were eminently fitted for the posts they occupied, but £100 a year ought to be sufficient for their travelling expenses. He urged the Chief Secretary for Ireland to watch closely the state of things in the Union of Glenamaddy, in Galway. Apparently the number of indoor paupers did not increase very considerably in the year ending March 1, 1897, and there was no very large increase of outdoor relief. Nevertheless, the condition of the people was very precarious in consequence of the condition of the potato crop. The land in the Union was chiefly reclaimed bog land, and the people depended for their food upon the potatoes. That being the case, it was not reassuring to know that the next crop would probably be the worst since the year 1879, owing to conditions over which the people had no control. Up to May there had been an abnormal rainfall, and during the winter it was impossible to carry on the ordinary agricultural operations preparatory to the spring sowing. In the whole of the Union scarcely two acres of land could be cultivated during the winter, and it was not until the ordinary seed time that the people were able to get on with the preliminary preparation of the land. This had thrown the setting of the crop six months later than usual. Of course, the success of the potato crop in Ireland largely depended upon the time when the seed potatoes were put in, and if potatoes could not be planted until May 1, they would not mature and ripen before October 1. The effects of blight in such a year were greatly to be dreaded, and he hoped that the Chief Secretary would impress upon the Boards of Guardians the necessity of adopting measures to prevent the ruinous effect of blight upon the crop.

[The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS resumed the Chair.]

COLONEL WARING (Down, N.) said that he had heard of aboriginal tribes in South Australia who used to select champions to represent them. These champions alternately hit each other on the head, and subsequently a third party stepped in, and with a long spear stirred up both contending parties with perfect impartiality. He felt that he was intervening in this Debate in much the same spirit as that which influenced this third gentleman. With regard to the subject of labourers' cottages, to which reference had been made, he said that he admitted that in the greater part of the north-east of Ireland such cottages were by no means generally required. The reason was that in that part of the country a large portion of the population was employed in the linen industry, and now lived in the towns. The consequence was that there were sufficient cottages available at reasonable rents in the country, and it was therefore unnecessary to erect labourers' cottages at the expense of the Unions. He wished to support what had been said as to the importance of employing trained nurses in Unions. Many of the nurses employed in the past had been quite unsuited to the position.

Much additional cost need not be thrown upon the Unions by the employment of a few trained nurses. In his part of the country the workhouses were not, in the ordinary sense, institutions for the poor. They were infirmaries, and therefore it was of the greatest importance that they should be carried on on proper hospital principles. [" Hear, hear ! "]

MR. DILLON thought that no one would deny that there was great room for improvement in the Irish workhouses, and that there were many workhouses in which the treatment of the sick poor especially, and of the able-bodied paupers, was not of a kind to commend itself to any humane man. When he heard the charges made against the Poor Law Boards in Ireland, he felt it was exceedingly unjust to cast any portion of the blame on the Irish people, for the simple reason that at the present time they had no responsibility whatever for the condition of the Irish workhouses. The Irish Poor Law had been administered by the preponderating power of two interests—the ex officio guardians and the propertied class—and the Local Government Board. If the administration of the Poor Law left many things to be desired—and he admitted it did—those who were to blame were the Government, who, in the words of the remarkable speech of the First Lord of the Treasury that evening, had allowed, in spite of the protests of the Nationalist Members, an antiquated and outworn machinery to exist year after year. Without committing himself in any way to the details of the future policy of the Government, he rejoiced at the extraordinary and revolutionary change announced on behalf of the Government, who had frankly flung over two Bills which were based on a continuation and extension of the old, rotten, and utterly discredited system of governing Ireland by Castle Boards, and had declared that, for the first time so far as local government was concerned, they were practically going to trust the Irish people. [Cheers.] If the pledges of the First Lord were truly carried out—and they had been so often deceived, and pledges given in that House had been so often broken or indefinitely postponed that he must excuse them if they waited before they became enthusiastic over the new programme—then it would be really time to test what would be the local administration under the control of the people, who, for the first time, would have got a chance in this respect. He believed that if the principles laid down by the First Lord were carried out and honestly put into force, they would carry him a great deal further than he expected. He believed that when they set up an honest, democratic, and untammeled form of local government in Ireland, it would be impossible to maintain the present control by irresponsible and unnatural Castle Boards. [" Hear, hear ! "] The subject of the treatment of the sick poor in Irish workhouses had attracted a great deal of attention, and, while he gave the Chief Secretary full credit for humane desires, he believed the Government were well advised in dropping the Poor Law Relief Bill. It was a very complicated and, in some of its provisions, even a dangerous Bill, and there was an increasing amount of anxiety and alarm amongst some of the best-administered unions in Ireland in regard to its working. He believed the ultimate goal to be aimed at in local administration was to throw the greatest possible amount of responsibility on the people, and to give the greatest possible amount of liberty consistent with the maintenance of a central Government, to the localities. In proportion as they brought home responsibility to the people, he believed they would promote pure and economical administration. He believed the policy suggested in the speech of the First Lord of the Treasury was the only proper and effective remedy for all those evils which had grown up in connection with Poor Law administration in Ireland. He showed that the Debate had been conducted free from party spirit, and, though some Irish Members upheld the action of inspectors of the Local Government Board and others condemned it, the explanation of the diversity was to be found in the fact that in some districts excellent inspectors were to be found, while in other districts the inspectors were unsympathetic. As to the administration of the Labourers' Acts, he thought that with but few exceptions the inspectors had given satisfaction. The complaints of some of his hon. Friends as to distress in the west of Ireland were, however, well founded. The inspectors of the Local Government Board were officials of a Department which was not subject to the influence of Irish public opinion; they were responsible to an irresponsible Minister in the matter of local details. The poverty of the people in the west of Ireland was chronic, though at present it might not be widespread or on the verge of starvation. But in the Swinford Union, for example, the condition of affairs was alarming; poverty was increasing, and there was a prospect of starvation at an early date. The rates of the union were now standing at an enormously high figure, and he hoped that the Chief Secretary would keep a watch on these unions in the west of Ireland and examine the rates. He had a few words to say as to the Labourers' Acts. They had heard about the contrast between the Ulster unions and the Southern unions. Roughly speaking, the unions where the popular element was strongest were the unions which had used the Labourers' Acts most. It was untrue that it was the Irish farmers who had objected to the use of these Acts. There might be exceptions; but the rule was this, that where the popular element was in the ascendant and the farmers had the power, there they would find an enormous number of labourers' cottages. [An HON. MEMBER: "Not in Ulster!"] Perhaps not—that was a Unionist country. But wherever the Nationalist farmers were in the ascendant, there they would find that the Labourers' Acts had been generally put into operation, and wherever the landlords were in the ascendant there the Acts had been obstructed. It would be monstrous and most unjust to penalise and discourage unions which, as some of the Southern unions had done, had generously saddled themselves with heavy costs for putting up labourers' cottages which were a pleasure to look at. These cottages, which had been graphically described by the hon. Member for South Monaghan, had introduced an amount of civilisation which had been the astonishment of everybody who beheld it. These poor men, who had previously been living in the midst of poverty, filth, and degradation which had excited the horror and wonder of travellers from all parts of Europe, had been taken out of their mud-huts and put into these cottages; and what was the result? One might go into one of these habitations and find them the perfection of neatness and order. The people had immediately taken advantage of the new situation created for them; and he asserted that they came into honourable competition with any labourers in England—showing what capacity there was in the Irish peasantry for civilisation and for rising in the social scale if they were only given a fair field. [Cheers.] It would be monstrous, therefore, to in any way penalise and discourage those unions which had done so much for the Irish labourers. There had been a good deal of talk about Ulster unions not being in favour of labourers' cottages. An hon. Member had mentioned to him the case of the union of Portumna, a considerable part of which had the singular honour of belonging to the Marquess of Clanricarde. In that union, owing to the property vote and the number of ex-officio guardians, the propertied and the enlightened classes predominated. The result was that the labourers of Portumna, although in the south of Ireland, were still living in hovels. They went to the guardians and asked for a scheme of labourers' cottages; but the ex-officios, who would come from the end of the world if it was a question of electing a nurse or a workhouse clerk, remained away and left the Board without a quorum; and he believed that to this hour the labourers of that unfortunate union, owing to the obstruction of these gentlemen, were left without any assistance under the Act. There was one other point to which he wished to allude, a case in the Union of Strabane, where a poor man had been refused a cottage under the Labourers' Acts. He had forgotten the man's name, but the right hon. Gentleman answered his question on the subject two or three days ago. Three years ago this man, who was a man of considerable intelligence, and was living in a miserable hovel, applied for a labourer's cottage. A Local Government Board inspector was brought down from Dublin to inspect this hovel, and, according to the answer of the Chief Secretary, he condemned it as unfit for human habitation. What happened? The unfortunate man, after fighting his battle for three years, was refused a cottage, on the ground that he was not an "agricultural labourer." He had assured him (the speaker) that he held his cottage on the terms of giving a certain amount of labour as an agricultural labourer every year. But he was refused because, being an industrious and exceptionally intelligent man, he had taken a contract under one of the road contractors. For that, he was condemned to go on living in a wretched place, where his life was in danger, and which the Local Government Board inspector had condemned. He certainly thought that was a very unjust straining of the definition, and he hoped the Chief Secretary would write the Local Government Board advising them to adopt a more liberal interpretation. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR said the hon. Member had referred to the case of a labourer who was refused a cottage on the ground that he was a road contractor. That was the information supplied to him. If he was a road contractor in so narrow and technical a sense as not properly to exclude him from the definition of an agricultural labourer, of course he regretted it, and he would do what he could to remedy it. He would call the attention of the Local Government Board to the case, and ask them for further particulars in regard to it. With regard to the question of distress in the west of Ireland, he had never at any time denied that distress, and even severe distress, had existed; only it did not appear to him that exceptional treatment, by which he meant relief works, was called for. Relief works in Ireland, as far as he knew, had never been adopted as a remedy except where the distress had been severe in special localities and also widespread; and although relief works had certain undeniable advantages, they had also very great disadvantages. They were tried on a considerable scale in 1890 and 1891, and although on those occasions they were successful in coping with the distress, yet they were so profitable to every class of the community where they were adopted, that in every year since then, where there was the smallest excuse, every class, whether landowners or shopkeepers or small farmers, had joined in representing to the Government that the actual state of things was much more serious than he believed it to have been. He had thought it necessary to set his face rigidly against the proposal for relief works. He believed if he had followed the example of the right hon. Member for Montrose in 1894, and had again applied to the Treasury for money for relief works, that the inhabitants of the poorer districts in the west of Ireland would have been gradually taught the lesson that they could not be expected to support themselves by their own efforts—a most disastrous lesson to teach them. While he did not deny that the rates in those districts were very heavy and that poverty was chronic in them, yet he thought it would have been on his part an unstatesmanlike act if he had done what would have been a ready and easy thing to do, namely, to go to the Treasury and say, "In order to keep these people alive, they require the assistance of public funds, and I am not prepared to be responsible for them unless that assistance is forthcoming." That was not the line which, in the interests of the districts concerned, he considered it was possible for him to adopt. As regarded heavy rates, after the announcement of his right hon. Friend the First Lord of the Treasury, he need not remind the Committee that considerable relief would in future years be given to those districts, but it would be most undesirable, except in cases of absolute necessity and wide-spread distress, that those districts should continually expect relief from the State. He appealed to the Committee now, after six hours' discussion, to allow the Vote to be taken.

MR. D. CRILLY (Mayo, N.) regretted exceedingly that the right hon. Gentleman had delivered the speech he had just made. It was only once a year that Irish Nationalist Members had the opportunity of discussing this Vote in the House of Commons, and he thought that when on behalf of the poverty-stricken districts they appealed at the bar of mercy, the House of Commons ought to listen to them. In the early part of the discussion on that Vote the hon. Member for West Cavan, who knew the west of Ireland better even than the Chief Secretary himself, or the First Lord of the Treasury, made the statement that in Belmullet and Killala the officials of the Local Government Board did not visit any of the houses. The Chief Secretary in reply said that statement was absolutely incorrect. On this point he would quote what was said by the Rev. Father Hewson. Speaking at a meeting at Belmullet on the 18th February, the reverend gentleman said:—

> "The Local Government thereupon sent their officer to investigate the condition of the people, with the view of reporting thereon. But how was this investigation made? He could speak only for his own parish, and he now asked publicly did those who were sent to make the investigation even visit a single homestead or farm within that parish? If passing along on an outside car, or riding on a bicycle meant investigation, then, indeed, they had made their investigation, and when it was suggested the investigation had not been made, then the relieving officer here was compelled to supply the information that ought to have been obtained by the parties sent down to make their investigation."

He had a letter from another gentleman whom the right hon. Gentleman knew, who wrote that he was surprised the inspector had reported that there was no distress, because such a report was in direct conflict with what the inspector had said in conversation. His correspondent added, "He saw the distress till he was sick of it."

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have repeatedly stated that I never said there was no distress.

MR. CRILLY said that the right hon. Gentleman had done the stereotyped work of the Chief Secretary in defending the officials of the Local Government Board. The right hon. Gentleman and his officials had failed to take due note of the distress in Belmullet and Killarney; they should have shown greater sympathy in the application of the Poor Law; but until the Bill which the Leader of the House had foreshadowed was passed, it was useless for Irishmen to expect justice from the House of Commons. They would allow the Vote to pass under protest and with the consciousness that it was the last time that Irish Members would have to protest against the conduct of these alien boards in Ireland.

DR. TANNER (Cork Co., Mid.) complained that the Estimate showed, not a substantial increase, but a substantial decrease in the salaries and expenses of the Irish dispensary doctors, a body of men whose devotion to duty, and whose service to suffering humanity, were beyond all praise. They had to travel long distances, and at night frequently, and yet their demand for horse money was persistently ignored by the Local Government Board. He noticed that year after year the same amount appeared in the Estimates for the supply of vaccine lymph to the dispensaries. He would like to know what became of the lymph. The doctors for whose use it was intended knew nothing about it, for they never used it. Why was it that every year they spent the same money? They were told that everything was quiet and tranquil, and still they found that they had an increase of £2,158 upon this expenditure in connection with the Local Government Board. Where did all this braying of trumpets come in? [Laughter.] The right hon. Gentleman was the master of this Board, and he ought to be master of the subject. [Laughter.] He hoped to obtain a satisfactory assurance from the Chief Secretary upon these points.

Vote agreed to.

CLASS III.

Motion made, and Question proposed:—

> "That a sum, not exceeding £40,229, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for criminal prosecutions and other law charges in Ireland."

MR. DILLON wished to call attention to the trial of the brothers Maguire in the North of Ireland.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. J. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.) said the trial was pending, and the case could not be gone into without prejudice to the accused.

MR. DILLON said he did not desire to go into the evidence, and would confine himself to the action of the Attorney General in reference to the case.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said it was unusual to discuss a case pending before the Courts. Still, he could not hold that it was out of order. On the other hand, as far as he had been able to discover, the Chairman of Committees or the Speaker on former occasions had always laid down that it was unusual and undesirable, in the interest of the prisoners, to discuss a case which was pending.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR suggested the desirability of postponing the Vote. The Attorney General could not defend his action in this case without going into the evidence.

MR. DILLON said he proposed to confine himself to the grounds on which he brought up the case. These unfortunate men had been 14 months in gaol, having been tried three times on different charges and acquitted, and they were now in prison merely on a charge of larceny. Even if they were guilty, the punishment they had already undergone would be severe enough. Bail had been applied for, and hitherto refused.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND said the hon. Member was singularly inaccurate in his facts. These men were arrested on March 6, 1896. They were then tried on the charge of murder, and the jury disagreed. They were tried again at the Assizes at Belfast and acquitted. They were then charged with robbery from the person of the man they were alleged to have murdered. The learned Judge who presided at the trial refused an application for bail. They had never made application for bail to the Court of Queen's Bench, which they were entitled to do, and it was impossible for him to give the reason which made it imperative upon him, if they made that application to the Court, to advise it without going into the evidence against them.

MR. DILLON said these unfortunate men had been subjected to three trials by packed juries—[Nationalist cheers]—and acquitted by a Belfast jury of the charge of murder. They were taken to Belfast from their own homes, and put to enormous expense, and were still in gaol unconvicted, merely on a charge of larceny. They were now invited to go to the Queen's Bench and apply for bail, well knowing that the Attorney General would oppose the application, and it would be refused. There was no criminal matter which in his time had created so much interest in the North of Ireland as this case. He would agree to the postponement of the Vote, hoping that the Chief Secretary would look carefully into the case.

MR. FLYNN said he desired now to give notice—lest he should be accused of giving short notice hereafter—that he should raise in as full a manner as possible the question of jury packing at the last Winter Assizes at Cork.

*MR. R. M. DANE (Fermanagh, N.) said that before the House agreed to the postponement of the Vote, he wished to say that he hoped the Attorney General for Ireland would not allow anything that had taken place on the part of the hon. Member for East Mayo that night to lead him to allow these men to escape being tried again. The feeling in the case was not confined to one party. It was quite true that these men were tried for what looked very like murder.

An hon. Member: They were acquitted of that.

*Mr. DANE: And it was equally true that the case was made a party one—[Nationalist cheers]—by the friends of the hon. Member for East Mayo.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: As we have withdrawn the Vote, it is hardly right that the discussion should go on.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

Class II.

2. £1,243, to complete the sum for Charitable Donations and Bequests Office, Ireland.—Agreed to.

Resolutions to be reported.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a sum, not exceeding £3,880, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for the salaries and expenses of the Public Record Office in Ireland, and of the Keeper of State Papers in Dublin."

Mr. FLYNN said he wished to know whether any steps had been taken in latter years with regard to the publication of State papers and public documents? There had been an interruption in the issue of State papers which were of direct importance to Ireland. They had no papers dealing with Ireland for a long time, and it was natural that they should be very keen and on the alert. They could not get hold of these State papers unless they watched.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS said this was a matter which should be dealt with on the Vote of the Historical Manuscripts Commission. They were responsible for the issue of documents.

Dr. TANNER said that that Commission dealt with England and Wales as well as Ireland, but somehow the documents were not allowed to circulate outside a certain set. Only high and dry particulars had been furnished to them during the last Session of Parliament. He could make neither head nor tail of a return from the Record Office. He could only say now what he had heard his hon. Friend Mr. Sexton, who was then Member for West Belfast, say in connection with a similar return, that it was "bald, miserable, and discreditable." Could something not be done to make these returns interesting instead of bald returns? As to the Record Office in Ireland, that meant Dublin, for practically all the work was done in Dublin, and it was circulated for the benefit of certain persons. There was always in connection with certain officials an increase of "salaries, wages, and allowances." In connection with this small office they had an increase of £314, whereas in other years they had a falling off. It had increased since the Chief Secretary was there. The increase was not in connection with smaller affairs, but in connection with the greater men.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: I must ask the hon. Member to confine himself to the Vote. At present he is not doing so.

Dr. TANNER said if the increase in salaries was given to the poorer men, he should not object so much, but the increase was given to men who really did not want it, instead of to the poor men who did require it. For incidental expenses nothing could be said. [Laughter.] Instead of laughing, he hoped hon. Gentlemen would join him and others in keeping down expenditure. In any case, when expenditure was incurred he thought it should go rather to the poor than to the rich.

Mr. P. A. M'HUGH (Leitrim, N.) trusted they would receive from the Chief Secretary, or some other responsible Minister, an explanation of the services on which this money was spent, otherwise it would be the duty of Irish Members to resist the Vote, or to move its reduction.

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR said that hitherto the Vote had never been the subject of discussion, it had always been regarded as a matter of course. Details were given on page 193 of the Estimates. The greater part of the increased expenditure arose from the automatic increase in the salaries of eight clerks employed in the Department.

Mr. FLYNN hoped that it would be shown what value was received for the expenditure.

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I will give further details on Report.

Mr. KILBRIDE said he found they were asked to vote the salaries of six workmen who were described as searchers. What the men had to do as searchers he was at a loss to understand. The men received £1 a week each. What could they have to do as searchers in a Record Office?

And, it being midnight, the Chairman left the Chair to make his Report to the House.

Resolutions to be reported upon Monday next; Committee also report progress; to sit again upon Monday next.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Considered in Committee.

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the law relating to Customs and Inland Revenue.—(The Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

Resolution to be reported upon Monday next; Committee to sit again upon Monday next.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC LOCAL VETO BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 28th June.

Mr P A. M'Hugh.

RATING OF MACHINERY BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday 15th June.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

EVICTED TENANTS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

FISHERIES (IRELAND) ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 31st May.

COUNTY GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 16th June.

TRAWLERS' LICENSING BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

VEHICLES (LIGHTS) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND) ACT (1877) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

House Adjourned at Five Minutes after Twelve o'Clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 24th May 1897.

ROYAL NIGER COMPANY.

Lord STANMORE rose to ask a question of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs with respect to the future government of the territories of the Royal Niger Company. He said that their Lordships would remember that in the earlier part of the present year the Royal Niger Company by a series of Measures admirably planned and as admirably executed, assumed a more direct control than it had previously exercised over extensive regions to the south and west of the Niger, which, although within its sphere of influence, had until then remained in a position of practical independence. By so doing the Company had largely increased its responsibilities, and it had become a question whether some modification of its mode of government might not be requisite in consequence. He had nothing to say against the Company's system of administration or its working—quite the reverse. He believed that in regions such as those in question a government like that of the Royal Niger Company was the best now and for a long time to come. It was a cheap form of government, but that was by no means its only or even its chief advantage. It could deal both with men and with measures in a more rough-and-ready way than a public department fettered by inelastic rules. Its servants, having only their own superiors to look to, and having their field of action confined to the region in which they served, were far more likely to identify themselves with its interests and those of its population than men belonging to a more widely-extended service, who naturally looked on employment in an unhealthy and uncivilised region chiefly as a means of escape through promotion to a more healthy and agreeable post. The attention of the directors being devoted exclusively to their own affairs, there was no danger of that sort of paralysis which arose from the necessity under which an overworked and overburdened department sometimes found itself of postponing the consideration of matters in themselves important till others more important or more pressing had been dealt with. But, on the other hand, the exclusive attention to its own affairs and interests which enabled a company to conduct its business successfully, might also lead to its not considering questions adequately from an Imperial point of view. The recent enlargement of the Niger Company's administrative area brought it into contact with the spheres of influence of other nations not less susceptible than ourselves. When such contact existed, occasions for friction must arise; and when they did, men who regarded above all things the maintenance of the rights and position of the local authorities would be not unlikely to act in a different manner from men with whom the importance of maintaining good relations between ourselves and other European States was a primary consideration. Much emphasis was given to this point by the telegrams which appeared in the newspapers last week, and in which it was asserted that French officers had forced themselves against his will upon the King of Boussa on the Niger, and that he had appealed against them to the company, which maintained, he believed rightly, that Boussa was one of the vassal States within its sphere of influence. Here were the elements of a very pretty quarrel, and it was evident that much might depend upon the tact and forbearance of the local officials and the instructions they received from their directors at home. He would ask, therefore, whether, in view of the altered situation produced by recent events, and the greatly increased responsibility of the Company, Her Majesty's Government contemplated the assumption of any greater degree of supervision over or participation in the executive administration of the Niger Company than they at present possessed, either by the addition to the board of directors of members nominated by the Crown or by any other means. Before sitting down he wished to repeat that he had no charge to bring against the Company. He believed the principles of its administration to be sound and its action to be judicious, humane, and just; but he thought that when questions of interest to other States as well as to ourselves were likely to arise, it was desirable that there should be greater security than existed at present that those questions would not be dealt with from an exclusively local standpoint.

*THE PRIME MINISTER (The Marquess of SALISBURY): I am bound to follow the example of my noble Friend, and in dealing with this question carefully to guard myself from any appearance of censure against the Company or against those by whom the Company's affairs are directed. On the contrary, I think it is impossible to mention the names of the founders of the Company, of the late Lord Aberdare, for example, and especially of Sir George Goldie, without recognising the very high administrative ability which they have shown, and their great enterprise and resource, which place them high on the lists of the pioneers of English civilisation in the dark places of the earth. ["Hear, hear!"] I think they deserve the very highest praise. But because I freely render that tribute, I am not on that account bound to admit that the system which they are working is, in existing circumstances, and as matters have developed, in all respects the most expedient that could be devised. I do not wish to enter far upon a question which is occupying the anxious attention of Her Majesty's Government, and with regard to which I cannot say that definite conclusions have been arrived at. But I do not see any probability of an issue from our difficulties by adopting the change of constitution which is suggested by my noble Friend. He suggests that we should secure a more complete control over the action of the company by having Government directors upon its Board. I speak from memory, but my impression is that this country has never adopted that mode of government, has never acquired that control without giving something in the nature of a guarantee of profits to the company over which the control was exercised. There is the old instance of the East India Company. When this country assumed the entire direction of the affairs of that company, it guaranteed it a dividend of 10 per cent. Again, there are the railways in India, where a Government director is a Chairman of the Board. In all those cases there are Government guarantees of the dividends of the shareholders, and it is only reasonable that it should be so, because, of course, the first object of the directors of a company is and ought to be to secure a proper, fair, and legitimate return for their investments to the shareholders who have placed them in power. But the object of a Government must very often be very different, and the course which they may take may not be that which will secure the highest dividends to the shareholders. It does not seem, therefore, to be fair to take the management of a company out of the hands of the shareholders unless you are prepared to indemnify them against any pecuniary injury that may result. At the same time, I am not prepared to say that the present state of things on the Niger corresponds entirely to the necessities of our time. My noble Friend is quite right when he says that the progress of the Niger Company has brought them into close contact with territories or spheres of influence claimed by other nations, and the thought does arise that, however patriotic the Company may be, it is not to be supposed that they are utterly uninfluenced by considerations of the commercial duties which are imposed upon them by the position which they occupy. On the other hand, the diplomatic questions raised by their neighbourhood to other territories are often of a very difficult and delicate character, and it is impossible not to feel that a more direct influence on the part of Her Majesty's Government would be desirable if it could be obtained. There are two sets of difficulties. There are the difficulties with native races, whose rights we are accused of having dealt with too cheaply, as in respect to the persons who are called the men of the town of Brass, who complained that their markets are entirely destroyed by the regulations and interposition of the Niger Company; and then there is that much more difficult and delicate set of questions to which my noble Friend alluded, which arise out of the fact that the rights to territory are not sufficiently defined to exclude the possibility of contest, and that matters may even come to such a point as they have done in the case to which he referred, the case of Broussa, where a French force has marched in and taken a territory which the Niger Company imagined to be their own. The matter, of course, is not one which I can speak of in detail, because it is the subject of diplomatic communication; but the fact that the controversy should have arisen, on whichever side the right lay, shows the difficulties which are pressing upon us in consequence, in part, of the present organisation of the Queen's influence and dominion in that part of Africa. I have only, therefore, to answer in the negative my noble Friend's suggestion, and to say that we do not think it probable that the difficulties, whatever they are, can be adjusted by putting Government directors on the Board. I recognise that there are many difficulties attaching to the present state of things, and I can assure my noble Friend that they are occupying our most anxious attention. I do not think I should be justified in going further into that at the present moment, and I will only conclude by again reiterating that in any observations I have made I do not wish to imply the slightest blame for the conduct of the directors of the Niger Company, for whose qualities and administrative and military success I, in conjunction with all who are acquainted with the circumstances, entertain the most unfeigned admiration. [Cheers.]

The Earl of KIMBERLEY: I wish to say a word or two on this subject, as it fell to my lot to deal with questions connected with the Niger Company of some importance at the time when I held the seals of the Foreign Office. I entirely concur in what the noble Marquess said at the beginning of his remarks, and repeated at the end, as to the success of the Niger Company, and the singular ability they have shown in administering the territories under their care. My experience was quite sufficient to show me, as it has shown the noble Marquess, that there are very serious difficulties connected with the position of the Company there which require the earnest attention of Her Majesty's Government. These difficulties are, above all, difficulties with foreign nations who have territories and spheres of influence adjoining. It will be perfectly obvious that other nations have a right to look to the Government of this country for redress in any grievance of which they may have to complain, and that any supposed aggression on their part or violation of our rights is a matter which involves the Government of the country in, it may be, serious discussions with other Governments. It always appeared to me that it is not altogether safe when questions of this kind may arise where the Government have not a clearly-defined position—although they have abundant powers, no doubt, under the charter—to enable them to ward off by timely action difficulties which might lead to complications of a serious character. I have no desire to refer further to this question; the difficulties will be present to the minds of everyone who knows the condition of affairs in that part of the world. I only wish to add that it gives me great satisfaction to hear that the attention of the Government is seriously directed to these matters with a view to introducing a remedy. I agree with the noble Marquess that the placing of Government directors on the Board would be by no means a sufficient remedy.

APPEAL IN CERTAIN CIVIL MATTERS (IRELAND) BILL.

Considered in Committee (according to Order): Reported without Amendment: Standing Committee negatived; and Bill to be Read 3^a To-morrow.

INFANT LIFE PROTECTION BILL [H.L.].

Read 3^a (according to Order); Amendments made; Bill passed, and sent to the Commons.

VOLUNTEERS BILL.

*The SECRETARY of STATE for WAR (The Marquess of Lansdowne), in moving the Second Reading of this Bill, said that the Bill had been prepared for the purpose of removing a doubt which had arisen with regard to the effect of Rules issued under the Volunteer Act of 1863. The particular case which the Government had in view was that of a Volunteer who, on joining his corps, undertook to make himself efficient within a particular period of time. On undertaking that engagement, he received a uniform free of expense from his corps, the corps expecting to be recouped from the capitation which the man would earn. It might happen that after having been equipped in this way the man might decline to fulfil his engagement and make himself efficient. Thereupon the corps lost the amount of capitation grant which the Volunteer would earn, and the funds of the corps were consequently mulcted, unless the sum could be recovered from the defaulting Volunteer by means of a fine. It was always believed that these fines could be recovered under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, but a recent decision of the Courts had thrown a doubt on that, and the Government desired to remove it. The matter was of some importance, because if these fines were only civil debts, and could only be recovered in the same way as civil debts, the colonel of the corps was deprived of the only efficient weapon which he possessed for securing that the men under his command should duly make themselves efficient. The Measure was, he believed, desired by the Volunteers themselves, and it had passed with but little or no comment through the other House of Parliament.

LORD MONKSWELL said he did not object to the principle of the Bill, which was probably a necessary and useful Measure. But he desired to call attention to the very mysterious drafting of Clause 2, which said: "If before the expiration of the term of such imprisonment." There was not a single word about imprisonment in the first clause. He had referred to the sections of the Act given in the margin, the meaning of which this Bill declared; and he could find nothing about "imprisonment" in either of the sections. No doubt there was a reference to the power of imprisonment in one of the sections in another part of the Act; and he imagined that reference was being made to the expiration of the term of any imprisonment for non-payment of the fine under the Act of 1863. He should be glad to know whether this was so.

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE said that the criticism of the noble Lord was a just one. The second clause formed no part of the Bill when it was introduced. [Laughter.] It was accepted in the other House on the Motion of a private Member, but it was evident that the wording of the clause as it now stood would require alteration. He would have the matter put right before the next stage of the Bill was taken.

Read 2ª (according to Order), and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Manday next.

GRIFFITH'S VALUATION.

*VISCOUNT CLIFDEN: I wish to make an explanation, or rather an apology, to Her Majesty's Government. It may be in the recollection of some of your Lordships that I asked for a Paper to be printed a few days ago, which was refused to me on the score that it was too old—"antiquated" was, I think, the word I read somewhere attributed to the Government. But somebody has been kind enough to send me this Paper, printed as a Parliamentary Paper—[laughter]—in the year 1882, which, I need not remind your Lordships, was the year in which that infamous Act called the Land Act of 1881 came into operation; and, perhaps, noble Lords will be interested to know that the Paper was printed at the suggestion of the late Mr. W. H. Smith. I do not accuse the noble Lord who replied on behalf of the Government of knowing anything about this, but I think the Irish Office might have known something of this Paper, and then the noble Lord would not have given such an answer as was given to me the other night. Noble Lords on my side of the water, at all events, will be glad to know that this Paper is published. There are 74 pages of Griffith's instructions, and three of the Land Commissioners.

House Adjourned at Five o'Clock, till To-morrow, a Quarter past Ten o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 24th May 1897.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

LIVERPOOL CITY CHURCHES BILL [H.L.].

Order for Second Reading read; Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a Second time."

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.) proposed, to leave out the word "now," and at the end of the Question to add the words "upon this day six months." He said that he thought it would have been more convenient had the hon. Member in charge of it explained its provisions. The Measure was rejected in 1893, and they ought to know what were the special new circumstances which had induced him to move it a second time. The Bill dealt with ten churches known as the Liverpool Corporation Churches and two parish churches. It was proposed to extinguish the liability of the Liverpool Corporation for the payment to them of certain annual grants which they had to pay under a section of an Act of Parliament. The sum contributed to the ten churches was £2,600 or thereabouts, and it was proposed by the Bill to commute that annual payment with a capital sum of £95,000. In regard to the two parish churches, St. Peter's and St. Nicholas's, the liability amounted to about £1,800. That amount it was proposed to commute by the payment of a capital sum of £48,000. The first ground on which he moved the rejection of the Bill was that the amount of commutation was put at much too high a figure. There was to be handed over to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, to be invested for the future endowment of the churches, and of new churches, over £101,000; and there was to be handed over a further sum of £13,406 to Queen Anne's Bounty, and £27,694 went to a building fund. It was not necessary to criticise the financial provisions beyond repeating that the amount of commutation was absurdly high. It represented 36 years' purchase, or nearly three times the amount of purchase in the Irish Church Act—fourteen years. Besides, the money was to come out of the pockets of the Liverpool ratepayers for the benefit of one section of the ratepayers. In the second place, it must be remembered that this rate was all the higher when they considered the fact that not only was this money to be paid to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, but the sites of the churches were also to be handed over to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. That was all the more striking when it was remembered that in most cases the fabrics had been provided out of the pockets of the ratepayers. Were there any special reasons why this high rate of compensation should be paid? Had there been any unusual sacrifices on the part of the supporters of those churches, or had the churches been unusually successful in the past? The answer he believed to both questions was in the negative. Not only had the Corporation of Liverpool paid this annual grant amounting in the aggregate to something like £250,000, but they had also spent £117,000 on the building of the churches, so that after allowing for what had been received from pew rents, the Corporation had expended on these churches £300,000, and in spite of this the Church Party asked for 36½ years purchase. During the Debate in 1893 it was admitted on both sides of the House that there had been many scandals in connection with the relations between the Corporation and these churches under the arrangements in the past. He did not deny that at the outset those who initiated the idea of contributing from the ratepayers' funds towards those churches was a good one. But in this case, as in others, the arrangement had become an instrument by which the Corporation of Liverpool made permanent places and salaries for their friends and relatives. That was a fact admitted on all hands. The time he thought had come when this arrangement ought to come to an end. The only point on which he joined issue was as to the condition and terms upon which this arrangement ought to be terminated. He asked the House were the terms proposed just or equitable? There was no doubt that these churches had been a miserable failure in the past. That was admitted in the Debate a few years ago. The churches were large and poorly attended, and in parts of Liverpool where large congregations could not naturally be looked for. In the census taken in 1893 it was found that at St. George's, capable of seating 2,000, only 76 attended; in St. Paul's, capable of seating 1,800, only 16 attended; and in St. David's, the attendance was only 131. It seemed to him the history of the transactions between the Corporation and the parish churches, and their present position, was a factor which the House ought to have regard to in fixing the compensation to be paid, and the rate of the compensation. He knew very well that it would be said that it was proposed in the Bill to pull down two of the churches—St. George's and St. John's—to move them to another part of Liverpool, and to vest the old sites in the Corporation; but it was not very much comfort to the ratepayers to be presented with two sites which they years ago gave to the churches in question. He quite favoured the policy of removing these churches, but surely it ought to be arranged that the value of the sites and the fabrics given by the ratepayers should be taken into consideration. He did not deny that under the local Act of 1838, which was the foundation for the present Bill, the compromise suggested in these days of £105,000 invested for the benefit of these churches by the Corporation would have been a very good arrangement for the Corporation from a money standpoint; but those who had read the history of these days could not but see very clearly that there were two parties and two opposite opinions held in Liverpool on the question. That difference of opinion had always existed. In 1893 a similar Bill was before the House, but it was successfully opposed by an hon. Member whom he did not see present. In the opinion of that House, at any rate, the conditions were not equitable. In 1894 another Bill was introduced by seven Members of the House, two of whom represented Liverpool, the five others being closely connected with it, and according to it the commutation was not to be 36½ years' purchase but one year's only. He was aware that the Corporation of Liverpool last June passed by a great majority a Resolution in favour of the present Bill, but he held that was not to be taken as in any way an evidence of the real feeling of the ratepayers. The question had not been raised before the electors, and if the ratepayers knew what the Bill really provided and the details of the expenditure, which were its essential part, they would not be in its favour. The religious opinion of the people of Liverpool had largely changed since 1838. At that time it might be said that the prevailing religious opinion of Liverpool was that of the Episcopal Church, but he was given to believe that were a survey now taken, Liverpool opinion would be found divided into three more or less equal parts—Church people, Roman Catholics, and Dissenters. Evidence that was fair and equitable years ago could not be so to-day. With reference to the Church of St. David's, it was built by the Corporation, and was largely maintained by them. The congregation in 1893 was 131. Let them compare that with the fact that, relying entirely upon voluntary effort, the Welsh Nonconformists of Liverpool had during the same period built not one but forty churches; that they had a membership of 14,000, and that they contributed for their churches every year a sum approaching £20,000. It seemed to him that no good results would follow the passing of this Bill, and he moved the rejection in the interests of the ratepayers, because he thought the proposed arrangement was an unfair one, and because he thought that when property was given by the Corporation for a special religious purpose, and when that special purpose proved to be futile, the property being used for other purposes than it was designed for, it should be handed back to those who gave it. ["Hear, hear!"]

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield), in seconding the Amendment, said they were not dealing with tithes and glebe lands. The "pious ancestor" in this case was the old, unreformed, and corrupt Corporation of Liverpool. The history of these Liverpool churches was a history of unjust and profligate expenditure, of legal squabbling, and of ecclesiastical trickery. [Cries of "Oh!"] Churchmen in those days treated the Corporation as a milch cow, going to it for whatever they wanted. Whether it was a new church or an additonal minister, they got what they asked for, and then the sanction of Parliament was obtained. It might be asked what was the use of reviving such unsavoury reflections, but they had an important bearing on the present Bill, seeing that the unjust charges then imposed on the Protestant Nonconformists and the Roman Catholics of Liverpool were imposed now. This Bill was a practical admission that the existing system was indefensible. But what was the proposed remedy? The promoters were willing that these unjust exactions should cease, but demanded the exorbitant sum of £143,000 by way of ransom. It was said of the sites in 1893 that they did not cost the Corporation a penny, but neither did they cost the Church a penny. They were public property, and the public ought not to be compelled to purchase them back. It would be said that the Bill involved details which could be discussed only in a Committee. But the principle on which it was based was unjust and unsound. When compulsory Church rates were abolished no compensation was given, and no provision was made for commutation. They were retained only where where money had been borrowed upon them, or where they existed in lieu of tithes. But these Liverpool payments did not come within their category. They ought, in fact, to have been dealt with in the Church Rate Act. There was also a local precedent which could be quoted, for when the Church of St. Catherine at Liverpool was pulled down the Corporation paid nothing, except for the protection of life interests, and that was all that was wanted in the case of the other churches. The present officials should be dealt with justly, and even generously, and perhaps the patrons should also be compensated, though some of them were only trustees. This injustice had been inflicted long enough, and should now come to an end. A more flagrantly unjust Bill than this had never been submitted to Parliament, and he hoped that it would be rejected, and that the promoters would be under the necessity of coming with a moderate and just scheme. ["Hear, hear!"]

*Mr. W. F. LAWRENCE (Liverpool, Abercrombie) said he begged to recommend the Bill to the favourable consideration of the House. The speech of the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down did not, he thought, require any special notice from himself, first, because the Bill was essentially a Private Local Bill, and, secondly, because the hon. Gentleman's speech was one they had heard many a time all over England against the Establishment. [Cheers.] His Friend the hon. Member for Denbigh, who moved the rejection of the Bill, had every ground to object to it, both as a ratepayer and as an inhabitant of Liverpool. Being, as he was, well acquainted with the condition of things in Liverpool, he was surprised that the hon. Member should have found fault with their action in bringing this Bill again before the notice of the House of Commons. The fact was that in 1893 a Bill almost identical with this was promoted by all the local authorities, the Corporation, the parish, and the Bishop of Liverpool. It came before that House, but was thrown out by a chance majority of not more than nine votes in a House of not more than 380 Members. Inasmuch as the feeling of the locality was so much in its favour, was it any wonder that a few years afterwards the local authorities should have again promoted this Bill, and ask this present House of Commons to give it a more favourable consideration than the House which expired without any great sorrow on the part of those on his side gave it in the year 1893? The interesting fact about the Bill as now presented and the Bill which was formerly introduced was that the present Bill was promoted by a different Corporation from that which promoted the Bill of 1893. In 1893 there was an unextended Borough, and that restricted body voted in its favour. Since then the area of the city had been largely extended, and again the question had come up, and by an enhanced and appreciable majority had been approved. So recently as this year the new Bill came before the Corporation, and by 63 or 64 to 16 they desired that it might go forward. The House might, therefore, rely upon it that the Corporation represented strong local feeling. As a matter of fact, this matter had been thoroughly well discussed up and down Liverpool for many a long year. It might be anomalous, according to the present notion, that a corporation should endow churches, but as a matter of fact, the Corporation of Liverpool since 1698 up to a comparatively recent period, having regard to the great interests committed to them, had advanced money to build, endow, and repair churches. Unless the Bill passed, a very serious legal obligation with regard to the repair of the worn-out Church of St. Martin's would fall upon the shoulders of the Corporation. He submitted to the House that the business people of Liverpool could not have sanctioned such terms as those which had been arrived at had they thought them unfair or unjust. The names of the gentlemen on the local Committee, indeed, furnished a guarantee that the terms were most reasonable. Consequently the House might be sure that when the Committee upstairs had looked over the items there would be no question as to whether the Corporation were paying too much to get out of a clearly legal obligation. The hon. Member had endeavoured to point out that some of the sites formerly belonged to the Corporation, and were now practically being given over to the Church, but as a matter of fact, one of the most important sites which was going to be recovered by the Corporation was only given to the Corporation by the Duchy of Lancaster on condition that they built a church. £95,000 was a very moderate figure for the Corporation to pay for the advantages to be obtained, and the Corporation could borrow on such terms that he believed the saving to them would be equivalent to £400 a year. He thought he had shown that there was a strong local feeling in favour of the Bill, that every local authority had declared in its favour, and that the Bill had not been rushed on the House or on the locality. It had been in preparation five or ten years, and, therefore, there was no surprise, and the terms had been obviously most carefully thought out by the best business heads in Liverpool. He considered the House might fairly give the Bill the Second Reading, inasmuch as it was only thrown out by a small majority of nine when before under the consideration of the House. He was pleased to tell the House that the Bill in 1893 had received the imprimatur in the Division Lobby of the Member for Leeds (Mr. Herbert Gladstone).

*MR. MELLOR (York, W. R., Sowerby) said the House had heard three excellent speeches on the subject of the Bill, but they had all dealt with its details; he thought the details of a complicated matter of this description could only be properly examined by a Committee. What they really wanted in this case was the Report of a Select Committee on the Bill. He was of opinion, considering the nature of the Bill, that it would be unfair, indeed, impossible, to ask the House to deal with it now in a satisfactory way, and, therefore, he hoped it would, in the usual manner, be relegated to a Committee. It seemed to him in all these cases difficult to ask the House, at the time of Private Business to reject a Bill of this character on the Motion for its Second Reading. Such Bills as these were generally full of details, and contained local and personal matters, and he had always been of opinion that the House was better able to come to a proper conclusion when such Bills had been examined in the ordinary way. For nearly 200 years, he gathered the Corporation of Liverpool and the parish of Liverpool had had to raise and pay out of the rates an annual sum to pay for the maintenance of these churches, for the salaries of the clergy and of the officers connected with the churches. He did not hesitate to say that such a tax was an odious tax, and he did not think any Member of the House, whether Churchman or Nonconformist, Tory or Liberal, could come to any other conclusion. Well, in regard to the matter, there were only two things to be done. They must either pay the tax or commute the tax. ["Hear, hear!"] The great majority of the ratepayers had agreed to the commutation. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the Corporation, and the parish of Liverpool had agreed to it. They had agreed to this bargain, and was the House, upon the mere suggestion that the amount agreed upon was too large, to reject such a bargain? The whole question was whether the terms were right, and such as the House could affirm. He hoped the House would allow the Bill to go to the Committee, who would examine it and make such a Report that the House would be able to deal with it satisfactorily on the Second Reading.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. WALTER LONG, Liverpool, West Derby) said he was sure the House would do well to follow the admirable advice given by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the Sowerby Division of Yorkshire (Mr. Mellor). He wished to express, on behalf of the Corporation of Liverpool, an entire repudiation of the statement that in the terms they had consented to give in regard to this matter, they had been actuated in any other way than in the direct interests of the ratepayers they represented. He ventured to say that there was no city in which it would be more improper to say that they did not represent their constituents than the Corporation of Liverpool — ["hear, hear!"]—for in regard to this, Liverpool had been recently tested in more ways than one. The Liverpool Corporation believed there were certain existing sums which they owed in reference to these churches, and they were anxious not to repudiate their obligations. The hon. Gentlemen who moved and seconded the rejection of the Bill recommended that those obligations should be repudiated. Liverpool took no such view, and they were prepared in return for what they believed would be a substantial advantage to the city, to come to the fair terms given by the Bill. The terms were well-known in Liverpool, had been approved by all the authorities there, as well as by the residents. Those terms had been very seriously examined, and he sincerely hoped the House would not follow the example of the last House of Commons, but would give the Bill the Second Reading, in order that the straightforward course might be taken of examination by Committee. There was no question of principle involved; the terms could not be examined in that Chamber. Liverpool asked the House to allow them to deal with this matter, which was of great importance to them, whether regarded from the point of view of the Corporation, residents, or ratepayers. The attitude of those who wished to reject the Bill only proceeded from a very small minority of the people of the city of Liverpool. ["Hear, hear!"]

Question put, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

The House divided:—Ayes, 205; Noes, 95.—(Division List, No. 213.)

Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read a Second time.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS moved, "That the Bill be referred to a Committee of five Members, three to be nominated by the House and two by the Committee of Selection. That all Petitions aganst the Bill presented five clear days before the meeting of the Committee be referred to the Committee; that the Petitioners praying to be heard by themselves, their counsel, or agents, be heard against the Bill, and counsel heard in support of the Bill. That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records. That three be the quorum."

MR. W. F. LAWRENCE said he did not see any reason why this Bill should be treated differently from any other Bill, and, therefore, he should oppose the present Motion. ["Hear, hear!"]

The House divided:—Ayes, 117; Noes, 199.—(Division List, No. 214.)

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS)—[EXPENSES].

Committee to consider of authorising the payment, out of moneys to be provided by Parliament, of any expenses of and relating to arbitration which may become payable under the provisions of any Act of the present Session to amend the law with respect to Compensation to Workmen for Accidental Injuries suffered in the course of their employment, and of an compensation that may become payable in respect of Accidents to Workmen employed by or under the Crown in pursuance of such Act (Queen's Recommendation signified), To-morrow. —(Sir Matthew White Ridley.)

QUESTIONS.

QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if, having regard to the fact that the establishment of the Volunteer Force on its present basis as a permanent national institution of unpaid soldiery has been one of the principal events of the Queen's reign, Her Majesty proposes, on the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee, and during the visit of the Nation's guests, to hold a review of the force in London or elsewhere?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford: It will not, I fear, be possible to include a review of the Volunteer Force among the arrangements to be made in celebration of the Diamond Jubilee during the next few weeks, but the force will be largely represented on the occasion of the ceremony of the 22nd.

MR. HARRY FOSTER (Suffolk, Lowestoft): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any arrangement will be made for enabling the Foreign Consular Corps in London to attend the approaching Diamond Jubilee celebration or to take part in the Royal Procession?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): The arrangements in connection with the celebration of Her Majesty's Jubilee do not rest with the Foreign Office. We have not heard that it is in contemplation to make any provision for the attendance or participation of the Foreign Consular Body.

SIR CHARLES DALRYMPLE (Ipswich): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether any arrangement will be made for enabling the High Sheriffs of counties of England to witness the Jubilee Procession, seeing that in 1887 the position which they hold was recognised by their having places assigned to them in Westminster Abbey?

THE FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): I regret that I do not see my way to allot to the High Sheriffs tickets for the stands which are being erected for the Government Departments to view the Queen's Procession.

PRISON SYSTEM (SCOTLAND).

MR. T. C. H. HEDDERWICK (Wick Burghs): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether under the present prison system of Scotland imbecile or weak-minded prisoners are associated in cells with other criminals without the personal supervision either of officers or hired attendants, whose duty it should be to see that such prisoners are not maltreated; whether sick prisoners are left to the care of fellow criminals who are wholly without experience in the treatment of invalids; whether evidence showing that these practices prevailed was given in November last by a number of medical men holding appointments in connection with prisons in Scotland; and whether, in view of the fact that such practices have been condemned by Commissioners of Prisons and abolished both in England and Ireland, he will undertake at an early date to endeavour to assimilate the prison system of Scotland in these particulars to the more humane modes of treatment obtaining in England and Ireland?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. GRAHAM MURRAY, Buteshire): I am informed by the Prison Commissioners for Scotland that when weak-minded prisoners are associated on medical grounds they are under the close inspection of prison officers who are responsible that no prisoner is maltreated, but that all are properly cared for, and by the rules the medical officer has to satisfy himself that the arrangements are effective; that sick prisoners are not left to the care of fellow criminals; and that no record can be found of any evidence given by prison medical officers in November last regarding the care of the sick. The Prison Commissioners are satisfied that the treatment of the sick prisoners is humane, and they have always directed their special attention to this part of prison administration.

SCHOOL BOARD DIVISIONS (LONDON).

MR. T. G. FARDELL (Paddington, S.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education if he has considered the petition recently presented to the Education Department, stating that, in the opinion of the School Board for London, some of the existing School Board divisions are too large for electoral purposes, and praying the Education Department to move Parliament to re-arrange for electoral purposes such divisions as they may deem necessary; and whether the Education Department propose introducing a Bill in Parliament this Session to remedy the grievance?

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): The petition has been received and considered, but I believe the Government do not intend to bring in a Bill on the subject.

TRUCK ACT 1896.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any steps have been taken by the Home Office towards the enforcement of the Truck Act 1896, so far as it relates to shop assistants?

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool): No, Sir; the Act does not require the Secretary of State to enforce its provisions in shops or provide any means for his so doing.

*SIR C. DILKE: Am I to understand the Home Secretary to say that he is not taking any steps similar to those he is taking in regard to the railways?

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: So far as any steps with regard to the railways are concerned, I am in correspondence with them with reference to the provisions of the Act.

*SIR C. DILKE: Are these steps taken by the Home Secretary as to the railways only so far as they come within the Factory Acts? I understood he was taking steps as to the railways generally.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I am in communication with the railway companies, but I have no special power under the Act over them or over shops.

*SIR C. DILKE: My Question really was whether the Home Secretary had taken any such friendly steps with regard to the shops as he has taken in the case of the railways.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: If I could see my way, I would be only too pleased to do so.

NORTH MUNDHAM SCHOOL BOARD.

*MR. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education what has been the result of the Department's communication with the North Mundham School Board relative to the use of the Church Catechism in their school; and whether the Department is aware that the Catechism is still taught in the school?

SIR J. GORST: The result is that the Board have instructed their staff not to teach those parts of the Church Catechism which are distinctive of any particular denomination. The Committee of Council are not aware that any part of the Church Catechism which is distinctive of any particular denomination is now being taught in the school.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS: I wish to ask the right hon. Gentleman whether we are to understand that the Church Catechism may be used in Board Schools if it be not used in its entirety? ["Order, order!"]

*MR. SPEAKER: That is not the Question on the Paper, which has been answered.

RIVER FEALE FISHING.

MR. MICHAEL FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland if he is aware that although licences to fish on the River Feale and its tributaries were issued in March last to rod anglers by the licence agent in Listowel, the men so licensed have been prosecuted for fishing in the close season at the Listowel Petty Sessions Court on 26th April 1897, and that on the application of the solicitor to the Fishery Conservators the cases were adjourned and again further heard on the 10th May and dismissed; also that fresh summonses were issued for the same offence, and again postponed at the request of the Conservators' solicitor; and whether, owing to the great inconvenience and expense caused to the anglers, steps will be taken to prevent further prosecutions?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. J. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.): The facts are substantially as stated in the Question. Licences were issued on the 26th of March under which the fishermen erroneously supposed that they were entitled to fish before the termination of the close time on the 30th of April. They were warned by the Water Bailiffs that they were in error in so assuming, but persisted in fishing. Summonses which had been served for this offence were, in all but one case, either dismissed or had "no appearance" entered on them. Thereupon the Conservators, as they were entitled to do, took out fresh summonses for these offences. The Executive have no power to interfere in the matter.

MR. FLAVIN: I should like to ask the right hon. Gentleman a question on that reply. The prosecutor in this case is the Secretary to the Fishery Board of Limerick. He wrote a letter last— [cries of "Order, order!"]

UXBRIDGE UNION.

MR. J. BIGWOOD (Middlesex, Brentford): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether his attention has been called to the inadequate representation of the precinct of Norwood, Middlesex, upon the Board of Guardians of the Uxbridge Union; and if so, whether he would be disposed to sanction an increase of the representation of Norwood upon that Board commensurate with and in proportion to the common fund of the Union?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. HENRY CHAPLIN, Lincolnshire, Sleaford): The number of Guardians for the parishes in the Uxbridge Union has been fixed by the Middlesex County Council, and any application for an increased number of Guardians for the precinct should be brought under the attention of the County Council, who are empowered by Section 60 (1) of the Local Government Act, 1894, to increase the number of the Guardians if they consider there are sufficient grounds for such increase.

HYDE PARK (FOOTPATHS).

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether he is aware of the present highly unsatisfactory state of the footpaths in Hyde Park; whether he has taken any steps to ameliorate their condition since last year, when they were in a similar state, and when the fact was brought to his notice; and whether he will take immediate action in order to remedy the defect, at least as regards the pathways on the south side, which are so much used at the present season of the year, by having them covered with a good binding quality of gravel, if shell material is, as alleged, difficult to procure?

MR. AKERS-DOUGLAS: The paths in Hyde Park alluded to were a short time since in excellent condition, but in consequence of the prevalence of the dry and windy weather, with the enormous traffic upon them, they have become loose and rough, though they are rolled and watered every day. Everything is being done to meet the complaint of the hon. and gallant Member.

CAPTAIN NORTON: I should like to ask whether similar climatic influences do not exist in almost every country of Europe, and whether they do not contrive to keep their paths in good condition nevertheless? [Cries of "Order, order!"]

ARGENTINE CATTLE TRADE.

SIR JOHN KINLOCH (Perthshire, E.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is aware that vessels engaged in the Argentine cattle trade have cattle stowed not only on both sides of the upper deck, but also in the centre of the vessel, on the top of the closed hatches, leaving a very narrow gangway between the rows of cattle, along which the crew must pass for the working of the ship, and which is liable to become blocked by cattle "fetching away;" and whether, as this may be a source of danger to the working of the ship, the Board of Trade can take any steps to prevent such overcrowding?

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston, on behalf of Mr. RITCHIE): The Regulations of the Argentine Government allow cattle to be carried on the top of the closed hatches, as well as on both sides of the vessel, provided that the stalls are of strong construction and solidly attached to the vessel. But the cattle are not allowed upon any place necessary for the navigation of the vessel. The Board of Trade have no reason to believe that sufficient room is not left for the working of the ship, or that there is any necessity for action on their part.

CAVALRY RECRUITS.

MR. JAMES HOZIER (Lanark, S.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether great care will be taken to point out to cavalry recruits that they can no longer enlist for special cavalry regiments, but can only enlist for the corps of Household Cavalry, the corps of Dragoons, the corps of Hussars, or the corps of Lancers, as the case may be?

MR. BRODRICK: Care is taken to make it clear to recruits that they enlist for a corps, and not for a regiment. The practice of enlisting for cavalry corps has been in force upwards of four years, and any recruit asking for a particular cavalry regiment is told that he cannot be enlisted for it.

MILITIA FIELD OFFICERS.

CAPTAIN NORTON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether it has been brought to his notice that Militia Field Officers who happen to reside out of the county with which their regiment is connected, and who send their chargers direct to the place for annual training, receive no allowance for the conveyance of their chargers outside the county; and whether he is aware that this is one of those extra expenses which tends to deter retired Army officers, whose services are valuable, from accepting commissions as field officers in the Militia?

MR. BRODRICK: The Militia being essentially a local force, it is desirable that officers and men of a Militia battalion should reside within the county to which it belongs; and, therefore, it is not considered necessary to give travelling expenses for either officers or their chargers beyond the county limits when they assemble at headquarters. If a battalion is sent elsewhere for training travelling expenses for the whole journey is provided by the public, that is, from the place of assembly to the place of training.

SECONDARY EDUCATION.

MR. A. J. MUNDELLA (Sheffield, Brightside): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education if he would explain to the House what is meant in the Report of the Committee on the distribution of Science and Art grants by the possession in counties and county boroughs of an organisation for the promotion of secondary education; whether technical instruction committees, or School Boards (having organised Science Schools or Science and Art Classes) are to be understood as being amongst such organisations, and as constituting an authority responsible for Science and Art instruction within its area; and what will be the organisation in districts where both such authorities are or many be in operation?

*SIR J. GORST: The term "organisation for the promotion of secondary education" appears to allude to bodies established by law in Welsh counties and to voluntary combinations of public bodies to prevent overlapping which exist in some, and are desirable in all, English counties. Technical instruction committees and School Boards would come within the category if they were generally accepted as the medium for the dispensation of the Science and Art grants. In districts where no voluntary combination is made, and where rival authorities are in operation, the proposals of the Departmental Committee for preventing overlapping cannot be carried into effect without legislation.

LEAD POISONING.

MR. R. MCKENNA (Monmouth, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been called to the case of James A. Garvey, aged 17, a lead filer, lately employed at the Electrical Power Storage Company's works, Millwall, who died recently from the effects of lead poisoning; whether he is aware that there was one bath at the works at which from 40 to 50 boys were employed, and that the regulation compelling the use of the bath was habitually disregarded; and whether he proposes to take any steps under the circumstances?

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: My attention has been called to this case, but I am unable to find on inquiry that there has been any breach of the Factory Acts or the Special Rules which have been made for electric accumulator works. Employers are required by those Rules to provide a bath. This was done at the works in question, and a time for bathing appointed for each person employed. It is not obligatory at present, however, on the workers to use the bath, and I regret to find that at these works bathing has often been omitted. It may become necessary to take steps to remedy this.

FISHERY CRUISER (SCOTLAND).

MR. J. G. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate, seeing that the new cruiser for the Fishery Board for Scotland is to be delivered on or before the 1st July 1897, will he say whether the contract has been signed; and, if so, will he state the date of the contract and the name of the contractor?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: The question of the larger of the two vessels to be acquired during the present financial year is still under the anxious consideration of the Fishery Board, but matters have not yet reached such a stage as to admit of the contract being placed in the hands of any firm. It has, however, been ascertained that it would be impossible to have the vessel built by the 1st July.

IRISH SCHOOLS (EPIDEMIC DISEASE).

MR. J. L. CAREW (Dublin, College Green): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) is he aware that in Ireland the sanitary authority has no power to have schools closed for the protection of public health in the case of epidemics breaking out, while in England the sanitary authority has such power conferred upon it; and (2) will the Government extend the same salutary protective power to Ireland?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): The facts, I believe, are correctly stated in the first paragraph, though in England the managers of a school may appeal to the Education Department if they consider the notice requiring the school to be closed unreasonable. I should not like to answer the second paragraph without having an opportunity of consulting the Commissioners of National Education and taking their views.

CUSTOM HOUSE (LONDON).

MR. CHARLES WILSON (Hull, W.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will inquire into the loss and inconvenience caused to the trade of London by the position of the Custom House with its long river frontage, at present not used, and which space is urgently required by the fishing and coasting trades?

MR. HANBURY: A full inquiry was made in 1881 into the question of the situation of the Custom House and its advantage or otherwise to the trade of London, which is, of course, much larger than the fishing and coasting trades mentioned in the Question. The London Corporation at that time wished to buy the site in order to enlarge Billingsgate market. It was found that its proximity to the Bank of England and the principal merchants and brokers was of great advantage to trade. It was also shown that if the site were occupied by a market or commercial buildings the block of traffic in and about Lower Thames Street —which is considerable now—would become much worse. While this is the case few would wish to see the Custom House building replaced by a row of warehouses, especially as the present quay is thrown open to the public and affords a much-needed open space for recreation in a thickly-populated district of the East-end.

NEWBLISS PETTY SESSIONS COURTHOUSE (CO. MONAGHAN).

MR. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland does he intend to take such steps as may prevent the Petty Sessions Courthouse at Newbliss, County Monaghan, being used for the purposes of faction during the forthcoming Orange anniversaries in Ulster?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have nothing to add to the reply given by me on this subject to the hon. Member's previous Question of the 4th February last.

LIGHT RAILWAYS (IRELAND).

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland what sum has been given to the County Kerry for the construction or in aid of railways out of the total amount voted by Parliament last year?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No portion of the money provided by the Act of last year has been allocated to Kerry in aid of the construction of railways, but a coach service between Listowel and Tarbert has been arranged for, as well as a steamer service between Tarbert and Kilrush. Under the Act of 1883, a capital sum of £250,000 has been expended in Kerry, to the dividends on which the Treasury contribute 2 per cent., and under the Act of 1889 a sum of £135,000 was expended in the county on railways in the form of free grants.

DUTY ON HERRINGS.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he will state on what ground the Foreign Office assumes there would be no advantage in making representations to the Governments of Russia and Austria to give effect to the recommendations in the Fourteenth Annual Report of the Fishery Board for Scotland in regard to a reduction in the duty on herrings imported from Scotland into those countries?

MR. CURZON: The ground of the assumption to which the hon. Member refers is that under the circumstances there appears to be no reasonable chance of inducing the Russian Government to acquiesce in a reduction of the duty.

MR. WEIR: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman whether he has made any efforts to obtain a reduction?

MR. CURZON: There is no use in making efforts that are foredoomed to failure.

WORKMISTRESSES (IRISH NATIONAL SCHOOLS).

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can now state if there is any intention on the part of the Government to redress the grievances under which workmistresses in National Schools in Ireland labour?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have already more than once stated that certain proposals had been made in relation to the remuneration of workmistresses, but that the Treasury, having given these representations their best consideration, were unable to sanction the proposals. I am afraid I have no further information to give the hon. Member.

LONDONDERRY LUNATIC ASYLUM.

MR. VESEY KNOX (Londonderry): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury will be explain why the Irish Board of Works have refused to grant a loan at less than 3½ per cent. to the governors of the Londonderry Lunatic Asylum, though the loan would be secured on the rates of the city and county of Derry; whether he is aware that 3 per cent. stock has recently been issued at par, secured on the rates of the city alone; whether the payment required by the Treasury on account of sinking fund is 2 per cent. if the loan be for 50 years, and 5 per cent. if the loan be for 20 years, and at what rates of interest this sinking fund is calculated to be invested; and whether, having regard to the general complaints of high interest charged to local authorities in Ireland, he will include in the Public Works Loans Bill any provisions dealing with this matter?

MR. HANBURY: The Irish Board of Works could not, of course, grant a loan at less than 3½ per cent. without the sanction of the Treasury, and the Treasury see no reason for making Londonderry an exception to the general rule for similar cases. The history of that rule is this: Up to 1893 Lunatic Asylum Loans bore interest at 3½ per cent., and were repayable within 14 years only. In 1894, under the authority of the Public Works Loans (No. 3) Act of 1893, the Treasury fixed 3½ per cent. as the rate for loans for permanent works repayable during 35 years, and 3¾ when the period was 50 years. In June, 1895, the late Board of Treasury arranged to make 3½ per cent. the rate for all periods up to 50 years, and allowed 50 years even for such non-permanent purposes as the purchase of furniture. The terms for Irish Lunatic Asylums Loans are in that respect unprecedented. There are no other loans running for 50 years which pay less interest, not even those for the housing of the working classes, and many others offer equally good security. It must be remembered, too, that the Local Loans Stock is a 3 per cent. stock not redeemable till 1912, and even at present rates the fund little more than covers its expenses. The local authorities in Ireland are not charged more than local authorities in Great Britain. Lunatic asylum expenditure is under the Grand Juries, and the Irish Government have been considering the question of allowing the local authority to borrow in he open market. To such a proposal the Treasury would not be opposed.

MR. KNOX: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to a resolution of the Governors of the Londonderry Lunatic Asylum declaring that the terms for Board of Works loans are excessive, and declining to take any more money on such terms; and whether, the governors may under the present law borrow from the general public by the issue of Stock or otherwise, and if they have no such power, whether he will propose to confer it upon them by legislation?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: A Bill has already been drafted containing a provision enabling Lunatic Asylums to be erected or enlarged by means of the creation of Stock. Such Stock would, however, be issued by Grand Juries and not by the Governors of Asylums. In view of the changes in local Government in Ireland, which it is proposed to carry out next Session, I had some doubts whether it was worth while to proceed with this Bill, but I am quite ready to introduce it and endeavour to secure its passage if unopposed.

Mr. KNOX asked whether the right hon. Gentleman, after the Bill had been introduced, would get it through at once if he understood there was no opposition?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Yes I am quite ready to do that.

BURIAL (PREMATURE).

Mr. CUMMING MACDONA (Southwark, Rotherhithe): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been drawn to the statement made by the London Association for the Prevention of Premature Burial, in The Lancet of 24th April, that in England and Wales 16,000 persons are annually buried without medical certificates of any sort; and whether the Government will take the matter into its serious consideration so as to prevent as much as possible persons being prematurely buried?

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I have not seen the statement to which the hon. Member alludes, but it is not the case that 16,000 persons are buried annually without medical certificates. The number of uncertified deaths in 1896 was 11,464; and there has been a steady decrease for many years past, both in the actual number of such deaths and in the proportion which they bear to the total number of deaths. No cases of premature burial have been brought to my notice, nor am I aware that it is a matter which falls within my jurisdiction; but in any case I am unable to see that the obtaining a certificate of death would be a guarantee against a premature burial taking place.

Mr. MACDONA: Arising out of that answer, may I ask the right hon. Gentleman whether he is not aware that a number of medical men entertain the opinion that a great number of people are buried prematurely?

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: No, Sir; I am not. Certificates of death when given are given by the medical men. Therefore it follows that, in their opinion, the persons in regard to whom the certificates are given are dead.

ROOSKEY BRIDGE (COUNTY ROSCOMMON).

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland who is responsible for the state of the wearing of the public road at the old mill-race of the canal cutting at the bridge of Rooskey, county Roscommon; is he aware that Thomas Carroll, of Rooskey, was nearly killed by a fall there on 5th January last; whether the Shannon Commissioners, or the Board of Works, or the Grand Jury of Roscommon is responsible for the unprotected condition of this place at the point; and, will he make any representations to those responsible to effect a repair for the protection of the public?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND: I have communicated with the county Surveyor, who is making inquiries into the matter. He reports to me that a space of about three feet exists between the parapet of the bridge and the end of the fence built along the canal many years ago, by, it is believed, the Shannon Commissioners. It is through this space that Thomas Carroll walked and met with the accident. It is under consideration whether it may not be possible to build up this space or erect some barrier to prevent such accidents in future.

STORNOWAY AND CARLOWAY ROAD.

Mr. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether, in view of the fact that the road between Stornoway and Carloway, which was authorised during the time Lord Lothian was Secretary for Scotland, and at his suggestion was so made as to admit of the construction of a light railway, has recently been surveyed by the Highland Railway Company, and that there is every reason to believe that this Company would undertake to construct and work a light railway between Stornoway and Carloway so soon as the road is complete, will the Government, having regard to the impetus that such a railway would give to the development of the fishing industry on the Atlantic Seaboard of Lewis, consider the expediency of taking steps to secure the completion of the road.

The LORD ADVOCATE: The road in question was, graded and was provided with bridges which no doubt would carry a light railway if the road were satisfactory completed. But the Secretary for Scotland can give no undertaking at present as to the completion of the road.

Mr. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate how many miles of the Carloway Road have been completed; how many miles of the road have yet to be made; and can he state approximately the length of road which will have been completed when the balance of the grant now in hand has been expended?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: The first section for about 4¼ miles from Stornoway has been completed. The third and fourth sections, from Braesclete (3¾ miles) and Carloway Harbour (6½ miles) to the junction of those roads, are about three-fourths completed. The second section, from the end of No. 1 section to the junction of roads to Carloway Harbour and Braesclete (6 miles,) is hardly commenced. The probable total length of road which will be completed when the remainder of the grant is expended on it will not exceed 5½ miles.

PORT NESS HARBOUR (LEWIS.)

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate, in view of the fact that the Arbitrator's award in the Port Ness Harbour dispute is now in the hands of the Scottish Office, will he state whether advantage is being taken of the summer weather to advance the work; will he state the number of men employed on the works; will he consider the desirability of blowing up and clearing away the rock in the entrance way to the Harbour; and will he state when he expects the work to be completed?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: No work on Port Ness Harbour is being done at present. There are no men employed by Government on this work. It is not considered necessary to remove any more rock in the entrance to the Harbour, this being already reduced to low water level which is that of the Harbour. It is not known when the work will be completed; this will depend on the action of the trustees.

RURAL POSTMEN (IRELAND).

MR. MACALEESE: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, is it intended to increase the number of rural postmen, in view of the contemplated house-to-house delivery of letters in the country districts of Ireland?

MR. HANBURY: Yes. There can be no doubt that the number of rural postmen will be increased.

AGRICULTURAL RATING ACT (IRELAND.)

MR. W. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether the £74,000 accruing to Ireland under the Agricultural Rating Act is bearing interest; if so, how much, and for what purpose will it be used?

MR. HANBURY: The £74,000 was paid into the Irish Local Taxation Account at the Bank of Ireland at the end of the last financial year. No interest is ordinarily paid on moneys paid into the Local Taxation Accounts of any of the three kingdoms, and Parliament made no special provision for the £74,000 in the Act of last Session. If the Irish Government are advised that they have power to make some special arrangement with respect to the temporary employment of these moneys, the Treasury will be willing to consider any proposal submitted to them.

CERTIFICATED TEACHERS (SCOTLAND).

MR. J. DILLON (Mayo, E.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education whether it is proposed to allow Irish certificated teachers to teach in State-aided schools in Scotland on the same terms as they are now allowed to teach in English Schools?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: The matter to which the Question of the hon. Member refers has not been brought under the consideration of the Scotch Education Department since I gave a reply on the 5th March last, to the effect that no change has been made in regard to the recognition of Irish Certificates under the Scottish Code.

MR. DILLON: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman if, now the matter has been brought under the attention of the Scotch Education Department, they will follow the precedent set in England?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: I cannot make that promise; but if a formal application be made to the Scotch Education Department the Committee of Council on Scotch Education will consider it.

CRETE.

MR. G. LAMBERT (Devon, South Molton): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether as the state of affairs in Crete demands an early settlement of the question of government, the Powers have agreed as to the form of government to be conferred on the island?

Mr. CURZON: Although the Powers are agreed that Crete shall enjoy complete autonomy under the suzerainty of the Sultan, the details of the scheme are still under consideration, and it is not yet possible to make any announcement on the subject.

Mr. LAMBERT asked the right hon. Gentleman when he considered he would be able to make some statement on the subject?

Mr. CURZON: I should hesitate to give any promise.

TURCO-GREEK WAR (ARMISTICE).

Mr. C. P. SCOTT (Lancashire, Leigh) asked the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether he could now state the terms of the armistice signed in Thessaly and the period for which it had been concluded?

Mr. CURZON: We understand from the Greek Chargé d'Affaires in this country, and from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, that the following armistice was signed on the Taratza Hills near Lamia on the 20th instant:—

> "From 3.15 p.m. armistice is concluded between the belligerents. The troops will hold the line of outposts now in their possession. Flank movements are forbidden. The neutral zone between the two forces will be defined by superior officers on both sides on the 22nd of May."

There is no mention in the armistice of the period for which it is to remain in force, but according to information received from Mr. Egerton, the Turkish Commander-in-Chief in Thessaly considers that it has been concluded only for fifteen days.

CHARGE OF ROBBERY (CO. TYRONE).

Mr. MACALEESE: I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland if the brothers Maguire, detained in prison for a very lengthened period on a charge of robbery from the person of a dead man named Triston, near Trillick, in the county Tyrone, can be assigned counsel to move in the superior courts for their liberation on bail, seeing they are reduced to the condition of paupers and are unable to provide legal assistance for themselves?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND: I have no power to provide the legal assistance suggested. I may mention that a sum of £97. 8s. 5½d. was found upon the Maguires when arrested. £50 of this, which was in American money, was on the 10th of July, 1896 returned, and the balance £47. 8s. 5½d. retained by the authorities. The sum of £102. 2s. 1d. was paid by the Crown to the prisoners towards the expenses of their trial at the Winter Assizes in Belfast, and I am quite ready to direct that an adequate sum be returned to them out of the moneys in the hands of the authorities, to enable them to apply to be admitted on bail.

IRISH MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that the London and North Western Railway Company now run some of their express trains to Holyhead in from half an hour to an hour less time than they take to carry the mails on the day service between London and Holyhead; whether, as the mail train service is so heavily subsidised by the Government, he will take steps to secure that the Irish mail trains on the day service are run at a speed at least equal to the 10.15 p.m. express train belonging to the same Company, which is not subsidised; and whether, in view of the strong representations made as to the inconvenience to the travelling public of the early departure of the Irish day mail trains from Euston and Westland Row, he proposes to alter the starting hour from Euston to 8.30 a.m. and from Westland Row to 7.45 a.m.?

Mr. HANBURY: One of the express trains from Euston, namely, the 10.15 p.m. train recently established, travels to Holyhead in 5 hours 15 minutes, while the day mail train, which leaves Euston at 7.15 a.m. occupied 6 hours and 5 minutes. The express train only makes one stop on the way, namely, at Crewe, but the day mail train stops at five intermediate stations. The speed of the day mail trains has not been accelerated, as the postal advantages to be secured were not such as appeared to justify the additional expense. The times of departure of the day mail trains from Euston and Westland Row respectively were fully considered in connection with the changes which took effect on the 1st April, but the interests of the mail service could not of course, be entirely sacrificed to the convenience of the passengers. The present hour of dispatch of the mail from Euston was therefore maintained, namely, 7.15 a.m., so as to secure an early delivery of the day mail letters in Dublin; but as regards the up mail, the Postmaster General was able so far to meet the desire in Ireland for a later dispatch from Westland Row as to fix the hour at 7.10 a.m., instead of at 6.40 a.m. Any later dispatch than 7.10 a.m. would have resulted, not only in a later delivery of the correspondence in London and other towns in England, but in a failure of connection via Chester and Preston with the day mail to Edinburgh and Glasgow.

Mr. P. J. O'BRIEN (Tipperary, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether any steps have been taken to carry out the promise he gave some time ago for the improvement of the mail service to the south of Ireland by affording an earlier daily delivery of letters to Roscrea, Nenagh, Birr, and towns adjoining; or if he can state when, or how soon, the desired change may be effected for these localities?

Mr. HANBURY: The promise referred to was that the Postmaster General would take into consideration a suggestion that the day mail bags for Roscrea, Nenagh, Birr, etc., should be put out of the mail train from Dublin at Ballybrophy Junction and a goods train from that point utilized for their conveyance to destination. This suggestion has been placed before the Railway Company, who state that the alterations necessary to make the goods train available would result in serious inconvenience and that the suggestion is not one which they can adopt. There is no other way of accelerating the day mail service to the towns in question, at a cost which the post office would be justified in expending.

COLLEGE OF SCIENCE (DUBLIN).

Mr. CAREW: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland when will the work of building the promised new College of Science in Dublin be commenced?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: Until the Report of the Departmental Committee has been received and considered, t will not be possible to make any statement in reference to this matter.

SHORTHORN BULLS (IRELAND).

Mr. JASPER TULLY (Leitrim, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state on whose recommendation the Congested Districts Board have adopted the policy of buying shorthorn bulls in Scotland while there were over 400 offered in the Dublin Show and at Rodson's Sale in Belfast, and what success, if any, has attended this experiment?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The Congested Districts Board, as a result of their own experience, decided to try the experiment of purchasing bulls that had not been made up for purposes of show or sale, as it was found that animals so made up were not sufficiently hardy for rough usage in the West of Ireland.

ADDERGOOLE AND BALLYNAGORAHER DISTRICT (CASTLEBAR UNION).

Dr. ROBERT AMBROSE (Mayo, W): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to a resolution of the Castlebar Board of Guardians of 8th May, in which they declare the existence of grave distress in the Addergoole and Ballynagoraher districts, and the necessity for relief works to cope with such distress; and what action will he take with regard to such resolution?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I have received a copy of the resolution referred to. Careful investigation has been made by the Local Government Board, since the resolution was passed, into the condition of the poorer classes in this district, and there does not appear to be any necessity for the adoption of exceptional measures, as suggested.

GLEBE ACT (IRELAND).

Mr. P. O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that clergymen in Ireland who wish to provide parochial houses under the Glebe Act are required to pay interest at the rate of five per cent. for a loan extending to a term of thirty years; and whether he will consider the advisability of granting such loans at a lower rate of interest for a longer term?

Mr. HANBURY: The hon. Member is mistaken in supposing that the interest on these loans is five per cent. It is only three-and-a-half per cent. The five per cent. charge covers repayment of principal as well as interest, and the period is 35 years, not 30. The terms are therefore much easier than the hon. Member appears to think.

SHIRLEY AND TENNISON ESTATES (COUNTY MONAGHAN).

Mr. JAMES DALY (Monaghan, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the decisions have been delivered in the cases heard at Carrickmacross on 18th March from the Shirley and Tennison estates, County Monaghan; and, whether he can say when the viewing of the farms was completed?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The inspection of the holdings referred to was completed last week, and it is expected that the Sub-Commission will be able to announce its decisions on the 31st instant.

GRAND JURY ACCOUNTS (COUNTY MONAGHAN).

Mr. DALY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware if the promised audit of the accounts of the Secretary of the Grand Jury of county Monaghan has taken place; and whether he can say what sum has the Secretary to the Grand Jury of Monaghan been surcharged with on account of the illegal charge he has been making to road contractors for tender forms in the Barony of Farney.

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The accounts of the Grand Jury of Monaghan have been audited. The question of the fees charged by the Secretary to the Grand Jury for these tender forms does not come before the Auditor in his audit of the County Accounts. The Auditor, however, understands that all tender forms are now only charged the statutory fee of sixpence.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ACT.

Mr. LAMBERT: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he can state when the Bill for amending the Agricultural Holdings Act will be introduced?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.): I am afraid I can give no specific pledge on the subject of the hon. Member's Question.

Mr. LAMBERT: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the President of the Board of Agriculture gave notice of the introduction of the Bill for the first day of last Session, and does he not think it is now time to do something?

[No answer was given.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FAITHFULL BEGG (Glasgow, St. Rollox): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, in view of his intention to move an adjournment from Monday 21st to Thursday, 24th June, thereby depriving Members of the means of prosecuting Bills set down for the 23rd, he will undertake not to interfere with the position of Bills set down on 7th July, to which the House has given a Second Reading?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: As my hon. Friend is aware, the Government are under engagement to give two Wednesdays after Whitsuntide in order that there may be an opportunity for private Members to proceed with legislation commenced before Whitsuntide. The order in which Bills appear upon the Notice Paper for Wednesdays depends, I believe, upon fixed rules which do not depend upon the Government, therefore I cannot enter into any pledge with my hon. Friend with regard to any special Bill.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACTS (ROYAL COMMISSION).

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, can he indicate whether the terms of reference for the new Commission to inquire into the working of the Land Acts will be laid upon the Table of the House before the Whitsuntide Recess?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: It is not, of course, usual to lay upon the Table of the House the terms of reference to a Royal Commission.

MR. FARRELL asked if the terms would be stated before the House rose on June 4th.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY could not give any specific date upon which the terms of reference could be announced, but he hoped the date would not be a great distance of time.

METROPOLITAN WATER COMPANIES BILL.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. H. CHAPLIN, Lincolnshire, Sleaford) in asking leave to introduce a Bill to amend the law respecting the Metropolitan Water Companies, explained that it was brought forward in fulfilment of an undertaking which he gave earlier in the Session. As the House was aware, the chief subject of controversy which surrounded the question of the London water supply had already been referred for inquiry to a Royal Commission. Pending the result of that inquiry it had been urged upon them, and the Government were of that opinion themselves that, something might be done with advantage to strengthen the position of the water consumer. The water consumer in the metropolis was often placed in a position of great disadvantage when he found himself in conflict with the water companies. At present, when the consumer found himself aggrieved his course was to go to the magistrates in some cases and to the Local Government Board in others. In applying to the Local Government Board he must be supported by 20 resident householders, and sometimes, owing to technical objections, their applications were found to be invalid. The present means of redress entailed upon each individual consumer great trouble and very often expenses they were quite unwilling to pay. That being so, what the Government proposed was not to alter, but add to the existing law. They proposed to do it in this way. They left the water consumers of the metropolis all the rights and remedies they possessed at present; they created an additional tribunal before which their complaints could be made, and called in the local authorities to aid and assist them. At present the complaints had to be initiated by the consumer; but under the Bill the local authorities would also be empowered to take the initiative, and the tribunal which was to hear their complaints would be the Railway and Canal Commission. They had chosen that tribunal for two reasons—first, because it was not too much overburdened with work at the present time; and, secondly, because it seemed to be very undesirable to create an entirely new tribunal for the purpose of giving effect to what must be after all only a temporary Measure until the Royal Commission had reported. The Bill was a very short one; it was also a simple and a modest Measure. The new powers and duties, however, which they were conferring on the local authorities must not be underrated, they were very considerable, and he was in great hopes that this proposal would be found to be an adequate fulfilment of the undertaking which he gave at an earlier period of the Session. [Cheers.]

*SIR JOSEPH PEASE (Durham, Barnard Castle) said that last year the Committee over which he had had the honour to preside on the London Water Bills passed unanimously a Report calling the attention of the House to the state of affairs which existed at present, than which, perhaps, nothing could be worse for so densely crowded a population as London. He was afraid the Bill which his right hon. Friend proposed to introduce was no remedy, and that palliatives of this character would only add to the evils which already existed. The local authority was not placed in a position to deal with the water companies or the water supply as in many towns. He thought the House must face before very long the grave difficulties which arose from the present position of affairs. If this great city, which was so constantly increasing in population, was to be kept thoroughly well supplied with water, there must be some principle laid down for handing to the local authority the supply, or giving to the water companies, under charge of Parliament, not merely regulations as regarded disputes, but general regulations which ought to apply to all the companies supplying London on a more extensive scale than that which was now proposed. ["Hear, hear!"]

Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Chaplin, Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Ritchie, and Mr. T. W. Russell; presented accordingly, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Monday next, and to be printed.—[Bill 267.]

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) BILL.

Order for Committee read.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) said this Bill made a grant of public money in the schedule which provided that any arbitrator other than the County Court Judge should be paid out of money provided by Parliament. He thought that the making of a charge in the schedule to a Bill was most novel, and so far as he could ascertain without precedent. He thought they ought to have the Committee of Ways and Means before they considered that part of the schedule.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! That Committee has already been set up.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES said the question remained whether it would be necessary to take the Committee of Ways and Means before the schedule, or the clause which incorporated the schedule. The charge, he believed, resided in the first clause.

*MR. SPEAKER: The Money Committee (there is no question of the Committee of Ways and Means) for authorising the grant of money for the expenses involved in the Bill must be taken before the third section of the second schedule is reached. That is the charging part of the Bill. All that the first clause of the Bill says is that compensation is to be settled by arbitration "in accordance with the second schedule to this Act." That does not fix what the terms of the second schedule are to be. Those are to be settled after the first clause has been passed, and when the second schedule is reached. There is nothing in the first clause to say that the terms of the second schedule shall be the identical terms in which it stands. The House may alter it, or even strike out the power to refer to any one of the County Court Judges, and the consequent charges, but no charge can be dealt with by the Committee under that third clause of the second schedule until a Resolution in a Money Committee has been passed.

The following Notices relating to the Order stood upon the Paper:—

SIR JOHN JENKINS: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert clauses in the Bill with a view to provide that the owners of royalties shall contribute to the compensation paid in respect of accidents that take place in the course of the carrying on of a trade or industry in respect of which they receive such royalties."

MR. PICKERSGILL: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert provisions for a scheme of insurance under State supervision to secure to workmen the payment of the amounts of compensation which may be awarded to them under the Bill."

MR. McKENNA: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert clauses in the Bill with a view to amending the law of Employers' Liability, in respect of those trades or industries to which the Bill does not otherwise apply."

MR. SAMUEL EVANS: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert provisions in the Bill to enable employers of workmen in mines and quarries to deduct yearly out of any royalties payable by them to any landowners or persons in respect of any mines, minerals, or substances won, gotten, raised, or worked out of or in such mines and quarries a sum not greater than one-half the yearly sum paid, or which would be required to be paid, by the said employers for insuring themselves against liability for compensation under the Bill."

MR. SAMUEL EVANS: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert provisions in the Bill in order that the burden of compensation to be paid under this Bill by employers of workmen in mines and quarries may be distributed and borne equitably between such employers and the owners of all royalties payable by such employers in respect of all mines, minerals, and substances won, gotten, raised, or worked out of or in such mines and quarries."

MR. TENNANT: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert provisions to secure compensation to workmen for injuries to health arising out of and in the course of their employment."

MR. BUTCHER: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to introduce into the Bill such provisions as may be necessary to abolish the doctrine of common employment as affecting the right of a workman to compensation for personal injury."

MR. SETON-KARR: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert provisions in the Bill that, in the event of any employer or employers being proved financially unable to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade to pay the compensation that may become payable under this Bill, or any part of it that the Board of Trade have power to remit all or any part of such compensation as may be deemed equitable, consideration being given to the fact as to whether the said employers have used all proper and statutory precautions to prevent accident."

MR. HAROLD RECKITT: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert clauses in the Bill with a view to provide for the compensation of workmen where the employer is a foreign shipowner without assets in this country."

MR. JOSEPH A. PEASE: To move,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to make the State liable to pay compensation under the Bill."

*MR. SPEAKER: There are several Instructions on the Paper with reference to the First Order of the Day, Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill. These I will now deal with. The first Instruction, standing in the name of the hon. Member for Carmarthen Boroughs, and the two which stand in the name of the hon. Member for Mid Glamorgan, propose to deal with the relations of lessors and lessees of mines. That subject, I think, is outside the scope of the Bill, which relates wholly to the relations of employers and employed, nor does the fact that the lessee happens to be the employer of a workman in a mine affect the point. The Amendment standing in the name of the hon. Member for Bethnal Green and also that of the hon. Member for Northumberland (Tyneside)—the one proposing a scheme of insurance under State supervision, and the other a scheme for State insurance—are both out of order as being outside the scope of the Bill and involving a charge on the revenue. Then there is the Instruction of the hon. Member for North Monmouth, which seeks to insert clauses with a view to amend the law of employers' liability in respect of those trades or industries to which the Bill does not apply. At present the Bill applies only to certain trades, and it will be competent to hon. Members to propose to add other trades, but it will not be competent by Instruction or otherwise to deal by way of amendment with the law relating to trades which are excluded from the Bill, both as it stands at present, and as it ultimately may stand. The Instruction standing in the name of the hon. Member for Berwick proposes to empower the Committee to insert provisions to secure compensation to workmen for injuries to health arising out of and in the course of their employment. If the Bill were not expressly limited on the face of it to injuries arising from accidents I should have said that that matter might have been dealt with by way of amendment without an Instruction; but, having regard to the express terms of the Bill, I am of opinion that the Instruction is necessary and it is in order. The Amendment of the hon. Member for York proposes to introduce provisions to abolish the doctrine of common employment as affecting the right to compensation. As regards any trades that are included in, or may be added to the list in the Bill, of course that might be done by Amendment, and no Instruction is necessary; as regards other trades, the Instruction would not be in order, as the law affecting them is outside the scope of the Bill. The Amendment of the hon. Member for St. Helens, dealing with the case of employers who may be financially unable to pay compensation, is out of order, because the matter can be dealt with by way of Amendment. The Amendment of the hon. Member for the Brigg Division is out of order. It proposes to insert clauses to provide for the compensation of workmen where the employer is a foreign shipowner without assets in this country. Seamen are not at present included in the Bill; if it be intended to include them, such inclusion can only cover the case of seamen employed in the United Kingdom or on British ships. For that no Instruction would be necessary. If it is intended to cover the case of seamen employed by foreign shipowners on foreign ships, that would be outside the scope of an Instruction, if not altogether outside the powers of Parliament. That disposes of all the Instructions except that of the hon. Member for Berwickshire.

*MR. H. J. TENNANT (Berwickshire) accordingly rose to move:—

> "That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert provisions to secure compensation to workmen for injuries to health arising out of and in the course of their employment."

His first contention was that the man whose health was undermined was more deserving of pity and of compensation than the man who met with an accident, grievous though that was. Because, while both were prevented from working, the man whose health was injured transmitted to his children a weakly and impaired organisation which unfitted them for the struggle of life. His second proposition was that there were many very sad cases of illness which were contracted through no fault of either employer or employed. In illustration of that he took the case of the Sheffield file-makers, and quoted from the Report of the Registrar General, who found that 1,667 file-makers died as compared with 1,000 in other trades at corresponding ages and periods, and that the mortality from lead-poisoning was twice as great in that trade as in other classes and occupations. The Registrar General further mentioned that had it been possible to compile a column dealing with the file-cutters, as distinguished from the file-makers, a still higher percentage of mortality would have been shown. As regarded the case of the lead-workers in Newcastle, through the kindness of Dr. Oliver, who presided over the infirmary, he had ascertained that fact that in seven years from 1890 228 cases of lead-poisoning were admitted to that institution, 10 of which resulted fatally. Dr. Oliver added that the numbers stated gave no criterion of the total number of the cases occurring in the district, because many of the workmen who were ill went to the doctor at the works. These lead-workers had no trade organisation and no benefit society, and the result was that when they broke down from lead-poisoning they were nearly always thrown on the rates. If the Bill were to deal with accidents which arose from nobody's negligence, it was obvious that it should also include cases where health was undermined simply through the nature of the employment. But if the Government would agree to the Instruction, he would accept a provision restricting compensation to the cases in which negligence could be proved against the employer. The Colonial Secretary had maintained that it would be extremely difficult to prove that the injury to health resulted from the employment. There were many cases, however, where there could be no doubt. He would mention some. A girl, aged 17, employed for three years in the lead process of the Pottery trade, had to go to hospital for lead poisoning, and left almost totally blind. Another girl, of the same age, and in the same employment, was attacked with partial paralysis, and after 12 weeks in hospital was discharged, but with the loss of her sight. Representations had been made to her employers, but nothing had been done for her. Another girl, aged 18, who had been employed in the lead process as a dipper since January 1896, was seized with a fit in the January of this year, and had now been discharged from hospital with the loss of sight in one eye, and with her general health so impaired that she could not hope ever to be able to work again. The Government had urged that if these cases were included in the Bill, the Measure would be very difficult to pass. The time of the House could not be more fitly occupied than in the discussion of proposals to give, not justice, for that was impossible, but some small compensation to those who had lost the greatest gift of life. ["Hear, hear!"]

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool): There is a great deal of force and truth in what the hon. Member says as to its being equally sad, whether a workman be rendered incapable of earning his livelihood by disease or by accident. And I take the opportunity of offering my thanks to the hon. Member for his services to the Home Office in respect of the adoption of precautions in the case of dangerous trades. It takes some time to introduce these; but it is being done more and more; and much of the improvement is due to the hon. Member. But when we are asked to put into a Bill which is to provide for compensation in case of unexpected accidents provisions for compensation in case of injury to health resulting from employment in a dangerous trade, we are asked to do something of which the definition is difficult and which will open the door to much dispute and litigation. The position is not the same as it was with the Bill of 1893. We are providing for accidents alone under this Bill, and to that extent we abolish the doctrine of volenti non fit injuria. But in the cases quoted by the hon. Member, though the trades mentioned are well known to be dangerous, the effect upon the health is very different with different persons. Women are much more injuriously affected than men. There is a broad and substantial difference between a person who is injured by an accident and one who is injured by the nature of the trade in which he is employed. If the obligation be thrown upon the employer to compensate the latter, it will be made necessary for him not to employ men or women who are likely to suffer in health; and that would not be a very good thing for the workpeople. At present, if a workman suffers injury to health in the course of his employment in a dangerous trade, and can show that it is due to the negligence of his master or foreman in not applying the necessary precautions, then he has a remedy against the master. And, though I do not say that that is a satisfactory remedy, I think that the House would be wise not to introduce into a Bill dealing with accidents the far more complicated and difficult question of the permanent injury to health caused by some trades. It may be difficult for the arbitrator under this Bill to decide any of the questions which will be brought before him. But in the case of the diseases brought on by the lead industry, how much more difficult will it be for him to say that a particular condition of bodily health is due to the industry and not to the constitution of the individual? I hope the House will not accept an Instruction which will complicate the whole Bill and render it almost impossible to carry out.

MR. R. B. HALDANE (Haddington) said that it was difficult to see on what theory the Home Secretary rested his exclusion of this class of case. The Bill proposed to make provision for the injured workman; and now the Government were drawing a distinction between two classes of injuries and declaring that the one should carry compensation and that the other should not. The right hon. Gentleman had said that this Amendment would not be in the interests of the working classes, because it would keep those who were delicate and susceptible to injury out of employment. Surely that was one of the strongest arguments in favour of the Instruction. ["Hear, hear!"] It was the only way to make prevention really effective. If they put on the employer the burden of seeing that the material used in the course of his trade were not injurious to the health of the workers, they would most certainly have a substantial diminution in the numbers of cases of chemical poisoning. It was impossible to defend the position of the Government in the matter. He could understand them saying, "We must not overload the Bill." But why select for exclusion those cases of injuries to health which nothing but the skill, knowledge, and means of the employer could avoid. A curious case of explosion from blasting gelatine, a substance nearly akin to cordite, had recently come under his notice. The substance was set on fire in the midst of two or three workmen with apparently no evil effects to them. However, in the course of a few days they were attacked with what appeared to be acute bronchitis, and died, but the post-mortem examinations showed that the cause of death was chemical poisoning. Those were the cases to which the Instruction proposed to extend the protection of the Bill. If the Bill were to be really useful they must include within its operation all classes of injuries to health and body which arose directly in the course of employment. If the Government desired to lighten the Bill, let them not put outside its scope the very class of cases it was most important they should bring inside—the class of cases in which prevention was essential and in which that prevention could only be got by that scientific skill which only the knowledge, experience, and means of the employer could supply.

*COLONEL BLUNDELL (Lancashire, Ince) thought the Instruction was impracticable. If a workman employed in several employments broke down in health, it would be impossible to say in which of the employments the man's health was affected.

*MR. JOHN BURNS (Battersea) said the Instruction was eminently necessary; and it came with peculiar grace from an hon. Member who was connected indirectly with the chemical trade, and who had great experience of the subject as Chairman of the Committee on Dangerous Trades. He had heard with alarm the statement of the Home Secretary that dangerous trades could not be included in the Bill. The Bill would apply to something like six millions of workmen, and he ventured to say that if the Instruction were accepted not 7,000 would come under the Bill for compensation in 10 years. Cases of the kind were not large in number; but they were very acute in the amount of pain and disablement they imposed on workmen, and for that reason alone he thought the Instruction should be accepted. He would, for the purposes of illustration take the cases of two strong men, who left the Army and joined the Reserve. One of the men went into a chemical factory. After three or four years' employment his health was undermined, he became physically a most pitiable spectacle. He was no longer fit for work, and he drifted to the workhouse, the Salvation Army shelter, or the doss-house. The other man became a navvy on a railway. Through an accident, probably due to his own negligence, he had a leg cut off? But instead of being cast adrift like the first man, he got £200 or £300 compensation, and possibly the company provided him with an easy gatekeeper's job at a low rate of wages. If the first man whose health was undermined in the course of his employment got compensation, he would be able to go into the country to recuperate, and possibly, with the aid of his friendly society, he would be able to start in some little business such as selling newspapers, or he and his wife keeping a mangle, or in other ways made independent of the community on which without this Instruction he would be a burden. The most pathetic figures he knew of in the army of industry were the chemical workers of Lancashire and the lead workers of Newcastle; and he was bound to say the Home Secretary had not advanced a single argument for the exclusion of those men from the protection of the Bill.

MR. STUART-WORTLEY (Sheffield, Hallam) said the Instruction practically amounted to a proposal that industry should be liable to compensate the widows of men who died at any age substantially lower than the average term of the life of men engaged in such trades. That was a serious prospect to contemplate. The hon. Member for Berwickshire had referred to the file-cutting trade. The hon. Member must have meant the hand file-cutting trade, and not the machine file-cutting trade.

*MR. TENNANT: Hear, hear!

MR. STUART-WORTLEY said the scientific opinion which the hon. Member had cited in support of his proposal undoubtedly applied to the hand file-cutting trade. But if the Instruction were passed, there was no earthly doubt that the hand file-cutting trade would entirely disappear. A number of small employers would be driven out of the trade, and machinery would be universally introduced. He must refuse to be a party to the bringing about of such a result. The Bill as it stood went quite as far as the public had got notice of, and it would not be fair for the House to extend its operations further.

SIR JAMES JOICEY (Durham, Chester-le-Street) said that if it were a just principle that industries should bear the burden of injuries to health and to limb, he failed to see how the Government could oppose the Instruction. The Home Secretary seemed under the impression that health had nothing to do with the Bill. Health had a great deal to do with it. A slight accident to a man in bad health might develop serious consequences. Was his employer to compensate him while employers in industries which produced a general condition of ill-health escaped? The workman whose health was injured in his occupation was as much entitled to compensation as the workman who might lose his arm or leg or sustain other bodily injuries. On this ground he would support the Instruction.

Mr. ABEL THOMAS (Carmarthen, E.) said he understood that one of the principles on which the Bill was founded was that where a workman was injured in a dangerous trade the employer should be liable. He should have thought the principle applied a thousand times more strongly to cases where a man was slowly and surely poisoned in a noxious trade. This should be provided for as much as cases where workmen had their feet cut off or their legs broken, or sustained similar injuries. It was said that then the wife of every man engaged in dangerous employment who died would be entitled to something from his employer. It meant nothing of the kind. The Instruction simply meant what it said, that if a trade had poisoned a person the relatives would have a right of action against the employer. He could not see any difference between the case where a man was poisoned by his trade, and the case where a man received personal injuries in the course of his employment.

Mr. C. B. RENSHAW (Renfrew, W.) submitted that the Instruction went further than the speech in support of it, which confined it to certain dangerous trades that were enumerated. He was glad the Home Secretary refused to accept the Instruction. It would be injurious to the working man if such an Instruction were carried, and equally so to employers of labour. The Bill itself would create many difficulties in regard to employment, but if the Instruction were adopted it would shut out from employment in a large number of industries not regarded as dangerous a great many people who for some years had been following them, who although their health was not strong were capable of doing a day's work and earning a day's wage. Because he believed the Instruction would have this undesirable effect he should vote against it.

Mr. J. M. PAULTON (Durham, Bishop Auckland) thought hon. Members were losing sight of the question before the House. This was not an Amendment. All his hon. Friend was asking was that the House should have an opportunity of discussing the matter. If the Government were to be deterred by difficulties from dealing with points in the Bill the Government should have thought twice before asking the House to accept the principle of the Bill. He believed the difficulty involved in the Instruction could be overcome. If the proposal of the Instruction when brought forward by Amendment in Committee were reasonably objected to as impossible to carry out, or for some other reason, the Committee could reject the Amendment. But if the Instruction were not adopted, his hon. Friend could not bring forward in Committee the just and reasonable proposal embodied in it.

Sir EDWARD HILL (Bristol, S.) trusted the House would not listen to the Instruction, because he believed it would complicate the Bill. This was a Bill relating to accidents, not illnesses, and while he and others would grant compensation for the former, they objected to the latter.

*Sir C. DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean) said there seemed to be a misapprehension as to the class of labour to which the Instruction referred. The Mover of the Instruction had in view the match-making and white lead industries and the pottery trade. It was said to be impossible to deal with the matter under this Bill. But it was dealt with in the legislation of every country that had faced the subject, and it was intended to be dealt with in the legislation of other countries which were beginning to face the subject. In five Continental countries it had been found impossible to separate the two questions. The Instruction only proposed to allow the subject to be dealt with in Committee.

Sir ARTHUR FORWOOD (Lancashire, Ormskirk) said the House was regarding the matter from an erroneous point of view. He ventured to say that this Instruction went too far. If it had been limited to the neglect of an employer to take reasonable precautions for the mitigation of risk then he should have been glad to support it. As it was, the Instruction would go into every trade and undoubtedly it would lead to great difficulty and litigation. He should move after the word "employment," to insert:—

"Through the failure of the employer to take reasonable precautions in employments injurious to the health for the mitigation or removal of the risk of injury to the health in such employment."

Mr. G. WYNDHAM (Dover) said this Amendment would place a penalty on the employer for neglecting certain precautions, which was not consistent with the spirit of the Bill. If the hon. Member had made a Motion limiting it to certain trades in which diseases were contracted, he should have hoped that the House would have accepted it. The House should be left free to consider any reasonable Amendments, so that trades could be selected according to the danger involved. For his part, he should vote against the Instruction.

Mr. J. WILSON (Durham, Mid) said the Bill had been placed before the country, and the House had accepted the principle without any demur. He thought that it was too late in the day now to try to limit the scope of the Bill. It was all very well to say leave a trade which was dangerous, but if a man's bread and the bread of his family were depending on it, it became a different matter altogether. He thought they had better not discuss this matter theoretically, but try to look at it from the position of the workers. There were hundreds who would leave these dangerous trades if they could do it, but they could not do it. One of the reasons why these dangerous trades should be included was given by the Colonial Secretary, who spoke of the wounded soldiers of their industrial life. He contended that a man who was injured in the course of his employment had a right to compensation. He hoped the Government would see their way to accept this Instruction. It was not only in chemical works that men were poisoned. There were men working in the mines who were poisoned. Men might be poisoned from bad ventilation, but they would receive no compensation whatever for that injury.

Mr. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.) thought that the short discussion of the Bill showed that it was absolutely impossible to limit the action of the Bill if it were to become law. He should therefore support the Instruction. It was becoming clearer every day that to make exceptions would create difficulties.

*Sir JOSEPH PEASE (Durham, Barnard Castle) thought the Instruction should be a wide Instruction. The Bill was a skeleton Bill, and his conviction was that it was impossible to draw a distinction between trades. ["Hear, hear!"] What was the use of telling a man who was brought up as a coal miner to go elsewhere? How could he go to work elsewhere? The hon. Member for Bow and Bromley said they had had enough of men getting up and saying there was no profit. Employers found means of accomplishing reforms. Although this was a sweeping change, employers desired that it should be fully and fairly worked through all trades, and not applied to three or four only. He hoped the Government would consent to this Instruction.

Mr. ALEXANDER CROSS (Glasgow, Camlachie) said it must not be supposed that he and those who sat around him had not as much sympathy for those persons engaged in dangerous trades as hon. Gentlemen opposite. If they voted with the Government on this occasion they would do so on practical and not theoretical grounds. Three claims to the consideration of the House were made by the operatives of the country. There was the claim in respect to accidental injuries and that in respect to employment in a dangerous trade, but he did not see how the third claim could be distinguished from that in regard to dangerous employment. The Instruction provided that injuries to health in the course of employment were also to be considered. That meant that persons were entitled to expect consideration who met with some injury, however trivial, to their health in the course of their employment. [Hon. Members: "Arising out of or in the course of!"] He admitted that the word "or" was significant. In that case the hon. Member would accept the Amendment of the hon. Baronet the Member for Liverpool. This Bill was intended to deal with accidental injuries, and, therefore, it was not proper they should be invited to engage in endless discussions upon matters which could not be reasonably remedied under this Measure.

Mr. H. H. ASQUITH (Fife, E.): I have listened with very great surprise to some of the speeches which have been delivered from the other side of the House. We are discussing the simple issue whether or not it shall be possible when we come to the Committee stage to include provisions for cases where injury to health as distinguished from injury to limb has resulted from the carrying on of a trade. Everyone who votes against this Instruction will be voting for making it impossible in Committee to include any case, however applicable, of any trade, however dangerous, where it can be shown, as it has been shown, that not only is the percentage of ill-health very grave, but that the results which necessarily follow the pursuit of certain occupations are such as completely to undermine the condition of health. I have a very vivid recollection of what took place in 1893 when I introduced the Government Bill of that year. That Bill contained no clause specifically dealing with dangerous trades, but the hon. Member for Hackney proposed:

> "In any employment injurious to health, in which the risk of injury to health can be mitigated or removed by the use of reasonable precautions, the death, or temporary, or permanent disablement of a workman is caused by the neglect or such reasonable precautions, the workman, or, in case of death, his representatives, shall have the same right to compensation and remedies against the employer as in other cases of personal injury due to negligence."

I did not oppose that Amendment in the first instance, though I was somewhat loth to accept it for this reason, that I thought it was already included in the Bill. Our Bill dealt with all injury by accident—personal injury. In my judgment, that was wide enough to embrace injury against the health of a man through neglect on the part of the employer to take proper precautions, but, as it was pointed out there was some doubt, we accepted the hon. Gentleman's Amendment. That Amendment was blessed from both sides of the House. I think more speeches were made in its favour from the Conservative than from the Liberal Benches, and it is simply the principle of the Amendment that my hon. Friend is now asking the House to empower itself to recognise. I want to know why, if this Measure, as we are told, is so very much larger and more comprehensive n scope than any previously introduced, these not very large in number but very grave and dangerous class of injuries to workmen are to be excluded from the scope of your remedial provisions. Whether you look at the matter from the point of view of prevention or from the point of view of the workmen's title to compensation it appears to me this claim stands on at least as strong a footing as any claim that can be advanced. Surely, from this point of view of prevention, if you make the employer liable for all injuries he will have a strong inducement to diminish the number of injuries. How strongly will this provision operate in the case of trades where prevention is most easy and most necessary! If the employer has this motive he will exercise a better selection of the workpeople he employs, and these are mainly women and children. And if the employers were to exercise more discrimination than they do in the selection of the persons who are employed in these peculiarly dangerous processes a great deal of the ill-health that at present exists might be altogether obviated. Then there are the mechanical processes which could very easily be adopted, and which would mitigate, if not altogether remove, the injurious effects. If that be the case from the point of view of prevention, surely it is stronger from the point of view of the workman's title to compensation. On what principle of common sense are you to say that these people should leave their employment? People go into these dangerous trades not from the love of them, not from a desire for pleasure, not from a desire to secure high wages, for these are the very worst-paid workpeople. These people have to choose between starvation and spending their lives under unwholesome conditions, which necessarily result in injury to health and to a shortening of life. I have not heard a single argument which can suggest to my mind a reason for discriminating between these classes of the soldiers in the industrial army and those who have been so liberally provided for. It is said that this will very greatly extend the scope of the Measure. It will do nothing of the kind. The Home Secretary told us the other night that this Bill would apply to six million people, and those excluded from its scope will amount to seven millions. Let us assume that the Bill will apply to six millions. I believe I am not overstating the number when I say that the whole of the persons in our industrial population who can be affected by any Amendment in pursuance of this Instruction will not exceed 100,000—100,000 in addition to the six millions, or 1 in 60.

SIR J. BLUNDELL MAPLE (Camberwell, Dulwich): The whole of the six millions will be affected.

MR. ASQUITH: The hon. Gentleman, like some others, did not seem to realise the limited effect of the words "arising out of and in the course of their employment." There is no intention to compensate workmen who are not engaged in unhealthy trades and who are not exposed to peculiar danger from the character of the employment. I am sure my hon. Friend the Member for Berwickshire, and all of us, will be perfectly ready to consider and adopt any limitation which can be reasonably suggested so as to confine the operation of the subsequent Amendment to those trades which are in real need of special protection. It is said there will be enormous difficulty in determining whether or not the injury to health from which a particular person is suffering had or had not arisen in the course of employment. There will be no greater difficulty than in determining the question whether permanent disablement has resulted from injury. Everyone knows that the shock or the blood-poisoning consequent upon a comparatively slight accident to a limb may permanently disable a man for life. That man would be compensated under this Bill. I earnestly hope the Government may yet be induced to reconsider their decision. The only thing we are asking—and surely it is both a moderate and reasonable request—is that when we get into Committee we shall have the opportunity of considering and discussing Amendments which will secure the same protection for these classes of workers as you are already going to give to all those who are injured by accident in the course of their employment. [Cheers.]

SIR J. B. MAPLE thought that the right hon. Gentleman, quite unintentionally, wished to misrepresent the scope of this distinction. He wished to deal with it as though the Bill dealt with the question of dangerous trades, whereas it was a Bill dealing with accidents only. If the Instruction were carried, an employer might be liable for compensation if a man caught a cold through working in a draught, and who said he did not know but what consumption might follow. They understood thoroughly that the Bill now before the House was one to deal with accidents. Every accident would be recorded, and it could be dealt with, but if they were to say that every workman who received any injury to health arising out, or in the course of their employment was to have a claim on the employer, where would they end? It was a difficult subject altogether, and he believed that a separate Bill might be brought in to deal with the dangerous trades. If they were to have the Bill weighted with Amendments which might arise out of the Instruction, they would be discussing the question through August and September. He hoped the Government would stand to the Bill as it had been introduced. He knew it would be a great advantage to the working classes generally, and he would like to see the Bill carried forward. He hoped, therefore, the Instruction would be rejected.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife said a good deal in the way of minimising the effect of this Instruction, following what has been said by other hon. Members. He pointed out that it was not mandatory and did not commit us to any particular Amendment, but that it was merely to enable us generally to discuss the subject. Then he went on to say that if the House had this power it could confine itself strictly to the case of certain dangerous trades, which he considers include about 100,000 workmen. I ask the House, as practical people, not to open the floodgates of discussion—[cheers]—even upon an enabling Instruction until they know where it will carry them. I am bound to say I think it will carry us a great deal further than my right hon. Friend opposite appears to think. ["Hear, hear!"] The right hon. Gentleman argued from analogy. We shall have, no doubt, again and again, in the course of these Debates, the same appeal to logic, to our inability to discriminate between different cases of persons who have a claim to the compensation which this Bill affords. That is perfectly true, but, as I ventured to point out on the Second Reading, if we are to be guided by logic to that extent, after we have already introduced a Bill which is admitted to be one of the most important Bills that have been brought before the House in the last few years, which is admitted to be a revolutionary Bill, and to introduce new principles into our industrial life—if we are, on the ground of logic, to be continually applying to that Bill new structures, the Bill itself will certainly not get through the present Session. [Cheers.] I really sympathise very much with a great deal that has been said on the other side, and I feel all the more sympathy because I am quite certain that my right hon. Friend and other hon. Members who have spoken are merely interested in the cases they submitted to the House, and in the hardships which they revealed, and that their arguments did not include any calculations which are hostile to the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] My right hon. Friend says the Instruction is intended to apply only to dangerous trades. Then it is very badly drawn. ["Hear, hear!"] The Instruction applies to a great deal more than that. ["Hear, hear!"] It is not limited at all to the extent of the proposals which the right hon. Gentleman accepted in 1893, and with the acceptance of which he now apparently taunts Gentlemen on this side of the House. The Instruction will allow the Committee to discuss any Amendment intended to give compensation for any injury to health, whether caused by negligence or not, happening to any person "in the course and arising out of that employment." Those are the vaguest possible words. I will undertake to say that under those words it would be perfectly legitimate to claim compensation for a person of whom it was alleged that he had become consumptive in consequence of working in a draught. ["Hear, hear!"] That is not, I am sure, an extreme impossibility, and when my right hon. Friend opposite says, "Oh! but we can assure you that all we ask is that you should give to these people in the lead trade and certain other trades the compensation which we demand, and that we will not attempt to apply it to other less dangerous trades," then, I ask, where is his logic? How has he suddenly developed this power of discrimination? Will any man tell me what difference there is in logic between the agricultural labourer who contracts rheumatism in the course of his employment and the person working in a lead factory who contracts disease in the course of his employment? [Cheers.] I defy anybody logically to show the slightest distinction between those two cases. My right hon. Friend does not agree with me—

MR. ASQUITH: I do agree.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Well, then, my right hon. Friend agrees, and yet he has not put in a claim for the agricultural labourer. [Cheers.] And, moreover, not only that—he has declared that so far as he is concerned, he will distinctly exclude him. I only appeal to that to show that even my right hon. Friend, slave to logic as he is—[laughter]—is unable to carry out this view in its application to this Bill, and it points very clearly to the difficulty in which this House will find itself if we are to allow the scope of the Bill, already so large, to be continually increased in pursuit of this illusory phantom of logic. [Cheers.] I say undoubtedly a distinction could be made between the pressing and urgent claims of the dangerous trades, and the claims of the bulk of the trades of this country, in all of which, however, it is quite possible that an injury to health might occur in consequence of and arising out of the employment; and the Instruction practically amounts to this, that, having got a Bill which imposes a new liability upon employers and upon trade, this proposal takes a perfectly different line and proposes to impose a further liability. It is not a question of distinguishing between different trades; it is a question of distinguishing between different liabilities; and, admitting, for the sake of argument, that the new liability which you seek to impose will be a fair liability, I say it is altogether too large to be imposed in this Bill. [Cheers.] If it is to be imposed at all, let us treat it as a separate question—[cheers]—and then it will be found how extremely complicated and difficult it will be. ["Hear, hear!"] It is difficult sometimes, no doubt, to prevent malingering in the case of what the law admits to be an accident, but it would be almost impossible to deal with the question of malingering when it comes to injury to health; and when a person who is injured has to prove, as he would have had to prove according to the Bill of the right hon. Gentleman opposite that the injury to health was due to the neglect of what is called reasonable precaution, I think you would have opened the way to an amount of litigation to which even the Employers' Liability Act can show no parallel. [Cheers.] But let me put one more point to the House. In the case of the dangerous trades themselves, what is it you are going to do? In the case of an ordinary trade it may be that the injury to health occurs so seldom that the liability would not be a very large one, but in the case of these dangerous trades it is contended that the number of cases is very considerable in proportion to the workpeople employed. And you are going to throw this new liability in these cases upon the trades which, by your own statement, are the worst-paid trades in the country. Consider what you are doing. If they are the worst-paid trades in the country, being dangerous trades, it must be because the trade is unprofitable. [Opposition cries of "No!"] That is absolutely certain. Are there no such things as trade unions? Is it possible that in these trades the trade unions are powerless?

*MR. BURNS: Yes.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: That is the most extraordinary thing I have ever heard. [Cheers.] To say that in trades of this kind, which offer no attraction to the workman, from which the ordinary workman would naturally shrink unless he had some great advantage offered to him, even at a time when they can offer to pay higher wages, the workmen do not get higher wages, is to say what my experience does not justify. ["Hear, hear!"] I say that in a trade of this kind the wages would be higher if that trade could afford it. There are other dangerous trades in which the wages are higher precisely because the trade is dangerous, but in which the competition is so great that they cannot afford an increase in the wages. If they are in that position, then, if you are going to throw upon them this new and increased liability, you are going to destroy the trade. For my own part, I have often thought it was a matter which might be open to argument whether a trade which does involve so much suffering as some of these trades are alleged to do, is a trade that ought to be carried on at all—["hear, hear!"]—but let it be borne in mind that, if you propose to throw this new liability upon these particular trades, what you propose is to destroy those trades, and that can be the only effect of the action you propose. I do not want to lay stress upon that. I am only indicating to the House the number, the importance, and the complexity of the questions which would be raised if we open out this discussion, and under the circumstances I cannot help thinking that the Bill is already of such a character, of such dimensions, and of such importance that it will well occupy the time of the House during the remainder of the Session, and I hope its future progress will not be endangered by increasing its present scope. [Cheers.]

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) said that, looking to the fact that this was the most tremendous experiment in Socialism ever offered to the House by a Conservative Government, it seemed to him they ought to make the experiment handsomely. [Opposition laughter and cheers.] It was absolutely impossible for any man who was in harmony with the spirit of this Bill to vote against the Instruction. [Opposition cheers.] The Amendment of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Liverpool cut away the ground from the Instruction. It was not a question whether or not the employer had neglected his duty. The element of neglect which the Amendment proposed to introduce was quite outside the principle of the Bill. The House ought to come to the consideration of this Bill with unfettered hands. They ought to be able to deal with maladies arising from dangerous trades as well as with accidents, and this Instruction would enable them to do that. His opinion was that the Bill must be extended to all trades and all occasions—[Opposition cheers]—and everybody who accepted the principle of the Bill was bound to accept the Instruction moved by the hon. Gentleman opposite. ["Hear, hear!"] He, therefore, should vote against the Amendment and for the Instruction.

SIR A. FORWOOD asked leave to withdraw the Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. HUDSON KEARLEY (Devonport) said he wished to ask a question as to the bearing of the Bill in the case of certain Government employés, he meant a body of men who were employed to do what was called double bottom work. The work was so dangerous that the instructions were that no man should be engaged on this work for more than two hours a day, and not more than two days a week. He wanted to know whether, in the event of a Government employé losing his life while employed on this double bottom work, his representatives would get compensation under this Bill without this Instruction being adopted.

Mr. P. A. MUNTZ (Warwickshire, Tamworth) said he wished to say at the outset that he did not approve of the Bill as it stood. He did not approve of throwing the liability for accidents on the employer. He thought it should be thrown on a national insurance fund. ["Hear, hear!"] But with regard to the Instruction, he thought it was really absurd to argue that it would not increase the scope of the Bill to any practical extent. It must be perfectly apparent from its wording that it would enormously increase the scope of the Bill if it was carried in its present form. He should certainly vote against the Instruction, but at the same time he thought it was only fair and right that he should say that he did not approve of the Bill at all. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. REGINALD McKENNA (Monmouthshire, N.) pointed out that there were at the present time schedules existing of dangerous trades, and he was quite certain that his hon. Friend who moved the Instruction would be perfectly willing to limit its scope to those trades now scheduled as dangerous trades. He submitted that a strong case had been made out in favour of the Instruction and on its merits, when limited to those trades scheduled as dangerous, there could not be two opinions. ["Hear, hear!"]

Colonel DENNY (Kilmarnock Burghs) said that there must be a limit to the charges falling upon a business. While, perhaps, twopence a ton might be put on in the coal business without ruining it, if every trade practically was included the difficulty of working the Bill would be vastly increased. More than that, he did not believe that it would be possible to increase the scope of the Bill if it was to pass this Session, and, therefore, he should vote against the Instruction.

Question proposed, "That those words be added."

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Main Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 144; Noes, 233.—(Division List, No. 215.)

Bill considered in Committee.

[The Chairman of Ways and Means, Mr. J. W. Lowther, in the Chair.]

Clause 1,—

LIABILITY OF CERTAIN EMPLOYERS TO WORKMEN FOR INJURIES.

(1.) If in any employment to which this Act applies personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation in accordance with the first schedule to this Act.

(2.) Provided that:—

(a) The employer shall not be liable under this Act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed;

(b) When it is decided, as hereafter provided, that the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer or some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible, nothing in this Act shall affect any liability, civil or criminal, of the employer or persons for whom he is responsible; but the employer shall not be liable to pay compensation both independently of and also under this Act, and shall not be liable to pay compensation independently of this Act, except in case of such wilful and wrongful act or default.

(3.) If any question arises as to whether the employment is one to which this Act applies, or whether the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer, or of any person for whose act or default the employer is responsible, or whether the injury was caused by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment of the workman injured, or as to the amount or duration of compensation under this Act, or otherwise as to the liability for compensation under this Act, the question, if not settled by agreement, shall, subject to the provisions of the first schedule to this Act, be settled by arbitration, in accordance with the second schedule to this Act.

(4.) If the Registrar of Friendly Societies certifies that any scheme of compensation or insurance for the workmen in any employment is on the whole not less favourable to the workmen than the provisions of this Act, the employer may, until the certificate is revoked, contract with any of those workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this Act, and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with the scheme, but, save as aforesaid, this Act shall apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after the commencement of this Act.

Mr. W. E. M. TOMLINSON (Preston) moved, "That the Chairman do report progress, and ask leave to sit again," but the Chairman of Ways and Means being of opinion that the Motion was an abuse of the Rules of the House, declined to propose the Question thereupon to the Committee.

Mr. T. W. NUSSEY (Pontefract) moved in Sub-section (1) to leave out the words "to which this Act applies," and to insert the words "in which a workman (as hereinafter defined) is engaged." He stated that he wished to refer the Committee to the definition of "a workman" adopted in Clause 2 of the Bill. He proposed to adopt what was, practically speaking, the same definition as that contained in the Act of 1880. The effect of these words was to extend the scope of the Bill and make it practically a universal Bill, to include all classes of trade and employment with the exception of domestic and menial servants. He reminded the House that the Home Secretary laid special stress on the point that domestics and menials ought not to be included in the Act, as persons employing one or two servants might be ruined by the payment of compensation, owing to the wanton carelessness of a housemaid. Perhaps some exception might be taken to his Amendment on the ground that it excluded certain classes of people from the benefits of the Act whose position could not logically be distinguished from those actually engaged in manual labour. He referred to omnibus conductors, goods guards, and others, whose main work was not manual labour. But he would point out that the words of the Bill itself covered such cases. The definition clause said "whether by manual labour or otherwise," and the word "otherwise" covered all such cases. Having explained that his Amendment was intended to include seamen, the hon. Member said it might be objected that it opened too wide a field, but it was open to those who thought so to show, by argument, why any special trade or class of workmen should be excluded, and they could limit the Act by taking out one trade after another if any radical reason could be found why they should not share in the blessings which the Act was to bring on their fellow workers. He urged that they could not be too careful in defining what was meant by the Bill. Different County Court Judges might have different opinions, and unless they were very careful and explicit, these differences of opinion were bound to form one of the greatest difficulties in the working of the Act. They ought to give the Judges some words to guide them; and it was for that reason he had introduced the words of the Act of 1880, because they were well-known and well-tried words. To appreciate the whole meaning of the words they must turn to Clause 2, and they found that it included five trades—railways, factories, mines, quarries, and engineering. He complained that some of the definitions inserted in the first clause were very stupid, besides being complicated. The word "factory" was included, and there was a definition of the word. Many arguments for the inclusion of factories had been based on the fact that they were in the main wealthy trades. Some hon. Gentlemen, indeed, seemed to be under the impression that all factory owners and mill owners were rich men. This was far from the case. There were many factories which came under the Factories and Workshops Act that were carried on by the proprietors who were extremely small men and often very poor, and very little removed in position from the class of men whom they employed. Then under the Bill as it stood there would probably be conflicting decisions as to the meaning of the term "factory," and he understood that from the County Court Judges who would give those decisions there would be no appeal. Thus there would be none of that uniformity which was so essential in legal administration. For example, in Leeds, Bradford, and Huddersfield there were different County

Court Judges, and there might be possibly similar accidents in these three towns. The Judges, however, might give absolutely different decisions, so that the same circumstances would not have the same results. In engineering work, as referred to in the Bill, sewers would be included, but the word sewer did not include a drain under the Public Health Act of 1875. A man who met with an accident in a drain would consequently have no claim to compensation, whereas the man who worked in an open sewer would be entitled to benefit under the Bill. Such anomalies were bound to cause friction and ill-feeling in the future, and the various restrictions to the operation of the Measure were certain to cause great differences between class and class, trade and trade, employer and employed. The Bill did not fulfil the pledges of the Members of the Government at the General Election, when the people were told that there was to be universal compensation for all accidents. On February 20, 1893, the present Secretary for the Colonies said:—

> "I beg the House to consider whether it is worth while to deal with this subject in a partial way, and whether it would not be possible once and for all to settle the right of every workman to compensation."

The right hon. Gentleman added:—

> "This compensation would not be a very serious matter for trade. You could do it at a very small cost."

On what grounds had certain trades been selected? One ground was that the Bill would throw a burden on employers, and that therefore it was desirable to select rich trades. In these trades, however, there were many poor employers who were in no sense better able to bear the burden of this legislation than shipowners or farmers who were excluded. Another reason assigned for the selection which had been made was that the trades in question were trades in which the proportion of accidents occurring was exceptionally high. But he was not sure that that was the case. The mere fact that there had already been legislative interference with these trades did not prove that those engaged in them were subject to an extraordinary number of accidents. He held that if the principle upon which this Bill was founded was sound there was no justification for excluding certain trades from its scope. In its present form it would place workmen in the selected trades in an extremely advantageous position as compared with other workmen and so it would violate the accepted principle that before the law all men were equal and of equal status. One of the arguments against the proposal to extend the operation of the Bill to other trades was that such extension would result in the bankruptcy of poor employers. For his part he did not believe that any such disastrous consequences would ensue. Similar fears were expressed in connection with previous factory legislation, and they had proved to be groundless. He begged to move the Amendment standing in his name.

MR. H. SETON-KARR (St. Helens), who seconded the Amendment, said that its real object was that the Bill should not be limited in its application, but should be made universal. This was one of the most important considerations to which the Committee could devote itself. He might mention that he had placed an Amendment upon the Paper, providing that if the present proposal were carried the words "not included in the third schedule to this Act" should be inserted. A third schedule could then be added, containing the few special trades which it might be desirable on exceptional grounds to exclude from the operation of the Bill. This would be a convenient course, for it would give hon. Members an opportunity of stating fully the special measures for excepting any particular trade from the Bill. It seemed to him that the general principle of the Amendment was that the Bill should be universal in its application, and not specifically limited to certain specified trades. What were the reasons given by the two Ministers of the Crown for limiting the operation of the Bill? It was said that by extending the scope of the Bill they would be taking up too much of the time of the Session. But when dealing with such an important subject as this they ought to recognise that it was necessary to make a good Bill, and should not, therefore, grudge the time required for it. This was not a petty Bill dealing with some minor point. It dealt with millions of invested capital, and with millions of working men, and they ought to make a logical and good Bill. Were they to be told to throw logic overboard in order that they might pass the Bill quickly? He ventured to think that unless the Bill could stand on its own merits and could be made a really good all-round Bill, it had much better not be passed at all. He thought their object should be to make it a good and a logical Bill. The Home Secretary had told them that they were bound to proceed in a tentative fashion, and apply the Bill in the first place to the most dangerous trades. The right hon. Gentleman frankly admitted that this was not a logical thing to do. In that remark he absolutely and entirely agreed. He should like to point out that the trades in which the most accidents happened were the trades in which the largest amount of compensation had to be paid. They were proposing to put a burden on those trades which it was most difficult to ascertain, and against which it was most difficult to insure. If, therefore, it was fair and equitable to apply the principle of this Bill to the dangerous trades a fortiori, it was fair and equitable to apply it to non-dangerous trades where the tax imposed upon the industry itself was limited in amount, where it could be most easily ascertained, and so insured against. If this was a question of caution, and they were to apply the Bill tentatively, he thought they ought not to begin with most dangerous trades, but with those in which the compensation was highest. The right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary devoted a large part of his speech to pointing out the reason why the Bill should be limited in its application, and stated that the Government were following the example of the Factory Act of Lord Shaftesbury in gradually applying this Bill. He ventured to point out there was all the distinction in the world between this Bill and the factory legislation which Lord Shaftesbury initiated. Lord Shaftesbury's legislation was preventive and re medial, intended to shorten the hours of children in mines, and to enforce conditions of health and safety. Those remedies had to be applied tentatively to the different trades according to the differing conditions of those trades. But this Bill, he submitted, was absolutely and entirely different. It was a money compensation Bill; it was a Bill which provided for money compensation in various limited trades. He contended that the principle of a money compensation Bill was equally applicable to every trade. It was only a question of the burden of compensation in each particular trade. If this money compensation principle was applicable to dangerous trades, then it seemed to him still more applicable to trades which were not so dangerous, and in which the burden of compensation would not be so great. He ventured to remind the House that this Bill proposed to relieve the ratepayers in this country at the expense of the employers or of the industry itself. At present the cost of compensating injured workmen, if not met in the case of unavoidable accidents by the friendly societies to which both the employers and employed subscribed, fell upon the rates. By this Bill the friendly societies and the ratepayers were practically relieved from their liability. Thus the employers in the included trades were not only liable to their own workmen for all accidents, but were liable as ratepayers to the rates for compensation for unavoidable accidents in trades which were not included. He was absolutely unable to see how anybody could defend that principle. The included trades paid in two capacities. They paid as employers in their own particular industries, and they paid as ratepayers. But the non-included trades paid in one capacity only, namely, as ratepayers. A Bill of this kind ought to contain pecuniary relief in which all trades generally must share, otherwise a most serious injustice would be done. Under any circumstances it seemed to him it was perfectly certain that the most dangerous trade would have to bear the heaviest burden of compensation. He wanted to know why the most dangerous trades should be the pioneers in this most revolutionary and important movement. The Colonial Secretary advocated the limitation of the Bill on the ground of expediency. He had told them that if the Bill was applied to all trades without exception, it would arouse so much opposition that it would be impossible to carry the Measure. He was himself unable to understand that argument. Where was the opposition to come from? It seemed to him that the Bill must stand or fall upon its own merits. As a matter of fact the Government had a majority of 150 behind them. They believed in the principle of the Bill—and he himself was most heartily in support of the principle of general compensation—and if they had a majority who believed in the principle of the Bill, and it was demonstrated to them that it would not impose inequitable burdens of compensation upon any particular trade, then he wanted to know who was going to oppose it? The right hon. Gentleman had said that this was a Bill for giving relief to injured men, and what hon. Member, if he believed the Bill was going to bring relief to injured workmen, would vote against such a desirable object? The Home Secretary had stated that there were 13,000,000 wage earners in the country, and the Bill only applied to 6,000,000. Who was going to take the responsibility of denying relief to the other 7,000,000, unless it could be shown that in some particular cases the burden of compensation imposed on any industry was inequitable and unjust? The two largest interests which were excluded were the shipping and the agricultural industries. Were hon. Members representing those industries to be asked to support the Bill on the ground that it did not apply to their constituents engaged in those industries, who would not, therefore, have to share in the burden imposed. If so he ventured to think the proposal was unjust and inequitable. There was besides the consideration that these men would be voting to relieve themselves as ratepayers without giving any adequate compensation for that relief. He submitted that if this Bill was a wise and beneficent reform for giving relief to injured workmen it ought at all events to be general in principle and universal in its application. With regard to the general compensation scheme he believed that part of the Bill was most excellent in principle, and he only desired to see it carried out universally. Let all stand on the same ground and be tarred with the same brush. [Cheers.] He seconded the Amendment because he felt that the Bill should be made general and universal in its application, otherwise it would inflict a serious injustice on some industries.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said that, important as was the principle raised by this Amendment, a good many Second Reading speeches had been delivered already on the same point. While, therefore, recognising the importance of the Amendment, and the strength of the feeling which animated the last speaker, he could not refrain from remarking that, while apparently his hon. Friend was blessing the Bill, he was doing his best to injure it, to impede, if not to prevent, its passing. The same remark might apply to this Amendment. Both hon. Gentleman stated that a very good principle of compensation had been embodied in the Bill, and they asked that, if the principle was sound, why not extend it? But to that proposition he replied that, however excellent the ideal, they must in politics try to aim at what was practicable, and they ought to take care not to overload the proposals by attempting too great a scheme, thereby failing altogether. The Government had drawn no arbitrary distinction between the industries included and those which were excluded. They were not prepared to accept the universal application of the Bill, and the Government would look upon any Amendment to that effect as having a fatal influence upon it. They were not, however, indisposed to discuss, when the clause defining the industries to which the Bill applied was reached, how far the particular definitions were inadequate; whether, for example, the definitions of the building trade ought not to include buildings 30ft. high, a point which had been mentioned by the Colonial Secretary. He hoped the Committee would soon settle the general principle as to whether there should or should not be certain exclusions. The Government believed that the principle which they had adopted was a sounder one than to insert the whole of the workmen of the country in the Bill in the first instance, and then on the schedule to have long discussions as to whether a particular industry should or should not be excluded. They had included in the Bill practically all of what were known as the dangerous trades. In the first instance the Bill must be in its nature an experimental Measure, the importance of which could not be exaggerated. He trusted that the Committee would support the Government in retaining the words as indicating the principle on which the Bill ought to be applied.

MR. HENRY BROADHURST (Leicester) looked on the speech of the hon. Member for St. Helen's (Mr. Seton-Karr) with the gravest suspicion as an indication of friendliness towards the Bill. He and his hon. Friends looked upon the Bill with such favour that it would be impossible for them to sit still and make no attempt to extend it to all the trades of the country. Could the Home Secretary give an assurance that two or three additional industries would be added to the Bill? Take the building trade. Accidents here were not so numerous as in mines, railways, and engineering works; but this, in his judgment, was an additional argument in favour of including this trade, because its inclusion would not mean a very great widening of the experiment which the Government were making. He regretted that the Government had not included in the Bill a class who had no means whatever of making provision against accidents—agricultural labourers. ["Hear, hear!"] He lived among agricultural labourers, and had known them all his life, and he knew the suffering that accidents caused during harvest time. They and their families had nothing before them but starvation, misery, or the workhouse. In his own trade he calculated that they had paid over £117,000 for accidents. The carpenters and joiners had paid £37,000. Yet these trades had not been ruined, and hon. Members need not be alarmed as to the injury that would be inflicted on any trade or industry by the Bill. The scheme could not rest where it was. It was inevitable that the State would come in and take the responsibility. The State was to a large extent the guardian of the general community, and it must provide protection for the community under certain conditions. He pressed the Government to tell the Committee what industries at present excluded from the Bill would be included in it. If they would do this it would shorten Debate, and the Bill could easily be passed through Committee this week.

MR. STUART-WORTLEY said it would probably be perfectly right that agricultural labourers and the building trade should be included in the Bill, but it was a cardinal rule that when legislation was applied to particular classes it should not be applied behind their backs. The farmers and master builders had practically had no notice that their inclusion in this Bill would be suggested.

MR. S. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow) agreed that if the Home Secretary would state what trades he would or would not include in the Bill the Debate would be much shortened. As to industries not having notice of their inclusion in the Bill, that applied all round. No one had the remotest idea what industries the Bill would affect until it was introduced.

MR. J. M. MACLEAN (Cardiff) said it was remarkable that every speech on the Amendment had been in favour of extending the principle of the Bill to other trades than those included in it. The Home Secretary himself did not repudiate that idea. At the last election the principle of general compensation provided by the State, and not by the employers, was generally put forward by Members of the Unionist Party. It was unfair and invidious to select particular trades and levy upon them a particular tax intended not for the welfare of those trades, but simply for the good of the community. When the community laid such a burden upon any trade it should provide compensation. He had put down an Amendment intended to call attention to the effect of this Bill on the coal trade, the trade which would suffer principally by the Bill. Employers in the textile industries informed him that the Bill would not impose any special burden on them. Those industries were not liable to the disasters that happened in the coal-mining industry, and which it was impossible for employers even with the greatest care and attention to avoid. Whenever an explosion entailing loss of life or serious injuries took place the community at large recognised the fact that the burden of providing for the victims should not rest with the employers, and invariably a public subscription was raised. This Bill said that the employers alone were to suffer by accidents of that kind. That imposed a serious burden on the employers. It had been estimated at 3d. a ton on the total output. It might be disputed whether this would fall on the coalowners or the workmen. But whichever it fell upon it was evident that under this Bill the trade would have to pay for it. He was much astonished to hear from the lips of the Colonial Secretary the argument that 3d. a ton was not very much to lay on the coal trade because the price of coal went up a few shillings every now and then. But the price of coal varied owing to general causes which affected the coal trade not only of this country but other countries as well, and an extra 3d. on coal would make it still more difficult for the export coal trade of this country to compete with its foreign rivals. Nothing was more remarkable than the great transformation which had taken place in recent years in the way business was conducted in this country, the elimination of the private employer and the conversion of business concerns into limited companies. A man who had had a property of that sort might take up any new career he liked; he might become a politician and even a statesman, and then, to show his benevolence to the working classes, he might lay burdens on the ordinary shareholders whom he had left in his business and from which he would be perfectly free. [Laughter.] The difficulty they had to meet was to know who were actually carrying on the business of the country. The only way to get at these men was to call in the agency of the State and to ask the State to sweep them into its net and force them to contribute towards the efficient carrying on of business in which they were practically engaged. It seemed clear that the Conservative Party, by the novel and daring experiment which they were carrying out, were attempting to put in force for the first time the famous principle of "ransom." [Laughter.] They had all been converted now. That which they formerly denounced they now embraced. There was a great deal to be said for "ransom" as originally propounded. It attacked the idle rich—those who "toil not neither do they spin." [Laughter.] Now they had changed all that, for they were going to lay the burden merely on the captains of industry. [Cheers.] If they were to be Socialists let them be Socialists all round, dividing the burdens equally and distributing amongst all trades in the country any benefits that were to be obtained from the adoption of these new principles. ["Hear, hear!"]

On the return of the Chairman of Ways and Means, after the usual interval,

Mr. WARR (Liverpool, East Toxteth) said he represented a constituency which was for the most part composed of workmen for whom the question of compensation for accidents sustained in the course of employment was the one test question. Yet most of those men were excluded from any benefit under the Bill. They were the victims of the doctrine of common employment—a doctrine which was condemned by the common sense and the sense of justice of every one who had given it consideration. An employer of those men could escape from responsibility for an accident by showing that the accident was the result, not of his negligence or the negligence of any of his workmen, but of the negligence of some sub-contractor—it might be a man of straw—whom he had employed to do his own work. It did seem really shocking that a Bill to amend the law of employers' liability should leave the law as to any particular trade, let alone as to every trade but five, open to such an injustice. Therefore, however much Members might approve of the Bill so far as the trades affected by it were concerned, however heartily they might congratulate the Government on the adoption of a principle by which he believed one of the most difficult of social problems could be solved, how could they who felt earnest about the matter, who felt that they were the representatives of the workmen who were excluded from the operation of the Bill, justify their action if they were to accept it in its present limited scope? It was their duty towards the men who were excluded from the Bill to urge that it was their right either to be brought within the scope of the Bill or to have the ordinary law so altered that the injustice under which they suffered might be done away with. In regard to the case of seamen, he would not say that the law should in respect to them remain unaltered; but he did say that their case could not be treated as identical in any way with the case of men employed on land. Holding those opinions, he would support the Amendment.

Mr. W. J. GALLOWAY (Manchester, S.W.) said that credit had been claimed by hon. Gentlemen opposite for the Second Reading of the Bill having been obtained without a Division, but he thought the credit, if any, was due to those employers of labour who had accepted a new, very large, and grave responsibility without challenging a Division. During the Debates on the Bill no logical reason had been given for the exclusion of any trades. ["Hear, hear!"] It was a preposterous doctrine to ask employers of one particular class of labour to be responsible for all and every accident, and at the same time not to put a similar responsibility upon employers in every other trade. ["Hear, hear!"] While he did not agree with the proposal of the hon. Member to insert the particular words of the Amendment, he certainly agreed that it was necessary that the Bill should be applied to all trades, and he would vote for leaving out the words, "to which this Act applies." The Home Secretary's argument about what would have been said had the Bill applied only to the less dangerous trades was most extraordinary. Surely, if Members representing large commercial constituencies had a right, which the Home Secretary admitted, to have their constituents included, the agricultural Members had exactly the same right. ["Hear, hear!"] He hoped the Government, before it was too late, would reconsider their decision. He hoped that they would not have either at bye-elections or at the next General Election, Members going simply to get their particular constituents included in the Bill, but that the Government would allow their supporters to defend the Bill, on the ground that all working men were treated by a Conservative Government on an equal footing. The Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Chamberlain) had raised the question of expediency, but his illustrations as to the franchise and the income tax not being logical in their application were very unfortunate, because, whether logical or not, both applied to everyone alike, and the whole community was at least treated on an equality. It was true that as to seamen and as to the Factory Acts Parliament had proceeded separately, but those were entirely different cases. They provided by these Acts that the health, safety, and conditions of labour should be regulated according to the necessities of each trade, but they did not provide that one class of workmen should be treated better than another. The Bill included the most dangerous trades. Why should less dangerous ones be left out, especially when, the danger being smaller, the change in the condition of these trades would be less? The Bill, as a whole, had his entire approval so far as it applied to compensation for accidents, but he did not think that the way the compensation was to be provided was entirely satisfactory, and it would be much less satisfactory unless all trades were included. Perhaps it was too much to expect the Government to recede from their position, but he would not cease to raise his voice on every opportunity to have all classes of working men receive the same benefit. ["Hear, hear!"] He could only hope that the Government would recede from their position, and, so far as he was concerned, he should raise his voice in favour of giving to all sections of the working classes the same privileges. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR JOSEPH PEASE said he could not help thinking that the Amendment ought to be accepted. It did not go so far as several of the Amendments that followed on the Paper, but it opened the way to include in the Bill several of those large industries which had a claim to be included—a greater claim, he thought, to be included even than those already in the Bill. He had had a good deal of experience of some of these industries—the dangerous industries—but many of the dangerous industries were already provided for to a very large extent by their own provident societies. In the coal industry, for instance, with which he was most familiar, according to the last Returns there were 141,775 men employed, and of these, to their great credit, 122,000 were enrolled in the Miners' Provident Society. To the widows of men who had been killed £52,000 odd was paid last year, and £34,000 was disbursed as compensation for accidents, to say nothing of payments made to aged members, which had nothing to do with this Bill. That £86,000 was subscribed almost entirely —within 6 per cent.—by the men themselves. ["Hear, hear!"] The Government proposed to include that industry in the Bill, and yet they were leaving out of its scope a number of industries, the members of which were, in many cases, unable to provide for themselves. It seemed to him there was no logic in the system whatever. ["Hear, hear!"] The Government were going to take in those who were already fairly provided for, by their own forethought and industry, and they were going to leave out those who, through being so widely scattered or for other reasons, were unable to form trade unions, such as the agricultural labourers and others, who were about three or four times the number of those employed in mines. The death rate amongst seamen was frightfully high, but no provision was made for them in the Bill. The fishing industry, which employed something like 25,000 or 30,000 men, was also left out, and whilst men employed on the railways were included. Road carriers were being entirely ignored. Legislation of this kind if promoted at all should be done completely, thoroughly, and well.

SIR ARTHUR FORWOOD did not think the words of the hon. Member were applicable to the Bill. The Bill was spoken of as "petty legislation." He did not think any Bill which dealt with six or seven millions of people could be properly described as "petty." They were told that if this Amendment was adopted it would be fatal to the Bill. As practical men, they must accept that statement, and he did not intend, at that stage, to do more than protest that more classes of workmen were not included in the Bill. But he was not one of those who would jeopardise the Bill on that account. He regretted that seamen were not included in the Bill. As a shipowner, he should be glad to see seamen included in the Bill. He did not see why a man who met with an accident whilst driving a plough or a traction engine should not be compensated. There was no more dangerous occupation than the loading or unloading of vessels, and yet those engaged in it were precluded from the benefits this Bill gave. In view, however, of the statement of the Home Secretary, he should vote against the Amendment.

MR. FREDERICK CAWLEY (Lancashire, Prestwich) said that while hailing the Bill with pleasure, he regretted that the Government did not propose to treat all trades alike. The excuse for making invidious exceptions would hardly hold water, for, as the hon. Baronet the Member for Durham had pointed out, most if not all the trades included in this Bill had relief societies connected with them, and were thus to some extent already provided for. It was said the Amendment would operate hardly on the small employer, but there could be no doubt the Bill would eventually lead to the insuring of all workmen within its scope, and so far as he could see there was no greater hardship in insuring a small number of men than in insuring a large number. As a matter of fact the small employer would get his men insured at a considerably less premium than certain people engaged in more dangerous trades. The agricultural labourer was not to receive the benefits of the Bill, but for the life of him he could not see the difference between a man getting a hand hurt in a machine in his works or getting a hand hurt in a turnip pulping machine in the country. It seemed absurd that a man working in a factory in town, and getting, say, 30s. to £3 a week in wages, should be compensated for an accident, whilst a poor agricultural labourer, earning only 11s. a week, and whose only hope, if crippled, was to end his days in the workhouse, should be turned adrift without any compensation whatever. The Secretary for the Colonies once said that the agricultural labourer was the most pathetic figure in our whole social system. The right hon. Gentleman described him as condemned by apparently "inexorable" conditions to a life of "unremitting and hopeless toil," with the prospect of the poor-house as its only or probable termination. He further stated that the agricultural labourer had been "ignored, oppressed, and defrauded" for generations. He was sure the right hon. Gentleman would admit that, if the agricultural labourer was not being oppressed or defrauded now, he was certainly being ignored. He was not aware that the condition of the agricultural labourer had much changed, except that he was able to buy some of the necessaries of life much cheaper. He hoped the House would consider whether such a man ought to be excluded from any Bill brought in for the benefit of the working classes. During the discussion on the Agricultural Rating Bill of last year they heard a great deal from hon. Gentlemen opposite about stopping the influx of labourers from the country into the towns. He himself thought it was very desirable that, if possible, that influx should be stopped, and he asked hon. Members opposite to consider whether the best way of obtaining that object was by making the conditions of labour so much better in the factory than they were on the farm. In the one case a man was to be compensated for any injury he might sustain in the course of his employment; in the other he was to be turned adrift without it. In his opinion such a policy could not be defended, and he held that employers of labour who would be affected by the Bill had a right to demand that these invidious distinctions should not be made.

*COLONEL MILWARD (Stratford-upon-Avon) said that many hon. Members who had joined in the Debate, did not seem to understand how the matter stood with regard to the smaller trades. As a matter of fact, many of the smaller trades were carried on in workshops which were now under the Workshops Acts. He was quite certain, that if they really meant to work the Bill, they must draw the line where it was proposed to be drawn, or else accept the offer of the Government merely to insert certain other trades by name. In the Midlands, trades were carried on in little workshops. A gun for instance, was not made in one manufactory in Birmingham. The barrel was made in one workshop, the stock in another, and so forth. Locks, saddlery and needles were largely made in small workshops. Almost the whole of the North Worcestershire nail and chain industry was conducted in small workshops in which the master was little better off than the man. They would find a father, mother and child, and, perhaps, one journeyman working together, and very often the master could not pay his men on the Friday or Saturday until he had collected the money from the manufacturers for whom he worked. It would really be absurd to suddenly throw upon the master in such a case a liability to pay down in a lump sum from £100 to £300, or 10s., 12s. 6d. or 15s. a week for life. This was a great measure with a very great principle underlying it. It could not stop here, but it must begin here. If they intended to cast at once their net over the whole of the working people, the Act would die of its own weight. [HON. MEMBERS: "Why?"] Because the smaller man could not bear a life-long liability. He felt that the time was not far distant when the smaller people would be brought under the Bill, but they could not be brought under it until it had been assimilated by the country, and a system of insurance, national, local, or by trades, had been formulated.

MR. BURNS said that what they wanted was an authoritative statement from the Home Secretary as to where this Bill did apply and where it did not apply. If the right hon. Gentleman would do that, he would probably save two or three days' discussion; if he declined, he was afraid encouragement would be given to move Amendments, not with the object of wrecking the Bill, but with the legitimate and bonâ fide intention of improving it as far as that could possibly be done. The hon. Member had referred to the nail and chain industries of Cradley Heath, but surely he did not wish to impose upon those industries further disabilities and further injustices which, in other directions, they had suffered so long. The men, women, and children there were working under absolutely intolerable conditions of hard labour, long hours, insanitary conditions, and brutally low wages. And was that penalty to be supplemented by the further penalty that if a boy or man was injured while working in a shop where steam was not used, he was to get no compensation at all? Let them grapple with the small master at once. ["Hear, hear!"] Why should the Committee give to the small master, who very frequently was a greedy and ignorant and unscrupulous person, immunity from protective legislation in industry which was imposed upon a large master? ["Hear, hear!"] He could understand the argument that it was for his preservation, but he would point out that the master's preservation meant the death of, or injury to, the workmen who were not protected. The risk of the small master was proportionate to his business. Very frequently he engaged personally in the trade, and was able to take minute care in the workshop. This would quicken his sense of protection to his workmen and stimulate him to improve the conditions under which they worked. If it did not do that, it would drive him to insure the same as the large master, and he saw no reason why the small master should be exempted from that condition. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Baronet for the Ormskirk Division said that all trades in which machinery other than that worked by hand labour was employed should be included in the Bill. If he would move that he would vote with him with pleasure. The hon. Baronet went on to mention an industry in which machines were not used which was not in the Bill, but which he thought ought to come within its scope—namely, the unloading by stevedores and dockers of ships in mid-stream. They would not come within the scope of the Bill at all.

Sir A. FORWOOD: I said I would vote in favour of their being included in the Bill.

Mr. BURNS said that, unfortunately for those workers, the hon. Baronet was not the Home Secretary, and he wanted to get the view of the Home Secretary on that particular point. Were trades that employed machinery other than that worked by hand labour to have this Bill applied to them? If so, let it be said so that night. He also wanted to know a little more distinctly than he did at present why seamen had been excluded. What were they going to do with seamen who were actually engaged in sailoring occupations, but whose vessel was alongside a wharf or a dock or in mid-stream? ["Hear, hear!"] Were they going to treat a vessel when it was not at sea or not in actual motion as a factory or workshop within the scope of the Bill? They were told that this Bill, being experimental in its character, should be limited in its scope. That was invariably the excuse of people who had not altogether made up their minds about the Bill they had introduced. That did not appear to him to be a satisfactory reason why the scope of its application should be restricted. This Bill was supposed to be a substitute for an Employers' Liability Bill, but it only took in half the workmen who came under the Bill of 1893, and, though it claimed to include the most dangerous trades, it excluded the most dangerous of all trades from the point of view of injury and loss of life—namely, seamen, while deadly and dangerous trades, where injury to health ought to be interpreted as an accident, were not to be admitted. The Bill was illogical and inconsistent, and, in its main provisions, could not be defended. It was, however, an experiment, of a tentative character, in the right direction, which they hoped to extend to trades that were now excluded. Let them have a schedule of trades which, when the included trades had had 12 months' advantages of this Bill, should slowly and automatically be co-opted within its provisions. He should also like to know from the Colonial Secretary what was going to be done with regard to the shipbuilding trade. Suppose there was a vessel on the stocks where, in the actual operation of shipbuilding, machinery was not directly used, but men were employed in plating and rivetting, mainly by hand, were those men to come within the Bill? Why was the dividing line so narrow? In building, where machinery was used for joinery and the cutting and preparing of stone, the Bill would apply, but in the case of building where machine-made articles were put together by hand, he was led to believe the Bill would not apply at all. He wanted to know why, when a mortar mill or a steam derrick was used, the man in charge should be compensated, if injured, and the labourer who carried bricks up a ladder in a hod should not? ["Hear, hear!"] The Government must make up their minds either to accept amendment after amendment extending the scope of the Bill and admitting trades unfairly and inconsistently excluded, or else they must take the Bill by the horns, and say: "There is our Bill. It is illogical. It is inconsistent, but it is a good step in the right direction, and we do not intend to accept any amendments." He could understand that course; but if the House was allowed to hope that shipbuilders and dock hands and seamen might be brought within the scope of the Bill, the discussion would go on for three or four weeks, and then with unsatisfactory results. ["Hear, hear!"] He was friendly to the Bill. He wanted to shorten the discussion, and to see the Bill discussed in a statesmanlike way. No amount of criticism, no amount of misrepresentation of the real point of the Bill would dismiss the difficulty under which hon. Members laboured as to what was the real intention of the Government with regard to including amendments. For the moment hon. Members were wandering about without any guidance as to whether the Government intended to extend the application of the principle of the Measure at all. If there was no intention to do so, then let the Government have the decency to apply the Closure—[laughter]—and get the Bill through. [" Hear, hear ! "]

Mr. BARTLEY thought they would get on quicker with the Bill if more were included. All the delay would arise in discussing what should be included and what should not. The Bill would undoubtedly pass more rapidly if all trades were included. [" Hear, hear ! "] As it stood, the operation of the Bill would be most anomalous. An accident took place in a trade included in the Bill—and the trades which were now included were, generally speaking, the best paid trades in the country—[" hear, hear ! "]—and if a man was killed his widow and family would get a substantial sum, and if he was only injured, he would himself get a substantial allowance as long as he remained incapacitated, and he would get it in an honourable way as his right under the law. [" Hear, hear ! "] His brother, on the other hand, who was employed in very similar work, but whose trade was not included, met with a similar accident, and if he was killed his widow and family would have to beg for some sort of out-door relief from the guardians of the poor, and if he was incapacitated he would have to do so himself. How long would that state of things be allowed to last? It could not last. It would be an injustice. It would create a scandal and do an immense amount of mischief. [" Hear, hear ! "] All trades must have the same advantage now or later. [" Hear, hear ! "] Of course, it was true that in the case he had given the compensation was to come from the employer and the pittance in the other case from the rates. That was another grotesque anomaly, and could not continue—[" hear, hear ! "]-and although he believed that the ultimate result of the Bill must be that all trades and occupations must come within it, and that provision must be made by the State by special taxation or some other arrangement, it was quite clear it was impossible to trust entirely to the employer. The ultimate result must be to do the thing in a national way. He should, therefore, vote for the inclusion of all trades. [" Hear, hear ! "]

*Sir FRANCIS EVANS (Southampton) said that his hon. Friend on his left, the Member for the Barnard Castle Division, was very deeply interested in coal. He was himself very deeply interested in shipping. Under this Bill, if an injury occurred to one of his hon. Friend's workmen, and he was permanently incapacitated, his hon. Friend was liable, so long as the man was incapacitated, to pay him half his wages. An accident happened to a man in his own employ, and he was not liable. He was excluded by the Bill. He had no doubt there was very good reason why his hon. Friend should pay a large amount of money and he himself should pay none. [Laughter.] He ought, no doubt, to feel highly complimented that the precautions he took were sufficient to leave him out of the Bill. He had a great deal of sympathy, and he said so frankly, with the right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary. In his speech made on the Shipping Bill of 1884—[cries of " Oh ! " and laughter]—wishing to accentuate the claims of those for whose care he was himself mainly responsible in his own business—namely, firemen, seamen, and others employed on board ship, he pointed out that the loss of life in the shipping trade was 1 in 354, while the loss of life in collieries was 1 in 454 ; and that, he presumed was exactly the reason why the hon. Member for one of the Yorkshire Divisions to whom he had referred had to pay a large amount if an accident occurred in his mines, while he himself, who had, perhaps, a larger loss, was entirely left outside. [Laughter.] He did not want to press the point, because he believed that both the Colonial Secretary and the Home Secretary had taken a great deal of interest in the Bill, and really wanted to get something practical carried. [Ministerial cheers.] But the great difficulty was this—and if it could be removed one of the greatest obstacles to the Bill would disappear. He had put down an Amendment to include seamen, firemen, apprentices, and indeed all employed on board ship. There was, however, one difficulty, and it was the only one—he referred to the question of insurance. They could insure every single risk under the Bill except one; and if the Government could find a way out of it they would do a very great service to the working men of the country. It was the one point of the uncertain liability on permanent incapacity. ["Hear, hear!"] Every other risk was insurable; and if the Government would only widen their Bill—he saw the Colonial Secretary did not quite agree with him—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I beg the hon. Member's pardon; he must not assume that.

*Sir F. EVANS was very glad to know that, because this was a business question; and, after all, if the Bill was going to do any good it must be settled on business lines. Now, as to this one question of insurance. His hon. Friend below the Gangway (Mr. Burns) had just referred to it. Insurance was a thing that was very badly understood by the working men representatives in this country. They said, "If you insure us, you are going to open the door to this kind of thing—that employers will not try to prevent accidents." Let him assure them that was not the point at all; because if employers did not insure outside, they insured inside. No man who had a large concern ever thought of passing his profit and loss account until he had debited it with a charge for accidents and everything of that kind. If they insured outside, it was because experience taught them that they did not require to put so much upon it. If they put 4 per cent. against certain risks, and outside people were willing to take those risks at 3 per cent., as business men they went to the outside people. But to say that they must not insure, whether they went outside or not, was perfectly absurd. Now, if the Government would only find some way—he did not care what it was—if they would only fix some date or some sum of money as a limit to this risk of permanent incapacity, it was the only risk that he cared about in the Bill. He did not know what the Home Secretary or the Colonial Secretary thought about it. He admitted that they could not include every trade in the Bill at this moment. If they tried to do so, they would probably prolong the Debates so as to prevent the Bill getting through at all. He wanted to get the Bill through, and he thought they ought to get it through. ["Hear, hear!"] He had taken very great pains to find out what would have been the effect of this Bill in the shipping industry had it been in operation during the past four or five years. The firm with which he was connected had hundreds of men in their employ, and he could tell the House that it practically amounted to less than they would willingly give themselves for the protection of those men. He pressed the Bill upon the House; he hoped it would be carried through this Session; and he regretted very much that the Government had not found it possible to include the whole of the workmen of the country. He was sure it would lead to that by-and-bye, to the great benefit of the workmen.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I entirely recognise the hon. Gentleman who has just spoken as one of the friends of the Bill. I thank him for what he has said in reference to the particular trade of which he is such a distinguished representative, and I will endeavour to reply to the remarks he has made in reference to that particular trade. Certainly the Government have no right to complain of the full discussion of the very important point which has now been raised again—which was raised on the Second Reading of the Bill, and which is now raised again at the very outset of the Committee. I am afraid it will be necessary for me to repeat myself in endeavouring to answer the arguments that have been brought forward. Sir, the point which we are discussing is really what I may describe as a point touching the principle of the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] It is a question of principle whether this Bill shall apply universally to every form of manual labour, or whether it shall be in any way restricted. We are not dealing now, as some hon. Members seem to think, with the question whether it should be applied to this or that particular trade; we are dealing with the point whether or not there should be any kind of restriction whatever. Upon that we take our stand. This is not a Bill which is to be applied without exception to every trade and to every form of labour; and I must protest against the line taken by some hon. Members opposite, who complain that this Bill is a very unsatisfactory Bill because it does not apply to every form of labour. Why, Sir, who are the persons who make this complaint? They are the persons who received as if it were a new gospel, who described as the charter of the working man, the Bill of my right hon. Friend the Member for East Fife (Mr. Asquith). That Bill proposed to deal with an additional one-tenth of the whole of the accidents which occur in our industrial occupations.

Mr. ASQUITH: It dealt with all trades. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: That has nothing whatever to do with the argument. It surely is no answer to the argument I am bringing before the House, which is this—that hon. Members opposite, when they were supporting a Government, could not be too enthusiastic with regard to a Bill which added only one-tenth of the accidents which take place to those that were already dealt with in the Statute Book, and it is not consistent in them to complain that this Bill does not go far enough because it only deals, say, with 60 or 70 per cent. of the accidents. ["Hear, hear!" and dissent.] Well, it deals with the whole of the accidents that occur in the trades with which it is concerned; and I undertake to say that this Bill will deal with between 60 and 70 per cent. of the whole of the accidents which occur in the country, while my right hon. Friend's dealt only with 30 per cent. I do not complain now of the Bill of my right hon. Friend, although I think that the principle of that Bill was wrong and that it would have been a better Bill if he had adopted the principle which we now submit to the Committee. But I do not wish to go back to old controversies. All I say is that it is unreasonable to complain of us, who have covered so much larger a field, on the ground that we do not go far enough when, only a few years ago, all the Members on the other side of the House were perfectly satisfied with the small contribution of the right hon. Member for East Fife to the settlement of the question. We have to deal with three classes of criticism. There is the criticism of those who are sincere friends of the principle of this Bill and who think that in some ways it may be improved, amended, and extended, and whom I have no doubt we shall be able in the course of these discussions to meet to some extent. Then we have the critics who are confessedly opposed to the Bill in the interests of the trades which they represent. That is the legitimate form of opposition if it comes into the open. If hon. Members who hold the view that their trades will be sacrificed by this Bill would tell us so and oppose the Measure on that ground, I should be prepared to give the greatest consideration to their arguments and I could appreciate their position. But I do not think it is quite fair that the opposition of these Gentlemen should take this indirect form. It is not fair to overlay the Bill with Amendments which are intended to extend its scope, and so to bring into the field a larger amount of opposition. It is plain that these Gentlemen are actuated by a desire to obtain allies, and, therefore, I cannot pay the same attention to their arguments as I should do if they openly avowed their opposition. It is not a fair way of meeting the complaint that a particular trade will suffer under this Bill to urge that a number of other trades should be included in order that the representatives of those trades may be added to the existing opponents of the Bill. Then there is another class of criticism. It is that of Gentlemen who think that this is a most admirable Bill, but who regret that it has been brought in by what they are pleased to call a Tory Government. [Laughter.] But as practical people we are not arguing at this stage the logic and consistency of the Bill; we are not contending that it may not be found, when this Bill is passed, that an extension of its application is desirable. All we say is that, knowing what the House of Commons is capable of, and knowing what public opinion is at the present time, we have gone practically and substantially as far as we can safely go. ["Hear, hear!"] That is a statement which I have made again and again, and of which I am not in the slightest degree ashamed. It does not affect that statement in the least to bring forward the case of two brothers, one of whom is in one business and the other in another, one of whom will get the advantage of the Bill, while the other will not. Let the one who gets the advantage be glad, and let the other not stand, like the dog in the manger, in the way of his brother. Let him wait his opportunity—[laughter]—and if it be found that his brother has got this advantage without all the injury to trade which many hon. Members, possibly on both sides of the House, conscientiously believe may be inflicted by this Bill, then he will have a superabundant case, an unanswerable case, for claiming an extension of the Measure to his particular industry. In the meantime it is no answer to tell us that this Bill is worth nothing because it only deals with 60 or 70 per cent. of cases, and that there are some people outside its scope who might make out as good a claim as those within it. We do not deny the claims of those who are left out, but we say, let them wait for the experience which will be gained when this Bill has become law, and if that experience is what we believe it will be, then will be the time for them to make their demand. In making our proposals in this form we are following the precendent of all legislation which touches large and important industrial interests. And nothing would be more foolish than to make a vast scheme of this kind applicable universally before we have gained experience. Substantially, therefore, we have gone as far as we ought to go.

Sir F. EVANS: Will the right hon. Gentleman kindly give the Committee his views on the point to which I have referred? If you limit the area to which you apply the Bill, of course you affect the question of insurance, and so, in a sense, handicap your own Measure. By limiting the application you must raise the insurance premium. I want the Bill to be made as wide as possible for that reason.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: My hon. Friend is a little impatient. I am going to deal with the arguments he has used, but before I come to particulars I must dispose of the general question. I repeat that, it being a question of principle whether the Bill should be universally applied or whether it should be restricted, the Government hold that it ought to be restricted, although the question of what the restriction should be may be a matter for subsequent discussion. We hold, therefore, that the Committee ought not to accept the Amendment. The hon. Member for Battersea says that we are allowing the Committee to drift, and urges that if we take the view that the Bill should be more or less restricted we ought at once to declare that we will allow no Amendment, no extension of any kind, and that we will use the Closure freely to bring the discussion to an end.

Mr. BURNS: The right hon. Gentleman is hardly fair in interpreting my remarks in that way. He has practically told the Committee that as far as the question of admitting more trades—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: Is this to be another speech?

Mr. BURNS: The Chairman will call me to order if I transgress. If the right hon. Gentleman will have the patience to listen I will put him right. The right hon. Gentleman is in error in saying I want to prevent any Amendments from being moved. What I want is that the Government should tell the Committee whether or not there are to be any additions to the trades dealt with under this Bill. Of course, as regards points of machinery there must be Amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: The hon. Member clearly does not recollect what he said himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNS: The House does, and I will accept its decision. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: There need be no heat in this matter. I am not at all anxious to misrepresent the hon. Member. I understood him to complain of the Government because they had not made a clear declaration, and I think he used these exact words—that they had two alternatives, either to admit all trades or to say that they would admit none, but use the Closure and bring this discussion to an end. I was going on to say that we cannot accept his position that there are only two alternatives or that that would be at all a reasonable point of view to take. We do not intend to treat the House in that manner. [Cheers.] We have said we will not accept Amendments which point to universal inclusion. I do not say we will not accept any extension—that is going too far—and we are not prepared to put the Closure on if, hereafter, at the proper time, reasons are given why a particular trade should be included which is now excluded, or a particular portion of a trade in the same way. That, I think, is perfectly reasonable. ["Hear, hear!"] I have tried to point out to the House that we are now, as it were, discussing the Second Reading of the principle whether or no there shall be universal inclusion. I have made clear what is the intention of the Government in regard to it. Then comes the question whether a particular trade which is now excluded should be included. This is not the time to discuss it. That point must come upon the definition clause which defines the trades to which the Bill applies, and when the time comes that hon. Members will accept the general decision—or after the House has voted upon it—and reserve their Amendments till the second clause, then the Government will be prepared to give most careful consideration to any Amendment proposing to include any particular trade. [Cheers.] Let me say that I do not think there are many trades excluded by this Bill in its present form which it will be right to include, but I have already pointed out on the Second Reading that there is one inclusion which we ought to make—namely, with regard to the building trade. I then explained that owing to a slip in the drafting of the Bill it would appear that we had not included all that is now included in the Factory Acts which we had intended to do. I believe there is an Amendment on the Paper in the name of the right hon. Member for the Forest of Dean to include buildings which are over 30ft. in height, and to that we shall most certainly assent. [Cheers.] There must be cases of omissions of a similar nature which we ought to include. But a much larger question was raised by my hon. Friend opposite, and I now come to his point. He, I think, suggested that the shipping trade as a whole should be included, and he pointed out with great candour that the great business in which he is engaged is responsible for a larger loss of life than many other trades included in the Bill.

*SIR F. EVANS: Scarcely larger.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: At the time at which I spoke on this subject the loss of life in shipping was larger than the loss of life in mines or any other industry with which I was then acquainted. I know that, as a consequence both of the agitation which took place then and also of subsequent legislation, and of the care and regulations which have been adopted by my successors at the Board of Trade, the proportion of loss of life has very much diminished, and is now 1 in 124, or something of that sort, whereas when I spoke in 1884 it was 1 in 51. ["Hear, hear!"] So that a very material change for the better has taken place, although it is still true that the loss of life is very large. And what do I gather from that? I gather from that that the shipping trade must be dealt with. ["Hear, hear!"] I make absolutely no pledge on behalf of the Government, because I think pledges of this kind are very imprudent, as no one knows what may happen in a Session that has yet to come. But I say that after this Bill has been passed, it will be the duty of some Government to deal with the shipping trade. [Cheers.] All I have argued for is that the shipping trade should be dealt with on somewhat different principles to trades on land, because I think the conditions under which the trade is carried on are essentially distinct. ["Hear, hear!"] Now comes my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, and I think he suggests that the trade is already ripe to be dealt with, and that it might safely be included even in the present Bill. Does he speak for the shipping trade? Because if my hon. Friend, who is most influential in the shipping trade, is able to bring to this House the assurance that the trade which he represents—not himself alone, but the trade, which is a vast and great industry—has convinced itself from a perusal of this Bill that it can safely be applied to that industry, all I can say is that a statement of that kind is unanswerable, and I cannot conceive that any Government could under any such circumstances refuse to include that trade.

*SIR F. EVANS observed that he could only speak for his own company.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: I must leave it there. All I can say is, that up to the present time the indications go to show that the vast majority of the trade do feel that some special consideration should be given to the special circumstances under which this great industry is being conducted. If that is their view, I think it would be wise for the House to postpone all dealing with the shipping trade until it can be dealt with in a separate Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] I have only one other remark to make, and that is as to what fell from my hon. Friend with regard to insurance. Certainly it is most important, in dealing with a Bill of this kind, in which we are seeking compensation of and relief to the workmen, and not punishment of the employer, that insurance should be encouraged, and should be made easy in every way in which we can do so. I agree with my hon. Friend that the uncertainty which may prevail at present in regard to the scheme for compensation in regard to permanent incapacity, may interfere with the framing of a proper scale of insurance. If that be so, I think it would be perfectly possible to make that provision more definite so as to facilitate the process of insurance. But as regards the question of including other trades, I can only say that, dealing with a constituency of 6,000,000, which is the least number of workmen we are dealing with in the Bill, you have got a field so large that there should be no difficulty in framing insurance regulations with regard to them, and I am assured by those most expert in the matter that there will be no difficulty whatever in framing insurance in connection with the trades specified in this Bill if the schedule which deals with the amount of compensation is made more definite in all its particulars. That does not necessarily mean that it is made less favourable to the workmen, but only that it is made more definite, so that the actual amount of the insurance can more easily be calculated. I think I have said enough to show that the Government are prepared to meet all practical points as far as they can in deference to opinion from all sides of the House, and I hope that the House will be content very speedily to come to a decision on what I have said is a point of principle—namely, whether or no there shall be any restrictions in the scope and purview of this Bill. [Cheers.]

Mr. HALDANE said he was thankful that this Bill had been brought in by a Tory Government, though he could not refrain from stating that, had it been brought in by their opponents, those who framed the Measure would have been subjected to denunciations, called at the very least pinchbeck Robespierres, and denounced as the exponents of Socialism. The Bill, it was true, had been received with a chorus of assent expressed in different ways, but that assent rested on grounds more substantial than the mere desire on the part of great employers of labour to come within its provisions. It was a Measure which let off those who came within its provisions from a large share of liability for accidents, and the ground on which he objected to the exclusion of a large number of cases of employment was that the Bill did not place employers of labour on the same footing in the matter of benefits. The law was being substantially altered, and he objected to the arbitrary division of the employers of labour into two classes—those who remained under the law at the present time, and those who were exempted from all liability under existing provisions. Looking at the latter portion of Clause 2, it would be found that an employer of labour was only liable in the case of accident if his act was "wrongful and wilful"; and what that phrase meant remained yet to be determined, but it might mean something different from what was the case under the existing state of things.

Sir JAMES JOICEY said that, having listened carefully to the Debate, he had come to the conclusion that, whatever might be the opinion of the right hon. Gentleman, the strongest arguments had been adduced in the discussion in favour of making the Bill general. ["Hear, hear!"] He failed to gather from the Colonial Secretary one sound argument in favour of the course which the Government had adopted. What they objected to was the injustice which this Measure created. Instead of putting all employers on the same footing, it selected special industries, and he had failed to glean the real reason why this method of treatment had been followed. What became of those injured in the excluded trades? If a man was killed, his widow and family in all probability came on the rates. Who paid those rates? The very industries included in the Bill. So the included industries not only paid for their own accidents, but had to pay a considerable proportion for the accidents of other trades. The Home Secretary had divided into sections the supporters of the Bill. He did not gather from anything that had been said that there was any section of Members who wished to destroy the Bill. As to motives, if they began to inquire into these, he was afraid the motives of some of those who supported the Bill would not, perhaps, bear close examination. But he was glad to find there was no opposition to the principle of the Bill. That was one reason why the principle of the Bill should be applied to every trade. In excluding certain trades the Government not only created a great injustice as far as employers were concerned, but as regarded workmen too. There were as many fair-minded men among the working class as in any class of the community, who believed in justice even to an employer. When this Bill came to be understood by the working men of this country it would be seen by them to be most unjust, not only to their fellow workmen left outside, but to the employers included. He was surprised that the agricultural labourers were not included in the scope of the Bill. He should have thought that if there was any Government which would attend to the interests of the agricultural labourers in this matter, it was a Government composed of gentlemen like the President of the Local Government Board, the Under Secretary to the Local Government Board, and the Under Secretary for the Home Office. The latter had raised his voice in the country when injustices were done to the agricultural labourer, but was silent in that House when an injustice was being done to them. He was surprised that a class like the agricultural labourers, so represented and patronised by the Conservative Party should have been left out of its scope altogether. He was glad the fishing industry was to be included. He intended to press on the Government to include as many interests as possible, and he hoped they would listen to reason in the matter.

*MR. TOMLINSON wished to complain of the undue haste with which the Committee stage of what was admitted to be a Bill of great importance had been pressed on. It was remarkable that, though as far as the principle of the Bill was concerned it had received the general approval of the House, there had only been five days to consider what Amendments were required to meet the necessary difficulties in the detail of the Measure. The Bill as it stood included certain industries and left others out. The alternative proposal was that they should put all industries primâ facie into the Bill, and exclude by exception those to which the Bill was not applicable. Time had not been allowed to frame the necessary exceptions, and therefore it was only possible to vote with imperfect knowledge of the alternative scheme. He thought, on the whole, that the preferable course was to begin with inclusion and exclude by exception.

MR. McKENNA reminded the Committee that the Home Secretary said he would give a favourable consideration to any proposed amendments to the existing employers' liability law which would affect trades excluded under the Bill as it now stood. But under the decision of Mr. Speaker it was quite clear that the hope held out by the Home Seecretary would fail, and they should not therefore have any opportunity of reviewing the action of this Bill in comparison with a good employers' liability Bill such as that introduced by the late Home Secretary. He would point out the condition under this Bill of certain trades carried out in the same town in workshops, in factories, and in home industry. A factory employer would be bound to compensate the workman, but the very same workman, engaged in the same trade and the same town, under identically the same regulations, rules, and conditions as to wages, would not be compensated if engaged in workshop labour, and still less would he be compensated in home industry. Therefore, under this Bill they were inflicting a punishment upon a particular employer as against other employers engaged in the same industry in the same locality. That alone would be a sufficient reason for including all industries in the Measure. He supported the Amendment on the ground that its tendency undoubtedly would be to make insurance universal. If all trades were included in the Bill the inevitable tendency would be for the State to form an insurance office in which every employer would be compelled to insure, and that was the only possible solution of the question.

Question put, "That the words 'to which this Act applies,' stand part of the clause."—The Committee divided:—Ayes, 233; Noes, 155.—(Division List, No. 216.)

MR. McKENNA moved in sub-section (1) to leave out the words "arising out of and." These words, he contended, were unnecessary and would lead to confusion. He put the case of two hewers working in a colliery side by side. If the pick-axe of one hewer flew out of his hand and injured the other, was that an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir Richard Webster, Isle of Wight): Certainly.

Mr. McKENNA said that covered the case so far as the action was unintentional, but what if the pick-axe was intentionally thrown by the one man at the other? If that case also came under the Bill these words were surplusage. He might also take the case of a fall in the roof of a colliery which injured a man, but which might be from some extraneous cause, such as the firing of a shot in another part of the mine.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said he understood the hon. Member to suggest that anything which happened to a workman while he was engaged on his work should be within the Bill, but that was not what they intended. To take the case cited by the hon. Member, if the hewer out of malice, drove his pick-axe at the other man, it was not an accident arising out of the man's employment. The words were really necessary.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. GALLOWAY moved at the end of sub-section (1), after the word "Act," to insert the words—

"notwithstanding the fact that any such workman may be at the same time in receipt of any benefit from any registered friendly society."

The object of this Amendment was very plain and simple. The Secretary for the Colonies said there was no intention to do anything that would injure the great friendly societies of the country. The Amendment would guard the members of these societies from being penalised, because they were members.

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY could not see that it was the intention of the Bill to in any way penalise members of the friendly society, and the words proposed were absolutely unnecessary.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. J. L. WALTON (Leeds, S.) moved to insert at the end of sub-section (1) the words:

"Such compensation shall be payable, whether the injury occasioned arises from the act of the employer or of some person in his employ, or from the act of a stranger thereto. Provided that where such injury shall be occasioned by the act of a stranger under circumstances creating a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereof, the workman may, at his option, proceed either at law against such person to recover damages, or against his employer for compensation under this Act, and if he be compensated under this Act the employer shall be entitled to enforce in the name of the workman all rights of action possessed by him against the person occasioning such injury as aforesaid."

He thought the right hon. Gentleman would admit that this was a reasonable Amendment, and in illustration he mentioned the case of a stevedore. The workman should be entitled to compensation under the Act, in which case the employer would pay the compensation which devolved upon him, but the employer should be entitled to pursue a cause of action for negligence at common law when negligence had occasioned the injury to the workman, and involved liability to the employer. The Amendment was conceived in no spirit hostile to the Bill, but with a view to advance what he felt must be the aim of those responsible for the Bill.

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY thought that this was a very reasonable proposal, but he had some doubt as to whether it should not be brought up in the form of a new clause. He was willing the Amendment should be inserted, subject to its form being reconsidered at a later stage.

Amendment agreed to.

Colonel DENNY (Kilmarnock Burghs) moved, in Sub-section (1), after the word "Act," to insert the words:—

"Such compensation to have a like priority in payment, in case of winding up or bankruptcy, as have wages under the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act 1888, or any Act for the time being regulating the priority of wages in bankruptcy or winding up."

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said that the Government were disposed to accept the principle of the Amendment, but they suggested that the proposal should take the form of a new clause. One reservation he had to make. It was not quite clear that the capital amount—£150 or £300—ought to be in exactly the same position as the preferential claim.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. SETON-KARR proposed, in Subsection (2), after the word "that," to insert:—

"(a) The employer shall not be liable under this Act to pay compensation to any workman by whose wilful and wrongful act or default the accident arises in respect of which compensation for injury may become payable."

As long as the Government accepted the principle of his Amendment, he was not particular as to the form it took. It did, however, seem to him but fair that compensation should not be paid to a workman who was injured through his own wilful act of negligence. The Amendment of the hon. Gentleman opposite contained the words "for his defence." He did not desire to see those words inserted. He did not desire to see inserted in the Bill words which would in the case of a man who was killed through his own fault or wilful negligence prevent his widow and family from getting compensation. They were not concerned in the act of the man himself, and he would only desire to move the Amendment so as not to allow compensation to a man who was injured by his own wilful negligence. He pressed his Amendment on the Government. All he asked was that they should take the idea and put it into the Bill in their own way.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN said he did not suppose the House would desire to decide this question that night. [Cheers.] It raised a matter of considerable importance—["hear, hear!"]—upon which the Government would like to have some guidance from the House. The fact was, that even supposing they accepted the principle of the Amendment, there would be a question as to the form in which it should be carried out. There was an important Amendment standing in the name of the hon. Baronet the Member for Durham which was intended to make a similar provision, although it was in different words. The House, of course, would have to consider really the question between justice and expediency. Justice required that something in the nature of this Amendment should be accepted. [Cheers.] There was no doubt about that. It was most unfair that a man who had deliberately disobeyed, in the most flagrant way, an order given to him, and had thereby caused injury to others as well as to himself, should be himself compensated for his wilful or wrongful act. The people who had suffered by his action would, of course, be compensated in any case, but it was grossly unfair that the man should himself be actually paid for his wrongful act. That was what he called the side of justice. On the other hand, there was the question of expediency, which arose out of this consideration—was it worth while to add another litigable point to the Bill in connection with cases which, after all, must necessarily be rare? [Opposition cheers.] He had stated the problems the House would have to consider, and he hoped that to-morrow they would have some guidance from the House. The Government at present preserved an open mind. [Cheers.] He would now move "That the Chairman do report Progress, and ask leave to sit again." ["Hear, hear!"]

Question put, and agreed to.

Committee report Progress; to sit again To-morrow.

BERRIEW SCHOOL BILL.

Order for Third Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read the Third time." Debate arising;

And, it being Midnight, the Debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed upon Thursday.

MERCHANT SHIPPING (UNDERMANNING) BILL.

Third Reading deferred till Thursday.

SUPPLY [21ST MAY].

Resolutions reported.

CIVIL SERVICES ESTIMATES, 1897-8.

CLASS II.

1. "That a sum, not exceeding £114,389, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for the salaries and expenses of the Local Government Board in Ireland, including certain grants in aid of Local Taxation."

2. "That a sum, not exceeding £1,243, be granted to Her Majesty to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for the salaries and expenses of the Office of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland."

POOR LAW BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

POST OFFICE (SITES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

DANGEROUS PERFORMANCES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

POST OFFICE CONSOLIDATION BILL [H.L.].

Committee deferred till Monday next.

AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRIES (IRELAND) BILL.

Order for Second Reading read, and discharged.—Bill withdrawn.

LAW OF EVIDENCE (CRIMINAL CASES) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

Order for Second Reading read, and discharged.—Bill withdrawn.

FINANCE BILL.

Considered in Committee; Committee report Progress; to sit again upon Thursday.

FOREIGN PRISON-MADE GOODS BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, Etc. [17th May] further adjourned till Thursday.

ISLE OF MAN (CHURCH BUILDING ACTS) BILL [H.L.].

Second Reading deferred till Tomorrow.

SCHOOL BOARDS' EXPENSES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

LAND TRANSFER BILL [H.L.].

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

EXTRAORDINARY TITHE BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

PUBLIC OFFICES (WHITEHALL) SITE (RE-COMMITTED) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

PATENT OFFICE EXTENSION (RE-COMMITTED) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

BICYCLES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (ALDERSHOT AND FARNBOROUGH) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [1st April] further adjourned till Thursday.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES' JURISDICTION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tomorrow.

BURIAL GROUNDS LOANS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [11th May] further adjourned till Thursday.

SUPPLY.

Committee deferred till Wednesday.

WAYS AND MEANS [21ST MAY].

Resolution reported, "That it is expedient to amend the Law relating to Customs and Inland Revenue."

Resolution agreed to.

Ordered, that it be an Instruction to the Committee on the Finance Bill that they have power to make provision therein pursuant to the said Resolution. —(Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till Wednesday.

SOLICITORS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday 29th June.

MARRIED PERSONS' SMALL INDUSTRIAL INCOMES (TAX RELIEF) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 24th June.

BOILER INSPECTION AND REGISTRATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 30th June.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES (SCOTLAND) LOANS BILL.

Order for Second Reading read, and discharged. Bill withdrawn.

POLLING ARRANGEMENTS (LONDON) BILL.

Order for Second Reading read, and discharged. Bill withdrawn.

SHOP ASSISTANTS (HALF-HOLIDAY) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

RESTRAINT OF EVICTIONS (LONDON) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

DISTRICT COUNCILS (WATER SUPPLY FACILITIES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1888) AMENDMENT (No. 2) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

ACCESS TO MOUNTAINS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 24th June.

CORONERS' INQUESTS (RAILWAY FATALITIES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 25th June.

REGISTRATION OF FIRMS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 14th June.

TITHE REDEMPTION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 14th June.

CONGESTED DISTRICTS BOARD (IRELAND) (COMPULSORY PURCHASE POWERS) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

MARRIED WOMEN (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 28th June.

ELECTION PETITIONS BILL.

Order for Second Reading read and discharged. Bill withdrawn.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Select Committee [24th March] further adjourned till Wednesday.

MARKET GARDENERS' COMPENSATION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Third Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1888) AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

ARCHDEACONRY OF LONDON (ADDITIONAL ENDOWMENTS) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [24th February] further adjourned till To-morrow.

COLONIAL SOLICITORS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 17th June.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

EVICTED TENANTS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

COUNTY GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

VEHICLES (LIGHTS) BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND) ACT (1877) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

MOTIONS.

LICENSING (SCOTLAND) ACTS AMENDMENT.

Bill to amend the Licensing (Scotland) Acts 1828 to 1887, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Provand, Mr. Cameron Corbett, Sir Charles Cameron, and Mr. Baird; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Monday next, and to be printed.—[Bill 268.]

PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS (IRELAND) REGISTRATION.

Bill to amend the Law relating to Registration of Parliamentary Voters in Ireland, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Tully, Colonel Waring, Mr. Power, and Mr. Patrick Aloysius M'Hugh; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Thursday, and to be printed.—[Bill 269.]

House Adjourned at a Quarter after Twelve o'Clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 25th May 1897.

JURIES DETENTION BILL.

Reported from the Standing Committee with Amendments. The Report thereof to be received on Friday next; and Bill to be printed as amended.—[No. 98.]

EXCISE LICENCES BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to consolidate the enactments granting and relating to the duties payable upon excise licences—Was presented by Viscount Peel; Read 1ª; to be printed; and to be Read 2ª on Tuesday next.—[No. 99.]

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT (1870) AMENDMENT BILL.

THE LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (The Duke of DEVONSHIRE) rose to move the Second Reading of this Bill. He said: In the Education Bill which was introduced in the other House last Session, clauses were contained which, besides providing for a certain amount of assistance to Voluntary Schools, were intended also to meet the case of the acknowledged grievance of the excessive educational burden in some School Board districts, and when the Bill which had passed through Parliament this Session was introduced dealing only with the question of aid to Voluntary Schools, a pledge was given that a further Measure would be brought in, if time permitted, giving a certain amount of assistance to districts where the pressure upon the ratepayers has been found to be unduly excessive, and this Bill has been introduced and passed through the other House in pursuance of that pledge. I am perfectly aware that this Measure is considered by some noble Lords opposite as being very inadequate. I do not imagine, however, inadequate as they may conceive it to be, that it is likely to meet with any more opposition here than it met with in the other House, and, therefore, I do not think it will be necessary for me to enter into any elaborate explanation of the details of this Bill. If I were to attempt to give such an explanation it would of necessity be rather intricate and complicated. But probably the proposals of the Government, after the discussions in the other House, are already tolerably well understood by those who take any considerable interest in the subject, and I am afraid that I must despair of being able to make the details of the Measure clear to those who have not already taken any such interest in the matter. It may, therefore, be sufficient for me to say that this Bill is an extension and to some degree a modification of the 97th Section of the Education Act of 1870. That clause is itself rather complicated in character, and, indeed, has not been fully understood. It has not been understood by all the School Boards to which it applies, for it was found in the discussions of last year that a considerable number of School Boards which would have been able to claim some assistance under this section had always omitted to do so, and the amount that had been claimed since the Debates of last year called attention to the matter has considerably increased the payments made under the section, which was explained in 1870 by Mr. Gladstone in the other House. It was supposed at that time that the expenditure on school maintenance in Board Schools as well as in Voluntary Schools would not exceed the sum of 27s. or 28s. per child in average attendance, and that in addition to the annual grants provided by the Government and the fees which the schools would receive from the children an expenditure of not more than 7s. 6d. per child in average attendance would have to be provided from the rates. In districts where the 3d. rate would be sufficient to provide this amount of 7s. 6d. it was thought that the burden on the locality would not be excessive, and the section had no application to them; but where the district was so poor, or where the number of children who had to be educated in Board Schools was so large, that a 3d. rate would not provide the sum of 7s. 6d. per scholar in average attendance, the section made provisions for a special grant which should supplement the produce of a 3d. rate up to a limit of 7s. 6d. per child. But the expectations entertained at that time have not been fulfilled. The expenditure upon the maintenance of children in Board Schools now amounts on the average to a sum of over £2 10s. The Government subvention has been largely increased, and now amounts to £1 9s. 6d. per child; but, in spite of that increase in the Government grant, a balance is left over which has to be provided by the locality, amounting to 20s. 6d. per child instead of 7s. 6d., which was the estimate for 1870. These figures are only the figures for the average maintenance of schools. Besides this, the School Boards have to find for interest on loans, and for repayment of loans, a further amount of 14s. per child. They also have imposed upon them other expenses, such as those of management, election expenses, and the expenses of schools for the deaf and blind, and the total expenditure of School Boards out of the rates has now risen to the sum of £2 2s., which is equivalent to a 9d. rate all over the country. The provision, therefore, which was made by Section 97 has proved inadequate to meet what were supposed to be the needs of the poorer School Boards, and in a great many districts in the country the school rate has become abnormally high. If the expenditure per scholar in all School Boards had remained the same this state of things might have been met by a simple extension of the plan laid down in the 97th Section, which took into account only the two elements of the rateable value of districts and the number of children in attendance in School Boards. That plan, together with some adjustment of the actual rates, might have provided successfully for the increased School Board expenditure if that expenditure had not varied greatly in different districts. The expenditure necessarily varies according as the Board is called upon to provide for the whole of the children in a district, for a very large number of them, or for none at all, as is the case in some localities. It varies also according to the character of the district. If the children can be educated in a very few large schools, the cost is, of course, less than where they have to be educated in a larger number of smaller schools. It varies also because it is found that higher salaries have to be paid to the teachers in certain districts than have to be paid in others. In attempting to deal with this question, therefore, it has been found necessary to introduce an additional element into the plan of the 97th Section—an element additional to that of rateable value, and to that of the number of children in Board Schools. We have had to take into consideration the amount of the rate which has been found to be necessary to provide for the expenses of the School Boards. This Bill, therefore, proposes to do away with a fixed limit of 7s. 6d., and to substitute in its place a sliding scale by which that limit is increased in a certain proportion to the rate levied. The subvention which it is proposed to give will be increased, not in direct proportion to the amount of the school rate, which might evidently lead to undue expenditure and extravagance, but in a ratio which will be ascertained by putting together the three elements of rateable value, the number of children in the schools, and the amount of the rate which it has been found necessary to levy in order to meet the expenses of the Board. Perhaps I may explain the operation of the Bill by giving one or two examples of the way in which it will work in certain districts principally affected. I take, in the first place, the Forest of Dean in Gloucestershire, where the population is engaged chiefly in mining. There the School Board has to provide for an average attendance of 3,074 children. The produce of a 3d. rate per scholar is only 3s. 6d.; the rate in the pound is 1s. 6d., and the limit of the Section in this case will be raised by this Bill from 7s. 6d. to 12s. 6d., and the grant per head which it is estimated the district will receive will be 9s. in lieu of 4s., which it now receives. The total subvention which it will get will be £1,385, instead of £616. Still more important is the county borough of West Ham in the county of Essex, which is practically a suburb of East London. A very large working population, chiefly employed in various industries in London, is collected there, and education is carried on almost entirely in Board Schools. West Ham has an average attendance of 33,024 children; the produce of the 3d. rate is 6s. 3d., the School Board rate in the pound is 2s. 2d., and the limit will be raised under this Bill from 7s. 6d. to 15s. 2d., and the grant per head of the children in average attendance will be raised from 1s. 3d. to 8s. 11d., while the county borough of West Ham will receive a subvention of £14,723 in lieu of £2,064. There are other districts not equally necessitous, but which still educate a very large proportion of their children in the Board Schools, which will receive help of varying amounts, though considerably smaller. Such places as Hull, Leeds, Leicester, Nottingham, Portsmouth, Sheffield, Sunderland, and Swansea will all receive certain amounts, but not nearly so large as those to which I have referred. There are, on the other hand, other districts in which the 3d. rate produces a very considerable sum per scholar—in other words, a small rate provides for a very considerable expenditure, and they will not receive any benefit at all under this Measure. Such districts are London, Liverpool, Manchester, Brighton, Bristol, and Newcastle. In those places the 3d. rate produces £1, or even more, per head of the scholars in average attendance. There are other districts less wealthy where the resources which they possess in the rates do not, as it is believed, give them any special claim on account of their poverty to receive any assistance from the extension which it is proposed to give to the 97th Section of the Act. I think, on the whole, it may be said that this relief will be given in cases where the need is the most urgent. No attempt to equalise the educational burden in every part of the country would be possible unless, as some have desired, the cost of education were made a national instead of a local charge; but so long as the settlement of 1870 is maintained, and it is admitted that to a large extent the burden of education is to remain a local charge, this Bill appears to go in the direction of alleviating the most pressing and the most obvious grievances and inequalities which exist under the present system. The total annual cost of the subvention to School Boards is estimated at nearly £154,000. The similar grants under the present system are £43,000; and therefore the Bill will entail an extra cost of £110,600. The present Measure will afford a larger measure of relief to the necessitous School Boards than the proposal which was contained in the Bill of last year, the total cost of which for poor School Boards was estimated at £89,000. It may, perhaps, be imagined by some that this proposal, while introducing a new element in the amount of the School Board rate, may lead to extravagant administration. It might have done so but for the fact that the aid which it is proposed to give is restricted to those districts where a 3d. rate produces less than a certain sum per child, or where the rateable value, compared with the number of scholars, falls below a certain amount. In such cases it is obvious that a School Board cannot provide for the average expenditure which is found necessary in School Boards generally, except by a very much larger rate than an average rate exceeding the average rate over the country of 9d. It has been ascertained by careful examination that in the most extreme cases which could be produced, a district, in order to obtain an additional grant from the Treasury, would have to tax itself to at least three times that amount, and in a great majority of cases it would have to tax itself by a rate exceeding five or six times any amount that could be expected from the Treasury. In such cases I think extravagant administration in districts so poor is almost impossible. On the contrary, what is most to be apprehended in the case of poor School Board districts like these is rather an undue economy than any tendency towards extravagance. I have no wish to enter on any controversial matters. I have no reason to suppose that the Bill is likely to meet with much opposition, but I submit this proposal with some confidence in opposition to that which I understand has found favour with some noble Lords opposite. It was suggested, I think, in our Debates on the Voluntary Schools Bill, that a fairer arrangement, and one which would have met no opposition from the other side, would have been an equal grant of 5s. per head in Voluntary and Board Schools all round. That proposal would have given less than the present humble proposal which we have to make to those districts which appear to require it most. It seems to me that it would have involved a very large additional expenditure, and if the money were not actually wasted in unnecessary and extravagant expenditure, at least it may be said that it was not required. Any part of 5s. a head, if given to the London School Board, would not even have the effect of relieving the London ratepayers to an equal extent. A part of it would undoubtedly have gone to incrase expenditure, which, in the opinion of many, is already excessive. It would have had the effect of increasing and intensifying the competition, especially in the matter of teachers' salaries, which makes it difficult for Voluntary Schools to exist in London and other large towns. It was not needed in such places in order to secure efficiency. It is admitted that the Board Schools in London and other great and wealthy towns are already efficient, and are made efficient without any extravagant claim being made on the resources of the ratepayers. It is extremely difficult to meet arguments which one fails to understand, and I cannot understand how any man who is of opinion that education is to remain a local charge, and to a certain extent a varying local charge, can argue that it it would be just to apply an equal subvention from Imperial funds to those districts in which that charge is a heavy one, and in some cases almost an intolerable one, as well as to those other districts in which experience has shown that it is a comparatively light and easily borne charge. I have endeavoured to give a very short—and I hope tolerably clear—statement of what is rather an intricate and complicated question; and I venture with some confidence to move the Second Reading of the Bill. [Cheers.]

*LORD PLAYFAIR said that this Bill for aiding necessitous Board Schools was necessarily linked to the Act which had been passed for aiding necessitous Voluntary Schools, but they were to be aided in very different proportions. There were two and a half millions of children in Voluntary Schools, and two millions in Board Schools. As the Act for Voluntary Schools gave to them at the rate of 5s. per child, the natural expectation was that the same amount per child should be given to the Board Schools, but this Bill only gave them about one-fifth the amount. The Act gave to Voluntary Schools upwards of £600,000, and to the Board Schools £110,000. The Education Department might try, and, he hoped, would succeed, in making increased efficiency one of the conditions for increased grants, but as that was not the motive of the Measures, the Department would have a hard struggle to attain it. Those who, like the Bishop of Chester, approved of Lord Hugh Cecil's party cry that Voluntary Schools have a right to consider that "tenure by subscriptions is essentially a tenure by blackmail," would certainly look upon the new grant of £600,000 as a relief Act and not as an educational Act. When the Government announced their intention of giving substantial relief to Voluntary Schools he welcomed the proposal, as he aided Mr. Forster in 1870, and had always valued their great aid to educational progress. He did not grudge in the least the £600,000 given to them, but he strongly regretted that the opportunity was not taken to secure that the sum should be so applied as not only to maintain but increase their efficiency as a great agency for educational progress. This smaller Measure for rate relief to poor Board Schools, which was now to be read a Second time, might, to the extent to which it went, increase the efficiency of education, but only to a small degree. It was the fashion—one which had been much encouraged by the Vice President of the Council—to decry the management and efficiency of rural Board Schools. No doubt there were a good many inferior rural Board Schools, as there were also a good many inferior rural Voluntary Schools, but there was no evidence from the educational statistics that there was any marked difference in rural schools, whether they were managed by School Boards or by Voluntary agencies. He had beside him the returns of 209 rural Voluntary Schools in 12 typical counties, and of 161 Board Schools in the same counties, the result being that the Board Schools paid their teachers an average of 2s. per child more, and that they obtained an average grant of 6d. per child more than the Voluntary Schools. There could, then, be no justification in treating these schools as inferior to Voluntary Schools by giving them only one-fifth of the grant given to the former. The Bill would no doubt become law, but it would leave in the minds of a large portion of the public the impression that, whether these Measures be viewed as relief Bills or as educational Bills, they had given five or six times as much public money to the irresponsible managers of Voluntary Schools as to the accredited and elected educational representatives of the nation. Of the 2,500 School Boards throughout the country, about 1,500 were voluntarily formed by the ratepayers, but 1,000 were compulsorily formed to supply the deficiencies in education not covered by the voluntary system. If the Voluntary Schools might justly claim recognition for relief on account of their voluntary money contributions, surely the 1,000 School Boards, which had to make compulsory contributions under the mandate of the State, might have looked to an equal measure of relief. They had not obtained it, and the Government need not be surprised if many educationists did not accept this Bill as a final settlement of the question. The two Measures which would soon become law might have been so framed that the largely increased grant of about three-quarters of a million, while it relieved tension in subscriptions and rates, might also have greatly increased educational efficiency. The opportunity had been lost, and it was quite certain that before long an agitation for a modification of the Acts would arise in the country, probably from the supporters of both branches of schools.

The Earl of CRANBROOK, dealing with Lord Playfair's criticisms, said the Board Schools, though they did not receive the same amount of public money from the funds of the State, received a vast amount of public money in the shape of rates, of which the Voluntary Schools were altogether deprived. [Cheers.] If they were to vote at one time 5s. per head to the Voluntary Schools and 5s. to the Board Schools, they would simply increase the competition, and put upon the Voluntary Schools an additional burden which they were attempting to alleviate at the present moment. He was far from saying that the time might not come when there might not be a reconsideration of many things in connection with education, but at present they were dealing with comparatively small matters. The Voluntary Schools supplied an enormous gap in education—nay, they supplied an amount of education prior to the School Boards which was not only enormous, but was increasing and growing rapidly, and which, even in spite of their being deprived of State grants and other things, had increased enormously since, without calling on the public for money from the rates or from the funds. That being so, they had gone to the expense of a large additional subsidy to the Voluntary Schools, because, if they had not done so, the chances were that the Voluntary Schools would have fallen, and a far larger demand would have been made both upon the rates and the public funds. They had increased the efficiency and expense of education, and that was the reason why they must make increased demands on the public purse, and by that means, too, necessitous Board Schools, where they were necessitous, would also benefit. If, when the experiment was tried, it should be found that something more should be done, no doubt it would be done in due time. Though he should have wished to see larger Measures than these, he welcomed both the Voluntary Schools and the Board Schools Bills. The former afforded the means of maintaining the schools which had done great work in the past, and still had great work to do, and by the latter he trusted that the necessitous Board Schools would be able to work for the advantage of education. ["Hear, hear!"]

*Lord REAY said that the objection to this Bill was not that relief had been given to the Voluntary Schools, but that the relief to be given to the Board Schools was not adequate, and placed those schools in a condition of inferiority. Why should that be? Whatever progress had been made in the matter of primary education in this country had been mainly due to the Board Schools. In many instances they had been in advance of the requirements of the Department, and they had shown a mastery of the subject of education which had been admired all over Europe. They had dealt not only with mental instruction, but in many cases had promoted manual instruction, which was of the greatest importance in primary education. The Board Schools had been accused of extravagance. What had the late Archbishop of Canterbury said:—

> "He should not be so very hard upon it, because the Board School was a magnificent system, which had been set on foot in a grand manner, and had done wonders for the education of the people, and also stimulated the education given in Church schools."

And how did the expenditure compare with that of the Swiss Canton of Zurich? The town of Zurich in 1896 spent two millions of francs on its primary, secondary, and technical schools, or 13 to 14 francs per head of the population. The town of Winterthur, with a population of 20,000, spent, in 1895, 326,000 francs, or more than 16 francs per head of the population, on education. In addition there was a contribution from the canton of about 3½ francs per head of the population. The total expenditure was £4 per head for every child in the elementary schools; one-third of the whole expenditure of the canton was devoted to education. It was alleged against the Board Schools that they did not give definite religious education. The syllabus of the London School Board did not bear out this allegation. What did The Guardian—an impartial authority—say on the 15th July last year of the syllabus of the London School Board?

> "It is our firm conviction that if the Conservative Party in the country had to declare, by ballot, the kind of religious instruction they think most suitable to the children in elementary schools, a majority of them would be quite content with the syllabus of the London School Board minus the circular."

The late Archbishop of Canterbury said on this subject:—

> "I am persuaded that in a very great number of Board Schools there is very good religious teaching indeed."

and the Bishop of Durham said that—

> "It had been a constant encouragement to him to notice the work done in Board Schools, and the loyal and true conditions under which the religious instruction was given."

The Blue-book on religious teaching in Board Schools also showed that the results were very satisfactory. The Board School teacher was as conscientious in his teaching as the teacher in the Voluntary School. They were trained at the same denominational colleges, and teachers who had been transferred from Voluntary to Board Schools denied that the religious teaching in the latter was inferior to that in the former. The legitimate requirements of the parents are certainly met. Besides, the Board Schools would be discredited if they did not give the religious teaching which the parents desired. As to the Scotch system, there were very erroneous notions abroad. It was quite true that it gave much more latitude to the School Boards with regard to the nature of the religious teaching. The representatives of the ratepayers, who were also the representatives of the parents, had absolute freedom in this matter, and the use which they had made of that freedom was to a great extent the cause of the success and of the popularity of the Board Schools in Scotland. It was true that the Shorter Catechism was taught in the majority of Scottish Board Schools with the assent of the parents, but by teachers who were appointed and under the direct control of the Boards, and with no control from the clergy except in so far as the clergy were the elected representatives of the ratepayers on the Boards. He was pleased to see that in another place the First Lord of the Treasury had praised the Scottish system; and if primary education were to be paid for out of public funds, there was no doubt that the Scotch system gave the best guarantees for efficient and properly organised education. But this Bill dealt with the pressure of the rate in the School Board districts in England. In the rural districts, as had been admitted by the Vice President of the Council, the situation could only be improved by widening the area over which the rate was levied. There was no justification for a smaller grant being given to the rural parish which had a Board School than to one which had no Board School. There was no reason why in a rural parish with a School Board the ratepayers should have to contribute more than those individuals who supported the Voluntary School in another parish. He could not see why a premium should be placed on the absence of a School Board. A parish with a high rate could be as necessitous as a parish where the school was supported by voluntary contributions. It might be said that the Rating Bill of last year gave relief to the rural districts. That was only true in as far as relief was given to the occupiers of land, but no relief was given to the occupiers of houses. The Assessment Committees were quite free in making deductions from the gross letting value. It was quite clear that if an Assessment Committee made a large deduction from the gross letting value, there would be a lower rateable value, and by so much the chance of getting aid under this Bill would be increased, as against a locality where the rateable value was nearer to the gross letting value. Besides, there were many places with a high rate which would get less or no help which other places with a low rate would obtain. In London there was a rate of 1s., and there were 422,000 children in average attendance. The rates which the School Board would have to pay on its school buildings were estimated this year at £103,000. If London were to be put on the same footing for its Board Schools as for its Voluntary Schools, also with regard to the grant of 5s. per board scholar, it might claim more than £200,000. Again, Plymouth would get nothing, while Devonport would be aided, simply because it had a lower rateable value on account of the rates on the Government buildings being paid by the Government. There was a theory that the State simply contracted for results. That was a theory which he could not admit. The State was responsible for the education of the country, and could not divest itself of this responsibility. It was the duty of the State to stimulate local effort, and to give financial aid on equitable principles. It was because he considered that the Bill deviated from those equitable principles, that he did not believe it would give that stability to our educational system which was needed. ["Hear, hear!"]

*LORD NORTON said that it seemed to him that the criticisms of the Bill were founded on the idea that the proposal of a Treasury Grant for Voluntary Schools and the proposal for relieving the rates of Board Schools were intended to meet a claim of a similar character. That was not so. There was not the slightest relation between the claims of the Voluntary Schools and the claims of the Board Schools. To say, therefore, that it was an unfair thing to give 5s. per head to the one and only 1s. per head to the other, was to say that it was an unfair thing to give money in different amounts for any two totally different objects. The Voluntary Schools gave the public £2,000,000 a year in contribution out of private purses for elementary education, and what these schools required the Treasury grant for was to enable them to carry on the higher branches of education which had been added to their original volunteer. It was positively to save that £2,000,000 a year which was given by the Voluntary Schools that the Treasury came in and said, "As a larger requirement is made now we must meet that requirement, or we shall lose the work that is done by the Voluntary Schools." It was different in the matter of the Board Schools. In certain cases it was found difficult to raise a sufficient rate for the purpose of the Board Schools, and the Bill proposed that in those cases, and only in those cases, the burden should be transferred to a certain extent from the local rates to the Treasury. The whole question of subsidies from imperial and local taxes was a very fair question to raise. Some think that all public money necessary for national education should be provided out of Imperial funds. Such an arrangement would make the taxation fair, and it would avoid the jealousies raised by imposing local taxation for national education in the way of religious rivalry. Comparison had been made between the merits of the Board Schools and the merits of the Voluntary Schools. That had nothing to do with the matter. In the other House the Government were actually accused in bringing forward the first Bill of favouring Voluntary Schools, and with being ready to crush the Board Schools, and they were also told this little Bill offered only hush money to the Board Schools to be silent. The accusation was perfectly absurd and irrelevant. The Government were not favouring the Voluntary Schools, but they were trying to secure them to the country. They were not adverse to the Board Schools by facilitating their public support. He thought the Government were rather weak when they allowed this Bill to be treated as a necessary corollary to the other Bill, for the two Bills had really nothing to do with each other. He supposed it was to get votes for the first Bill, by conciliating opposition, that the Government allowed one to be tacked on to the other. But the Bill now before the House had its own fair claim. There were some places with sparse populations where the required amount of educational rate was difficult to raise, and in those cases it was very right that a portion of the burden of taxation for the schools should be transferred from the local rates to the Treasury. These two Measures were merely temporary makeshifts until the whole subject of elementary and secondary education was dealt with, and he was glad to hear that that complete revision would be dealt with immediately by the Government. A large system of scientific instruction had been added to elementary education, and when they came to deal with the whole subject they would have to separate these two. When that happened neither of these two Measures would be wanted at all. Art apprenticeship would have to be made self-supporting, except in the way of providing scholarships for clever boys of the poorer classes. To say that they should provide higher education for well-to-do classes at the expense of the country was utterly absurd. It would be a fatal discharge of parental responsibility. The whole question was no doubt a very great and difficult one, and he was glad to hear the Government would apply their present strength to cope with it. [Cheers.]

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY: I am reminded by what my noble Friend opposite has said of the rather trite saying that "comparisons are odious." I am sorry to say that, notwithstanding that in the few remarks I propose to make I shall be obliged to make some comparisons. The Bill is undoubtedly a small one; and there is another proverb which I do not forget—that "you must not look a gift horse in the mouth." Therefore, we on this side could not oppose the Bill, even if it could really be opposed in this House, because it does something to relieve the Board Schools. For my part I will make an avowal. Speaking as an individual I prefer the Board Schools to the Voluntary Schools. I thing to-day and always have thought that the only just and wise system is the system of State or Board Schools. But I think it would not have been wise in 1870, and it would not be wise now, to neglect entirely the Voluntary Schools, which as a matter of fact are an important part of the system of education of this country. What I complain of is that this gift to the Board Schools is a mean gift. That meanness has arisen from the fact that there is a very strong, and as it appears to me extraordinary vehement, feeling on the part of the Party which is now in power in this country in favour of the Voluntary Schools and in point of fact against the Board Schools. As Lord Playfair said, there seems to be more a desire to perpetuate one system of schools in this country than to do that which is the one object we should have in view—to see that all schools, be they Voluntary or Board Schools, are thoroughly efficient. As regards the comparison between the Board School and the Voluntary School, I for my part do not see why a subscriber to a school is entitled to more relief from the State than the ratepayer who pays School Board rates. I am a contributor to schools in both capacities; and I do not feel that I am in the least degree more aggrieved by paying a subscription than I am by paying a rate. In one parish I pay a large rate towards the Board School; and in another place, where there is no Board School though I confess I only contribute when I feel that the Voluntary School is desired by the people there—I pay a subscription to a Voluntary School or support a school entirely myself; and I feel I am entitled to as much assistance from the State in one case as in the other. I do not see why the ratepayers' claim should be neglected; and for that reason I think the only fair, just, and wise system would be to give equal subvention to all schools alike. The present system established under this Bill, as the noble Duke ingenuously said, is of so complicated a nature that he did not trouble the House with details. I was very much obliged to the noble Duke, however, for what he did tell us was very clear. The fact is, it is a most complicated system, ingenious as regards the forming of a sliding scale, but as regards equality between the different persons who are to receive aid it is about as unfair and ill-conceived as could possibly be imagined. It may be argued that if you were to give an additional contribution to, say, the London School Board, that would be a terrible thing, as it would increase the expenditure which would fall on the ratepayers of London. But, if the ratepayers of London desire that their schools should be made more efficient by expending more on them, why are they to be deprived of the assistance of the State on that account? It seems to me they are very meritorious if they do so, and that they ought to receive the same assistance from the State. I could not help admiring the manner in which the noble Duke insisted upon the way in which this new Bill had been contrived so as to give assistance only to certain schools which by the Act are so defined that those schools alone will be regarded as necessitous under this Bill. I remember that, when we tried to induce the Government to define necessitous schools in the Voluntary Schools Bill, we were told it was impossible and unnecessary. Under this Bill an attempt is made to give only to schools which are necessitous. Why not have applied the same system in both cases? This system of only giving the public money where it is most required, is quite a new principle with the Government. I have not forgotten the Agricultural Rates Bill; we tried hard then to persuade them to give the money only to those particular parts of the country which really needed it, but they refused. I cannot help thinking that that must have arisen from a special sympathy with those receiving the aid. But when dealing with a Board School, then you must have a carefully devised system, so that no school which is receiving much money shall receive for the benefit of the ratepayers any subvention from the State. I do not think the whole matter has been treated on a basis which is just and fair all round. As my noble Friend said, these are merely two Bills for giving in one case a large dole and in another case a very small dole, and it is not in any way the establishment of any permanent portion of our educational system, except in so far as a larger sum of money will be spent in the promotion of education. I wish I could think it will all go towards efficiency, but I do not think it will. In some cases I think there are managers of Voluntary Schools as eager for good education as managers of Board Schools, and in such cases it will be applied for promoting the efficiency of a school, but in a great many cases it will go for nothing but the relief of subscribers. I dare say it has occurred to the noble Duke that there is to be a distinct premium under this Bill to have a low assessment. It is very well known that in many parts of the country assessments are by no means up to the real value of the property; now there will be a distinct encouragement under this Bill to make the assessment as low as possible, because then there will be a higher rate in proportion, and the parish in that situation will get relief which probably if it assessed itself at the fair amount it would not. I entirely disagree with the Bill except in so far as it gives a small assistance to certain School Boards, an assistance which, I venture to say, would not have been given unless there had been considerable pressure on the Government not to leave the Board Schools entirely out in the cold. ["Hear, hear!"]

Bill read a Second time, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Friday next.

INDUSTRIES (IRELAND) BILL.

*The Earl of MAYO moved, "That this Bill be now read a Second time." His Lordship explained that the Bill was to afford facilities for the establishment and development of industries in Ireland. He trusted that those who were interested in Ireland would support a Bill of this kind. ["Hear, hear!"] The Bill consisted of 14 clauses; it had been before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, and had passed without opposition. The promoters proposed to take any water or water rights, or any land in connection therewith, and it was not proposed to take land except in connection with water. To work these industries water was to be used. Such water was intended to be used for producing electricity, provided its employment for such purpose would not injure the water power used for any existing mill, or the water supply of any city, town, district, or locality; that the proposed industry was not of a nature to cause pollution to any stream or river; that any land to be taken was principally barren, uncultivated, or mountainous; that no fishery of any substantial nature should be injured by the undertaking; and that the establishment of such industry would be of general or local advantage. Subject to these provisions, the Local Government Board might, after an inquiry had been held, make an order giving a provisional approval to the application, and such provisional order should be published in the prescribed manner. An order under this Act might contain provisions consistent with the Act for the incorporation, with the necessary modifications, and subject to such exceptions and variations as might be mentioned in the order, of any of the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts, and of the provisions contained in the Second Schedule of the Housing of the Working Classes Act 1890, and of the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Acts 1863, with reference to security reservoirs; provided that nothing in the section should authorise any variation of the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts, as amended by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule of the Housing of the Working Classes Acts 1890, with respect to the purchase and taking of land otherwise than by agreement. Then there was another clause with regard to security for costs, which was very important:—

> "No order under this Act shall be made unless the prescribed sum has been lodged or secured within the time and in the manner prescribed to defray the costs and expenses of the Local Government Board and of successful objectors, and to render any works constructed in pursuance of this Act innocuous in the event of the undertaking being abandoned or the promoters becoming bankrupt or (if a company) being wound up, and such sum may be disbursed or released in such manner as may be prescribed."

He hoped their Lordships would support the Bill, because it would encourage other industries than agriculture, and would bring money into the country. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE EARL OF ARRAN said he was loth to oppose a Bill introduced in the cause of industry in Ireland, but he thought the principle underlying it was not appreciated. The principle underlying the Bill was that private companies and private individuals were to have compulsory powers to acquire land for the purpose of manufactures for private gain. That principle had never been sanctioned by Parliament. In his evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, Sir Courtenay Boyle said that there was absolutely no instance of such powers being granted to private companies. If this principle were to be sanctioned for the future it should be brought forward in a Bill introduced by the Government, and even then it would be of the utmost importance that such a Bill should be most carefully weighed before such an invasion of private property was sanctioned. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE EARL OF DENBIGH thought it would be well for him to state at once what the position of the Government was with regard to the Bill. In the first place, it was not in any sense a Government Bill, but inasmuch as it went before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, on which prominent members of the Government Party in the House of Commons sat, and inasmuch as several Amendments were introduced at the instance of the Attorney General on behalf of the Government, the Bill had the sympathies of Her Majesty's Government. They believed that if it passed it would be a useful Measure, and that the harm which some noble Lords seemed to think would result from it, would not really come to pass. Considerable care had been taken to introduce safeguards which the Government believed would be amply sufficient, but if their Lordships thought otherwise he did not think there would be the slightest objection to consider further safeguards. The object of the Bill was to promote industries in Ireland which might be said to be dependent on electrical power. Although the Government could not deny the fact that the Bill introduced a somewhat novel principle, still in view of the fact that Ireland was, perhaps, an exceptional country—["hear, hear!" and laughter]—and that all classes were now doing their utmost to promote industries there, he thought their Lordships might, perhaps, overlook that novel principle provided that proper safeguards were introduced for the purpose of preventing any abuse of its provisions. He could only say that the Bill was believed to be a useful one and Her Majesty's Government hoped that it would pass.

*THE EARL OF MORLEY (CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES) trusted that he would not be accused of attempting to discourage industry in Ireland if he expressed his strong sympathy with the views of the Earl of Arran. ["Hear, hear!"] This Bill had a very innocent and almost frank appearance, and he must confess that until his attention was called to it, he had no idea that it contained the principle they had heard explained that night. He had looked in vain for the safeguards of which the noble Lord who moved the Second Reading had spoken. This Bill went against every one of the principles that had hitherto been observed by Parliament in the granting of compulsory powers of purchase. In the first place, with very few exceptions, compulsory powers were only given by Parliamentary Committees before which the opponents had the right to appear. That was almost, though not quite, the invariable practice. The second condition was invariable—namely, that no powers of compulsory purchase under the Lands Clauses Acts should be given, except for a public undertaking, in which the public at large had a distinct advantage to gain—["hear, hear!"]—and in all cases, without exception, provisions were carefully made that the public should reap advantage from any undertaking sanctioned. The third condition, which was not absolutely universal, but almost so, was that compulsory powers should be given only to public companies established under the Companies Clauses Acts and incorporated by Act of Parliament. The reason of that was that Parliamentary companies were subject to certain restrictions and conditions, one of which was that the undertaking which the company promoted was for the public advantage, the public advantage being paramount to the advantage of the company or its creditors. Moreover, no Parliamentary company was allowed to raise a loan on its property, so that no public undertaking could be stopped. It must be carried on for the public advantage. Thus it would be seen that in all cases the public advantage was the reason for giving compulsory powers. ["Hear, hear!"] In the case of individuals and limited companies, compulsory powers of purchase were only given for the purpose of improving communication in towns, sanitary improvements, the widening of streets, or matters of that kind; and he was quite certain that to give to a private undertaker these compulsory powers for his own private gain was absolutely unprecedented. ["Hear, hear!"] Every year all the large railway companies brought forward omnibus Bills, which almost invariably contained provisions for the construction of branch lines, and it was his duty to inquire whether those branches were really for the public advantage, or to serve a private manufactory or a coal-pit. If the promoters said they merely concerned a private undertaking, it was his duty to refuse compulsory powers of purchase, though not to refuse powers of construction. He did not for a moment wish to go into the details of the Bill, but it seemed to him to contravene all the principles he had stated as guiding Parliamentary practice at the present time. ["Hear, hear!"] The Bill proposed that the requisite powers should be granted by the Lord Lieutenant in Council. No doubt the Lord Lieutenant in Council was an excellent tribunal, but it was a question whether powers of that kind should be transferred from Parliament to another body, however distinguished. ["Hear, hear!"] In Clause 2 there was a curious provision that the power was only to be used for the purpose of producing electricity. Why on earth should the power not be used where water power was to be used directly? ["Hear, hear!"] Clause 3 provided that no land was to be taken unless it was principally barren, uncultivated, or mountainous. That was rather ambiguous; but that did not in any degree detract from the value of the water power. ["Hear, hear!"] The last provision was that the establishment of an industry under the Bill should be of general or local advantage. Was there any value in that qualification? He assumed that any industry was of local advantage, and he would be extremely sorry if any action of his tended to discourage local industry; but to say that it must be proved that an industry was of local advantage was an utterly futile and worthless condition. It was curious to find in the second Subsection of the clause that the Local Government Board, who were to issue this order, which was to be final, were not to be bound by the conditions which he had just mentioned. They were to have the power—in any case where they thought they could exercise it without public or private injury—to dispense with those conditions and to make the order absolute upon the private individual. Clause 7 gave promoters power to conduct their pipes—it did not say for what purpose, but he supposed it was for hydraulic purposes—in or through any land or road, and to divert any right of way, and to alter or reconstruct any bridge, provided that the change did not cause any serious inconvenience to the public. Surely a provision of that kind would be likely to cause great injustice and great inconvenience. ["Hear, hear!"] He thought he had said enough to show how greatly this Bill encroached upon the principles and rules respected hitherto by Parliament. He objected to big principles being dealt with in this fragmentary and piecemeal fashion. If Parliament wished to alter the application of the Land Clauses Acts let it do so by all means, but let the change be effected by a properly considered Measure based upon some ascertained principles. But if they now passed a Bill of this kind applying to electricity, they would inevitably have to pass another very soon applying to other industries, and so they would have to go on. To deal with these large and important questions in this fragmentary manner would not be creditable to Parliament. In his opinion the importance of the objects of the Bill was not commensurate with the importance of acting in contravention of what had hitherto been the invariable practice and recognised principles of Parliament.

THE EARL OF WEMYSS observed that Lord Denbigh, speaking on behalf of the Government, had given reasons for supporting the Bill, one of them being that this was an exceptional Measure. He hoped that English and Scottish Peers would appreciate the value of that argument. It had been heard before in 1870 and 1881, and they might feel sure of this—that whatever Irish Measure they passed as an exceptional Measure to-day would be applied to themselves to-morrow. Lord Denbigh had told them that the Bill had the support of the Government, and he wished to ask the noble Marquess whether a Measure which had been shown to be objectionable by the Chairman of Committees really had their support, and had been considered by the Cabinet?

THE PRIME MINISTER (The Marquess of SALISBURY): My noble Friend Lord Denbigh distinctly stated that this was not a Government Bill.

THE EARL OF WEMYSS: He said that it had the support of the Government.

THE PRIME MINISTER: No, the sympathy of the Government; and the sympathy of the Government is, I think, precisely what it deserves. It does not deserve much more. [Laughter.] I mean that the intentions of the promoters of the Bill are admirable, and the object which it has in view of setting up industries in the more desolate parts of Ireland, and especially the object of putting to useful purposes the splendid water power that exists there, are admirable objects, and for them I have the deepest sympathy. But I confess that this beautiful spirit has been embodied in a less admirable frame, and, after listening to my noble Friend who sits at the Table, and whose authority we all regard so much, I am compelled to say that the Bill appears to me to have defects. [Laughter.] I do not think, though legal care was devoted to its preparation, that sufficient regard was paid to the consequences that might follow from some of its enactments. After the speech of my noble Friend the Chairman of Committees, I do not think the House ought to pass the Second Reading of this Bill. We trust to him, and never in vain, to guard our proceedings and to take care that important principles of property and legislation are not transgressed in Bills that are brought before us. I think, in the circumstances, it would be wiser not to press the Bill to a Division.

*THE EARL OF MAYO observed that Lord Morley, after saying he did not wish to discourage industries in Ireland, proceeded immediately to tear to pieces this Bill for the encouragement of such industries. The scope of the Bill was really very small. Its promoters did not ask for the use of the fat land of Ireland. They only wanted a few places in the mountains, where there was strong water power, which could be used for industrial purposes. Of course, sneers and ridicule were likely to kill any Bill. No comparison could be drawn between the case of Ireland and the case of England in matters of this kind. In Ireland there were tracts of country where land could be got for nothing, and where nobody lived, but the use of this land and the water could not be obtained without special powers, and it was for these necessary powers that the promoters of the Bill asked. This subject would be heard of again and again, and he should look to their Lordships to assist in removing any defects in the Measure, so that the promotion of industry in Ireland which would do so much good to the country might go on. After what had been said by the Prime Minister and the Chairman of Committees he realised that it would be useless to attempt to proceed with the Bill, but it was with the greatest reluctance that he withdrew it.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn; original Motion and Bill, by leave, withdrawn.

MERSEY CHANNELS BILL.

LORD PIRBRIGHT, in moving the Second Reading of this Bill, explained that it was necessary, in order to enable rules to be made for preventing collisions in the sea channels leading to the River Mersey. The Bill, which came from the other House, consisted of only one clause, which proposed to enact that the powers conferred by the Merchant Shipping Act 1894, should extend to and include the power to make rules concerning lights and signals in the sea channels or approaches to the Mersey.

Read 2ª (according to Order), and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Friday next.

APPEAL IN CERTAIN CIVIL MATTERS (IRELAND) BILL.

Bill read a Third time, and passed.

LAND LEGISLATION (IRELAND).

*LORD INCHIQUIN rose to call attention to the effects of land legislation in Ireland during the last 30 years on owners and occupiers, and to move:—

> "(1) That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived when, in the interests of justice, some compensation should be granted to landowners for the rights of which they have been deprived by the State; (2) that some relief might equitably be afforded to landowners, by granting State loans, on the same terms as those given to land occupiers, to facilitate the purchase by the landlord of the tenant-right or goodwill of the occupier, where he is willing to sell such interest, or for any other purposes sanctioned by Parliament."

He said that for various reasons he had been compelled to defer bringing this question forward until then, and even then he was afraid that the time was considered to be somewhat inopportune by some of those whom the Irish landlords looked upon as their friends and supporters in that House. But it seemed to him that the fact that the Government had conceded a Royal Commission to inquire into the administration of the Land Acts was no reason why he should not propose this Motion for compensation to the landlords for the injuries which had been inflicted upon them. His Motion dealt almost exclusively with the past, but, of course, it did not follow from that that they would be debarred from making a still larger claim in the future if the course which had been pursued lately by the Land Commissioners were permitted to continue. In fact, it was all the more necessary to proceed with this Motion at the present moment, seeing that the Government had refused to stay the hands of the Land Commissioners pending the result of the inquiry which was to be held. He feared that in order to put his case clearly before the House, he must go back over old ground and refer to the Irish land legislation of the last 30 years. Since 1870 no less than 25 Acts of Parliament had been passed dealing with land in Ireland. These Measures might be divided into two classes. The first class dealt with the questions of tenure, rent, and sale of holding, and the second class dealt exclusively with the question of purchase. It might be said generally that every one of those 25 Acts had been passed in the interest of the tenants. He called their Lordships' attention first of all to the Act of 1860. That Act introduced for the first time in Ireland a system of free contract. Under that Act the landlord could deal with his tenant as he pleased; he could turn him out on giving six months' notice to quit where a year's rent was due either from a tenant under lease or from year to year. At the termination of a lease the landlord could take the land into his own hands without paying compensation. It was clear, therefore, that the tenant had no power to sell his interest, because if he attempted to do so the landlord could immediately defeat the sale by serving a notice to quit. The Act of 1870 interfered for the first time with the rights of the landlord. Roughly stated, the Act of 1870 legalised the Ulster custom, and it gave compensation for disturbance on a graduated scale through the rest of Ireland. It also provided that any improvements made by the tenant were to be paid for. The next Act was that of 1881, which included fair rent, fixity of tenure, and free sale. Those were the critical points which had damaged the landlord's interest and had obliged landlords to come to Parliament and ask for compensation for the loss sustained. Fair rent practically meant perpetuity of tenure and a lease renewable for ever. The tenant also got the power to sell his interest at the highest price which he could obtain in the market; and it was this combination which had brought the landlords into the position they were now in. The next Act was that of 1887, the principle of which was passed by a Conservative Government. For the first time it broke leases and solemn covenants entered into by men perfectly competent to make agreements. Next came the Act of 1891, which brought in long leases extending over a large number of years. There was another Act at this time which gave the power to a tenant who had been evicted to resume his holding in certain circumstances. In 1896 an Act was passed which brought in large graziers, men supposed to be well able to protect themselves, up to a valuation of £100 a year. It also took away rights and privileges from the landlords—water rights, turbary, seaweed, and sea sand. It also prevented the landlord from having the power of redemption, which was one of the things which Mr. Gladstone specially reserved in certain circumstances. In 1885 came the Purchase Act, known as the Ashbourne Act. For the first time the tenant under it could borrow the whole of the money from the State for the purchase of his holding under an annuity of 4 per cent. for 49 years. The consequence had been that the whole of the money was promptly taken up, and a short time afterwards another Bill was brought in for the purpose of extending the amount of this purchase-money. This legislation had placed the tenant in this position—he could not be disturbed as long as he continued paying rent renewable for ever; he had the power to dispose of his farm for the best price he could get, and he purchased with State money the fee of the land. It might generally be thought that the tenant should be perfectly happy after all these things had been done for him, but he was afraid that was not the case. And the reason was obvious, because unless the man were in occupation before the Act of 1881, he had had to pay since that date large sums in order to get into his holding. These large sums had lately been very largely increased, and the consequence was this, that the interest of the money, which the tenant had to pay for his tenant right in coming into a holding, together with the reduced rent, very nearly amounted to his old original rent. What the Irish landlords said was this: You have reduced our rents, you have taken a large slice out of our property and handed it over to the occupying tenant, who is at liberty to go wherever he likes with the money. That was what Parliament had done. It had handed over to the occupying tenant the difference between the old rent and the judicial rent. He would take in illustration a peculiar case which happened upon his own estate just after the Act of 1881 was passed. He happened to put a tenant into a farm a year before the Act came into operation. The tenant was to pay a rent of £150 a year. He had not paid a farthing for that, because tenant right did not exist in the south of Ireland, and as regarded his own estate, it was especially guarded. The tenant asked the rent to be reduced to £130. He asked to be allowed to sell and he was allowed to sell. The result was that he got £1,250 for his interest, having come in the year before without any interest whatever. This man walked off to America or somewhere else with his £1,250, and left the present tenant subject to the rent of £130 plus interest on £1,250, which, he was bound to add, the tenant was paying very regularly. Now that man was going into Court, and the question would arise—What would the Land Commission do? Would they take that man's interest into account or not? If they did, it would be taken absolutely out of the landlord's property and nowhere else. Numerous cases of the same kind could be cited. Mr. Healy stated the other day that in the large farms of £100 a year and approaching it, it was not the case that large sums were given for tenant right. But according to a Return which had just been compiled, this statement was not correct, there being a large number of cases above £100 where very large sums had been given. There was a case where a tenant applied to be allowed to sell his tenant right for £500. The landlord objected that £500 was too much, and exercised his right of pre-emption. On going to the Land Commission, however, that body fixed the amount which the landlord was to pay at no less than £800. He quoted from returns of sales on a number of different estates to show the enormous sums given for tenant right, representing 20 and 25, and even 40, as much as 40 and 44 years' purchase. Such were the enormous sums given for land which they were told was worth so little. He spoke as a large farmer, having had for a considerable time as much as 4,000 acres on his hand, and he asserted that while undoubtedly prices had fallen, they had not fallen to anything approaching the extent represented by the reductions made by the Land Commission, for the fall in prices represented only 10 per cent. Mr. Healy had stated that for every £1 of reduction the expenses to the country had been 19s. 6d. Adding the money spent by the tenant on lawyers and money-lenders, surely it would have been cheaper to the country to have spent the money on permanent relief to tenants, and left undisturbed property rights in the way that had been done. The landlord had been expropriated, and perpetuity had been given to the tenant. He had become a mere rent-charger, entitled only to an economic rent fixed by the State, whereas before 1870 free contract existed. Where before he would get from 25 to 30 years' purchase, he could now only get 15 or 20, and very often he could not sell at all. He had to pay high rates on his mortgages, and his powers of borrowing were practically done away with. Recovery of rent had been made more difficult than ever, and arrears had very largely increased, though allowances had been made. The landlord, besides, now had very heavy legal expenses. Landlords who before had never been obliged to go into Court, were now forced to go there. They had all the expense of the first hearing, and often of the appeal, which was entirely useless, as he knew. The landlord could no longer resume his land under any circumstances; his rents had been reduced by leaps and bounds, while the prices of tenants' right had been rising. Further, the landlord now had to pay the tithe rent, where formerly he was allowed to get it out of the tenant's rent. As to the Commissioners, if they were angels—and many of them were more like fallen angels—they could not possibly perform the task which Parliament had set them —that of fixing a so-called fair rent without any guidance at all. These men were let loose over the country to deal with an enormous mass of property, often without any previous knowledge, and simply judging in some cases from the smell of a stick which they had dug into the ground. That was no exaggeration, but fact. As Lord Dufferin had said, they were sent groping in the dark to find the intentions of Parliament. They could not do the impossible, and the only rent which it was possible to fix was the market rent. If any lower rent were fixed, some one, not the landlord, must get the benefit of it, but some one would still be paying the market rent. These questions would never be settled until there was a return to freedom of contract. One party or the other must be bought out, and he proposed that the landlord should have the same facilities for buying out the tenant as the tenant had for buying out the landlord. Surely Parliament did not wish to banish the landlords from Ireland altogether. Such a thing would be ruinous to the country, and the working people regarded the prospect with horror, for the landlords, and not the tenants, were the men who gave employment. The despised landlord, too, was still the constant adviser of the poor people in any difficulty. There must be one person, and one only, in ownership of the land. As to what the Commissioners were now doing, it was right that the attention of Parliament should be called to it. He had the latest returns as to the fixing of judicial rents. They came down to the end of February 1897, and covered 1,672 cases. The total original rent involved in these cases was £52,994; the valuation was £39,368; the rent fixed for the first term was £42,289, or a reduction of 20·2 per cent., and the rent fixed for the second term was £30,957, or a reduction of 26·8 per cent. The total reduction on the two terms was equal to 41·5 per cent., or one-quarter under the valuation on which the rates were paid. The original rent, £52,994, was, curiously enough, one-quarter above the valuation. Lord Dufferin had well said that "the landlords were being jockeyed out of their property." It was all very fine to talk about the fall of prices; but the fall in England had been far greater than in Ireland, where most of the land was grass land. Besides, in England the landlord could always resume his land and farm it himself; in Ireland he could not. As to the Irish landlords not spending anything on their property, who could expect it with such constant inroads being made? They could have no hope of getting the money which they spent back again. Before the landlords were dealt with by the Act of 1881, they had a margin of not more than 50 per cent. to spend. The reduction made by the judicial rents amounted to 41·5 per cent.; so that the landlord was now left with a margin of 9 per cent., and in many cases the whole of his income had been swept away. Therefore he felt bound in honour as an Irishman and a representative of Ireland to come forward on behalf of the large number of people who were being reduced to absolute poverty, and to ask Parliament why nothing was being done to stop what was going on. He now came to an important matter. Mr. Gladstone clearly foresaw that the question of compensation would arise under the land legislation which he initiated in 1870. On asking for leave to introduce the Land Bill of 1870, into which he was asked to introduce "the three F's," Mr. Gladstone said, "Perpetuity of tenure on the part of the occupier is virtually expropriation of the landlord:" also "compensation would have to be paid for rights of which he would be deprived;" and he then went on to show that the occupier only would benefit by the proposed legislation. Speaking again on March 11, 1870, Mr. Gladstone said:—

Lord Inchiquin.

> "If you value rents you may as well for every available purpose adopt perpetuity of tenure at once. It is perpetuity of tenure only in a certain disguise.

On May 19, 1870, Mr. Gladstone, discussing fixity of tenure and valuation of rents, said:—

> "If we believe these provisions would be beneficial to the country it would be our duty to give them compulsory force by legislative enactments; and to consider from what source we ought to provide compensation to the landlord for rights he now enjoys."

Mr. Law, the then Solicitor General for Ireland, speaking on the Bill of 1870, said:—

> "The property must be in some one, and if we were to secure the possession of the land and the enjoyment of the profit to the tenant and his successors for ever, subject only to a rent, we should in effect, no matter how we disguise it, transfer the property of the farmer to him and change the present landowner into a mere rent charger."

Lord Inchiquin.

Sir Roundell Palmer (afterwards Lord Selborne) speaking in March 1870, said:—

> "Fixity of tenure, which in plain English means taking the property of one man and giving it to another. My right hon. Friend (Mr. Gladstone) said, according to the principles of justice, if we transferred property in that way we must pay for it. No doubt, we may take a man's property, but in that case we must compensate him for it."

Sir R. Collier, the Attorney General for England, taking part in the same discussion, said:—

> "What does that mean but fixity of tenure —that is, that the landlord is to be deprived of his property."

Ten years later, Mr. Gladstone, in bringing in the Bill of 1881, said:—

> "If, as has been said, Parliament is about to invade the property of Irish landlords the question of compensation becomes a very serious one indeed, and one concerning which, if we are prepared to deal with it at all, we ought to speak in most decisive terms. If those classes, either or both of them, have a just claim for compensation in consequence of the manner in which their interests will be affected by this Bill, we are bound as a Parliament to give it to them."

Could any language in favour of compensation be plainer than that. On July 22, 1881, Mr. Gladstone also said:—

> "We, in 1869 (on the Disestablishment of the Church) provided that every holder of an advowson in Ireland should receive the full market price of his property. This we held to be the true principle on which compensation should be based, and this is the principle on which the question should be approached on the present occasion. If after experience should prove that, in fact, ruin and heavy loss is likely to have been brought on any class in Ireland by direct effect of this legislation, that is a question we ought to look directly in the face."

There was one letter he should like to read to the House. It was from the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack (the Lord Chancellor) in reply to a letter from a landlord in Ireland, asking him his opinion on the subject of compensation. The noble and learned Lord wrote:—

> "Dear Sir,—As my words were not committed to writing, I cannot speak with absolute certainty as to what they were. But what I think I said was, that I could see no reason why Irish landlords should be excepted from the principle which was generally applied in all cases where State policy involved taking away something to which an individual had a right—that is to say, that compensation should always be given where, for State reasons, private rights were invaded."

He would also quote John Stuart Mill on compensation. The extract was quoted from "Principles of Political Economy."

> "The principle of property gives them (the landowners) no right to the land, but only a right to compensation for whatever portion of their interest in the land it may be the policy of the State to deprive them of—to that their claim is indefeasible. It is due to landowners and to owners of any property whatever, recognised as such by the State, that they should not be deprived of it without receiving its pecuniary value or an annual income equal to what they derived from it. If the land was bought with the produce of the labour of themselves or their ancestors, compensation is due to them on that ground. Even if otherwise, it is still due, on the ground of prescription. Nor can it ever be necessary, for accomplishing an object by which the community altogether will gain, that a particular portion of the community should be immolated. When the property is of a kind to which peculiar affection attach themselves, the compensation ought to exceed a bare pecuniary equivalent. The Legislature, which, if it pleased, might convert the whole body of landlords into fund-holders or pensioners, might, a fortiori, commute the average receipts of Irish landowners into a fixed rent charge, and raise the tenants into proprietors, supposing always full market value of the land is tendered to landlords."

The last extract he would trouble the House with was from Bentham's "Theory of Legislation."

> "The principle of security require that reform should be attended with complete indemnity. The interest of individuals, it is said, ought to yield to the public interest; but what does that mean? Is not one individual as much a part of the public as another? This public interest, which you introduce as a person, is only an abstract term—it represented nothing but the mass of individual interests. Individual interests are the only interests; take care of the individuals; never molest them; never suffer anyone to molest them, and you will have done enough for the public. I shall conclude with a general observation of great importance. The more the principle of property is respected the stronger hold it takes on the popular mind. Slight attacks upon this principle prepare the way for heavier ones. A long time has been necessary to carry property to the point where we now see it in civilised societies, but a fatal experience has shown with what facility it can be shaken, and how easily the savage instinct of plunder gets the better of the laws."

The Legislature had always granted compensation where Measures had been passed for the public good, and had imposed it on public bodies, companies, or the individuals to whom it had granted compulsory powers to interfere with property and vested interests. And this compensation was not limited to damage done, but extended to prospective, possible, or contingent damage or injury. In 1833 the West Indian slave owners were enormously compensated when slavery was abolished, although it was questionable whether there existed in the planters any right to the ownership of other individuals. Compensation was also promised by the Government recently in the similar case of Zanzibar. It was also given in 1869 under the Irish Church Act; in 1874 and 1878 under the Public Health Acts and Acts directing the slaughter of diseased animals; in 1882 under the Arrears of Rent Act; and in 1871 on the Abolition of Army Purchase. He did not propose to say what course the compensation should take, he left that to the Government, but he thought it should take a direct form. Of course, to those who had no mortgages on their estates what he proposed would not be very much relief, but to those who had it would be an immense relief. He saw no reason why advances should not be made to the landlord to pay off the charges with which he was saddled for no fault of his own, his income having been diminished by the State. The State would have perfect security, and they lent money upon much worse security to the tenant. He appealed to the House and to the country to consider the claim they now made; to consider it not only on account of men in the upper classes of life who were in a position like himself and those around him, but to consider what was the position of those who had been brought up, if not in the lap of luxury at least with every comfort around them. What position were they to be placed in? Were they to be destitute, and were their children to be left without education? Were their Lordships to fold their hands and say that political necessity obliged them to do this wrong, and that they would not put their hands in their pockets to assist these people? He would ask them to bear in mind the saying, "Fiat justitia, ruat cœlum." [Cheers.]

LORD CLONBROCK said that, in view of the extreme importance of the speech of his noble Friend, he would move that the Debate be adjourned till Friday next.

Motion agreed to.

House Adjourned at Half-past Seven o'Clock, to Friday next, a Quarter past Ten o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 25th May 1897.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT 1894 (PAROCHIAL CHARITIES).

MR. STRACHEY (Somerset, S.): To call attention to the effect of The Local Government Act 1894, on Parochial Charities; and to move a Resolution—[Tuesday, 15th June.]

QUESTIONS.

BLACK WATCH REGIMENT (SUBATHU).

COLONEL WYNDHAM MURRAY (Bath): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether an outbreak of enteric fever has accrued among the Black Watch regiment at Subathu; whether the same regiment suffered severely from the same disease last summer in the same place; whether at that time the prevalence of the disease was accounted for by one of the reservoirs being infected with the particular bacillus which is associated with this disease, the water being found to be swarming with the characteristic microbes; what steps have been taken in the matter since last summer; and, if all precautions have been taken, what special advantages exist at this place that it should be maintained longer as a troop station?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, Middlesex, Ealing): A fresh outbreak of enteric fever has, I regret to say, occurred among the Black Watch, which arrived at Subathu on March 24 last. A telegram from the Viceroy dated May 23 states that 18 cases have occurred, 14 of which, however, are believed to have been contracted on the march up from the plains. Two cases have resulted fatally. Every possible sanitary precaution has been taken, and a thorough bacteriological examination into the cause of the disease is being made. A scheme for improving the permanent water supply, involving the acquisition of land and springs, is being carried out; meanwhile the laying of a temporary pipe is nearly completed. Subathu, which is 4,500 feet above the sea, has a good climate, and is not usually unhealthy.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK.

MR. J.G. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, having regard to the fact that for the year 1896 there were 94,477 cases of withdrawal by telegraph from the Post Office Savings Bank, for which the average cost was 1s. 3d., whilst there were 8,076 applications by telegraph for withdrawal costing on an average 9d. each, will he explain why, on the 4th instant, the Post Office intimated that withdrawal by the system which cost the depositor only 9d. met the majority of cases; and, in view of the fact that the reverse is the case, and that the more costly mode, or 1s. 3d. rate, was adopted in 94,477 cases as against 8,076 by the 9d. rate, will he state if the Controller of the Post Office Savings Bank is responsible to the Postmaster General for answers given in this House in regard to that institution; and, if not, will he state who is responsible?

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston): No occasion arises to give the explanation asked for by the hon. Member, as the statement which he assumes to have been made by me was not made. I said nothing about "the majority of cases." What I did say was that two telegrams were required only "in cases of urgent need, which are of rare occurrence." Even if all cases of withdrawal, whether by one or two telegrams, are added together, they only represent about 1 in 40 of the total withdrawals. I was responsible for the answer, based on the information supplied to me by the Post Office, which was quite accurate.

POST OFFICE GUIDE.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, (1) whether he is aware that on page 121 of the "Post Office Guide" Harris is described as a money order and telegraph office; (2) is he aware that although there is a district of that name, there is no town or township named Harris; and (3) seeing that Tarbert is the town in Harris at which money order and telegraph business is transacted, will he have the "Post Office Guide" amended?

MR. HANBURY: Yes, Sir; I am aware both of the postal and the geographical facts alluded to in the first and second paragraphs of the Question. Harris has been the Departmental name of the Post Office in question for more than 40 years, and, as there is already a post town named Tarbert in Scotland, it would not be expedient, after all these years, to alter the name. To prevent misunderstanding on the part of the public there is an entry at page 205 of the "Post Office Guide" at the name Tarbert showing that Harris is the name of the Post Office there.

PARISH COUNCILS ASSOCIATION.

MR. R. T. HERMON-HODGE (Oxon, Henley): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he is aware that the auditor of the Headington (Oxon) district has refused to pass parish council accounts where a subscription of one guinea has been paid to the Parish Councils Association, and whether such subscriptions are legal or not; if legal, whether the Local Government Board will advise parish councils and public auditors to that effect?

THE SECRETARY TO THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. T. W. RUSSELL, Tyrone, S.): I understand the Auditor of the district, which includes the Headington Union, has made a disallowance, not of a subscription to the Association referred to, but of a charge for more than one copy of a publication issued by that Association. I may, however, state generally, that the Local Government Board are of opinion that there is no legal authority for the payment by a parish council out of their funds of a subscription to the Association.

MR. HERMON-HODGE desired to ask whether the hon. Gentleman would consider the advisability of making these subscriptions legal, in view of the great value of the information supplied by that Association to parish councils, which as a rule were in great need of advice?

MR. T. W. RUSSELL: The proposal of the hon. Gentleman would mean legislation, and I can give no undertaking as to this.

BATTALIONS ABROAD.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether there are now nominally 14 battalions abroad in excess of the number at home, as compared with 11 mentioned by him at the commencement of the Session; whether these figures exclude the new battalion of Guards, but include as at home the new battalion of Cameron Highlanders: whether the new battalions of Guards and of Cameron Highlanders have any existence except on paper: and whether the Government still consider that the absence abroad of an excess of battalions is only temporary?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): There are 14 more battalions of infantry abroad than there are at home, excluding the Guards. This reckoning does not include the new battalion of the Guards, but it does include as at home the new battalion of the Cameron Highlanders. About one-third of the Cameron battalion has been raised; but the extra men raised for the Guards have been applied to the augmentation of the battalion first for foreign service. I may remind the right hon. Baronet that it was contemplated that the formation of the new battalions would take three years. As regards the number of battalions at this moment employed abroad, I can only say that, under existing circumstances, the Secretary of State does not see his way to reducing the number.

COLLIERY ACCIDENT (POLESWORTH).

SIR WALTER FOSTER (Derby, Ilkeston): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his attention has been called to an inquest held at Grendon, near Tamworth, on a pit-boy named George Read, aged 17 years, who at the time of his death was a driver at the Hall End Colliery, Polesworth; whether he has observed that it was proved at the inquest that the boy had been at work for over 12 hours when he met his death after 7 p.m.; that he had been without food since mid-day; and that he had been engaged at work on the previous day from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m.; whether he is aware that these long hours are in contravention of an undertaking given by the same employers at an inquest on a previous fatal accident; and, whether he will take steps to prevent a continuance of these prolonged hours of labour for young persons in coal mines?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool): My attention has been called to the death of this boy. The hours of his employment as stated in the Question are substantially accurate, and I also understand it is the case that the manager, on a previous occasion, when a lad was killed after working more than 15 hours, had promised not to allow young persons to work so long in future. There is no power under the existing Acts to limit the hours of labour of young persons above the age of 16, but in this case I trust that the censure of the coroner's jury, and the remonstrances of the Inspector will be sufficient to prevent a continuance of the practice.

TRAWLING (MORAY FIRTH).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, having regard to the fact that trawlers sailing under a Foreign flag, are, under the North Sea Convention, allowed to fish in the prohibited waters of the Moray Firth, whilst British trawlers are denied a similar privilege, will he state whether any steps are being taken to place Foreign trawlers under the same restrictions as British trawlers?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): I have nothing to add to the answer which I gave to a similar Question from the hon. Member on April 26.

QUEENSLAND.

MR. J. F. HOGAN (Tipperary, Mid): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he has seen a Dispatch from his predecessor the Duke of Newcastle, dated 18th August 1858, reserving to the Crown the right and the power of subdividing the territory then created into the Colony of Queensland, by detaching from it such northern portions as might in the future be found fit to be erected into separate colonies; and, whether the power thus reserved is still capable of being exercised by the Queen in Council?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): I understand that the power of subdividing Queensland does not rest exclusively in the Crown, but that the authority of Parliament would be necessary.

SALMON FISHERY (CASHEN RIVER).

MR. M. J. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that numerous complaints have been made by men engaged in the salmon fishery in the Cashen River and Shannon Mouth by the great injury caused in the estuaries by trawlers interfering with and taking salmon in their nets; what is the prescribed distance or limit at which trawlers should fish; and whether steps will be taken to give salmon fishermen some protection in future from trawlers?

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central): There is no evidence that trawlers have been at work in these waters within the prescribed three-mile limit, but it is open to fishermen who may feel aggrieved to apply for a byelaw prohibiting this mode of fishing, and on receipt of the application the Inspectors of Fisheries will arrange to hold a local inquiry as soon as possible.

FOREIGNERS AS BRITISH PILOTS.

Mr. J. A. WILLOX (Liverpool, Everton): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether certificates of competency are granted to aliens enabling them to act as pilots in the channels and ports of the United Kingdom; if so, whether, considering the danger to national safety which might arise in case of war from foreigners being trained in the intricate navigation of our Home waters, Her Majesty's Government will take steps to prevent in future the certification of foreigners as British pilots in British waters?

The PRESIDENT of the BOARD of TRADE (Mr. Ritchie, Croydon): The objections on the ground of national danger to the granting of pilotage certificates to masters or mates who are aliens was very fully considered in 1888 by a Select Committee of this House on Pilotage. The Committee were of opinion that the granting and renewal from time to time of certificates to aliens should be continued, and I am not prepared to propose any alteration of the law on the subject.

TOKAT MASSACRE.

Mr. J. C. FLYNN (Cork, N.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the Foreign Office has yet received information as to the nature of the communication addressed by Sir Philip Currie to Tewfik Pasha in respect to the recent massacre of Armenians at Tokat; if so, will he communicate it to the House; and whether Sir Philip Currie complained of the inactivity of the tribunal at Tokat appointed to try the Mussulmans implicated in the massacre, and also called the attention of the Porte to the non-execution of the sentences already passed?

Mr. CURZON: We have not heard of the alleged representation or complaint made by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople in connection with the Tokat Commission; nor has a reply yet been received to a telegram of inquiry which was addressed to him on the subject.

Mr. FLYNN asked whether the right hon. Gentleman could say whether the reply would be received on Thursday?

Mr. CURZON: I really cannot say when the reply will be received, but I will communicate it to the hon. Gentleman or to the House as soon as it comes.

ARMY RESERVE.

Captain GRICE-HUTCHINSON (Aston Manor): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the regulations as to refunding deferred pay on rejoining the colours are to be relaxed in the case of men of the Army Reserve who may enlist in the new battalions of the Brigade of Guards; and, if so, whether he will consider the advisability of granting the same privilege to Reserve men who may be desirous of rejoining other branches of the service?

Mr. BRODRICK: The men of the Guards who are invited to rejoin the colours are those who were discharged at the end of their three years' engagement with the colours. Such men did not receive deferred pay and are therefore in a different position from other Reservists.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

Captain DONELAN (Cork, E.): On behalf of the hon. Member for Galway, Connemara (Mr. W. O'Malley), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Executive contemplate increasing the powers of managers to admit more children to industrial schools, and to allow the capitation grant for such further increase?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: No such change as that suggested in the Question is contemplated in the general system. Every application for an increase in numbers is considered on its merits.

POST OFFICE PROSECUTION.

Mr. G. LAMBERT (Devon, South Molton): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he has received from the inhabitants of Chulmleigh, Devon, a petition praying that a portion of the heavy law costs inflicted on Miss Adella Ford in vindicating her innocence of the charge brought against her by the Postal Authorities at Exeter, on 21st November 1896, may be paid to her by the Postmaster General; and, if so, whether the Postmaster General will be good enough to favourably consider such petition?

Mr. HANBURY: In February the Postmaster General received a petition from the inhabitants of Chulmleigh praying, inter alia, that some payment might be made to Miss Ford as compensation for the expense to which she had been put in connection with her trial. The Postmaster General gave very careful consideration to the petition, and with great regret came to the conclusion that he could not comply with it. The petitioners were answered accordingly. I do not know whether the hon. Member is aware of the admitted facts in this case; but I shall be glad to show them to him for his own information.

MILITIA OFFICERS.

Mr. LAMBERT: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Government propose to take any special action to fill up the large number of vacancies in the ranks of officers in Militia regiments?

Mr. BRODRICK: It has always been found that the admission of Militia subalterns to commissions in the regular Army has stimulated candidature for the Militia. With this view, additional commissions in the infantry and the artillery have been thrown open to Militia candidates. It is also in contemplation to offer advantages to subaltern officers who quit the Army if they will serve for a term in the Militia.

CAPE GARRISON.

Major RASCH (Essex, S.E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War, whether the batteries recently ordered to the Cape were on the First Army Corps, or higher establishment, with a regulation strength of 180 men and 86 horses, and supposed to be fit for service as they stood; whether 272 horses and 189 men were drafted into them; and why, if the Field artillery has been increased to an extent sufficient for three army corps, this was necessary?

Mr. BRODRICK: The three batteries which have proceeded to South Africa were on the higher home establishment of 161 men and 86 horses; and required according to the foreign establishment, which is practically the war establishment, 27 men and 156 horses to complete. Unfortunately, owing to the recent slackness of recruiting, they were considerably under the establishment of men, and this with the ordinary casualties, made a transfer of 189 men instead of 27 men necessary. In addition they had 116 horses perfectly fit for home duties, but which from age were less adapted for foreign service. These were exchanged with batteries at home for more suitable horses. Our batteries, like those of all other nations, are during peace on the peace establishment, and if required on any serious emergency would be raised to the necessary strength by calling out the Reserve.

SCIENCE TEACHERS.

Mr. W. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the relative numbers of English, Irish, and Scotch teachers engaged in the short courses of science teachers in July last year; and whether he will arrange that a due proportion of Irish teachers will be afforded this opportunity of obtaining the latest knowledge on various subjects next July?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: My right hon. Friend the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education has kindly supplied me with the information necessary to reply to this Question. All the applications for the Summer courses received during the past two years have been sent to the inspectors, and practically every eligible Irish teacher recommended by the Inspector has been admitted. The numbers admitted in 1896 from England and Wales were 121, from Scotland 56, and from Ireland 13.

FRANCHISE ACTS 1885.

MR. JASPER TULLY (Leitrim, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that under the scale fixed by the Privy Council, clerks of unions and poor rate collectors are paid for the labour involved in issuing the requisition forms under the Franchise Acts of 1885, and as in a number of unions in Westmeath, Longford, Roscommon, and Sligo it has been found unnecessary to issue these forms, as involving useless expense, he will direct the auditors of the Local Government Board to surcharge payments made under this head?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The scale, according to which clerks and collectors of poor rates in unions in Ireland are paid for duties discharged by them under the Representation of the People Acts, is fixed by the Local Government Board in accordance with the provisions of 53 and 54 Vic., cap. 58. The service of the requisition forms under these Acts, is carried out in accordance with Statute, and the auditors would, therefore, have no legal power of surcharging payments made in accordance with Statute.

COLONISATION BOARD (MANITOBA).

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether there is any objection o stating the nature of the application made to the Colonisation Board on behalf of the Crofters' settlements in Manitoba?

*MR. H. T. ANSTRUTHER (St. Andrews Burghs, on behalf of the LORD ADVOCATE): My right hon. and learned Friend regrets that he is not in a position o give the exact information asked for y the hon, Member as communications n the subject are pending, and any xplanation given at present would only e misleading.

QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE.

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the ecretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he is aware that there are numerous old buildings along the route of the Jubilee Procession, and that it is proposed to crowd the roofs and front rooms of these buildings to their utmost available capacity; and (2) whether there is any public authority invested with powers of regulation and control in this connection?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I have no definite information as to the point raised in the first paragraph of this Question. There is no law, of course, to prevent persons inviting as many guests as they like to their own houses; but the County Council, with whom I have been in communication, have considerable powers in regard to dangerous structures, and are quite alive to their responsibility in the matter. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether the attendants of the House are to be provided with seats to witness the Jubilee Procession; and, if not, whether he will reconsider the matter with the view of giving the same accommodation to the attendants as is already provided for the clerical staff and the Press?

THE FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): I can only refer the hon. Member to an answer which I gave last week to my hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Camberwell, on this subject.

MR. R. K. CAUSTON (Southwark, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been drawn to the decision of Judge Addison, in the Southwark County Court, in relation to the eviction of tenants on the line of route of the Jubilee Procession; and whether, in view of the special circumstances surrounding the occasion, he will introduce a Bill to postpone until after 22nd June all proceedings on processes where no more than one month's rent is in arrear at the date of the receipt of the notice?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I have seen a report of the cases in the Southwark County Court. It would be a serious matter, in my opinion, to interfere with the ordinary law in the way which the hon. Member proposes; but the Judge, in giving judgment for the plaintiff, has power to fix the day on which execution shall issue, and in a case of real hardship I have no doubt he would use that power to name a day subsequent to the Jubilee.

MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he can state what arrangements have been made for the attendance of the House of Commons at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Sunday, 20th June, in commemoration of the Accession of Her Most Gracious Majesty?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): In answer to my hon. Friend, I have been in communication with Mr. Speaker on the subject, and hon. Members who desire to attend the services will have to be good enough to enter their names in a book in Mr. Speaker's Secretary's office. The service will be at 11.30, and those Members who desire to accompany Mr. Speaker will have to assemble at the House at 11.15. I am not in a position to make any further statement at present, but detailed information will be published to Members as soon as possible.

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, in view of the fact that the Court of the Edinburgh University states that their resources do not admit of any expenditure on the preservation of the Library Buildings, will he consider the advisability of providing an additional grant to enable them to restore the Library, so that the Library may present a decent and cleanly appearance not only to the Jubilee visitors but to the numerous Scotsmen who visit the capital of their native country?

MR. HANBURY: No such application has reached the Treasury either through the Scottish Office or direct, and I do not suppose that the University authorities can contemplate any such appeal to the taxpayer. The Scottish Universities already receive a grant of £42,000 a year in full discharge of all their claims on public funds, and I cannot hold out any hope of further assistance for this purpose.

Sir Matthew White Ridley.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH OFFICE.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, if he will state the number of postal telegraph offices in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales respectively at which money order business is not conducted; and will he also state the number of money order offices in each of those countries at which telegraph business is not transacted?

MR. HANBURY: The number of postal telegraph offices at which money order business is not transacted is as follows:

England and Wales ...	323
Scotland	191
Ireland	33
Total ...	547

which is what I stated on Thursday last. The number of money order offices at which telegraph business is not transacted is as follows:—

England and Wales ...	4,151
Scotland	227
Ireland	367
Total ...	4,745

While money order business is usually carried on at all telegraph offices, it is not of course the case, as the hon. Member seems to assume, that telegraph business is usually carried on at all money order offices.

LIGHT RAILWAYS (IRELAND).

CAPTAIN DONELAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for West Cavan (Mr. J. P. FARRELL), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland when he hopes to be in a position to lay before the House a statement of the allocation of the sum voted last Session for the construction of light railways in Ireland; and can he state will any balance remain for application to other than the localities he has already selected?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I hope to be in a position to make a statement as to the allocation of the sum provided by the Railways (Ireland) Act of last year when the Vote for the Board of Works is under discussion. A margin is being left for contingencies, but no funds would be available for application to fresh schemes at present.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) ACT 1887.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for West Cavan, I beg to ask the Chief Secretary for Ireland whether he can state the number of notices under the seventh section of the Land Act 1887, served in county Cavan during the year 1896, and the number served from January 1 to May 1, 1897; and whether he can state the number of persons actually dispossessed during the same period?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The number of notices referred to, served in County Cavan in 1896 was 220, and in the first four months of 1897, 78. There were 12 tenants and one sub-tenant actually dispossessed after service of ejectment notices under the seventh section, in 1896, and eight tenants dispossessed under the same section in the first four months of this year.

LAND COMMISSION.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that a very large number of applications have been made in Kerry to have fair rents fixed; and whether he can say when the Sub-Commissioners sat last, and about what time will the next sittings take place?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: There are at present 286 applications to fix fair rent from the County Kerry awaiting disposal. A Sub-Commission was continuously at work in that county from September 1896, to the end of January. No date has at present been fixed for the next sitting of a Sub-Commission in the county.

IRISH MAIL SERVICE.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that the morning delivery of the mails at Youghal, county Cork, is considerably later under the new system than it was previously; and whether steps will be taken, either by improving the car service from Cork or by some other means, to give Youghal the advantage enjoyed by other Irish towns?

MR. HANBURY: It is the fact that since the 1st instant the morning delivery at Youghal has not begun until 7.45 a.m., or forty-five minutes later than formerly. The alteration has arisen from the later running of the night mail train from Dublin to Cork, one of the changes rendered necessary by the modification of the day mail services which took effect on the 1st instant. The question of accelerating the car service from Cork to Youghal is under consideration, with a view, if possible, of restoring at least some portion of the time which has been lost. The hon. Member shall be informed of the result.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOPS ACT 1895. (DOCK AND WHARF MACHINERY).

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has as yet taken any action under the Factory and Workshops Act 1895, section 23, sub-section I. (iv.) and (v.) which gives the Home Secretary power to make special rules affecting employment, and to make orders in regard to machines in docks, wharves, quays, warehouses, etc., and, if so, whether he will lay the rules made in accordance with the Act upon the Table of the House?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: As regards sub-section 4, which enables me to make rules for machinery or processes which are shown to be dangerous to life or limb, I have not as yet had any evidence which would enable me to pu this power in operation in docks or wharves. If any case should arise, I shall be ready to consider whether any effective rules can be made. The other sub-section has reference only to proceedings before magistrates with regard to particular machines that appear dangerous. I understand that the sub-section has not been found capable of general use in docks and wharves.

READING PRISON (DISCHAGE OF WARDER).

MR. M. DAVITT (Mayo, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether a warder in Reading Prison has been dismissed the service for having given some bread to a youthful prisoner whom he found crying for food in a cell; and whether an ex-prisoner named Bell has been sentenced to 14 days and to have his ticket-of-leave cancelled, involving 130 days more imprisonment, for having thrown some cigar ends among some convicts at Borstall Prison; and whether he will consider the advisability of remitting or modifying the penalties inflicted in both cases?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: It is the case that a warder has been dismissed at Reading. The circumstances of the dismissal, of which the hon. Member appears to have received a very incorrect account, have been reported to me, and I am satisfied that the dismissal was fully justified. The ex-convict Bell has been convicted of the offence mentioned and sentenced to 14 days' imprisonment. The question whether his licence shall be revoked or not is at present under consideration.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ELECTORS.

SIR HENRY FOWLER (Wolverhampton): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the return of Local Government Electors, ordered 2nd March last, will be presented?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: The returns from five counties and three boroughs are still outstanding, and without these the return cannot be completed. I am doing my best to put pressure on the officers who are in default, and I will lay the return on the Table at the earliest moment it is in my power to do so.

RELIGIOUS ORDERS (IRELAND).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Government will introduce a Bill to remove the disabilities which prevent the clergy of religious orders wearing their monastic habits in public, and other religious disabilities affecting Roman Catholics which remain from the penal times in Ireland?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: This is a matter, as I have already intimated, for the consideration of the Statute Law Revision Committee.

CANADIAN FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE.

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether Her Majesty's Government has approved the provisional agreement entered into between the Government of the Dominion of Canada and Messrs. Peterson, Tate, and Co., for the establishment of a fast Atlantic service; whether the representatives of any other firm or firms desirous of competing for the contract were fully considered before a final decision was arrived at; and whether it is in accordance with precedent for a new and important contract such as this to be determined by a secret agreement instead of by public tender?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: Her Majesty's Government have, subject to certain conditions, approved the provisional agreement made between the Dominion Government and Messrs. Peterson and Tate. The representations of other firms were fully considered before a decision was arrived at. Tenders were called for as recently as last year, and as the only tenders received claimed a subsidy of half as much again as Messrs. Peterson and Tate, and as the firms who then tendered gave no indication of their readiness to provide a service fulfilling the advertised conditions on terms at all equal to those offered by Messrs. Peterson and Tate, Her Majesty's Government decided that it was unnecessary to call for fresh tenders.

DINGLEY TARIFF BILL (UNITED STATES).

MAJOR JAMESON (Clare, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if his attention has been called to the Dingley Tariff Bill now before the Congress of the United States, and to the increased duty proposed to be placed by that Bill on salted mackerel and other cured fish: and whether Her Majesty's Government will direct that every possible representation will be made to the Government of the United States to prevent this large increase of duty, which would seriously injure the trade of the west coast fisheries of Ireland?

MR. CURZON: Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington will be instructed to repeat the representations with regard to the proposed increase of duty on mackerel which he has already made to the United States Government with regard to a similar proposal concerning herrings.

CHARGE OF LARCENY (COUNTY TYRONE).

Mr. JAMES DALY (Monaghan, S.) : I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland whether he is aware that two brothers named Maguire, county Tyrone, have stood four trials and are at present in gaol on a charge of larceny : and whether he can say if he intends again to put the Maguires on trial ; and, if so, will he give them the first opportunity of being tried, viz. at quarter sessions, which occur in a few days, and at which the cost of defending a prisoner is much ess than at assizes ?

*The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND (Mr. J. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.) : The brothers Maguire have stood three trials, not four, as stated in the Question, two on the charge of murder and one for robbery from the person, on which latter charge they are still in gaol. It is the intention of the Government to put them again on their trial at the summer assizes, not before. I have, in answer to the questions of several hon. Members, already stated all hese facts to the House on more than one occasion.

POLICE PENSIONERS.

Mr. DALY : I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of reland (1) whether he is aware that the rule which compels police pensioners to appear before a magistrate or clergyman, make an affidavit, and then go to the police barrack of the district, which s often six miles away, before getting their pension, acts hardly on men suffering from illness ; and (2) whether in uture he will have pensioners paid by heque delivered at their residences instead of having to call at the police barrack for the money.

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR : In a case of sickness, the pension can be paid o another person authorised to attend at he barrack to receive it, and the uarterly declarations prescribed by Act f Parliament can be made by the nedical man in attendance on the sick erson, and not by a magistrate or clergyman only. Payment could not, I am nformed, be made in the manner suggested in the second paragraph.

CRETE.

Mr. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.) : I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the Turkish troops in Candia have been authorised to make a sortie against the insurgents ?

Mr. CURZON : We are not aware that any such movement has been authorised, but it may at any time become necessary, in order to secure the water supply of the town, which is being perpetually attacked and cut off by the insurgents. The arrangement which has hitherto prevailed for the observance of a neutral zone by both parties, has been cancelled from to-day on a written request of the insurgents to the Admiral.

ARMY REMOUNTS.

Mr. FIELD : I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office whether large numbers of horses are being purchased in Buenos Ayres for military purposes ; and, whether it is intended to make any purchases in Ireland ?

The FINANCIAL SECRETARY to the WAR OFFICE (Mr. Powell-Williams, Birmingham, S.) : As has been explained already, the horses now being purchased in Argentina are for service in South Africa, for the climate of which they are believed to be more suitable, besides being much cheaper than horses bred in Europe. About 60 per cent. of the horses for the home cavalry are bought in Ireland ; and no change in the system is contemplated.

VOTERS' LIST (WESTMEATH).

Mr. DONAL SULLIVAN (Westmeath, S.) : I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the contract for the printing of the list of voters for the county of Westmeath has not been put up for public competition at the presentment sessions in accordance with the Grand Jury Acts and the decision of the Lord Chief Baron ; whether the contract for this year has been given away by the sub-sheriff in his private office, and if he can state at what price the contract has been given and to whom ; and, whether he will take steps that in future this contract will be decided in the way prescribed by Act of Parliament at presentment sessions, and not in the private office of the Grand Jury official.

*THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND: There is a grave doubt as to whether the Grand Jury are bound to advertise for tenders for printing, and in the county of Westmeath it has never been the custom to put up such contracts for public competition. If anything illegal has been done it is open to any ratepayer to traverse the presentment for this printing. The Quarter Sessions have no power in the matter. In the negotiations for such contracts the Clerk of the Crown arranges with the sub-sheriff to represent him.

LEWIS.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, in view of the fact that the Post Office describes the Island of Lewis as only half an island, and that in the Reports issued by the Secretary for Scotland and other Government departments it is described as the Island of Lewis, will he state whether the Government contemplates altering the designation of the island?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: No, Sir; the Government do not contemplate altering the designation of the Island of Lewis.

INDIAN BUDGET

MR. SAMUEL SMITH (Flintshire): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, in view of the great suffering caused by the Indian famine, and the serious questions raised by it as regards the future administration of India, the Government will bring the Indian Budget before the House at a time when a full attendance of Members may be obtained?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: The hon. Gentleman is aware that the sympathy felt in this House with the sufferings of the people of India is very great, but I do not think that would necessarily produce a large audience for the discussion of the Indian Budget, whatever were the time of year selected for the Debate. I believe we have an example of the Indian Budget being discussed in June, and the audience was not greater then than it is when the Budget is taken at the usual time.

Mr. Donal Sullivan.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: There is a Question on the Paper in the name of the hon. Member for West Cavan (Mr. J. P. FARRELL) which has not been asked. It is—What Votes in Supply will be taken on Friday?

MR. DILLON: Before the right hon. Gentleman replies, may I ask whether he can see his way to take Irish Supply on Friday next?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: The suggestion that Irish Supply should be taken next Friday comes to me rather with surprise. I thought it was understood that English Supply was to be taken, and perhaps that would be the most convenient course. If it is English Supply, as I think it ought to be, the Votes I propose to take are the remaining Votes in Class I., excepting the Irish Votes, the remaining Votes in Class II., excepting the Foreign Office, Colonial Office, and Irish Votes, and if there be any opportunity, we should take Class VI., non-effective service.

MR. HENNIKER HEATON (Canterbury): When will the Post Office Votes be taken?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I do not propose to take the Post Office Votes before Whitsuntide.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Is there any hope of the Scotch Estimates being taken within reasonable time?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I should be very glad to make an arrangement convenient to Scotch Members.

BRITISH SOUTH AFRICA COMMITTEE (QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE).

MR. J. LOWTHER (Kent, Thanet): I rise, Sir, for the purpose of bringing under your notice a point of procedure which involves also a Question of Privilege. I desire your ruling as to what course ought to be followed by a Select Committee of this House, in the event of any information coming before it which reflects upon the conduct of a Member of the House, and in that connection I beg to call your attention to the Resolution passed upon the 16th of March

88—[laughter],—which is in the fol- wing terms :—

> "If any information come before any Com- ittee that chargeth any Member of the House, e Committee ought only to direct that the use be acquainted with the matter of such formation without proceeding further there- on."

wish to ask whether that Resolution still in force. I may be permitted to ld that I bring forward no particular stance or case, desiring only your ling as to the general practice which erates as regards Committees of this ouse.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Resolution of 88, to which the right hon. Gentle- n has referred, is no doubt still part the practice and rules of the House. eed not refer more particularly to the olution, as the right hon. Gentleman read its terms. All I can say as to e course to be taken by a Committee is at when any case arises to which that le is applicable it is obvious that the oper course is to report to the House.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) BILL.

Considered in Committee. [Progress, th May.]

[The Chairman of Ways and Means, r. J. W. Lowther, in the Chair].

Clause 1,—

ABILITY OF CERTAIN EMPLOYERS TO WORKMEN FOR INJURIES.

1.) If in any employment to which this Act lies personal injury by accident arising out and in the course of the employment is caused a workman, his employer shall, subject as e nafter mentioned, be liable to pay compen- io in accordance with the First Schedule to s Act:

2.) Provided that:—

(a.) The employer shall not be liable under this Act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed;

(b.) When it is decided, as hereafter provided, that the injury wrs caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer or some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible, nothing in this Act shall affect any liability, civil or criminal, of the employer or persons for whom he is responsible; but the employer shall not be liable to pay compensation both independently of and also under this Act, and shall not be liable to pay compensation independently of this Act, except in case of such wilful and wrongful act or default.

(3.) If any question arises as to whether the employment is one to which this Act applies, or whether the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer, or of any person for whose act or default the employer is responsible, or whether the injury was caused by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment of the workman injured, or as to the amount or duration of compensation under this Act, or otherwise as to the liability for compensation under this Act, the question, if not settled by agreement, shall, subject to the provisions of the First Schedule to this Act, be settled by arbitration, in accordance with the Second Schedule to this Act.

(4.) If the Registrar of Friendly Societies certifies that any scheme of compensation or insurance for the workmen in any employment is on the whole not less favourable to the workmen than the provisions of this Act, the employer may, until the certificate is revoked, contract with any of those workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this Act, and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with the scheme, but save as aforesaid, this Act shall apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after the commencement of this Act.

Another Amendment proposed [24th May], in sub-section (2), after the words "Provided that," to insert the words,—

> "(a) the employer shall not be liable under this Act to pay compensation to any workman by whose wilful and wrongful act or default the accident arises in respect of which compensation for injury may become payable."—(Mr. Seton-Karr.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there inserted."—Debate resumed.

*Sir CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean) pointed out that there were upon the Paper several Amendments somewhat similar to that of the hon. Member for St. Helens (Mr. Seton-Karr). This Amendment provided that the employer should not be liable to pay compensation to any workman by whose "wilful and wrongful act or default" the accident arose, but the Amendment of the hon. Member for Chester-le-Street, to which the Colonial Secretary specially alluded in closing the Debate last night, raised the whole question of the misconduct of the workman. He wished to ask the Chairman whether he thought it would be for the convenience of the Committee to Debate the various forms of the Amendments upon the present Amendment, or to confine the present Debate to the words "wilful and wrongful act or default."

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said it had been the custom lately when one Amendment raised a principle which was also raised by several other Amendments, although the principle was not stated in exactly the same terms, to discuss the principle generally on the first Amendment, and then, if the House accepted the principle of the Amendment, to consider the actual wording of the Amendment to be inserted. That would, he thought, be a convenient practice to follow on the present occasion.

*SIR C. DILKE said that the words "wilful and wrongful" undoubtedly restricted the Amendment to cases which were somewhat different from those suggested in the Amendment of the hon. Member for Chester-le-Street. If they had to choose between the form of the Amendments he should prefer the Amendment and the protection suggested by his hon. Friend the Member for Chester-le-Street. That Amendment raised the question of disregard of orders and the question of misconduct. He hoped to lay before the House some considerations opposed to these Amendments altogether. He confessed that they seemed to have limited the Bill by certain words introduced into it already, and which were likely to give rise to a good deal of litigation. The introduction of the principle which was now contended for in this Amendment, and still more the introduction of this principle in some of the milder forms suggested by some hon. Members, would open the door, he was certain, to a very large amount of additional litigation. They were engaged in discussing a Bill for which there was no precedent in this country, but which, in many points, touched questions which had been very largely discussed in other countries for years past. The particular point raised by this Amendment had been very fully discussed in Germany for years past, and it was one upon which there had been the greatest possible difference of opinion. When the first steps were taken towards the introduction of the compensation principle in Germany, the State officials were mostly opposed to suggestions such as this, but the employers were favourable to such suggestions. In Germany, the Committee would remember, all accidents were paid for unless they were caused by an act which might be almost described as an act of suicide. Dr. Boediker, the head of the German system, in a book which appeared last year, had brought into comparison the German system and the Austrian and Norwegian systems and the principal systems proposed for other countries, and had fully discussed this point. "For ten years," he wrote,—

> "we have given full compensation from the employer even where the accident is caused by the gross fault of the workman. The employers wish for no change on this point. If we are to stop or reduce that compensation in such cases, then we ought clearly to increase it in the case of gross fault of the employer."

This authority then went into the figures to show that a large percentage of accidents were the fault either of the worker or the employer, or, in part, of both, and said that the consequence of introducing this principle of fault into the consideration of compensation, either as regarded stopping the compensation or reducing it, would be to produce an enormous amount of litigation upon a point which was, in itself, a thing most difficult of ascertainment by the Court. Dr. Boediker concluded his survey of this matter with some general considerations which were, he thought, worth the attention of the Committee. He said the principle of compensation was the principle of social pacification, which ought to be accepted, and could only be defended on that ground, but that if they brought in this principle of stopping compensation or reducing it, exasperation instead of pacification followed. He used these words:—

> "To stop compensation in the case of gross fault of the worker is to throw a bombshell into the whole principle of compensation itself."

He also pointed out that the employers had now come to know that they would ave very little money indeed by the doption of the principle which was conended for in this Amendment, and while hey would save but very little money the doption of the principle would destroy he whole moral effect of the compensaion law which had been introduced. He vas quite aware that they could not rgue with regard to this Bill generally rom the example of Germany. The oundation of the German system was ifferent from the foundation of the sysem here, but he did submit to the Comnittee that as regarded this particular oint before them the experience of Gernany was material to the question the ommittee had to decide.

MR. C. A. CRIPPS (Gloucester, Stroud) aid he had put an Amendment on the aper practically in the same words as hat now before the Committee, and he hould like to explain why, both on the rinciple of justice and of expediency, he hought the Amendment should be dopted. He should first like to say, in nswer to the right. hon. Baronet oppoite, that in this particular Bill the aditional obligation which he referred to as placed upon the employer.

*SIR C. DILKE said he was quoting r. Boediker, who meant an increased, a enal, payment in addition to the rdinary compensation.

MR. CRIPPS said there was a penal ayment in this Bill. The advantage to n employer of this Bill was that, as gainst insurance, he had limited ability. If an injury were caused by the ilful or wrongful act or default of the mployer, he lost the limit of his liability nd he was liable at common law, not nly for the £150 or the £300, or whatver sum might be fixed in the Bill, but r such larger sum as the Jury or the ourt should award. Upon the point justice, really there seemed to be no spute, and he did not think there was ny reason to expect any of the diffiulties as regarded litigation or friction which the right hon. Baronet opposite luded. Was the Committee going to nction for the first time the principle at although a man might be criminally sponsible for his wilful and wrongful t, yet he was to be compensated either the employer or by his fellow worken? ["Hear, hear!"] A principle of at kind was necessarily inconsistent with justice. Supposing, say, an employé of a railway company acted in direct contravention of the rules which had been laid down, such as riding on an engine. Was he, because he suffered an injury as the immediate consequence of his neglect of rules, to cast the same obligation either upon the company or upon his fellow workmen? Take another illustration. A small employer was working with his workmen, and contrary to his direct instructions, a workman brought about, by his wilful and wrongful act, an injury which affected both the employer and the workman. Under this Bill the workman, who had thus brought that about would get compensation, and the effect would be that while the small employer would be ruined and have to go to the workhouse, the man who had caused the accident would be living in ease and comfort. He did not think it could be said that that was consistent with justice. As regarded the question of expediency, he said it was inexpedient to encourage a man to hope for compensation when an injury resulted from his own wilful and wrongful act. It was far more expedient to make him feel, not that he would be compensated, but that he must bear the necessary consequences which such an act had brought upon him. He thought that compensation under that Bill ought to go to the man who deserved it, and not to the man who had brought the injury upon himself by his own wilful, and probably his own criminal, act. He did not agree that the Amendment would tend to increase litigation. On reference to Sub-section 3 of Section 1 it would be seen that the question whether the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer was a question which the arbitrator would have to settle under the Bill as it stood. And if they adopted his own Amendment, to add after "employer" the words "or workmen," he could see no difficulty in the arbitrator deciding whether it was the employer or the workmen who had been in default. He denied, therefore, that there would be any tendency to increased litigation as the result of the Amendment. He went further, and said that justice required discrimination in a matter of this kind, and the machinery for discriminating properly must be provided. ["Hear, hear!"] He pointed out that contributory negligence did not come in under the Bill at all. The workman had to establish the fact that he was injured in his employment, and it was then for the arbitrator to determine the amount of compensation and whether there had been any wilful and wrongful act on the part of the employer. There could not be any real chance of greater litigation because the arbitrator had this additional question referred to him. He submitted it was right that the question of the workman's default should be referred to him also, and he hoped, after the intimation the Government had given, that it would be possible for them to give way on this point. For himself, he would not assent without a Division, unless the Government would make some concession, to introducing for the first time into English law what he considered to be a thoroughly bad and vicious principle, viz., that they were to encourage a man to act wrongfully in order that he might be paid in respect of the injury that resulted. Although his own Amendment was not quite in the form of that of the hon. Member for St. Helens, yet he cordially supported it.

SIR JAMES JOICEY (Durham, Chester-le-street) said that if the Government were disposed to accept the principle of the Amendment now before the Committee, he should be content with any words that would carry out the principle. His right hon. Friend the Member for the Forest of Dean alluded to the fact that in Germany this question of eliminating accidents caused by the wilful default of those who suffered had been a cause of great difficulty. He confessed that to a certain extent he agreed with him. But the German system and the system proposed in this Bill were altogether different things. In the German system no compensation was paid until 13 weeks had expired, and by that 13 weeks a large number of the accidents caused by carelessness were eliminated, and the workman contributed to meet the claims arising within that period. He could not admit there was any great difficulty in compensating for all accidents, seeing that it was already done by all the Miners' Permanent Relief Funds, and very little litigation occurred. But he looked upon this Amendment as a much more important one than many hon. Members, for this reason—the Bill did not directly deal with safety. But the safety of the workers in our mines and our large industries should never be lost sight of when the House was legislating on a question of such importance. He held that if a workman in a mine wilfully broke rules and thereby caused an explosion, which not only injured himself, but probably a large number of his fellow workers, it would be a monstrous thing that the same compensation should be paid him or his family as to those who had nothing whatever to do with the cause of the explosion. To take a simple illustration. Certain rules were laid down for firing shots. The hole had to be made a certain depth, and a certain quantity of coal had to be taken out before the shot was fired in order that the shot might bring down the coal without difficulty. The workman refused to do that, but put in his shot without adopting the precaution of taking out the coal, and instead of the coal being brought down there was what was called a "blown-out" shot, which produced an explosion. Was there a Member of that House who would say it was just and proper that a man who showed such carelessness with such serious results should receive compensation the same as the other workers who were injured by his wilful neglect? He could not think there was any justice in that. Apart from justice, the question was one of safety. In his opinion, they ought at all events to throw the balance against the workman in favour of safety rather than in favour of the workman against safety. He felt that the Government, in accepting an Amendment of this sort, would confer the greatest advantage not only on the employers, but on the workmen employed in mines, because it would lead to greater care being taken, and thus tend to a large prevention of accidents. It was quite impossible for any employer to have perfect supervision over every workman. He cared not what the industry was, a great deal must always be left to the care and judgment of the workman himself; and they might depend upon it that an Amendment of this sort would lead the workmen to take greater care than at present, to his own advantage as well as that of his employer. He would not for a moment say that any workman would wilfully neglect proper precautions because he was sure of compensation whether he took those precautions or not; but he was sure it would have some weight, and believing that the Amendment would induce greater care, he hoped the Government would accept it.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): I said last night that the Government were prepared to meet this question with an open mind, and would be very glad of any guidance the House could give in respect to it. ["Hear, hear!"] There are two questions to be considered—first, as to the principle of this Amendment; second, assuming the principle to be granted, as to the best means of giving effect to it. As regards the principle, I am entirely at one with the hon. Gentleman opposite and with the hon. Gentleman behind me. ["Hear, hear!"] I do not think it can be too seriously contended that it is not just or right that a man who deliberately and of gross negligence causes an accident, by which other people, perhaps, as well as himself are injured, should have the same compensation as he would be entitled to if the accident occurred irrespective of his own action. It would seem to be almost monstrous that, when stringent rules are laid down with regard to the firing of mines, and when workmen are required not to descend into mines with matches, or without locked lamps—I say in those cases the orders are distinctly and definitely given within the knowledge of every workman; and, assuming that a workman goes down with matches in his pocket, and, lighting a match in a fiery part of the mine, an accident happens by which three or four persons are injured, including the workman who took down the matches—I say it is monstrous to assert that the man has any right to compensation under circumstances in which he himself has been the agent in bringing about all the suffering and loss. ["Hear, hear!"] I am bound to say also, having regard to what has been impressed on us again and again, that we should at all events do nothing which would interfere with the prevention of accidents; and it certainly would seem absurd, as it were, to put a premium upon negligence which might cause accidents. We are, therefore, in accord with hon. Gentlemen in the principle they have laid down, and the only difficulty we have is as to whether, by accepting the principle, we might not introduce complications which would cause more injury and trouble than we should save by dealing with what is admitted to be a rather exceptional state of things. The Government have come to the conclusion that we cannot resist that some application of this principle should be accepted. [Cheers.] A great deal will depend upon the terms of the Amendment, for there are certain things which we must carefully avoid. We wish to avoid the bringing in again under another name of the old principle of contributory negligence. ["Hear, hear!"] We think it has been clearly and conclusively proved that the introduction of that principle into employers' liability has been the cause of the greatest hardships and injustice to the working people, and we must not, therefore, bring it in again by a side wind. ["Hear, hear!"] It is also necessary that we should have our words so simple that they are not likely to be the subject of material litigation. ["Hear, hear!"] I think I have gathered from all discussions on this question that employers, quite as much as workpeople, are anxious that litigation should be avoided, and both sides would agree that anything which increased unnecessary litigation would be a great misfortune. I do not think the words we are now considering would be satisfactory, nor yet the words of my hon. Friend behind me. I admit, although the words appear in the Bill in a different relation, that I do not think in this case they would avoid the probability of litigation. Wilful and wrongful default is always a matter of some dispute, and when we are dealing with cases of this kind we ought to try to make the clause a little more technical. I think the best framework for an Amendment is to be found in the Amendment of the hon. Baronet the Member for Chester-le-Street, but even to that as it stands I think there are serious, or, at all events, plausible objections. The hon. Baronet proposes that the employer shall not be liable for compensation in the case of accidents which arise from the non-observance of any lawful orders. That is a very wide statement, and it would admit the possibility of an order being given which was intended to evade liability under this Act —in fact, a sort of impossible order. An order might be given under which the ordinary work of an employer would not be satisfactorily carried on, and which, therefore, must be disobeyed, and which would only be nominally given in order to throw the risk upon the workman when it ought really to rest upon the employer. A sort of case which suggests itself is the case of shunting on railways. It is perfectly easy to make regulations and orders about shunting which would render that operation absolutely safe. But at the same time, if they were observed, shunting, which now occupies a minute, would take an hour, and the work of the railway could not be conducted under such regulations, and it would be understood—and, indeed, it is understood—that a bold and skilful workman does take upon himself a certain amount of risk. In all these cases the Bill intends that if an accident occurs to such a workman he shall be compensated notwithstanding any regulations to the contrary; therefore I say to allow an employer to clear himself from all liability under this Act by giving a lawful order—and, of course, all orders in this respect would be lawful—would, I think, give rise to a great deal of difficulty and would materially detract from the value of the Bill. I should, therefore, suggest that the hon. Baronet should strike out of his Amendment the words "the non-observance of any lawful order." I would suggest that the Amendment should run—

> "which arises from the wilful disregard of any rule or regulation contained in or established under any Act of Parliament which it was the duty of the workman to observe."

The Committee will see that that involves, first, that the rule shall be one which has already had the sanction of Parliament, and which, therefore, may be considered to be a reasonable and proper rule; and, in the second place, that there should have been wilful disregard. The hon. Baronet then proposes to add these words, "or to any other misconduct of the workman." Those words, again, are a little too wide, and I think we might insert in their place the words, "or to the drunkenness or other gross misconduct of the workman." That would be a modification which, I think, comes entirely within all the cases the hon. Baronet desires to include. I think if he were prepared to accept these modifications the hon. Member proposing the Amendment under discussion might withdraw it, and we might accept the Amendment of the hon. Baronet, altered in the sense I have suggested, as a new sub-section to Clause 1, and which would come in as the second sub-section just before that which deals with wilful and wrongful default. The words would then be to the effect that an employer would not be liable

> "for any accident which arises from the wilful disregard by such workman of any rule or regulation contained in or established under any Act of Parliament which it was the duty of the workman to observe, or to the drunkenness or other gross misconduct of the workman."

[Cheers.]

Mr. CHARLES FENWICK (Northumberland, Wansbeck) could not help expressing his regret that the Government had steadily refused to broaden the Measure in any sense or form, and that the Colonial Secretary, speaking on behalf of the Government, should have accepted a limitation such as was implied in this Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"] He entirely agreed with the right hon. Gentleman as to the justice of the case, and there was not a single labour representative in the House who would get up and defend a man having compensation for his wilful act on the ground of justice or equity. But he certainly thought that in accepting, even in its limited form, an Amendment such as this, the right hon. Gentleman had opened the door for endless litigation between employers and employed. ["Hear, hear!"] That one defence—for it was practically the only defence—which the Government proposed to set up would, in a large number of cases, if not in every case, be urged by the employers as a reason why compensation ought not to be paid. Assume that an accident had proved fatal and a workman had lost his life. Where were they to find witnesses except the official witnesses? They were the only witnesses that would be called in this instance to prove that the man had wilfully and negligently disobeyed some order and therefore had given rise to the accident. He was bound to say that the Measure became infinitely less valuable to the workmen when a provision such as was now proposed was inserted in the Bill. In the whole of his experience as a working miner, extending over close upon 30 years, he had never known a case where a man wilfully and deliberately injured himself or a colleague for the sake of any compensation that he would be likely to receive. ["Hear, hear!"] He hoped it was not too late to appeal to those in charge of the Bill to withdraw from their position and refuse to accept the Amendment even in the modified terms suggested. If such a restrictive Amendment were adopted it would materially alter the views as to the advantage of the Measure which were now entertained by workmen in various parts of the country.

Mr. TOMLINSON (Preston) said that in reference to the mode proposed by the Bill for dealing with compensation for accidents, he had been an humble follower of the Secretary of State for the Colonies. When that right hon. Gentleman moved his Amendment to the Bill of the right hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for East Fife (Mr. Asquith) in 1893, he limited it by the proviso that the compensation he proposed should not apply to injuries caused by the workmen's acts or defaults. That limitation was embodied in a Bill which had been introduced in more than one Session for dealing with accidents in that way, and it could not be a matter of surprise to any one that it should not be proposed that employers should be made liable to compensate a workman who had been injured by an accident caused by his own misconduct or by violating rules provided for his own safety. That was the object of this Amendment, and he felt bound to support it.

Mr. W. ABRAHAM (Glamorgan, Rhondda) expressed deep regret that the Government, by the acceptance of the Amendment even in a modified form, should have given the case of the miners away. [Ministerial cries of "Oh!"] He reminded the House that only 42½ per cent. of the fatal accidents in coal mines were due to explosives, whilst 57½ per cent. were due to falls of roof and side. In cases of the latter category the employers would be able to plead the "wilful and wrongful act or default" of the workmen and refuse compensation. It was very easy to theorise after the event and for employers of labour to find officials who would blame the dead man. The officials of the colliery would naturally defend the employer and say that it was the fault of the deceased that life was lost. Hitherto he had valued the Bill, but the acceptance of the Amendment would reduce the value of the Bill to the miners of this country 50 per cent. [Cries of "Oh, oh!"] He asserted his opinion against every man in the House. ["Hear, hear!"]

The ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir Richard Webster, Isle of Wight), replying to the hon. Member who last spoke, said that, if he thought the acceptance of the Amendment would exclude compensation in anything like the large percentage of cases he had suggested, he would not have been a party to it.

*Mr. J. WILSON (Durham, Mid) also regretted, in the interests of the miners of this country, that the Government had accepted the Amendment. Never yet did a blown-out shot cause an explosion where the condition of the mine was satisfactory. He denied that miners would receive any encouragement to do wrong. A miner's life and limb was as valuable to him as any hon. Member's. He had never seen the value of the Bill to the miners of the country, and the acceptance of this Amendment would greatly minimise the value of the Bill. All the efforts to extend the provisions of the Bill had been strenuously objected to, but when an attempt was made to restrict the effect of the Bill, the Government accepted it in plausible and illusory terms. From early youth until manhood he worked in the mines, and he had never known an instance of a man wilfully and deliberately injuring himself. The effect of the Amendment would be that, whenever an accident happened, an attempt would be made to fix the blame on the workman. The man would be mulcted in expenses, and the benefit of the Act would be delayed until the time for its usefulness was past. The process of the Bill was that if a Committee was formed in a district the appeal was to that Committee. If there was no Committee then the appeal was to be to an arbitrator or to the County Court Judge. Did the Government believe that the access to these courts would be ready and easy? They would be crowded with cases, and three or four months would elapse before a man would get the benefit of the Act. The time would be gone when the Act would be useful to him. It was no mere fantasy to say that a charge would be brought against a dead man for breach of the rules. He had seen it done. The officials of the employers were not all angels who spoke the truth at all times. Their prejudices were in favour of the employer, and they would not hesitate to make charges against the men of breaches of the special rules. He was sorry to hear gentlemen in the House make charges against workmen, not by implication or by indirect insinuation, but by direct statement. To suggest that for the sake of compensation a man would place his life in jeopardy was abhorrent to human nature, and a direct contradiction of the first law of existence, self-preservation. It was not by carelessness but by boldness that a man placed himself in danger and brought harm upon himself. Would anyone say that a man who did that should be deprived of the benefits of this Measure? ["No, no!"] But the effect of the Amendment would be to deprive him of these benefits. He hoped the Government would recede from the position they had taken up in reference to the Amendment.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, with a view to putting the matter in order, moved to amend the Amendment of the hon. Member for St. Helens by leaving out all the words after the word "liable" and inserting the following words:—

"to pay compensation in respect of any injury sustained by any workman which arises from the wilful disregard by such workman of any rule or regulation contained in or established under any Act of Parliament which it is the duty of such workman to observe or from the drunkenness or gross misconduct of such workman."

MR. PHILIP STANHOPE (Burnley) thought they had some ground for complaining of the course the Government had taken with regard to the Amendment. The Colonial Secretary stated on a previous night that the Government in this matter would be guided by the sense of the House, and they met that day imagining that only after very full discussion would the Government make up their minds as to the action they would take. Instead of that, however, only two speeches had been made when the Secretary of State for the Colonies got up and announced the intention of the Government to accept an Amendment which he (Mr. Stanhope) regarded as almost fatal to the Bill. He would tell the right hon. Gentleman a little fact which might convey some information to him. He had himself the honour, as representing probably the largest weaving town in Lancashire, of meeting the representatives of the employers of the Lancashire cotton industry on the previous day, and in discussing the matter with them he took the view that had been taken by the hon. Member for Wansbeck and others in this Debate, and he was glad to say that amongst those gentlemen who represented the Lancashire cotton centres on the Government side of the House, so far as he could judge, there was a majority who did not take the view of the Colonial Secretary, and who did not believe that the Amendment would be a useful one to introduce. The principal merit of the Bill was that so far as was humanly possible it excluded litigation, and gave general compensation for accidents and death. To that extent it was an immense advance upon all its predecessors in connection with employers' liability. It was in fact not a lawyer's Bill, but a statesman's Bill. But when they came to the acceptance of this Amendment he was bound to tell the Government that by that acceptance they were about to destroy the whole value of the Bill. The sole argument adduced in support of the Amendment was that a man who by his wilful neglect or act caused an accident ought not to be allowed to receive compensation. But he would point out that the object of the Bill was not to punish but to make provision in cases of accident or death. He entirely agreed with those who thought that if there was one defect in the Bill it was its too limited scope, and that it ought to be applied to all trades. Now the Government had opened the floodgates of controversy, and if the Amendment were accepted he believed that means would be discovered of raising legal questions with regard to almost every claim for compensation. As the representative of a cotton industry, he agreed that the acceptance of this Amendment would destroy the whole value of the Bill. [Opposition cheers.]

Sir ARTHUR FORWOOD (Lancashire, Ormskirk) in supporting the Amendment moved by the Attorney General, said he did not think it would lead to litigation. In the Bill there was every encouragement to a workman to refer every question to arbitration, and if he did so he had everything to gain and nothing to lose. If the Amendment was introduced the question would go before the arbitrator with this additional consideration:—Was the workman himself guilty of misconduct that he had committed a breach of any of the rules laid down by Parliament? The workman, if he had been guilty in either of these respects, would hesitate to place the matter before the arbitrator, and would be more willing to settle by agreement. Therefore, this restriction, which was just in itself, would have the effect of preventing litigation.

Mr. H. H. ASQUITH (Fife, E.) very much regretted the attitude of the Government with regard to this Amendment. He admitted that the matter was one of great difficulty, but the introduction of the particular words now proposed would, in his opinion, involve a departure from the fundamental principles of the Bill. [Cheers.] If they opened the door to an inquiry into circumstances and conduct in one case they would have to do so in all. By the adoption of this alteration of the Measure the dangers of litigation would be greatly increased. In the case of coal mines the regulations and the instructions to miners were often of a very minute and complex character. He did not hesitate to say that experience had often shown these rules to be unfitted for special emergencies, such as were likely to happen in mines. Under this Amendment a workman who purposely violated a rule in the interest of the safety of those in the mine, and who himself sustained injury would not be entitled to compensation. Apart from these considerations, who could say what was "gross misconduct?" He defied any lawyer to lay down any standard in the matter. And the special reference to drunkenness he considered unnecessary, and in the highest degree offensive. He hoped the Government would abandon their intention of endeavouring to meet what, after all, would be a trifling number of cases, and that they would decide to deal with the question on broad grounds of general policy. ["Hear, hear!"]

Sir FRANCIS POWELL (Wigan) denied that the Amendment was a departure from the principle of the Bill. He believed that it removed an injustice, and that that would be recognised by those who had a knowledge of the facts. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. B. PICKARD (York, W.R., Normanton) said it was absurd to suppose that workmen would commit an act which would result in injury to themselves in order that they might get compensation. When the Bill was introduced he was so enamoured of its provisions as explained by the Home Secretary, that he advised his people they would make a great mistake if they refused the Measure or did anything to prevent it becoming law. Since then there had been a Second Reading Debate, and there had been attempt after attempt on the part of hon. Gentlemen opposite to narrow the scope of the Bill. Evidently the Government dare not face the music. If this Amendment were inserted in the Bill the workmen would at once agree that the Measure would be no good to them. He and those he represented believed that the Bill should not be narrowed in its scope. The underground workers felt it would be most unfortunate if the Amendment of the hon. Member for St. Helens were accepted, and they entirely disclaimed any desire for such legislation. If the Bill was to be narrowed down as was now proposed, he advised his hon. Friends around him to wreck the Bill if possible.

The SECRETARY of STATE for the HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir Matthew White Ridley, Lancashire, Blackpool) said he was rather surprised at the indignation with which the acceptance of this proposal by the Government had been received by certain Gentlemen opposite. Last night the Government signified that they thought it was reasonable they should consider with an open mind whether a workman who had been guilty of wilful and gross negligence should be entitled to compensation. He believed he was correct in stating, notwithstanding what was said by the right hon. Baronet the Member for the Forest of Dean, that under the German law a workman who had been guilty of negligence could not claim compensation. The Government were determined to make it perfectly clear that if a workman was guilty of gross neglect of rules which he quite understood, or guilty of gross misconduct—they would not now bind themselves to the exact form of words—he should not be entitled to compensation. If a Bill of this kind was to be a fair and just settlement of a vexed question, it must be fair and just not only to the workman but also to the employer—["hear, hear!"]—and he did not believe it was the expectation of any workman that he should receive compensation for any injuries which were directly the result of his own act. He admitted it had been claimed as one of the great merits of the Bill that it would reduce the amount of litigation, and he was not prepared altogether to agree with those hon. Gentlemen who asserted that the acceptance of this Amendment would lead to an increase of the amount of litigation. Was anybody prepared to say that the payment of compensation in respect of a gross breach of well-understood rules ought to be on the same scale as that in respect of an accident where there had been no breach of rules? His right hon. Friend the late Home Secretary had said that the acceptance of this Amendment amounted to a departure from the principle of the Bill. As a matter of fact, they provided in a subsequent clause that if the employer was guilty of special personal negligence, or of gross personal negligence, or of culpable negligence—he did not know what form the words would ultimately take—the man injured should be entitled to special remedy against the employer if he chose to seek it outside the Bill. Why should they not provide that if a workman, well knowing what he had to do, caused through negligence a great accident resulting in loss of life and personal injury, he also should come under some special exemption from the ordinary provisions of this Bill? It seemed to him that what was fair for one party was fair for the other. He failed to see why those hon. Gentlemen representing labour in that House who had spoken on this subject should have charged the Government, by having accepted such a reasonable proposal as this appeared to him to be, with greatly departing from the principle which underlay the Bill. It might be that there were an insignificant number of cases which would come within the scope of this Amendment. He was not for one moment going to say that there were a great number of such cases; but, however that might be, surely, when they were introducing a Bill which cast upon employers a large and heavy burden, in the interests of the community they ought to take care that it did not carry with it the feeling that it was unjust. Could it be held to be just if they did not provide that a workman who was guilty of deliberate neglect of the rules under which he was working was not to be entitled to the same privileges as the man who did his best to conduct himself in obedience to those rules? That was a proposition which ought not, in his opinion, to endanger the success or the popularity of this Bill. He thought it was possible, by words which could be drawn up, to prevent the possibility of introducing the question of contributory negligence and to provide, on the part alike of employer and employed, that they should be outside the provisions of the Bill for all purposes so long as they were guilty of gross, culpable negligence. He understood that that was all that was done in accepting the principle of this Amendment, and he believed it ought to commend itself to the sense of justice both of the Committee and of the country.

Sir FRANK LOCKWOOD (York) ventured to think that the hard cases to which reference had been made were cases which the Government ought to have taken into their consideration before they pledged themselves to the principle of this Bill. [Cheers.] But when the Government found themselves brought face to face with the logical consequences of that principle, of which he, for one, most firmly and heartily approved, they somewhat ran away from the Bill—[Opposition cheers and Ministerial laughter]—and were willing to water down that great principle for which they no doubt rightly claimed so much. No doubt this Bill was an innovation, but it would not be an innovation long if they were going to accept

Amendments like this. [Cheers.] What was the good of the Home Secretary's telling them that, though they accepted this Amendment, they would have nothing to do with contributory negligence? It was merely idle talk. [Cheers.] The question of contributory negligence would arise over and over again under the terms of this Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"] It was involved in the Amendment. The Home Secretary had told them that they held the employer responsible for his wrongful and wilful act, and that therefore it was only equitable that they should hold the workman responsible for his wrongful and wilful act. But the Government were doing nothing of the kind. The employer was liable under the law now for his wrongful and wilful act. It was not the Bill of the Government that made him responsible. The Government had said, "Taking the law as we find it, we are going to make this great and generous concession, and we are going to introduce this principle new to our law," and the first thing they did was to begin to whittle it away by the acceptance of an Amendment which made the Bill, to his mind, a nullity and a sham. [Cheers.]

Mr. J. M. MACLEAN (Cardiff) said it was a pity this matter had degenerated into a fight between the two sides of the Committee. This Bill had not been introduced for the benefit of the employers. It had been introduced to satisfy the demands of the working classes, which had been recognised over and over again as just by both political parties. If this Bill failed to satisfy the working classes what was the good of having introduced it. He thought there was a great deal to be said for the Amendment. It appealed to one's natural sense of justice. It must seem to every man in that House a most unfair thing that an employer should be forced to pay compensation to any workman who, by gross or deliberate negligence, had wrecked that employer's property and caused the loss of the lives of many of his fellow-workmen. Still, on the other hand, they were confronted with practical difficulties which were expounded by the Colonial Secretary and insisted upon by other hon. Gentlemen, and he confessed that, although his strong feeling at first was in favour of the Amendment, he had been very much impressed with the speeches of the labour Members on the opposite side as to what would be the inevitable effect of introducing an Amendment of that kind. He thought it was perfectly evident that the effect would be to open the door to a considerable evasion of this law, and to minimise to a large extent the beneficial results which would accrue to the working classes. Was it not desirable that the Government should take time to consider this matter? [Cheers.] It would really be a great misfortune for the Government, for the House, and for the country if this Bill were deprived of some of its most beneficial features in its progress through Committee. He thought the discussion illustrated the importance of the Debate that took place last night when they urged that the principle of putting the burden on the individual employer alone was a mistaken principle, and that they should lay the whole burden on the community at large. Was it not most unjust that compensation for injuries done in this way should be placed on the individual employer? It forced them to the conclusion that the ultimate result of legislation of this kind must be to place the burden upon the community at large, and make it necessary that all accidents should be compensated in that way by a system of State insurance.

Mr. REGINALD McKENNA (Monmouth, N.) said the evil of this Amendment, if it were embodied in the Bill, was that it would open three new defences to an employer in the case of every accident. It was admitted on both sides that the number of accidents which the workman would have contributed to, or would have caused, by his own misconduct, would be very small, but the number of accidents in which one of these three defences would be raised would be enormous. ["Hear, hear!"] Consequently they would have all the evils of litigation imposed, certainly in mining, in upwards of 50 per cent. of the accidents.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL: It could not possibly be raised in one-half, or anything like one-half of the cases.

Mr. McKENNA saw no reason why it could not be raised in every case. If the defence, or any one of the three defences, could be raised in the first instance it would be raised. The Bill was introduced mainly to avoid litigation. It had only been in Committee two days, and the workman already had to run the gauntlet of five defences which might be set up to his claim. He, therefore, appealed to the Government not to accept an Amendment which would add enormously to the difficulties of the workman.

*MR. ALFRED HOPKINSON (Wilts, Cricklade) thought there had been a tendency on the other side of the House very much to exaggerate the effect of the Amendment, and to minimise what the Bill would be without the Amendment. Under the present law the workman had to prove negligence on the part of the employer or his manager, and the result was that only a small sum had found its way into the workman's pocket. By the Amendment they would bring within the scope of compensation an enormous number of cases in which injury was caused by inevitable accident or the act of another workman. The doctrine of common employment would be entirely abolished as regards employments to which the Act applied. The burden of proof would be cast on the employer, and unless he had a good defence he would not set it up. Many defences could under any Bill be set up. But the employers did not desire to litigate. He believed both sides of the House desired to stop litigation. Under the existing law litigation was necessary, as the employer would not admit negligence, but under this Bill he believed it would be rare. It would shock their sense of natural justice that a man who might have caused the death of a number of fellow workmen should receive compensation because he had met with some slight injury himself. Unless the Amendment was adopted such a man might be properly convicted of manslaughter one day, yet be awarded compensation on the next at the expense of the person whose property he had wilfully injured. Such a position had not been adopted in the German law, and in the draft Bill before the French Chamber the principle of the Amendment was proposed to be adopted too. He did not believe a man would deliberately injure himself, but if a man knew that he would not receive compensation he would be more particular than if he thought he would receive compensation whatever his own act might be. Much was to be said for extending the Act to other trades and employments, but it would be more difficult to extend it without some Amendment of the kind before the Committee.

*SIR C. DILKE said that under the German law nothing but acts of virtual suicide excluded a workman's family from compensation. As to the practical point before the Committee he moved to amend the proposal by leaving out the words

> "wilful disregard by such workman of any rule or regulation contained in or established under any Act of Parliament which it was the duty of such workman to observe."

This would leave for further discussion drunkenness and gross misconduct. These were different questions from those of mining law involved in the earlier part of the Amendment. Those who were not personally acquainted with mines hardly realised the extraordinary network of legislation to which the men would be made amenable if the words were passed in the Government proposal. It was notorious that breaches of the Mines Regulations Acts occurred every day. It was laid down in the general rules—which were equivalent to an Act of Parliament—that a > "competent person or competent persons appointed by the owner, agent, or manager, for the purpose . . . shall, immediately before the commencement of each shift, inspect every part of the mine situate beyond certain stations."

Then followed a rule by which no workman should pass beyond any such station until the part of the mine beyond that station had been so examined and stated by such competent person to be safe. Every person who passed beyond such station before that inspection had been made would be guilty of an offence under the special rules, and, therefore, in every case where an accident occurred to such workman it would at once be said that he was violating the rules laid down in a portion of the Act of Parliament itself. That would be a matter of daily occurrence. There was a boy killed the other day in his constituency while in charge of a horse drawing tubs. In the course of the inquest it came out that he was being employed in violation of the provision that a person in charge of machinery (tubs drawn by horses coming under this definition) must be a competent male person not less than 18 years of age. In that case, not only would this be a bar to compensation, but even if an accident occurred to a boy over 18, the fact of the accident would be alleged as a reason for believing he was not a competent person, that, therefore, the Act was violated and he could not obtain compensation under the provisions of this Measure. Again one of the rules provided that—

> "Every person shall observe such directions with respect to working as may be given to him."

Any violation of that general rule would be a breach of this Act of Parliament, and every such breach would disqualify for compensation under it in case of an accident. Offences of this general kind would be pleaded in every instance that might arise. There was a case in which a manager gave directions to his engineman, and yet that man was ousted from his compensation, under the present law, because it was held he ought to have disobeyed the mines manager and acted in accordance with the Act of Parliament. He thought the object of the Bill was to get rid of such monstrous decisions as the decision in the case of Heywood v. Baker in 1886; but instead of doing so it would continue the injustice unless some Amendments were accepted in the direction he had suggested. He begged to move the Amendment.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN observed that the point of view of the Government was that the change they suggested was a minor one which would not be attended with a fraction of the consequences which had been alleged by hon. Members, and especially by some representatives of the mining interests. He rose for the purpose of appealing to hon. Gentlemen opposite who took this view to help the Government by suggesting a form of words which, while saving this feeling of natural justice, which the Government desired to save, would prevent the consequences which they feared. There seemed to be no difference as to the principle upon the two sides of the House. No single Member had got up to deny that the case which had been put, of a man who had brought about an accident, by his own deliberate misconduct, to himself and fellows, was not a case for compensation. Everybody had admitted that as a matter of justice. ["Hear, hear!"] It would be a defect in the Bill if that case, however exceptional it might be, were not met. Some hon. Members said that the words in which the Government proposed to meet it were much too wide. If hon. Members on the other side would suggest a practical Amendment to cover the case, and which would exclude the cases it was not desired to include, the Government would give it their favourable consideration. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not think that object was secured by such an Amendment as that which had been proposed by the right hon. Member for the Forest of Dean.

SIR ROBERT REID (Dumfries Burghs) desired to call attention to the position the Committee were in. An Amendment had been proposed by the hon. Member for St. Helens, to which an Amendment had been proposed by the Government, while a further Amendment had been proposed by the right hon. Member for the Forest of Dean to that of the Government. The Government Amendment was not on the Paper; hon. Members had not had an opportunity of studying it or considering whether its language was appropriate for dealing with such a difficult and delicate question. The hon. Member for Cardiff had made the practical suggestion that this matter might be withdrawn for the present. In his opinion it would come more appropriately in the form of a new clause. It was not at all necessary it should come in this part of the Bill, and if the matter was postponed there would be time for conference between Members and for considering what was the most appropriate language to employ. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL thought that this was the appropriate place for inserting the Amendment, and that its insertion would not preclude any further suggestion. It was not the intention of the Government by their Amendment to cover mere technical breaches of regulations, nor did he think for one moment it would have the effect of setting up again the principle of contributory negligence. He promised between this and subsequent stages of the Bill to consider whether any guarded words were necessary to prevent contributory negligence from being set up. What the Government desired was to exclude from compensation the workman who had caused the accident by his wrongful act alone. If the suggestion was acceded to that the question should be postponed, he hoped they should not have the whole matter debated again. [" Hear, hear! "]

MR. H. H. ASQUITH (Fife, E.) joined in the appeal that the Amendment on this particular head should be postponed. The matter was one which required most careful consideration, and the Government would be well advised, in the interests of time and the progress of the Bill, to consent to the postponement.

MR. ROBERT ASCROFT (Oldham) said that employers often stood by and allowed men to break rules, but if an accident resulted from such a breach of rule with the employer's connivance, the man would have no compensation if this Amendment were carried. They ought to try to get some protection for the workers as well as some compensation, and if the Government would adjourn this question he would suggest an addition to the section—

> "That no employer shall be entitled to the benefit of this section if it can be proved that the accident has arisen fom the breach of a rule which had been allowed by such employer to be systematically disobeyed."

[Laughter.] He did not know why hon. Members were so greatly amused. Surely it was a most objectionable thing that an employer should be allowed to stand by and see workmen break a rule day after day, and then, when the workman was injured in consequence, he should be able to plead the breach of rule as a bar against compensation. He would deprive the employer of the right to plead such a defence, and was certain that it would tend to prevent many accidents.

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said the discussion had opened up a very wide field, and it had not convinced the Government that they were wrong in accepting the principle of the Amendment suggested. At the same time, they felt there were considerable difficulties in fixing the particular form of it. They were perfectly willing that the Amendment should be withdrawn on the understanding that he would consider how to give effect to it at a later stage of the Bill. He hoped his hon. Friend would be inclined to accept that assurance, and withdraw. [" Hear, hear! "]

Attorney General.

*SIR C. DILKE said the Amendment before the Committee at that moment was his own, and he had great pleasure in acceding to the suggestion of the Home Secretary.

Question proposed, "That the words down to 'observe,' inclusive, stand part of the Amendment to the proposed Amendment, as amended."

Amendment proposed to the Amendment to the proposed Amendment, as amended, by leave, withdrawn.

Amendment to the proposed Amendment, as amended, by leave, withdrawn.

Amendment, as amended, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. J. WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) rose to move, in Sub-section (2), after the words "Provided that," to insert the words:—

> "A claim is lodged with the employer or his representative within three months after the accident causing the injury."

In moving this Amendment, he disclaimed any hostility to the Bill. On the Second Reading he expressed his approval of its general principle, but he had also said that this was a Bill which required very careful consideration, and that the Government would do well to take the advice of practical men. His Amendment was not intended to attack the principle of the Bill, but to make it a practical working Bill. He had had a great deal of experience, having sat in judgment on quite one-half of the whole of the cases of claims against employers in Scotland, and that experience led him to tell the right hon. Gentleman who had charge of the Bill that he would do well to consider carefully the importance of the point involved in his Amendment. There was no limit in the Bill to the time during which an injured person might bring a claim for compensation. This was a most important omission. He had named three months, because the right hon. Member for East Fife adopted that as the proper time for lodging claims in his Employers' Liability Bill, but he should be satisfied with anything reasonable. It was no mere fancy on his part when he said that unless a limit was stated, claims might be brought five, ten, or even twenty years after an accident. He had in his hand details of a case in which a lad in the employ of a coal company was injured, and after having been kept in easy employment for seven years, he was advised to bring an action for £500. The coal company won the action in two Courts, but it cost them £300, so that victory was almost as bad as defeat. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman in charge of the Bill would give his suggestion careful consideration.

*SIR ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.) hoped the Government had advisedly made a distinction between their Bill and the Act of 1880, and that the provision as to notice would not be inserted; for he was quite sure that it had caused an immense amount of injustice, and had given rise to the strongest feeling on both sides in reference to the Employers' Liability Act of 1880. No doubt notice of injury or of action was a convenience in itself, and it carried some advantages with it—such as identification and the possibility of arrangement with the individual making the claim. But what he had to ask was, why should the case of the workman be made a distinction from almost all other cases arising under the law? Take the case of a collision in the street, giving rise to an action for negligence. It would be obviously desirable that immediate notice should be given, but there was no such obligation here. He would point out that in such a case, the occurrence being transitory, immediate notice was much more necessary than in the case of a workman who was more or less well-known to his employer, or his manager, and yet the Act of 1880 imposed the liability to notice on the workman, while the general law imposed nothing of the sort. He was not going to impeach employers generally, far from it, but there were exceptions, and anyone who was familiar with the cases knew that very often the employer showed great consideration and benevolence during the statutory period, but immediately that term had expired, the injured workman was put at arm's length, and the benevolence ceased. The effect of this provision, therefore, as in the Act of 1880, would be to deprive the workman of compensation simply because notice had not been given, and to place him in an invidious and unjust position. A strong argument had been based on the desire to prevent litigation. But the great defect of the Act of 1880 was that a large proportion of the litigation under it had arisen in connection with the failure to give notices. It was singular, by the way, that in that Act, in the most important of all cases, viz., that of death, there was an express proviso that notice need not be given. He strongly urged the desirability of leaving all these cases on the footing of the general law. Employers might well, as a matter of economy, make even great sacrifices for the sake of establishing and preserving good relations with their workmen. But if, on the one hand, they apparently made sacrifices, and then defeated the just expectations of the men by a technical and an artificial rule as to notice, that would give rise to the same feeling that followed on the Act of 1880 and defeat the object of the Bill.

*MR. CHARLES HARRISON (Plymouth) hoped the Government would not adopt the proposal to require notice. They all knew that there was a regular system carried on under the existing Employers' Liability Act, which required notice of claim to be given. There were persons who made it their business to watch for accidents, and then to run off after the workman or other persons suffering, and inform them that they could not bring their claim without legal advice. The sure and certain result of the statutory requirement of notice of claim was to bring about litigation, with its attendant expense. Speaking from considerable experience as one connected with a very large accident insurance office, he knew that nothing gave rise to more litigation than the imposition by the Act of the necessity of giving notice of claim to the office or to the employer. In addition to that, there had been numerous instances in which notice had been given, and the Courts had been asked over and over again to construe whether the notice had been sufficient within the meaning of the Act. They had had cases in which letters had been written by professional men on the part of injured workmen, claiming compensation, and referring to reports on the accidents made by the Government Inspector, and it had been held by the Courts that the notice had not been sufficient because the report referred to had not been incorporated in the actual notice of claim. The provision requiring notice of claim gave rise to all sorts of technicalities, and encouraged litigation, and he hoped the Government would not adopt it. ["Hear, hear!"]

COLONEL DENNY said he had been connected with an accident fund for fifteen or twenty years. One of the rules was that notification should be given within a certain period, and that had never been found to work hardly. He thought in all the friendly societies notice was required, and he did not think it could be any hardship. Both the last speakers had referred to hardship under an Act that was now practically done away with. Under that Act the whole onus of proof lay upon the man, but in this case the whole onus lay upon the master.

*MR. J. A. PEASE (Northumberland, Tyneside) thought if the Government intended to accept any such Amendment, it was desirable that the claim should be made in writing. With regard to the period of notice of the accident it seemed to him that three months was too long. It would be easy for a workman to advise his employer of an accident within a comparatively few hours of the occurrence, and he thought three days' notice would be better than three months. There were however, accidents, such as those to the spine and the brain, which took days and even weeks to develop, and he would add words to the Amendment to meet such cases. The Amendment, in his view, should read

> "A claim in writing is lodged with the employer or his representative if a notice of the accident has been previously given within three days of the accident or of the development of the injury."

SIR J. JOICEY hoped the hon. Member would not press the Amendment. All that was really required was that a notification of the accident should be given within at least three days. Every colliery owner was bound to give notice to the mining inspector within 24 hours of any accident that occurred. In his opinion it would be unreasonable and unjust to deprive a workman of his advantages under the common law, and he thought if notice of the accident was given it would be sufficient to meet the necessities of the case.

MR. J. W. WILSON (Worcestershire, N.) said it might be difficult in the case of a serious accident to formulate a claim within a limited period. What was wanted for the practical working of the Measure was an almost immediate notification of the injury. He spoke from some practical experience of the working of one of these schemes, and the difficulty was in many cases to decide whether a man really got the injury at his work or at another time and in another occupation. He did not think it would be any hardship to require prompt notification of an accident.

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY hoped the Amendment would not be pressed. The question of notice of claim was rather a difficult one, and he thought the matter should be left to the operation of the ordinary law.

*SIR JOSEPH PEASE (Durham, Barnard Castle) said he had never been able to see why under the present Employers' Liability Bill notice of claim should be given within a certain period, as the employer would have ample protection if notice of the accident was given as soon as possible. The hon. Baronet the Member for Chester-le-Street had already pointed out that under the Mines Regulation Act notice of an accident must be given within 24 hours to the Home Office, and with regard to the Miners' Provident Society it was provided that in order that the doctor might attend at once, and that the injured man might be well cared for, notice should be given within three days, and he could not obtain money from the funds if it was not given within 35 days.

MR. J. L. WALTON (Leeds, S.) thought the Amendment represented a legitimate effort to introduce a period of limitation into the Bill. It was an extraordinary feature of this legislation that these claims might be brought at any period during the lives of any number of generations of human beings who might as dependants be entitled to claim compensation under the Bill. The Home Secretary seemed to be under some misconception as to the operation of the ordinary law.

He knew of no statute which would introduce a period of limitation into the operation of this Bill. He thought some principle of limitation should be introduced. He could not conceive a case of greater hardship than a claim being brought years after an accident, when all the evidence necessary for its investigation had been destroyed, leaving the employer entirely at the mercy of some unscrupulous person who might promote claims of that kind.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said there was a distinction between notice of claim and notice of accident. He hoped his hon. Friend would withdraw his Amendment, to which the Government could not assent, in order that they might discuss the question of notice of accident.

Mr. ASQUITH asked, in view of the very pertinent observations of the hon. Member for Leeds, whether the Government intended to introduce any period of limitation? As the Bill stood, there was no period of limitation, and the Statute of Limitations would not apply. He was not in favour of such a limitation as that suggested in the Amendment, which was almost grotesque in its brevity, but, sooner or later, the Government would have to provide some limit of time, and he hoped they would follow the analogy existing in regard to common law actions.

Mr. J. WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) desired to point out that within a period of three months the whole of the evidence of an accident might be entirely destroyed.

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY hoped his hon. Friend would withdraw his Amendment. He was quite willing to say that the Government would consider the question as to how far the common law limitation would apply.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

*Mr. HARRISON moved to insert the following words:—

> "Notice of any accident to a workman shall be given by or on behalf of the workman to the employer or his agent as soon as possible, and in no case later than three months after the happening thereof."

The hon. Member pointed out that whilst he had objected to the proposal for giving notice of claim, this Amendment related only to the notice of the accident; and it was essential, in order to afford the employer the opportunity of inquiry, that notice of an accident should be given as soon as practicable. Since the Act of 1880 there had grown up a vast field of insurance on policies between workmen direct and insurance offices and provident funds, and in all those cases there was not a single policy which did not contain a provision that the accident was to be generally specified within three or four days of the cause of accident. That was too short a time for a statute which might deprive the workman of his compensation, and, therefore, this notice had studiously enlarged the time to a period of three months, which would cover all reasonable time, and three months had been fixed upon with reference to giving certain elasticity, and prevent anything like forfeiture of the right to compensation owing to the notice not having been given. Further, the Amendment was so worded as to allow a notice, whether verbal or in writing, to be given by or on behalf of the workman, and its object was to avoid imposing on the workman as a condition precedent to his right to compensation any formalities which would involve either the calling in of professional persons to formulate the notice, or to require that the notice should be given by the workman personally, instead of by some mate or friend or member of his family—a provision which might be very necessary in case of serious accident incapacitating the workman from himself giving notice.

Mr. R. B. HALDANE (Haddington) sympathised with the object of his hon. Friend, but believed that the Amendment would do more mischief than good. Why should a workman be placed in a worse position than any one else? If they adopted this Amendment they would place him in a worse position than any other member of the community.

Colonel DENNY (Kilmarnock Burghs) said if an accident occurred in a factory the employer had to give notice of it within 24 hours, and he saw no reason why an employer should not receive notice of an accident within a reasonable time. He moved to amend the Amendment by substituting 24 hours for three months.

SIR ROBERT REID (Dumfries Burghs) did not see why they should be hampered by these restrictions, which were unknown to the ordinary law. At present an employer was liable to have an action brought against him, and he hoped the Government on this matter would follow the ordinary course of practice. The hon. Member suggested 24 hours notice. Why, a man might be insensible for 24 hours after the accident.

MR. C. B. RENSHAW (Renfrew, W.) thought that the employers of labour were entitled to some protection under the Bill. There ought to be some limit for these claims. ["Hear, hear!"] There ought certainly to be some limit as to the time when the claim should be made.

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said it would be an unfortunate thing for the Bill if it made it a condition precedent to obtaining compensation that such notification of accident should be given. He was of opinion that it was one of the subjects which should be considered by the arbitrator.

SIR J. JOICEY said he was rather surprised at the speech of the right hon. Gentleman. They were not asking anything unreasonable in asking that within a reasonable time notice of an accident should be given. The workmen's own relief societies required that notification of accidents should be made within three days. It had been suggested that employers should insure against the risks under the Bill. He was certain that unless there was notification of accidents, say in two or three days, they would not get any insurance company to take the risks.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) could quite understand attorneys and learned counsel objecting to any notice being given, because the direct result of no notice being required would be to leave employers for ever open to litigation. Twenty-four hours' notice was too short, but a fair notice should be given, otherwise not only would the employer be liable for ever, but his descendants, his executors, administrators, and assigns. [Laughter.] Again, the Act could only be made workable by its giving rise to a system of insurance; and there must be a definiteness about the object of insurance; and there must be large areas or the averages would not work. He suggested that his hon. Friend should withdraw his Amendment if the Home Secretary would undertake to insert words which would provide that one of the matters to be considered by the arbitrator should be whether due notice of the accident had been given.

*SIR ALBERT ROLLIT contended that the presence or absence of notice of an accident within a reasonable time of the occurrence would be taken into consideration by any Court, tribunal, or arbitrator. The absence of notice for a year, for instance, would very probably lead an arbitrator to say that the employer was not liable at all. On the other hand, solicitors knew very well how a statutory term for notice was sometimes worked at present to the prejudice of the employé. The negotiations proceeded for a time, the statutory term ended, the charitable feeling ceased to prevail, the matter went into the hands of solicitors, the company or employer took up a legal position, and very often the employé got nothing at all.

*SIR JOSEPH PEASE said that they were now adopting legislation which would place upon employers a responsibility which they had never yet had, and a very grave responsibility it would be to some of them. They were accepting it as cheerfully as they could. They wished to make the best of it. But surely the Committee would provide that employers should receive reasonable notice of accidents for one reason, if for no other, namely, that the employer might see that the injured received medical care after he had obtained what was called first aid from his comrades, who almost all belonged to the ambulance corps. He could not believe that the Committee would place an employer in a worse position than men had placed themselves in with regard to provident societies. There were 122,000 men in the Northumberland and Durham Miners' Provident Society, and it was a condition precedent to a penny being paid in case of injury that notice of the accident should be given within three days.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN said he would like to ask hon. Members a question respecting the mutual provident funds which were so largely contributed to in the North. The hon. Baronet had said that three days' notice was required. If from some cause, which did not involve any fault on the part of the workman, the workman failed to give three days' notice, did that, as by a law of the Medes and Persians, exclude him from all compensation?

*Mr. J. WILSON (Durham) remarked that, as he had been a member of the committee of the Northumberland and Durham Miners Permanent Relief Fund, he was able to reply to the right hon. Gentleman. If a man did not give notice in time he was only paid from the time he gave notice. But a man was allowed to work 35 days after an accident, and if injury developed itself in that time he would not be debarred from benefit.

Mr. S. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow) stated that the Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Society had a rule under which a man did not receive benefit unless he gave notice within three days. He knew of a case where a man was permanently prohibited from getting compensation because he did not give notice within the required time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said it was, therefore, perfectly evident that the Northumberland and Durham Society was much more generous, and, he thought, much more just than that to which the hon. Member for Walthamstow belonged. Confining himself to the Northern society, let him say that the case of that society and its members was very different to that of employer and workman. A mutual society was able by means of the discretion of the Committee to take into account any failing on the part of the workman to give notice, and if the Committee was persuaded that that failure did not constitute an attempt to impose on the society, it was evident the workman would not suffer. If, however, they were to put into the Bill a definite provision that failure to give notice should in all cases exclude the workman from all compensation, he was certain they would do injustice in a vast number of cases unless the employer in all cases proved as liberal as a mutual society. He thought they might very safely leave it to the discretion of the arbitrator to decide whether or not the failure of notice might be cited as part of the evidence against the claim. [Cheers.]

Mr. ASQUITH said he entirely agreed with everything that had fallen from his right hon. Friend the Colonial Secretary on this subject, and he hoped the Government would adhere to the position they had taken up in regard to it. He was certain that the Amendment, if carried, would be productive of an enormous amount of injustice, and injustice to the man in many cases where it was not in the least degree needed for the protection of the employer. The Amendment did not even except the cases where an employer had knowledge independent of any notice. In almost every well-regulated undertaking in this country the employer knew perfectly well of these accidents, without receiving notice from the men, and under the Coal Mines Act and the Factory Act, it was his duty, within a prescribed period, and subject to a penalty, to give notice to the Government inspector that an accident had occurred. On the other hand, while this was not needed as a protection for the employer, if it was made a condition precedent to a man's right to recover, an informality in the notice might be sufficient to altogether disendow him of compensation.

Mr. CHARLES SEELY (Lincoln) would like to press the consideration of this question upon the Government. The hon. Members who had spoken against it had regarded it principally from the point of view of serious accidents. As a matter of fact it was not the serious accidents in which this question would arise. It was in the case of slight accidents that it would arise, and he wondered whether the Government would consider the question of inserting some such words as,—

> "That, in all cases where notice is not to be given by the employer to the factory or mine inspector, it shall be a condition that the workman should give notice to the employer of an accident having happened."

In all serious cases the employer must naturally be aware of what happened, but there was undoubtedly the risk that in slight cases claims might be made on an employer, which were not in themselves reasonable for accidents which had happened. It was now the universal custom in all friendly and miners' accident societies that notice should be given of an accident, and it was necessary for the protection of the employer and of the workmen themselves that an arrangement of this kind should be provided. It was admitted that some portion of this burden would have to be borne by the workmen out of their wages, and it was, therefore, only right and reasonable to the workmen that they should put in provisions which would avoid risk of the honest, respectable, and hard-working man having to pay his share of an unreasonable and improper claim.

Mr. J. W. CROMBIE (Kincardineshire) hoped the Government would stick to the very sensible position they had taken up. Speaking as an employer of labour, he thought a great deal too much stress had been put on this giving of notice of an accident. He thoroughly appreciated the necessity of giving notice of a claim for compensation, but that had already been dealt with. Something had been said of the analogy of a friendly society, but it must be remembered that it was absolutely necessary to give notice to a friendly society, because they had no other means of knowing that an accident had occurred. As to the case of slight accidents, all he could say was that if an accident was so slight that an employer, taking the precautions for getting notice that he ought to do, did not know of it, then he thought the arbitrator would consider it was a case for very slight compensation, or for no compensation at all.

Mr. W. J. GALLOWAY (Manchester, S.W.) hoped the Government would reconsider the position they had taken up in this matter. He would give a case which had come under his notice only that morning. A workman employed on a rivet machine injured his wrist. He worked two days after the injury and then went away and had been off work five weeks. How could an employer possibly know that man was injured unless he had notice given to him. He would like to know whether practically the same provision which was in the present Act could not be put into this Bill. He quite agreed that 24 hours, or even three days, was short notice, but he thought that six weeks or some such period as that was reasonable, and that, at all events, an employer should not be liable for ever for an accident of which he had no notice and of which, when he came to defend it, he might have no means of knowing whether it did or did not take place.

Mr. EMERSON BAINBRIDGE (Lincoln, Gainsborough) made a further appeal to the Government on this question. This was a Bill under which very big claims would be made, and he was sure the House would think it was only fair and just that there should be some kind of notice given with regard to accidents. He could see no injustice whatever to the workmen in this. He would suggest either three or six days, but, whatever period was thought best, it was, in his opinion, only common justice that those who might have to pay large claims should have some just and reasonable notice.

Mr. PARKER SMITH (Lanark, Partick) hoped the Government would be able to meet, in some way, the views of those who felt very strongly that some form of notice was necessary as a protection against bogus claims and litigation. He should like to know whether the Government could not provide that the man should have power to show, before the arbitrator, that there was some special reason why he had not given notice within the time appointed, and that in those cases want of notice should not be held to deprive him of his claim against the employer. They were giving him, under this Bill, far better terms than any person who came under the common law, and it became a matter of special urgency to the employer that he should have the opportunity of collecting evidence at an early date before it had got scattered. There was also the proposal mentioned by the hon. Member for Durham, in response to the question of the Colonial Secretary, which the Government might see their way clear to accept. Would it not be a fair solution to say that the claim should be made as soon as possible, and that the workman should not be entitled to any allowance for the period before the claim was made? Surely that would not be more than a fair penalty for his laxity. That would be, as it seemed to him, sufficiently strong pressure on the workman to make him make his claim, without being open to the objection that could be rightly taken against any arbitrary limit.

Mr. HAVELOCK WILSON (Middlesbrough) said the hon. Gentleman who had just spoken seemed to imagine that workmen were millionaires. It was very evident that unless a workman had a large sum in the Savings Bank, he would have to go somewhere for relief. His wife would soon discover his position under the Act—[laughter]—and would apply to the employers without delay.

Mr. JOHN WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) said he had a clause of which he would be glad to make a present to the Government. It was to the effect that proceedings for recovery under the Act should not be maintained unless notice had been given within six weeks, and an arbitration commenced within six months from the time of the accident; or in case of death within 12 months of the time of the death; provided that in case of death want of notice should be no bar to proceedings. He thought that would meet the arguments on both sides.

Mr. T. R. LEUTY (Leeds, E.) appealed to the Government not to make any concession whatever. The argument as to friendly societies was quite beside the mark. In their case notification was necessary because their members were scattered over a large area. Now the employer was to be the means of providing the workman with insurance. He hoped that the Government would make no extension except to provide against bogus claims by men for accidents met with when not at work. If the Government made some form of notification necessary they would be putting an absolutely unnecessary barrier between the workman and his compensation. All the arguments based on the necessity for prompt notification in the past were worthless. In the past a claim could only be made if the employer was in fault, but employers would now have to assume that if an accident happened and the man injured was absent from his work for two weeks, they would have to pay. In view of that knowledge on the part of the employer he did hope that for the sake of possibly eliminating one case of fraud, the Government would not endanger the men's compensation in the other 99 cases.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said the hon. Gentleman opposite might rest assured that the Government would not make any concession that would detract from the value of the Bill. His right hon. Friend had promised on behalf of the Government to consider whether any notification of a claim should be made, and undoubtedly in connection with that, the Government would have to see whether it could not be provided that, in the event of notice not having been given, the claim for compensation should not be commenced until the notice had been given. Those were points which the Government were pledged to consider. Beyond that he did not go; but he would ask whether the friends of the Bill would assist the Government to make a little more rapid progress. ["Hear, hear!"] This was only one of some hundreds of questions of more or less importance which could be raised as possible additions to the Bill; and if they were to spend so much time on each, they would never make satisfactory progress. ["Hear, hear!"] He would suggest that now either his hon. Friend should withdraw his Amendment or, if he could not agree to that, they might take a division.

Colonel DENNY asked leave to withdraw his Amendment, remarking that he had already risen three or four times for the purpose.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

*Mr. J. WILSON (Durham) moved to leave out paragraph (a) Sub-section (2). He suggested the omission of the paragraph because he thought it would very largely destroy the effect of the Bill, so far as the workmen were concerned. The Bill set forth that compensation was to be provided for all accidents, but if this paragraph were maintained some accidents would be omitted from the scope of the Bill. The right hon. Gentleman the Secretary for the Colonies had said that the Government were dealing in the Bill with the whole of the accidents occurring in the included trades, but those were excepted which only disabled a man for two weeks or less. Bearing on that, he wished to give a few figures relating to the Miners' Relief Fund in the north of England, which supplied expressive data. He had in his hands the balance sheet of that society, which covered Northumberland, Durham, Cumberland, and the ironstone mines of Cleveland, and included in its membership the whole of the men at work down the mines and a very large number of those working at bank, the total number of members being nearly 123,000. During the year 1896-97 there were 19,200 cases of minor accidents—namely, those cases that did not last longer than six months. He might say that the relief paid in minor accidents was 5s. a week. If the cases lasted over six months, they were classified as permanent, and the disabled men then got 8s. a week. Out of the 19,200 minor accidents, no less than 5,000 lasted less than two weeks. So that by the operation of this Bill one-fourth of the minor accidents in the north of England would be excluded and would receive no benefit whatever. He wanted the Secretary for the Colonies or the Home Secretary to tell them their reasons for excluding the workman from benefit for the first week if he was to be entitled to it in the third? Of course, the Colonial Secretary had told them that logic had no place whatever in the Bill. Still, they were compelled to ask the why and wherefore, and unless some solid reason was given why the workman should not have relief the first week if he was to have it the third and fourth, he was right in his demand that the sub-section should be excluded altogether. Friendly societies, he might remind them, gave their benefits the first week a man was off. He had listened very closely to the arguments of the promoters of the Bill in order to gather one or two reasons why this exclusion should take place, but he had failed to find one. He had not been enamoured of the Bill, because he had seen in it what he thought would be evils so far as the workmen were concerned. He would not go into them now, but this was one of them. One of the imaginary reasons for the sub-section was that there must be time for the effects of an accident to develop. But if a man was off work the second day, surely the effects had developed enough to entitle him to some benefit. Employers of labour in that House, of all classes of politics, had heartily welcomed the Bill and readily admitted the workman's right to compensation. He assumed that every hon. Member who supported the Bill was genuine in his wish to carry that out to its ultimate result. Then why were they to debar a workman from compensation during the first week of his accident? Was it suggested that he had some resources of his own, that he had money in the savings bank sufficient to carry him over the first two or three weeks? The wages-list of this country was a denial of the possibility of every man making any such provisions. In the large majority of cases wages were so low, that from the first day a man was injured he was within touch of poverty. No doubt there were some workmen who were paid well enough to enable them to lay up a small store to last a week or two.; but there were hundreds and thousands who could not do it. He concluded by again appealing to the Home Secretary or the Secretary for the Colonies to give the Committee some reasons for the exclusion contained in the sub-section.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said he would endeavour to meet the hon. gentleman by giving the explanation he asked for. At the outset he might say that the Amendment was one which by no possibility could the Government accept. It was an Amendment which, if carried, would be the death of the Bill. It was hostile to the Bill, and he pressed that on the attention of all friends of the Bill. As he understood the position of the friends of the Bill was this: The Bill might well be extended, but rather than risk it they would take it as it was, believing it to be a very substantial concession. ["Hear, hear!"] He was obliged to say, therefore, that this was a serious Amendment to which the Government must give strenuous opposition. The reason why the limit of two weeks was introduced was this. The Bill applied a new principle to industry, and threw a new burden on employers and on the trades they represented independent altogether of any negligence or action attributed to the employers themselves. This new principle the Government would only be justified in applying by some great public human interest. Now that great public human interest arose in the case of what he might call serious accidents. The sufferers from those accidents were the wounded soldiers of industry whom they had in their minds, and about whom so much was said in discussing this subject—people who were seriously if not permanently injured, and prevented, at all events for a considerable period, from following their ordinary employment. There would be no ground for legislative interference if they could believe that every accident which occurred was an accident whose effects would not last longer than three weeks. Such accidents as those were accidents for which the workman might very properly be expected to make provision himself. He did make provision in his friendly societies and in his trade union. Bodies of that kind had been accustomed to provide for him in the case of these shorter periods of disablement; and he might say in passing that he thought it would be a very great blow to the friendly societies, and perhaps to the trade unions, if they were to undertake to provide for the workman from the very day on which the accident occurred. ["Hear, hear!"] They therefore drew the line between what they called slight accidents, which might be properly cared for by friendly and other industrial societies, and the more serious accidents which constituted a grave misfortune and for which they were anxious that legislation should provide. In doing so they followed the principle of German and other foreign legislation, actual and proposed. In the first instance the Government suggested or proposed to themselves to exclude the first four weeks of an accident; but in that case they intended that, if the illness lasted more than four weeks, the four weeks' back pay should be given. ["Hear, hear!" from the Opposition.] But it was represented to them, both by employers and by some representatives of workmen's societies, that a proposal of that kind was very dangerous. It was admitted, he believed, by all who had an active part in the management of mutual relief and friendly societies that malingering was a thing to be carefully guarded against; and it was represented to the Government that such an arrangement as he had described would tend to provoke malingering and put a premium upon it; that in fact would put a distinct temptation in the way of a workman who had received a slight injury to remain away from his employment four weeks and one day in order that he might obtain four weeks' compensation. It was represented that if they gave a shorter time, and made that a period for which there would be no payment whatever, there would be a complete answer to those who feared malingering would result; because it was extremely improbable that any man would lie in bed a fortnight without real reason in the hope of getting a day or two's pay at the end of that time. ["Hear, hear"!] He hoped, therefore, that after the explanation he had given the Committee would support the Government in resisting the Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"]

On the return of the Chairman of Ways and Means, after the usual interval,

Mr. HAVELOCK WILSON regretted that the Colonial Secretary had viewed this Amendment as a hostile one. There was a good deal to be said in its favour. It was a great hardship on a workman who had been out of employment for ten or twelve weeks and had just secured employment, but through an accident for which he was not responsible was laid up for ten or twelve days, not to receive compensation. If he understood the Bill, however, the workman had a right to sue for compensation either under this Bill or under the Act of 1880. If this clause stood as part of the Bill, therefore, a workman who had been injured would be forced to seek compensation under the earlier Act, thereby encouraging litigation.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Mr. L. HARDY (Kent, Ashford) moved, in paragraph (a) sub-section (2) to leave out the word "two," and insert the word "four," the effect of the Amendment being to relieve the employer of liability in respect of any injury "which does not disable the workman for a period of at least four weeks from earning full wages." He pointed out that in the large societies connected with the Miners' Relief Fund, it had been found that the average duration of minor accidents was about four weeks; and it was on this ground, he thought, that it would be desirable to put the limit rather higher than in the Bill. A four weeks limit would be the safest to adopt. It had been adopted to a certain extent in Germany, and he therefore urged the Government to accept the Amendment.

Mr. FENWICK hoped it was unnecessary to appeal to the Government to reject the Amendment. If the hon. Member wished to protect the friendly societies and particularly the Miners' Permanent Relief Societies, he would do so best by reducing the time instead of increasing it. Compensation from the employers would then come in, and permanent relief funds could accordingly reduce their benefits.

MR. HENRY SETON-KARR (St. Helens) said he supported the Amendment, which raised a most important question—the distribution of the burden of compensation under the Bill as between employer and friendly society. The employer was at present only liable to the extent of his contribution—generally 25 per cent.—to the friendly society, and the compensation imposed on the employer fell either on the workman or the community. By the Bill the whole liability for compensation for personal injuries to the workman would be thrown on the employers. The extension of time would relieve the employer and encourage thrift in working men, because they would have to rely longer on their friendly societies. He considered that the chief blot in this Bill was that it imposed too great a burden on some of the great industries of this country. [" Hear, hear ! "] He was in favour of the principle of compensation, but not of so allocating or distributing it as to drive some industries out of existence. [" Hear, hear ! "] Had hon. Members opposite never thought of foreign competition or the cost of production? They might be taking away with one hand what they were conferring with the other, and driving some of the men they professed to represent out of employment into the streets. On this ground he desired that the burden of compensation should be distributed. This distribution rested entirely on figures, to which he wished to seriously call the attention of the Government, calculations made by one whom they would admit was a fairly high authority —Mr. Neison, Fellow of the Institute of Actuaries—who had gone carefully into the financial aspects of the Bill. He was not the authority consulted by the Government. His figures contradicted the figures supplied to the Government; and, while he did not claim that Mr. Neison's figures were infallible, it showed that the point was open to argument. The supporters of the Amendment desired to extend the period of two weeks to four weeks, during which a man would have to rely on his own resources. Mr. Neison, basing his calculations on the accounts of the Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Permanent Relief Fund, stated that for every 10,000 men employed in the coal-mining industry a moderate estimate of the liability for fatal accidents would be £5,000 a year. The average wages for 10,000 colliers above and below ground would be £600,000 a year, or £60 a year per miner, which, if anything, would be under rather than over the mark. Five thousand pounds a year for fatal accidents would be nearly 1 per cent of the the total wages. It had been said that the total liability would not exceed 1 per cent. of the wages earned, but here it was shown that the liability for fatal accidents alone would be 1 per cent. Mr. Neison divided accidents which would not be fatal into two classes —accidents above six months and under six mouths. The liability for accidents over six months in respect of 10,000 men, taking the ordinary figures of the society he had referred to, would amount again to £5,000 a year, or nearly another one per cent. of the wages fund. Five thousand pounds plus £5,000 would be the liability imposed yearly on the mining industry in respect of accidents, fatal and non-fatal, to 10,000 men. Ten thousand pounds on £600,000 was one-and-a-half per cent. of the wages. The liability for accidents under six months in respect of 10,000 men would be £4,500. The net result of the calculation was that, taking 10,000 miners earning an average of £60 per year per miner, the total liability for accidents, fatal and non-fatal, would be £14,500 a year, or two-and-a-half per cent. on the wages earned. He trusted the House would consider these calculations before passing the Bill. What was he asking the House to do? It was a ridiculously small concession. The two weeks reduced the number of accidents for which employers were liable under the Bill 20 per cent., but it only reduced the costs of compensation to which they were liable 5 per cent. If they extended the period to four weeks it reduced the number of accidents for which employers were liable 50 per cent., and it reduced the costs of compensation 33 per cent. The 50 per cent. and the 33 per cent. did not apply to anything like the whole liability under the Bill.

The net result was this: by the Amendment, he was asking the House to relieve the employers of a liability of a third out of a total liability of £4,500; in other words it would relieve them of a money compensation of £1,500. It would still leave a burden of no less than 2¼ per cent. on the wages fund of the industry. In other words, every colliery proprietor would find that if he paid, say, £100,000 a year in wages, he would pay no less than £2,500 under the scheme of compensation imposed by this Bill. There were many collieries now being worked under serious difficulties, and it was a question from year to year whether the owners would think it worth their while to go on. He knew one which was being worked at a dead loss of several thousand pounds a year, and the only reason why they were going on was that the proprietors owned other large works to which the colliery in question supplied fuel, so that they could afford to work the colliery at a loss. But in the case of other collieries similarly situated they might be imposing a burden on that industry which would finally compel them to close their works. What was the meaning of that? It meant that this legislation might have the effect of driving hundreds of people out of work, and that was the only consideration that actuated him in moving Amendments to this Bill. With regard to the friendly societies, he asked hon. Members to put themselves in the position of a collier who was subscribing a certain proportion of his wages to a permanent relief society to which his employer also subscribed. The collier would say, "Here is a Bill under which, no matter what kind of accident I suffer from, I shall be compensated on a handsome scale. Why should I subscribe a halfpenny of my wages to the funds of a society, when I can get everything I want out of the Bill for nothing?" The argument was perfectly sound and logical. For his part he should not hesitate for a moment. If they were going to relieve the workman without any effort on his part they would encourage habits of indolence and thriftlessness. The workman must be interested, and the sole object of the Amendment was to ameliorate this state of things and to bring about a slightly more equitable distribution of the burden of compensation which was imposed by this Bill.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said it was not possible for the Government to accept the Amendment. They were satisfied that if such a period as four weeks were to be chosen it would be absolutely necessary, in the event of the disablement extending over the four weeks, to make the payment relate back. The Government had selected the period which they thought would fairly cover minor accidents which, though they might temporarily disable, were not sufficiently serious to prevent work from being resumed within a week or ten days. On the question of figures he must say that those which the hon. Member had given as being furnished by Mr. Neison did not correspond with the figures which that gentleman supplied to her Majesty's Government. It might be that further investigation had caused Mr. Neison to alter his figures, but the Committee could not place very much reliance upon the last figures of Mr. Neison when they found that there was such a substantial variation between them and those supplied to the Home Secretary so recently as May 18. He was not attacking Mr. Neison, but it was not possible to place the same reliance on the figures of any gentleman when they changed within so comparatively short a time. The hon. Member estimated the total liability under the Bill at 2½ per cent. upon the wages paid. That represented a serious charge. The Government did not agree that the total burden would be so large, but, assuming it was so, it was no good upon this Amendment discussing what was to be the total burden with reference to death liability and permanent disablement liability when the material figures to be considered were the difference between four weeks and two weeks. ["Hear, hear!"] It seemed to him that apart from money calculations, which it must be difficult to make with accuracy, there were certain broad principles upon which they should proceed. They knew what a serious accident meant, and what, comparatively speaking, a less serious accident meant. If a man was laid aside for a fortnight, he did to a certain extent draw a line of demarcation between what might be called a serious accident and a non-serious accident; and that was a more practical line to draw than any based on actual money calculations. There were figures which enabled them to test that view a little more closely. The Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Permanent Relief Society, which embraced a very large number of men, reported that in the five years 1892–96 the total number of accidents of which particulars were furnished was 49,378. The number confined to the first two weeks was 11,961, between two and three weeks the number was 12,629, and between three and four weeks 7,160—a total of 31,750 out of 49,378. Therefore, if the Amendment was carried, the result would be to impose upon other sources from which compensation might be obtained a total liability which would amount to between 60 and 70 per cent. of the total number of accidents. By the provisions of the Bill the employers would be exempted from paying compensation in 11,961 cases, or about 22 per cent., which he thought was a very fair proportion. They were dealing with a class of men who they knew in many instances were earning only what they were obliged to spend week by week. It was only in the most favourable circumstances that the most thrifty of these men were able to save anything, and it was no fault of their own that many of them could not save much. When misfortune or sickness came they had no claim except upon the benefit societies, and had seldom anything to fall back upon. The Government, therefore, felt that in exempting the masters from the liability to pay compensation during a period of two weeks a substantial relief was given, while a system was adopted which would put fairly upon the workmen that portion of the burden which they ought to bear. It was said that by taking two weeks instead of four they would not be encouraging the friendly societies. All he could say was that if 22 per cent. of the accidents were left to the friendly societies it would be a considerable inducement to them to rearrange their funds with the view of giving perhaps larger allowances during the period of temporary disablement. If it was right to deal with the liability for all serious accidents in the way proposed by the Bill, he would be only too glad to find that the friendly societies were able to devote some of their funds, which were contributions of the men themselves, in giving larger allowonces for sickness and disasters not dealt with in the Bill. The Colonial Secretary had indicated to the Committee that the Government regarded Sub-section (a) as being a vital part of the Bill. They did not see any reason to change the period they had named, and unless they were shown that they were absolutely wrong they would feel it their duty to adhere to the period of two weeks.

*MR. J. WILSON (Durham) said the figures quoted by the Attorney General with regard to Lancashire and Cheshire coincided in a remarkable manner with figures which he had obtained in reference to the North of England Permanent Relief Society, and which showed that one-fourth of the accidents suffered by the miners there did not extend beyond the first two weeks. The hon. Member opposite had charged the working men generally with improvidence. He forgot that there were other liabilities and causes of men being out of work besides accidents. The men had to subscribe to sick benefit societies as well as permanent relief funds. Did the hon. Member suppose that the men would leave the friendly societies because of this proposed compensation, which could in no case exceed 50 per cent. of the wages? He would ask the hon. Member to address his lecture on foreign competition to the Home Secretary instead of to the working men representatives. They had never asked for this Bill. He should oppose the extension of the time for two weeks to four weeks, unless the hon. Member could induce the Government to agree to the compensation dating back from the occurrence of the accident. Then he would support the Amendment.

*COLONEL BLUNDELL (Lancashire, Ince) said that he differed entirely from the figures of the Attorney General. As far as he could learn, half the cost of injuries was in the first six weeks, and if a longer period were given, these benefit societies might continue. They gave the workman security against the insolvency of his employer, and an interest in his own insurance. There could be no doubt that eventually the effect of this Bill would fall on employers and workmen alike, but before that time there must be much friction. The principle hitherto had been that the workman assisted by the employers should insure himself, and wages had been settled on that basis. This Bill threw the whole burden on the employers. That meant an increase of wages at a time when it was not justified by the condition of trade. He thought that the workman should be a party to his own insurance, and that it was a retrograde step to relieve him of that duty.

*SIR ALFRED HICKMAN (Wolverhampton, W.) was glad that the Government had spoken with no uncertain sound against the Amendment. [" Hear, hear ! "] The proposal of the Bill was passed on an intelligible principle. Every workman would have at least a week's wages due to him after he had sustained an accident. He would have at the very least, or at the very worst, half wages for a fortnight; but, if the period were extended the man would be placed in a very different position, he might be in absolute want, and the benefits of the Bill would be for him largely done away with.

MR. GALLOWAY asked whether, if a workman was disabled three weeks or for any period over two weeks, he would receive compensation for one week or for the three weeks?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL replied that the compensation would be paid only in respect of one week.

*MR. TOMLINSON referred to Mr. Neison's calculations, and said that he thought that there was some misapprehension as to the statements made by that gentleman. He denied that he had furnished the Home Office with statements inconsistent with those referred to by the hon. Member for St. Helens. Some facts collected by Mr. Neison had doubtless come before the Home Office, and some other gentleman had drawn some inferences from those facts which Mr. Neison disputed. For instance, Mr. Neison had undoubtedly stated that one-fifth of the accidents would be covered by the limit of two weeks, and the erroneous inference had been drawn at the Home Office that this limit of time disposed of one-fifth of the accidents; the fact being that owing to the greater costliness of the remaining accidents the two weeks only eliminate 5 per cent. in value of the accidents.

MR. SETON-KARR said that if he might be permitted to say so, both the hon. Member for Mid Durham and the Attorney General had made the same mistake. They had alsolutely disregarded the percentage of cost; and only treated the percentage of accident. But as this was a money compensation Bill, the question of cost was the only question worth considering.

MR. BAINBRIDGE said he regarded the Amendment as the most important that had been brought forward in connection with the Bill. Its effect would be to ease or reduce the strain thrown by the Bill upon the employer or upon the industry which the employer represented; and he therefore supported it. It was extremely important that the House should understand, and in regard to the coal trade — the industry which the Home Secretary had said would be most seriously affected by the Bill—the Bill meant an increased cost of two-pence per ton. The Attorney General had stated that there was very little difference between the effect of this Bill, and the effect of the Bill brought forward by the late Home Secretary. He controverted that statement in the strongest terms. He was an insurer of 12,000 or 15,000 men for the last 17 years under the present Employers' Liability Act; and the exact cost of the insurance was 1-32nd per cent. of the wages. The cost under the Bill of the late Home Secretary, if carried, would not have amounted to more than just twice as much as the cost under the Employer's Liability Act. In other words, the cost under the present Bill would be 2½ per cent., more than 80 times as much as the Employers' Liability Act; and 40 times as much as the late Home Secretary's Bill. This showed the extraordinary strain that would have to be borne by industry under the Bill; and it behoved them to try to reduce the strain as much as possible. He hoped the Government would think very seriously before they rejected this Amendment. He had been down to his constituency last Saturday, and spoke to a large employer of labour, who told him that, if this Bill passed, he would be obliged to discharge a large number of his young men. On asking him why, he replied that the Bill would encourage carelessness and neglect, and it was the younger men who displayed the most carelessness and neglect. That was a new light to him. He hoped the Government would not reject the Amendment, because it would tend to lighten the load on the employers, it would help to prevent a number of old men from being starved, and would support the maintenance of such societies as the Miners' Permanent Relief Fund.

Mr. HARDY said, in view of the position taken up by the Government, he did not propose to put the Committee to the trouble of a Division on the matter. Personally, he felt a very strong inclination to accept the suggestion from the other side of the House with reference to four weeks, but he did not feel justified, without consideration, in altering his Amendment. He assured the Committee that he brought forward the Amendment, not from any desire to take away from the compensation of the men, but rather with the view of making them work better when the Bill passed. He asked leave to withdraw the Amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. RENSHAW moved, in Paragraph (a) Sub-section (2), after the word "weeks," to insert the words "immediately subsequent to the injury."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN hoped the Amendment would not be pressed, as it was easy to conceive cases of accident where the injury was not discovered till some time afterwards.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Mr. BOUSFIELD moved, in Sub-section (2), after the words "Provided that," to insert the words:—

"he shall not be so liable if he shall be a member of a trade association in the management of which employers and workmen shall have equal representation, and shall have contributed to the funds of such association an amount not less than the amount contributed by his workmen to such funds."

It was very desirable that these funds should, if possible, be administered through trade organisations. That, undoubtedly, would lead to economy in working, just as it was frequently found that a body elected by the people was more economical than a body which was not controlled in any way. If initially there were contributions by the workmen towards the expenses of compensation—

Mr. PICKARD, rising to order, asked whether the hon. and learned Gentleman's remarks were relevant to the Bill?

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS thought the Amendment was in order.

Mr. BOUSFIELD said it was perhaps a little difficult to gather from his Amendment what was its exact scope. It seemed to him that in the administration of these funds it was essential that they should have the assistance of the workmen, and that the workmen should, in the first place, contribute to the funds. His suggestion was that in the case of the Lanarkshire coal fields, for instance, there should be a Mining Board, that that Board should be elected, and should consist of an equal number of employers' and workmen's representatives; that they should have power to form a fund to which employers and workmen should contribute in equal shares, and that they should have the dispensing of that fund. If they had a body of that sort, responsible for the collection and administration of the fund, there would be the great advantage that those interested in the administration would know all about the necessities of the people who from time to time would be injured. There would be the further advantage that they would get rid of the difficulty of the possible bankruptcy of the employer. The association would represent a large area, and the fund would be practically incapable of being bankrupt. Further, there would be the great advantage that they would have the employers and workmen working together in harmony. He was satisfied that such a scheme as he proposed in this matter would tend to the happy solution of many trade difficulties in other matters.

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said there was no doubt that, if the object which this Bill sought to attain could be secured without legislation, it would be a very desirable state of things. As far as he understood the Amendment, his hon. and learned Friend really proposed to substitute for the proposals of the Bill a very vague system of what was generally called contracting out. He did not for a moment deny that it would be extremely desirable if trade associations could be formed all over the country in which, by the mutual co-operation of employers and employed, the various claims which might be made upon them could be satisfactorily met. The contracting out clause of the Bill was a more liberal and generous one than that of his hon. and learned Friend, and, whether the Committee considered it a right or a wrong one when it came under discussion, he hardly thought they would be prepared to accept the present Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"] Certainly the Government could not accept it. ["Hear, hear!"]

Amendment negatived.

MR. HALDANE (Haddington) moved, in paragraph (b), Sub-section (1), to leave out the words:—

> "When it is decided, as hereafter provided, that the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer or some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible."

He said the words proposed to be left out provided that the common law liability of the employer was to continue when, and only when, it had been decided by the arbitrator that the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act and default of the employer or some person for whose act and default the employer was responsible. He wished to point out that these words were inconsistent with what he understood was the purpose for which the Bill was introduced. It was introduced with a view to confer upon the workmen a new system of compensation. To the employer there was to be left the burden of such civil liability as already existed. The clause, as drawn, was not consistent with that. Let him take a concrete and simple illustration. Supposing a very common sort of accident. Machinery was fenced, but through the negligence, but not the wilful or wrongful negligence, of the employer or his superintendent, imperfectly fenced. The fencing gives way, and the man lost a couple of fingers. He was laid aside for a fortnight, at the end of which time he came back with his arm in a sling. He was able to work his machine, he was not permanently incapacitated within the meaning of the schedule, although he was a worse man. It might be that through some similar cause, through the negligence, but not the wilful wrong of the employer, he had lost an eye. He was not permanently incapacitated from doing his work, but what was his position? Before the Bill passed into law he would have been able to have recovered against his employer compensation in the shape of the damages which the Employers' Liability Act gave him, but in this clause they had taken away that right without giving anything to take its place. He could recover compensation under this Bill, but only if he came within the provisions of the schedule. In the case he had put—and it was quite a common case—by the provision which constituted the beginning of this sub-section, he was disabled from recovering under the law as it now stood. He could not get compensation under the Bill, and he could not get compensation under the Employers' Liability Act, because this Bill had cut down the cases in which he could claim under that law, to cases in which there had been a wilful and wrongful act on the part of the employer.

In that class of cases, he said, the workman was distinctly worse off than he was under the existing law. They were cutting out from compensation a large class of accidents—he admitted they were smaller accidents—without any justification so far as he could see. It was perfectly true that the employer was to bear a larger burden than at present. That was in pursuance of the Government's policy, but why should they take from this class of person who had suffered injury the rights which he had at the present time? He would also like to ask what was the meaning of the words "wilful and wrongful." They were not known to lawyers. He was always delighted when legal phraseology could be departed from, and things could be expressed in plain terms —[Ministerial cheers]—but unfortunately such was the infirmity of the human mind that stereotyped phrases did get an ascertained meaning, and when new ones were started they opened up a large and vexatious field of questions for the Courts to decide; and of this he was convinced, that if these words were left in the clause, and if these questions were reserved for the arbitrator, they would be opening up a new field of litigation. [" Hear, hear ! "] For these reasons he begged to move the omission of the words to which the Amendment referred.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said he would be glad if his hon. and learned Friend would tell the Committee in whose interest this Amendment was proposed. He was certain it would not conduce to the interest of the workman, but would manifestly conduce to the interest of the lawyers. [Laughter.] The illustration which his hon. and learned Friend gave was altogether inconsistent with his line of argument. He supposed the case of a workman who had lost two fingers and an eye, or two fingers or an eye—he was not sure sure which—and he assumed that this man would recover from this injury in a fortnight. All he could say was that if he did it would be a most wonderful recovery. [Laughter.] The hon. and learned Gentleman went on to say that this man would not be permanently incapacitated. He did not think the word "permanently" occurred in the Bill. The words were "in case of incapacity for work," and to say that a man who had lost two fingers or an eye would not be to some extent incapacitated for work seemed to him quite contrary to the probable facts of the case. ["Hear, hear."] He did not think it was true to say that a workman in that position would not be able to get compensation under the Bill. What would be the effect of the Amendment? The Government were endeavouring to do away with litigation. The one case they considered to be outside the purview of the Bill was the case to which reference had been made continually—of wilful and wrongful default on the part of the employer. The hon. Gentleman complained that those were not legal words, but them he could discuss on a subsequent Amendment. What the Government meant was perfectly clear. They meant to do what they said—[" hear, hear ! "]—the wilful and wrongful act of the employer, which would justify them in imposing on him a different liability to that imposed by the Bill. His hon. and learned Friend proposed that in every case of accident it should be an open question whether the workman took advantage of the Bill or whether he took some other proceedings—that was to say, he was going to open the whole opportunity of litigation in every case that occurred under the Bill. In every single case the workman under the sort of inducement that was brought to bear on him was to leave all the certain and definite advantages of the Bill and was to engage in expensive litigation, which would be undertaken as a speculative matter by somebody on his part with the certainty that if he won, very little if any, of the compensation recovered would go into his pocket. ["Hear, hear."]

That was entirely opposed to the object and intention of the Bill, and it would be quite impossible to consent to the Amendment. ["Hear, hear."]

MR. WALTON said that the proposals of the Government were most remarkable in their nature and without precedent, inasmuch as they set up a double form of procedure for ascertaining the rights of the parties whose interests were involved. Let him indicate shortly what he thought were grave and conclusive objections to this proposal of the Government. In the first place, let them consider the tribunal which was to decide the issue on which he civil and criminal status of every employer was to depend. Let them consider the nature of the tribunal, and consider the justice of leaving the employer to face its investigation with the danger of a subsequent criminal indictment hanging over his head. It was said that he had been guilty of some eglect of duty, that he had been wilfully and wrongfully negligent, either in the engagement of his workmen or in the arrangement or management of his works. That issue had first of all to be determined by a secret tribunal under the name of arbitration, sitting without the afeguards of legal procedure, holding its inquiry without the guarantee of publicity. Assume an adverse verdict. That verdict would entitle the workman or his representatives to indict his employer perhaps for manslaughter. Imagine a man going before a jury on uch a charge when already involved by he verdict of this extraordinary tribunal. What chance would he have? Then, in he matter of civil responsibility, what sort f a chance of a fair trial would an emloyer have when sued in a Court of Common Law after the workman had got the erdict of the arbitrator that the conduct f his employer had been wilfully negligent? That was the provision from the mployer's point of view. Let them look it from the workman's point of view—r he submitted it was important in the interest of both parties that this portion of the Government scheme should be reconsidered. The Colonial Secretary had again reminded them that the whole object of the Bill was to avoid litigation. Well, the operation of this provision was to insure that there should be at least two suits in regard to every case in which the workman sought to establish his claim to a larger measure of compensation than the Bill awarded. He had first of all to enter on arbitration. The Colonial Secretary, in his happy innocence of the working of legal procedure, seemed to be under the impression that arbitration was simpler, shorter, and cheaper than legal action. Some of them had had experience of both processes, law and arbitration, and they had been painfully driven to precisely the opposite conclusion. ["Hear, hear!"] They had learnt that arbitration was longer and more costly and was profoundly unsatisfactory. Yet they drove the workman, dissatisfied perhaps with the niggardly compensation given him, to incur the cost of this litigation by arbitration; and then, having spent his resources on the preliminary struggle, they launched him on a course of litigation in the Courts of Common Law. He submitted that from both the employer and the workman's point of view this portion of the Government scheme was open to the greatest objection. Let him remind the Committee of the assurances given on the First and Second Readings. They were told that this was an enabling scheme; that it took away nothing and gave everything; that the workman would have the option of either proceeding under the Bill or under the Employers' Liability Act or at common law. Why did not the Government have the courage to adhere to these assurances, and give the workman full power of deciding under which scheme of relief he should proceed in order to assert his remedy? He did not see why a workman should be coerced to adopt one mode of procedure, and should be prevented from selecting others, and he believed that unless the Government made some concession on this point, the beneficial operation of the Bill would be materially diminished.

MR. THOMAS BUCKNILL (Surrey, Epsom) doubted whether his hon. and learned Friend opposite had read the clause very attentively. The object of the clause, according to the Home Secretary, was to give to the workman an additional opportunity of recovering as against his employer. Where an employer had been guilty of a wilful or wrongful act or default, either by himself or by some person for whom he was responsible, the injured man would be able to avail himself of three remedies. He could proceed under this Bill or under the Employers' Liability Act of 1880, or under the common law. He did not understand how any one could argue seriously that the clause was disadvantageous to the workmen, to whose rights it certainly added something.

MR. ATHERLEY-JONES (Durham, N.W.) did not think that the Colonial Secretary intended that a workman should always have his remedy at common law, under Lord Campbell's Act, or under the Employers' Liability Act, at his option. What he understood was that a workman was only to have a remedy outside the Bill in the case of what was inartistically called "the wilful or wrongful act or default" of the employer. The provision under censure would, he feared, be inoperative and futile. What they wanted to do was to save workmen and employers the cost of litigation, and the proposal of the Government was that the workman should proceed by arbitration, but it was obvious that the workman must have a right to the services of counsel, a solicitor and witnesses. It was perfectly obvious that somebody must pay the cost of the counsel, solicitor, and witnesses. On whom was the cost to lie? It was to lie upon the unsuccessful party. In certain cases the workman would be the unsuccessful party. He would be the unsuccessful party if he failed in showing that this particular injury of which he complained did not fall within the scope of the Act. Would he then have to pay the costs of the arbitration? If so, how would he have to pay it. Would it be deducted from the amount he had to receive, or otherwise? But supposing he was successful in his contention and established that the case did not come within the Act, what had he got to do then after going through all the expense of arbitration? He had got to bring his action, and if he established that it was not an employment within the Act—which he was anxious to do because he could get a larger compensation if it was an employment outside the Act—he proceeded with his case, and there was a second trial to decide whether or not he was entitled to receive compensation under the common law or under the Statute. Why, he asked, for the sake of economy and expediency, should not the workman enjoy the same rights to litigate any question which might arise between him and his employer that he had at the present time? Supposing a workman elected to bring an action under the Employers' Liability Act or the common law. He brought the action before the Judge of the County Court, or the Judge of the High Court under Lord Campbell's Act, and the Judge of the High Court coming to the conclusion that it was not a case for compensation under Lord Campbell's Act or the Employers' Liability Act non-suited the plaintiff. He had only thereby gone through precisely the same operation as he would mutatis mutandis by going through arbitration. He had had a procedure cheaper and more expeditious before the County Court Judge in which he was unsuccessful, whereas mutatis mutandis he would have procedure before the arbitrator more expensive and protracted had a similar necessity arisen that he should go to law. It should be open to the workman to bring his action, if he had a right of action, so that the matter must be disposed of there and then and justice meted out to one or other of the parties at a cost which was very much less than it would be by the method of arbitration. He was at a loss to understand why all this machinery of arbitration had been created, the only effect of which would be that in the vast majority of cases in which accidents happened, there would be presented to the workman, hanging over him as a sort of threat in terrorem, the prospect of being dragged to arbitration. He did not wish to say a single word against the employers, who for the most part acted justly to their workmen. But in the vast majority of cases the employers would insure and it would not be the workman meeting face to face his employer. It would be the workman meeting face to face the agent of the insurance company, who would interpose every obstructive tactic and have recourse to every device which might possibly tend to intimidate the workman. He declared that under this arbitration clause the Government were simply opening the door to the insurance offices using the arbitration proceedings as a means of terrorising workmen and preventing them getting justice. For these reasons he very cordially supported the Amendment, and he was sure there was not a single workman represented in that House who would not entirely concur in the view that it was much better to leave him to his present remedy plus the advantage derived from this Bill, rather than compel him to try in every case whether or not he had a right to compensation.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said that a contrast had been drawn between the expense of the Courts and the expense of arbitration. Having had some experience of the last-named tribunal, he said that if he thought prolonged sittings and expense entailed by counsel and witnesses were likly to arise, he should be the first to agree to the suggestion which had been made. But he referred his hon. and learned Friends to the schedule of the Bill, from which it would be seen that this was not the class of arbitration which had to be considered. Who was the arbitrator to be? He was to be the County Court Judge, and it was not contemplated, if the County Court Judge could not take the case, that the usual County Court fees should be paid by the parties interested in the hearing of the case. Therefore the arbitration contemplated was intended to be something in the nature of a domestic forum which should settle matters in a cheap and expeditious manner. It was said that they ought to leave the workman in every case in the same position as he was now, and should give him the right to sue at common law under the Employers' Liability Act, or under this Bill; but one of the objects of the Bill in putting an end to litigation would be defeated altogether. ["Hear, hear!"] Their endeavour was to make it the interest of the workmen to adopt the cheapest and most expeditious way of having their compensation assessed. If some such machinery as the Bill contemplated was not adopted, workmen who thought that they could possibly get a large amount would be tempted to take the employer into Court and to frame a double claim against him. The result would be that there would be absolutely no inducement to adopt the cheaper course, and the workmen would find themselves perhaps largely in the hands of not too scrupulous legal advisers, who advised them to go into Court because they might get a remedy in some shape or other, and on the expectation that employers would have to pay the cost. The scheme of the Bill was simple. The workman said, "I do not wish to be tied to the pecuniary limits of this Bill; I think I can show that my case comes within the provisions which entitle me to a larger amount." If hon. Gentlemen said that this question also would be decided by the arbitrator, well and good; let them suggest Amendments to that effect; but if it was desired that the workman should still have a right to say, "I desire to have my damages assessed, not by the arbitrator, not by the County Court Judge, but by some one else," then it was necessary that there should be some ready means of determining whether he possessed those rights. He regarded the words as a practical means of getting the question speedily determined before further litigation were entered upon.

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS supported the Amendment, because the words if allowed to remain would not only repeal part of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, but prevent the criminal law from being put in motion against an employer in cases where he was responsible. Parliament decided 17 years ago that in certain events the employer should be liable to the workman to a much more considerable extent than under the provisions of the Bill. The Government had told the Committee that they did not deal with employers' liability under the Bill. He agreed that the questions of employers' liability and compensation were distinct matters. But by the inclusion of the words they would repeal parts of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and make it impossible for the workman in any of the events prescribed under the Employers' Liability Act to take any proceedings unless beforehand he went to an arbitrator or a Committee of employers and employed, and then, in the event of disagreement, to the County Court Judge. The Colonial Secretary said they were not attempting to deal with the punitive side of the Measure, and that if it could be shown that employers should be punished, there was no reason why they should not. If an employer, in the opinion of an employé, had been guilty of manslaughter, the criminal law could not be put in motion against him. A Commitee must first be appealed to, and if they did not decide, he must go to the County Court Judge. If the words remained in the Bill, the workman would be unable to put into force the criminal law under the Factories Act or the Coal Mines Regulation Act without the decision of this Committee, and the opinion of the County Court Judge. This diminished the remedy of the employé civilly and criminally in an important respect, and he entirely agreed with the Amendment that the remedies which already existed in favour of the workman civilly and criminally might continue to exist in his favour.

Mr. W. R. BOUSFIELD (Hackney, N.) thought the suggestion of the Attorney General showed a way out of a real difficulty and hardship under this section—that was to say, that the arbitrator should have power to give the compensation on the higher scale. If the Amendment were withdrawn, perhaps before to-morrow the Government would be able to put the hon. and learned Gentleman's suggestion into shape and the difficulty would be removed.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said that, of course, if that view met one of the difficulties he should be glad to consider it. He did not deal with the question of criminal liability, because that did not arise as the question was put from the Chair, but with that of civil liability. On the point of simplifying procedure, he would be happy to consult with the Home Secretary.

Mr. ABEL THOMAS (Carmarthen, E.) was very much in favour of the Amendment, as, having had a very large experience in cases connected with the Employers' Liability Act, he thought it would be a terrible thing to send these cases to an arbitrator instead of leaving them to the ordinary tribunals. How in the world was it to save money, to have the County Court Judge in his private room instead of in his own Court? He had never been in an arbitration in his life in which the costs were not vastly higher than those of the High Court or the County Court.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN hoped the hon. and learned Member would be willing to withdraw his Amendment upon the understanding that the Government were quite willing at a later period to consider the questions which had been raised in connection with the Amendment, but which were not determined by it. These questions were whether the words "wilful and wrongful default" were the best description of the particular kind of negligence which they wished to strike at; whether the words criminal liability were properly inserted in the clause; and whether they would, in fact, involve the decision by a County Court Judge as to whether a workman would or would not have a criminal remedy; and questions concerning the expenses of the arbitration. All these questions were open for consideration, and could be discussed at a later period, and the Government would certainly favourably view Amendments which had the object and were likely to have the result of simplifying procedure and cheapening it at the same time.

Mr. ATHERLEY-JONES asked whether, if the Amendment were withdrawn, it would be possible subsequently to move another to eliminate the arbitration clause?

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: I should like to see the Amendment first.

Mr. ASQUITH recognised the conciliatory manner in which the right hon. Gentleman had dealt with the question, and he should be disposed to advise his hon. Friend to withdraw his Amendment on the undertaking of the Government that they were going to consider the various questions which the right hon. Gentleman had mentioned. But there ought to be a clear understanding that the withdrawal was not to prejudice their right to raise the contention that the workman ought to have reserved to him as complete a right and as complete remedies against the employer in all cases of negligence as he had at present. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. HALDANE asked leave to withdraw the Amendment.

Mr. S. EVANS (Glamorgan, S.) desired to point out the difficulty in which the hon. and learned Member would find himself if the Amendment were withdrawn. If it was decided that, "as hereinafter provided," should remain, they would have limiting words in the Bill. He objected to the Amendment being withdrawn unless upon the clear understanding and undertaking of the Government that it was not their intention to prevent a workman having recourse to any of the remedies which he had now for civil damages, or to prevent him from prosecuting criminally, if he thought fit. He warned his hon. Friend not to be caught too readily by conciliatory speeches made by the Colonial Secretary.

Mr. ASQUITH said he understood that the question remained entirely open, and that the words "as hereinafter provided," would not in the least degree prejudice the question.

And, it being Midnight, the Chairman of Ways and Means left the Chair to make his Report to the House.

Committee report Progress; to sit again To-morrow.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) [EXPENSES].

Committee thereupon deferred till To-morrow.

LABOUR BUREAUX BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

POOR LAW OFFICERS' SUPERANNUATION (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday 29th June.

PARISH REGISTERS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

REGISTRATION OF PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 30th June.

CHURCH PATRONAGE TRANSFER BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 28th June.

SHOPS (EARLY CLOSING) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

TROUT FISHING CLOSE TIME (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 2nd June.

SALE OF DISTRESS AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday.

POOR LAW OFFICERS' SUPERANNUATION ACT (1896) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

TRAWLERS' LICENSING BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday.

ISLE OF MAN (CHURCH BUILDING ACTS) BILL [H.L.].

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES' JURISDICTION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

SHOP ASSISTANTS (HALF-HOLIDAY) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

MARKET GARDENERS' COMPENSATION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Read the Third time and passed.

ARCHDEACONRY OF LONDON (ADDITIONAL ENDOWMENTS) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [24th February] further adjourned till Thursday.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

EVICTED TENANTS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

COUNTY GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

House Adjourned at a Quarter after Twelve o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 26th May 1897.

COMMITTEES (ASCENSION DAY).

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) moved "That Committees do not meet to-morrow, being Ascension Day, until Two of the clock."

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) said that he must protest this year, as he did last, against this Motion, which was exceedingly unfair to those who were engaged in Committee work. The very important Committee on Fair Wages and the Government Contracts Committee sat to-morrow, but if this Motion were agreed to it would practically be a day lost, although it was very desirable that those Committees should report at the earliest possible moment. With regard to the other Committees dealing with private Bills, witnesses were brought up from the country, and if this Motion were carried the result would be that a day's expenses would be added to the already enormous cost of Private Bill procedure. He did not wish to prevent anyone who desired to do so from attending a place of worship to-morrow, but it was perfectly well known that the Motion was not really made for the purpose of enabling hon. Members to attend a place of worship. ["Oh, oh!"] Last year the Speaker had ruled out of order an Amendment which he now submitted in the form of a suggestion—namely, that any Member desiring to attend a place of worship should submit the matter to his colleagues on the Committee, who might decide not to sit on Ascension Day. He felt so strongly on the subject that he should certainly take a Division on the Motion.

Mr. W. JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.), regretted the opposition which the Motion annually met with in that House. The celebration of Ascension Day was recognised as one of the cardinal points of the Christian faith, and he regretted that anybody should be found to stand up in that House, and practically deny the Ascension of our Lord. [Loud cries of "Oh!" and "Order!"]

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member ought to withdraw that observation. [Cheers.]

Mr. JOHNSTON said that he withdrew the expression at once, and apologised to the House if he had used an expression which grated upon the feelings of any hon. Member in the least degree. He felt so strongly on this matter himself that he could not refrain from entering a protest against the opposition to this Motion, and must express his profound regret that any one in that House should be found to oppose it. ["Hear, hear!"]

The House divided—Ayes, 162; Noes, 51.—(Division List, No. 217.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) BILL.

Considered in Committee [Progress, 25th May.]

[The Chairman of Ways and Means, Mr. J. W. Lowther, in the Chair.]

Clause 1,—

LIABILITY OF CERTAIN EMPLOYERS TO WORKMEN FOR INJURIES.

(1.) If in any employment to which this Act applies personal injury by accident, arising out of and in the course of the employment, is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation in accordance with the first schedule to this Act.

(2.) Provided that:—

(a) The employer shall not be liable under this Act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed;

(b) When it is decided, as hereafter provided, that the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer or some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible nothing in this Act shall affect any liability, civil or criminal, of the employer or persons for whom he is responsible; but the employer shall not be liable to pay compensation both independently of and also under this Act, and shall not be liable to pay compensation independently of this Act, except in case of such wilful and wrongful act or default.

(3.) If any question arises as to whether the employment is one to which this Act applies, or whether the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer, or of any person for whose act or default the employer is responsible, or whether the injury was caused by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment of the workman injured, or as to the amount or duration of compensation under this Act, or other wise as to the liability for compensation under this Act, the question, if not settled by agreement, shall, subject to the provisions of the first schedule to this Act, be settled by arbitration, in accordance with the second schedule to this Act.

(4.) If the Registrar of Friendly Societies certifies that any scheme of compensation or insurance for the workmen in any employment is, on the whole, not less favourable to the workmen than the provisions of this Act, the employer may, until the certificate is revoked, contract with any of those workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this Act, and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with the scheme, but, save as aforesaid, this Act shall apply, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after the commencement of this Act.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool), said that he rose to make a statement arising out of the proceedings in Committee last night.

MR. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.) rose on a point of order. He wished to ask whether there was any question before the Committee? [Ministerial cries of "Order, order!"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: The Minister in charge of a Bill is always entitled to make a statement. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. PICKERSGILL said that the point of order he had in view was this. If the statement of the right hon. Gentleman, which was obviously of an important character, was to be made, would it not be proper that hon. Members should have an opportunity of commenting upon it, and would it not be more in order that a Motion for reporting progress should be made, and that then the right hon. Gentleman should make his statement?

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: It is a very common practice for the Minister in charge of a Bill to make a statement whenever a convenient opportunity arises.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said that he asked the leave of the Committee to propose an Amendment to Clause 1, which he believed would in effect cover the Amendment standing in the name of the hon. Member for Haddington. It had been promised at the close of the discussion last night that the Government would see how they could meet the objections which had been raised to the clause on two or three points. Those points were the use of the words "the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer," and the inclusion by the words "civil or criminal" of the possibility that the arbitrator would be able to bar the right of a workman under the Common Law or under the Employers' Liability Act 1880, to bring an action. The Government had promised to consider how they could make it clear that that was not the intention of the clause or of the Government. The intention, as he had said on the previous night, was to secure that in the case of the personal negligence of the employer himself or of those for whose act or default he was responsible, the workman should have the same remedy as he possessed under the present law. The Government now desired to make that clear, and with that object it was proposed that Sub-section (b) should read as follows:—

"When it is decided, as hereafter provided, that injury caused by the personal negligence or the wilful act of the employer or of some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible, nothing in this Act shall affect any civil liability of the employer, but in that case the amount of damages due from such employer may, at the request of the person claiming compensation, be settled by arbitration in accordance with the second schedule of this Act, or may, at the option of such person, be recovered from such employer by the same proceedings as were open to such person before the commencement of this Act."

Then came the concluding words of the sub-section,

"But the employer shall not be liable to pay compensation both independently of and also under this Act, and shall not be liable to pay compensation independently of this Act except in case of such wilful and wrongful act or default."

It was believed that these words expressed clearly the intentions of the Government, and it was hoped that they would meet to a certain extent, if not entirely, the objections raised at the close of the discussion last night.

Sir R. T. REID (Dumfries Burghs) regarded the statement as very important relative to two questions—first, as to what was to be the effect of the Bill upon the rights of the workman against the employer, and in the next place as to the choice of the tribunal. At present it was difficult to say whether the words suggested did leave absolutely unimpaired the existing rights of the workman. He desired to make it perfectly clear that not one of these rights should be in the least degree impaired or interfered with. The Amendment proposed by the hon. and learned Member for Haddingtonshire (Mr. Haldane) was a more simple method of arriving at the second point. He was completely in accord with the Home Secretary, nothing was more valuable in this Bill than the provision as to arbitration. He believed that some simple and inexpensive machinery should be provided. It struck him that the right hon. Gentleman might well deal with the next clause so as to provide that all questions of liability, whether under this Bill, the Employers' Liability Act, or the common law should be referred to arbitration.

Mr. C. A. CRIPPS (Gloucester, Stroud) said he agreed with every word said by the hon. Member for Dumfries. The effect of the Amendment would not be to send matters to arbitration but the contrary. He considered the Amendment unfortunate as opening the door for litigation, whereas he had understood that the essence of the Bill was to introduce a principle of limited liability to be ascertained by a new and easy method of procedure. By this proposal the limit of liability was taken away. He thought it right to state at once from the Government side of the House that they did not desire to open the flood-gates of litigation, which would be the effect of this Amendment. It took away the necessity of bringing matters before the arbitrator, and gave the alternative of litigation. Now, was that desired or not?

Mr. J. WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) pointed out that he had put down an Amendment to insert at the beginning of Clause 5 (Commencement of Act and Short Title) the words:—

> "All claims for compensation for accidents by workmen or their representatives against employers, whether under the Employers' Liability Act 1880, at common law or otherwise, shall be settled by arbitration in accordance with the second schedule of this Act."

He was anxious to know whether it would be in order to discuss that Amendment at the present time?

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS said the discussion at the present time ought not to go beyond the Amendment now before the Committee. He could not say that a discussion upon the Amendment which the hon. Member had down some 11 pages on would not be relevant. He would be in a better position to decide when they reached the Amendment.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir Richard Webster, Isle of Wight) assured his hon. and learned Friend the Member for Stroud that the Government had not departed in the slightest degree from the principle of the Bill. The principle of the Bill still was limited liability in all cases which were mentioned as coming under the remedy of the Bill. Last night it was pointed out that they contemplated by Sub-section (3) that the arbitrator should be entitled to determine whether or not there had been such default of the employer as justified the workman in obtaining larger damages than the limited amount the Bill would give him. It was also pointed out that the workman would of necessity be sent to another Court. He suggested that, instead of forcing the workman to go to another Court, power should be given to the arbitrator to assess the damages—nothing more than that. From both sides of the House the observation came that if the arbitrator could deal with the matter the difficulty would be removed. He would have no objection to the arbitrator dealing with all cases—["hear, hear!"]—but the Government felt that if the power to go to the County Court Judge was one the workman appreciated, they saw no reason why they should take that power away from him. All they had done was to say that, if the arbitrator found that the employer was liable for a larger amount of compensation than the limit specified in the Bill, the person claiming the compensation might then and there ask the arbitrator to fix the amount. They added the words, "or at the option of persons claiming," so that the workman might go to the same tribunal as at present. No one could suggest that they did that for the purpose of encouraging litigation. They did it with the object of providing a ready and speedy means of assessing the compensation. What was the other alteration they had made? Objection was taken to the words, "wilful or wrongful act or default of the employer," and the Home Secretary undertook to consider whether or not the meaning could be better expressed. There was to be considered the personal negligence of others besides the master. There was, for instance, the case of a company where there was a general manager or some responsible person, and accordingly they had adopted the words which were practically those of the Employers' Liability Act—namely:—

> "Personal negligence or wilful act of the employer, or of some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible."

They believed they had reserved to the workman by those words every case which would come within the Employers' Liability Act. They had not given the workman any greater rights than he had before. Personally he should not have the smallest objection to the last part of the Amendment being left out, but it did not seem to him they could oppose that without the general assent of the Committee, because they were pledged to hon. Gentlemen opposite to preserve to the workman such rights as he now had if he wished to exercise them.

Mr. H. H. ASQUITH (Fife, E.) said they were at considerable disadvantage in discussing an Amendment which they had never seen in print, and he felt sure the Government would agree that, whatever form of words was adopted, they should, on the Report stage, have an opportunity of seeing whether the intention had been correctly and technically expressed. ["Hear, hear!"] The important point now was that they should be at one as to the intention they meant to embody in the Bill, and he had some hope, after hearing the speech of the Attorney General, that they might arrive at an identity of view. He was glad to hear his hon. and learned Friend refute the construction put upon the Amendment by the hon. and learned Member for Stroud. He did not believe it was ever the intention of the Government that the remedy given by the Bill should be an exclusive remedy, and that the common law or statutory rights the workman had already, if they gave him a better remedy than that provided by the Bill, should be cut down. If the workman was to remain in possession of all the rights—he would not say remedies—which he had at present, and if the compensation provided by the Bill was an alternative right, he did not think there would be any difficulty in embodying that in proper phraseology. He went further. If the question was to be submitted in the first instance to the arbitrator, he thought it would be far better that the arbitrator should retain complete seizing of the case from beginning to end. ["Hear, hear!"] He could not see any justification for first submitting the case to the arbitrator, and then, if the arbitrator came to a particular decision, remitting the parties to litigation. ["Hear, hear!"]

The SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES (Mr. J. Chamberlain, Birmingham, W.) said he entirely accepted what the right hon. Gentleman had just said. Of course, it would be open to any Member of the Committee to criticise the wording of the proposed Amendment on the Report stage. In the meantime, he believed they had arrived at a substantial identity of view. He believed that an hon. Member opposite had suggested that they should do away with the alternatives which they had allowed to remain in the Bill. That was a very important suggestion, to which personally he was not at all unfavourable, but he assumed that what would be desired was that the Amendment now proposed should be carried, and if they found in the interval between now and the report stage that that was the general view of the House, they should then omit the latter portion of the Amendment. He could not help thinking that his hon. and learned Friend the Member for Stroud had not entirely appreciated the point in reference to which he addressed the House. They always intended that questions affecting the personal negligence of the employer should be dealt with by alternative methods. It was perfectly true that the essence of the Bill was, with regard to the vast proportion of the accidents which would come under it, that there should be no choice for either the workman or employer but to take their position under the Bill. But they always made an exception in the cases in which it was alleged that the accident was due to the personal negligence of the employer. Those were a very small proportion of the accidents, but as to that proportion they did intend that the rights of the workman should remain absolutely unimpaired. He was not only to have this new option of taking his position, without discussion, under the Bill, but he would have, if he preferred it, any of the other rights which he would have now under the Employers' Liability Act, Lord Campbell's Act, or the common law. He believed that was clearly expressed in the Amendment.

Mr. HAROLD TENNANT (Berwickshire) pointed out that under Section 82 of the Factory Act of 1878 an employer was liable, in the case of a person killed or one who suffered personal injury, to a fine not exceeding £100. Would that be touched at all by the present provision?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said it was not touched.

Sir JAMES JOICEY (Durham, Chester-le-Street) looked with some degree of alarm on the choice which was to be given to the workman either to take action under the old Act or under the present Bill so far as compensation was concerned. Those who knew how these matters were dealt with knew perfectly well that very often a workman was perfectly incompetent himself to come to a decision as to which course he should adopt. Very often he fell into the hands of a solicitor who looked more to his own interests than to those of his client, and what he was afraid of was that, if this option was given, in many cases the advice of the solicitor would be to proceed by that method which was likely to sweep the most into his own net. He would be much better pleased if all civil claims under both these Acts could be settled by arbitration. He was sure that ultimately that would be in the interests of the workmen themselves, and that it would tend to make the Bill work much more smoothly.

Mr. C. B. RENSHAW (Renfrew, W.) said he viewed with very great apprehension what had fallen from his hon. and learned Friend the Member for Stroud, and it seemed to him that this proposal was going to throw a very grave additional disability on to the employers. He thought that one great feature of this Bill was that they were going to avoid litigation and get rid of the confusion of issues. But now, as it seemed to him, an employer of labour was not only liable to go before the arbitrator, but he had also the prospect of the arbitrator turning the case back to a court of law, and then to have the whole question threshed out again. Speaking as an employer of labour, he would far rather see the possibility of alternative methods reduced as much as might be. He thought the employers of the country would wish to understand clearly and distinctly what their liability and responsibility were under the Bill.

Mr. J. WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) asked if the Amendment standing in his name on the Paper was in order?

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS said it was clearly incompetent for him to accept such an Amendment as that which the hon. Member had on the Paper, because that would be amending the common law, the Employers' Liability Act, and Lord Campbell's Act. That was out of order on this Bill.

Mr. PICKERSGILL wished to point out that the Home Secretary's Amendment dealt with two questions—the question of procedure and the question of substantive law. So far as procedure was concerned, the right hon. Gentleman's suggestion seemed to provide a feasible way out of a difficulty; but he was extremely anxious upon the second point. The Colonial Secretary said it was the intention of the Government to maintain all the existing substantive rights of the workman against the employer. But the question was whether, that being the intention of the Government, the words before them carried out that intention? He was afraid they did not. As he understood, a condition precedent to claiming under the existing law was that a workman should establish the personal negligence or wilful act of the employer or of some person for whom he was responsible. He had a great jealousy of the introduction of the adjective into Acts of Parliament. He would like to know why the word "personal" was introduced before the word "negligence." There was no such adjective in the Employers' Liability Act of 1880. He accepted it that the Government were not prepared to cut down in any way the existing rights; then let them have what they were well acquainted with, the word "negligence" pure and simple, and do not introduce the word "personal." The other words were "wilful act." He objected very strongly to the introduction of those words. As he understood a trespass was not necessarily wilful.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL explained that the reason why "wilful act" was inserted was because, in the opinion of a very competent draftsman, it was doubtful whether trespass was negligence.

MR. PICKERSGILL said there seemed to be reason in what the hon. and learned Attorney General had said. He wished to emphasise the fact that the Government had expressed their distinct intention to preserve intact the existing liabilities of the employer towards his workpeople.

*SIR ALFRED HICKMAN (Wolverhampton, W.) thought the Bill was very well as it stood. Its effect would be to discourage litigation altogether, and it was not unreasonable that if the workman was not satisfied with the generous provision made in the Bill, some difficulties might reasonably be placed in his way. But the present proposal of the Government, as he understood it, was that supposing a workman was not satisfied with the provisions of the Bill, and wished to go for an unlimited amount of compensation, he should be at liberty either to go to the ordinary courts of law or to take the decision of an arbitrator. Look at the position of the unfortunate employer. He might have claims against him not by one workman, but by a number of workmen, all under the same conditions and circumstances, which might amount to £70,000 or £80,000. He did not think any prudent man would engage in a business where he might be liable to claims of such an enormous amount, which should be submitted, without his consent, to a tribunal like an arbitrator. The proposal seemed to be monstrous, and the result would be to deter people going into a business where that was possible.

MR. ALEXANDER URE (Linlithgow) said the question had been discussed from the practising lawyer's point of view. The Committee was apt to forget that an employer's liability for negligence applied not only to the negligence of a foreman, but also to that of people placed in charge of machinery, and also to defects in works and plant. The result of any reference to statutory liability in the Bill would be this—that when an accident occurred, the workman would have his choice of two remedies. He would be entitled to go into Court with all the lamentable results hon. Members were so unanimous in deploring, instead of going to the arbitrator, as they were all agreed he ought to do. If all reference to statutory liability was left out, that misfortune, he thought, would be avoided, and no injustice would be done to the workman. Because, under the Employers' Liability Act, the amount of compensation a workman could recover was confined to an average of three years' wages; therefore, under that Statute he would not be able to recover any more compensation than he would under this Bill. Accordingly, they left the workman with a right to recover more money, but by a process that was disastrous to the employer. By leaving out all reference to statutory liability, they would preserve the principle of the Bill, which, as the Colonial Secretary had clearly explained that day, was to preserve full and large remedies to the workman against the employer where the personal liability should be laid on the employer's shoulders, but to limit his liability in all other cases. The omission of any reference to statutory liability would make clear the amended proposal of the Government, and produce a clause which, he thought, would meet with the unanimous approbation of the Committee.

MR. GEORGE WHITELEY (Stockport) said it was inconvenient to discuss the clause without having its words before them; yet, if they refrained, they practically eliminated one of the stages of the Bill as far as this particular clause was concerned. The clause was far-reaching in effect. It gave the workmen further facilities, and took away from the employer certain opportunities of appealing against a decision involving him, perhaps, in heavy damages. That was a step the House ought not to take without very serious consideration. They were all willing to facilitate the compensation of workmen, and were all desirous of reducing litigation to the smallest amount. At the same time, they had the employer to consider, and it would not do, in creating a new liability, to take away from the employer his present safeguard against being unfairly mulct in heavy damages at common law or under the Employers' Liability Act.

Mr. CRIPPS said the view which he took of the proposal before the Committee was that the Government intended to leave all the existing remedies unimpaired, and to give an alternative remedy in the Bill. If that was their intention, he protested against it, for it would open the gates to litigation instead of providing for the alternative method of arbitration. The proposal would be destructive of one of the best features of the Bill, which established one remedy only—that of arbitration, with a limited amount.

Mr. PARKER SMITH (Lanark, Partick) asked the Government to make it clear what their real meaning was. He could not understand whether they were at one with the right hon. Gentleman opposite or differed from. The Colonial Secretary just now alluded to one class of liability. Under the existing Act there were two classes in which the workman could obtain his remedy. There was the class in which the employer had been guilty of personal and direct negligence; and the provision of this Bill—a provision which, he thought, met with universal acceptance—was that the previously existing rights of the workmen should not be taken away. But there was another class, in which the workman could obtain compensation under the existing law, but in which there was no kind of moral responsibility on the employer's part. As the Bill stood, it was clear that in this class of case the remedy of the workman was taken away, for he could not proceed under the Employers' Liability Act until he had obtained the judgment of the arbitrator establishing direct personal liability. Was it the intention of the Government to continue that?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL: Certainly.

Mr. PARKER SMITH was glad to hear it, because some hon. Members opposite did not appear to understand it. The great desire of employers was to get rid of litigation. There was nothing in the world that so irritated an employer as to have to pay enormous costs, knowing that the unfortunate man injured only got the merest trifle—[hear, hear!"]—through having got into the hands of low-class lawyers' agents, who thought more of their own interests than of the interests of the workman. Scotch employers had specially suffered in this way; and he knew that in all cases where there was no direct personal responsibility, they would much prefer to have some kind of fixed payment under arbitration.

Mr. T. SHAW (Hawick Burghs) understood the Committee to be unanimous that there should be a simple and economic method of ascertaining the rights of the parties. ["Hear, hear!"] Yet that was not exactly the point they were now discussing. The point was quite a different one, for it had reference to the undertaking given by the Colonial Secretary—an undertaking which he accepted in the frank and full sense in which it was given. He understood the Government now to have absolutely pledged themselves to what he apprehended to be the sense of the House, namely, that all rights of the workmen at common law or under the Employers' Liability Act should be preserved intact and entire, there only remaining open the question as to the form in which those rights should be protected. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: The hon. Gentleman has not exactly quoted my words. What I said was that in cases of personal negligence every right the workman now enjoys will be preserved intact.

Mr. T. SHAW was glad he had interposed to make the point clear. He had the good fortune to have a copy of the Amendment, and its language was this:—

> "personal negligence or wilful act of the employer ('wilful act' might be deleted as superfluous) or some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible."

He respectfully asked what that could mean except this—that all responsibility imposed by the Employers' Liability Act or by common law, which was responsibility not founded upon personal negligence merely, but upon what he might call secondary or deputed negligence, that all this was preserved for the benefit of the workman? Did he understand that the Government really meant to limit that existing right or not? He was not putting this in a controversial spirit, as, he was sure, the Colonial Secretary would recognise. It was only that the Committee might thoroughly understand the position in which it was put by the Amendment now brought forward by the Government. His intention and that of his Friends was that the Bill could not be allowed to pass into law unless they had an undertaking, absolute, specific, and clear, that it should not be cumbered by conditions limiting the existing rights enjoyed by the workmen of this country. ["Hear, hear!"]

SIR EDWARD CLARKE (Plymouth) thought the tone adopted by the last speaker—who had said that he and his Friends were determined the Bill should not pass into law except under some conditions he had laid down—was not calculated to assist the Committee in the discussion of a question as to which a difficulty was felt on both sides of the House. ["Hear, hear!"] He agreed with the hon. Member in his desire that the Bill should deal with the difficulty in the simplest of all forms. Looking upon the Bill as being a provision by way of insurance in a large number of trades, he should like to see all the remedies that workmen in any trade had had up to the present time left absolutely untouched. ["Hear, hear!"] That was not only the simplest, but the most satisfactory way. The idea of leaving the arbitrator to say whether a man was to have compensation under this Bill or was to go on with an action at law and pursue his remedy elsewhere seemed to him inadmissible altogether, while he should have the strongest possible objection to putting provisions in the Bill which would give the arbitrator the right of dealing with cases which were not in the Bill at all, but which really had to be determined elsewhere by the law that had been established with regard to employers' liability. He thought employers in the House had been led by the hon. and learned Member for Stroud into somewhat exaggerated apprehensions in regard to this matter. What was the real case? Suppose they left the old right to a workman in these trades of suing his employer if he chose under the Employers' Liability Act. That involved litigation, and litigation had been spoken of as if it were a terror to the employer. It was really more of a terror to the working men, and as such had operated in depriving them of the actual benefits which Parliament intended they should have under the Bill of 1880. But the position would be this. Suppose a workman was injured in the course of one of these employments and it occurred to him that the accident had happened through the negligence of the employer himself or of someone for whom he was responsible. It might be suggested to him that instead of going to the arbitrator and having the compensation assessed—which he might do without any question as to how the accident occurred—he might elect to bring an action against his employer, and, if successful, might obtain a larger sum than by the assessment of compensation under the Bill. For his part, he did not believe there would be one case in ten thousand where the workman would take that course and resort to litigation on the chance of getting a larger sum. When a man was injured in the course of employment the real question was how quickly he could get the compensation. The temptation to the workman to come under the Bill to the arbitrator and get promptly assessed a sum which might be as large as any sum he might get if he went to law and adopted a different procedure, would be so great that he did not think there would be one case in ten thousand where a man who had the right to the double remedy—either under the Employers' Liability Act by litigation, or under this Bill by arbitration—would resort to litigation. Under these circumstances would it not be simpler to leave the existing remedies absolutely untouched and unqualified, providing by the Bill there should be, with regard to certain specified trades, an insurance to which the workman could appeal for prompt satisfaction for the injury he had received, which should be sufficiently ample that the temptation to embark in litigation would be removed? ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) commented on the extreme inconvenience of the Committee being called upon to deal with a matter like this without having before them the exact words on the force and effect of which the whole question turned. As he comprehended the matter it amounted to this. If the arbitrator so decided, then a man should have two sets of rights or remedies; but if the arbitrator did not so decide, he was only to have one. He said it was not fair or reasonable to ask the Committee to put in the Bill these words which it did not know, on the understanding that it was to be enabled to do something with the words on the Report stage. The present was the proper stage for dealing with the words, and if the Government were not prepared with them, let them move to report progress, and ask leave to sit again and allow hon. Members to see the words. In the interests of order and of good legislation, he declared that the matter was one which entirely depended upon detail, and the detail depended entirely on the wording, so that it was unfair to ask hon. Members to introduce a clause which they could not apprehend, not having the words before them, on some sort of an understanding that some sort of thing was to be done or might be done upon the Report stage. The clause itself seemed little less than outrageous. The arbitrator was a man of limited capacity and knowledge, and the amount of compensation he could award was strictly limited by the Bill. The arbitrator might be not a very able man; he might be an uninstructed man, he might be a layman, he might be a prejudiced person, for instance, the candidate for the county. They strictly limited the powers he was to exercise under the Bill, but when they came to this clause they gave him power unlimited, because he was to say whether a workman should or should not be able to bring an action against his employer which would involve hundreds of thousands of pounds. To hand over to such a person a power which was absolutely illimitable, and ask the Committee to assent to it, on the understanding that some further action should be taken hereafter, was unreasonable.

Mr. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee) agreed that there was undoubted force in the complaint that it was impossible to properly discuss this Amendment without having the actual words before them. He ventured to suggest to the Ministers in charge of the Bill a course which might lead them out of their present difficulty. It was possible in the Report stage to re-commit a Bill with respect to any portion of it, and he would ask the Home Secretary whether he would give an undertaking now that if this Debate stopped at the present moment he would offer no resistance to a proposal to re-commit the Bill in such a way as would enable them to discuss this proposition with full freedom and with all the words before them.

*Mr. SYDNEY GEDGE (Walsall) pointed out that by the words of this clause with the Amendment, the workman could go to the arbitrator and ask him to decide first whether the accident was caused by the personal negligence of the employer or someone for whom he was responsible, and then when this was done the workman had all his original rights, and might go to the common law or to the Act of 1880 to obtain his remedies. But surely if the workman was to have these two sets of rights so ought the employer? They were told, however, by the Attorney General, that it would not be open to the employer to defend himself in an action brought by the workman under the common law or under the Act of 1880, and to show, contrary to the opinion of the arbitrator, that the accident was not caused by his personal negligence. That question was shut out and the matter limited entirely to the damages which the workman might go for in this tribunal. Just think how that would lead to litigation. As the law now stood an unscrupulous solicitor feared to bring an action lest, after attempting the difficult and expensive task of proving the employer's negligence he should fail to get a verdict, and lose his costs. But if, without his aid, the arbitrator found negligence, the solicitor would hurry the client into an action, knowing that the question being now one of damages only, he must win and get his costs out of the employer. The arbitrator's award should be like the finding of a true Bill by a Grand Jury, and not be conclusive. It would be better still to leave the whole question to the arbitrator, with power, if he found wilful negligence, to mulct the employer in double damages.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY rose merely to say that the Government had no "felonious intent" in bringing forward this Amendment. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.] Last night they were in the presence of objections which they undertook to consider, and they now brought forward the Amendment in the clearest form they could devise. If the Committee would agree to insert the words the Government had no desire to curtail discussion at a later stage.

MR. ASQUITH reinforced the appeal of the Home Secretary. The Government had acted very fairly and properly, and for his part he regarded the right hon. Gentleman's assurance as satisfactory.

Amendment agreed to.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY moved in Paragraph (b), Sub-section (2) to omit the words "wilful and wrongful act or default," and to insert instead thereof the words "personal negligence or wilful act."

Amendment agreed to.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN said he was going to try to do again what his right hon. Friend had just accomplished, and to give effect, in an Amendment not before the Committee, to what the Government believed were the wishes of the Committee. A very considerable time was spent the previous evening in discussing whether proceedings with regard to negligence should not be bilateral—whether, if they left the employer open to heavier burdens than the Bill imposed in cases of personal negligence, they ought not to take care that the workman guilty of negligence of a gross character, by which he had put in jeopardy the lives and limbs of his fellow-workmen, should not be debarred from obtaining compensation to which otherwise he would be entitled. He gathered that the feeling of the Committee was unanimous on two points. In the first place, it was unanimous in thinking that in such cases, however exceptional they might be, it would be an act of injustice and bad policy to give compensation; and he believed it was quite as strongly felt that nothing must be done which would in any way lead to an evasion of the Act by any employer, which would introduce a complicated doctrine such as the doctrine of contributory negligence, and thereby might prevent the workman from gaining just compensation. The Government, dealing with the Amendment then on the Paper, fancied they found a solution on the Paper in the Amendment of the hon. Baronet the Member for Chester-le-Street, and the Government proposed that where a workman had wilfully and wrongfully brought about an accident by his wilful default or neglect of regulations which had been made by his employer he should not be entitled to compensation. Great objection was taken to that Amendment, and as the Debate went on it seemed to him that many objections were sustained. It seemed clear that it would probably raise questions of contributory negligence, and provide that the workman would not be entitled to compensation if he broke through a regulation which was altogether too wide. A regulation might be made with the direct intention and object of saving life. But, as a matter of fact, the regulations made were not of that character. They were comparatively trivial. At the same time a breach of them would destroy the workman's claim to compensation. That being the state of the case, and having gathered opinions from all quarters of the House, the Government now suggested an alternative Amendment, which was so short that even the Member for King's Lynn might be able to understand it—[laughter]—which was very simple, and to which, he believed, the objections of the hon. Members for Wansbeck and Durham and other hon. Members would not apply. In line 23 the Government proposed to insert the following new sub-section (c):—

> "If it is proved that the accident is solely attributable to the serious and wilful misconduct of the workman himself any compensation claimed in respect of injuries to such workman shall be disallowed."

The sub-section, it would be seen, consisted of two parts. The first defined the act which would disable the workman; the second part only said that compensation should be disallowed. The important point was, what was the disabling act on the part of the workman? In the first place, it must be an act to which the accident was solely attributable. That got rid absolutely of any question of contributory negligence. In the second place, it must be attributable to serious and wilful misconduct. A trivial breach of rules would not be taken into account. The conditions he had stated could alone prevent a workman from being entitled to compensation. He did not think it was the desire of employers that if this Bill were passed there should be any possibility of evasion of its conditions by the less reputable class of employers. He was certain that that was not the intention or object of any employer in that House, and they would therefore sympathise with the Government in their endeavour, by the very stringent terms they had used, to prevent this clause being used as an instrument of evasion. He hoped the Government had met objections on both sides of the House and that this new Amendment might be accepted. He begged to move it.

On the return of the CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, after the usual interval,

MR. JOHN BURNS (Battersea) said there was no doubt that with the object of the words all members of the Committee would practically agree. They would also agree that if it was possible by the insertion of these words to deter wilful and wrongful acts, it would be desirable to do so; but he reminded the Colonial Secretary that accidents of this kind would be singularly few, and it was doubtful whether by the insertion of the words, good though they were, more harm would not be done than good. If, however, the words were to be inserted, he thought it ought to be made absolutely clear that the provision would only apply to the workman who himself had been guilty of a wilful act, and that in no circumstances could it be applied to any workman connected with the man who brought about the accident. The objection he had to the words was that they might lead to the setting up of a number of defences to litigation by some masters, especially in the case of single accidents where death occurred and there were no witnesses. The words might also lead to a defence being set up to an accident where a man was seriously injured and a long period of insensibility, with loss of memory, ensued, and there were no witnesses for the man seriously injured, or no witness of the act after the injured man had died.

MR. HENRY SETON-KARR (St. Helens) was glad to find that the Government had so quickly fulfilled their pledge, and had inserted those words in order to meet the case of serious and wilful misconduct on the part of the workman himself. He was ready to accept the words which had received the approval of the Government. He cited the case of a workman being taken into a court of law to undergo trial for manslaughter, and at the same time claiming compensation under the Bill from the employer. In his judgment the words here inserted met the point contended for the previous day, and the Amendment was the least that could be inserted in order to meet the justice of the case.

MR. J. WILSON (Durham, Mid) maintained that the words in the Amendment were no improvement on those of the previous day. What was the grade of misconduct that made it serious? His opinion was that irritation, friction, and serious injury before the arbitrator might arise in order to define the words "serious and wilful misconduct." He therefore opposed the Amendment on the ground that it was wider than the suggested alteration of the previous day. In taking up an attitude of opposition to the new words proposed, labour Members must not be understood as condoning or trying to mitigate any offence arising out of a man's wilful misconduct. ["Hear, hear!"] They had no such view. But how many such cases occurred in the whole industrial life of the country? That was a point which needed to be inquired into and answered. If employers of labour could show a long category of cases, serious in their character and number, where accidents had occurred owing to the man's wilful misconduct, he, for one, speaking for himself, would offer no demur whatever. All he desired was that no innocent man should be prevented from getting the benefits which this Bill gave him, and that nothing should be placed in the way of his getting his compensation speedily.

MR. G. W. WOLFF (Belfast, E.) said that, after all, it was the employers who would have to pay. He was rather surprised at the opposition which the clause had met with from hon. Gentlemen who represented the workman and labour in general. The cases under this clause would be very few, and although it might be a matter of expediency to include even such cases, still they involved such an absolute piece of injustice to the employer that he hoped the idea would not be carried into a legislative enactment. He could not see that the clause would open the door to any amount of litigation. He did not know much about the coal trade, but, speaking of the industry with which he was connected, he asserted that a serious accident, resulting in disablement for life or in death, happening without any one seeing it, was of the rarest possible occurrence. He fully approved the Amendment of the clause proposed, and he hoped the Government would be firm in passing it.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, replying to questions put by the hon. Member for Battersea, said there was not the slightest fear that other workmen who were injured by the wilful misconduct of a fellow-workman would be debarred from claiming compensation. The words related entirely to a claim in respect of injury to the workman guilty of serious and wilful misconduct. The hon. Member for Durham appeared to have overlooked the fact that the onus of proof of misconduct would rest with the master. As to defining "serious" misconduct, he submitted that nothing would be more absurd and injurious than to attempt in this section to say what was serious and what was not. But what was meant was this—that the jury should have their attention directed to the consideration that it was not a mere technical breaking of a rule which should deprive a man of compensation, but that it should be serious misconduct in an important matter. The words, he reminded the Committee, were "solely attributable" to the wilful and serious misconduct, etc., which removed altogether the suggestion that contributory negligence could be brought up.

MR. FENWICK, referring to the remark of the hon. Member for Belfast about justice to the employer, said justice had been already cast to the winds by the promoters of this Bill. [Cries of "Oh!"] They were making the employer liable in compensation in cases where he was neither technically nor morally responsible for the accident caused. Therefore they might disabuse their minds of all considerations of justice. [Ministerial laughter.] He did not agree with the hon. Member for Battersea that the words were an improvement upon the Amendment under consideration yesterday. Would it be contended, if a workman failed to put in sufficient timber to prevent the roof from subsiding, and an accident ensued, that he had misconducted himself, and therefore contributed to his own injury? He feared that, in a case like that, it would be urged by the employer in defence, and perhaps held, that the workman, having contributed to his own accident, was not entitled to compensation under the Bill. The Government would be well advised not to introduce limiting words of this kind into the Bill. He agreed that the number of accidents which could be proved to be attributable to the misconduct of the workman would be very small, but the words would lead to much litigation and perhaps even to strikes. No working man's representative would defend on its merits the claim of a workman to receive compensation for injuries brought on by his own misconduct; but he opposed these words on the ground of expediency alone. He regretted that the Government had accepted the principle of the Amendment without waiting to hear what the labour representatives had to say. Only that day at a very large and representative conference of miners from all parts of Great Britain a Resolution was passed protesting against the acceptance of this Amendment.

MR. LEES KNOWLES (Salford, W.) said that it was an extraordinary contention on the part of the hon. Member that the Committee should disabuse their minds of the principle of justice in this matter. But if this very reasonable Amendment were not accepted by the representatives of the working classes the Committee might indeed disabuse their minds of the principle of justice, for the Bill would be more one-sided than ever. It had been decided that the workman was to be placed in no worse position by any negligence of his employer, and the converse of that provision was only fair.

MR. R. B. HALDANE (Haddington) said that there were two considerations which must be weighed one against the other. As a general principle no one could deny that the workman ought to have no claim in respect of an accident brought about by his own misconduct. But, on the other hand, there was the fear that the defence which this Amendment would enable the employer to set up might lead to the frequent miscarriage of justice. The great majority of employers would wish to act fairly; but they would not always be their own masters. The insurance companies behind them would be bound to use every opportunity of setting up a defence to a claim; and what was easier than to suggest that an accident, the cause of which was not indisputable, resulted from the workman's misconduct? This was not a Bill to penalise the employer, but was a Bill under which the employer took upon himself the business of insuring the workman against injury. The common-sense way, therefore, was to proceed on the principles of the insurance companies, which found it most convenient to pay small claims for fires without inquiring too curiously into the cause of the fire. The balance of convenience under this Bill was that compensation should be as complete as possible in as many cases as possible. There were not many cases where accidents were caused by the wilful misconduct of the workman, and if to provide for such cases was to risk the denial of just claims it was better to keep the Bill as the Government originally intended it to be. The Government had acted generously on many points, but if they accepted the Amendment it would be a little like going back on the fundamental principle of the Bill.

*Sir E. CLARKE said that the principle of the hon. and learned Member was in favour of the Amendment. The Bill was to provide insurance against accidents. Where the accident was due to the neglect of the employer the Committee had withdrawn from him any protection against the larger liability. If a workman by his own serious default caused injury to himself, that injury could not be said to be an accident at all. It would be a distinct violation of equity to call upon the employer to compensate such an injury. The hon. Member for Wansbeck had complained that the representatives of the working men had not had an opportunity of expressing their views, and the speech of the hon. Member showed how little they would have contributed to the discussion if they had had the opportunity. [Laughter.] It was idle to suppose that litigation would be increased by the Amendment. No question could be raised until the man came before the arbitrator and claimed compensation, when it might be pointed out that it was entirely his own doing, and not an accident at all. The Government had arrived at a form of words which seemed to be as perfect an expression of the general opinion of the House as could be devised, and he therefore hoped they would stand by it.

Mr. THOMAS BURT (Morpeth) thought that the hon. and learned Member for Plymouth had done an injustice unintentionally to his hon. Friends. Their complaint was not that they had no opportunity of speaking, for as a matter of fact they did speak, but that his right hon. Friend the Colonial Secretary on Monday night accepted an Amendment before they, the representaives of workmen, had expressed their views upon it. TheAmendment now before the House was in his opinion just. [Ministerial cheers.] But his right hon. Friend the Colonial Secretary, in a speech on Monday night, with the terseness and precision of which he was a master, put the case admirably in a few sentences; and the right hon. Gentleman himself recognised that, while justice was on one side, it might be in the interest of both employer and workmen to act on the principle of expediency. His hon. Friend the Member for Mid Durham had described it as worse than the Amendment of yesterday. He did not think it was. He thought the Government had taken great pains, indeed, to guard against opening the door too wide. But his objection was against opening the door at all, and leaving it ajar, because it would be pushed forward —["hear, hear!"]—and considering that one of the advantages of the Bill was the avoidance of litigation, he believed that both employers and workmen would in the end be benefited by not accepting the principle of the Amendment. Therefore he should certainly vote against the Amendment if a Division were taken.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said he had just a word to say in reply to the admirable speech of his hon. Friend the Member for Morpeth, which exhibited all those characteristics of fair-mindedness and generosity that had made his hon. Friend one of the most popular Members of the House. ["Hear, hear!"] His hon. Friend complained that on a previous occasion he had hastily accepted an Amendment without having heard the opinions of representatives of working-class constituencies on the subject. He pleaded guilty. The real fact was that he was not then aware of the strong objections which those hon. Gentlemen took to the proposal; and he rose to accept the Amendment in the hope of shortening the Debate. He could only apologise and express his regret for the mistake, for which the Government and himself had already suffered. [Laughter.] With reference to the Amendment, he thought that justice required that some such provision should be inserted in the Bill. The Government had guarded it by saying that the accident must be solely attributable to the workman, and must also be due to serious and wilful misconduct. Under these circumstances it was evident that the objections to the Amendment and the fears which it had aroused were so improbable of realisation, that he could not help thinking that his hon. Friend the Member for Morpeth, who was at all times and in all circumstances an advocate of justice, would admit that the Government were entitled to ask for the support of the House.

*MR. MARK OLDROYD (Dewsbury) felt that the insertion of those words would lead to the very unsatisfactory working of the Measure; and in the interest of the broad and equitable settlement of the question of compensation for accidents he was anxious that the best characteristics of the Bill should be preserved in their integrity. By far the largest number of accidents in textile factories were due to the cleaning of dangerous machinery when in motion. This was forbidden by the Factory Acts and by all masters, managers, and foremen, but it was done every hour of the day in hundreds of factories. It was certain that, in the case of an accident arising in these circumstances, the insurance company would put forward the plea that the accident was due to "serious and wilful misconduct," inasmuch as it arose out of a breach of the factory laws by which employers as well as workmen were bound. It had been argued that these cases of serious and wilful misconduct would be few in number, but as far as the textile trades were concerned he submitted they would not be few in number. A large proportion of the accidents in those trades arose from the action of the workmen who were thus contravening the Factory Acts. He thought also that it was scarcely in accordance with the facts to say that cases where evidence would not be procurable would be very few. In the textile industries a great deal of work was done by workmen when standing between the different machines where no one could see them, and many accidents happened to workmen when they were not in view of their fellow workmen. This was not a question which would affect colliery owners in the case of disasters in which a large number of men were injured, as the colliery owner in such cases would still be responsible. This Amendment would only relieve them from responsibility in the case of the one man by whom the accident was caused. But if the Amendment was adopted, injustice would be perpetrated in a great many cases, because it would be impossible to prevent the raising of the defence that serious and wilful misconduct had taken place. Very often the energetic, persevering, and strenuous workman would be the victim of his own enterprise, and would fail to recover the compensation which the less enterprising workman would secure. Although the Government had shown every disposition to secure what was called abstract justice, yet if the Amendment were adopted it would be liable to very great abuses which would far more than counterbalance any occasional justice which would be done. He hoped, therefore, the Government would not adhere to the Amendment.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.) said he quite understood the importance of the discussion in which they were engaged, but the matter had been discussed at considerable length, and he thought it must be felt on both sides that the Committee was ripe for a decision. ["Hear, hear!"]

Sir F. MAPPIN (York, W.R., Hallamshire) trusted that the Committee would reject the Amendment. The hon. Member, who was indistinctly heard, was understood to say that the Amendment would not be satisfactory not only in regard to railway companies but in regard to other large employers of labour in the country.

Question put, "That those words be there inserted."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 233; Noes, 123.—(Division List—No. 218—appended.)

AYES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. F.
Allhusen, Augustus Henry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Arnold, Alfred
Ashmead-Bartlett, Sir Ellis
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Baillie, James E. B. (Inverness)
Bainbridge, Emerson
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour, Rt. Hn. A.J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, Rt. Hn Gerald W (Leeds)
Barry, A. H. Smith- (Hunts.)
Barry, Francis Tress (Windsor)
Bartley, George C. T.
Barton, Dunbar Plunket
Beach, Rt. Hn. Sir M.H. (Bristol)
Bill, Charles
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bolitho, Thomas Bedford
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith-
Bowles, Capt. H. F. (Middlesex)
Bowles, T. Gibson (King'sLynn)
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Butcher, John George
Bucknill, Thomas Townsend
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm.)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Clarke, Sir Edw. (Plymouth)
Cochrane, Hn. Thos. H. A. E.
Coddington, Sir William
Coghill, Douglas Harry
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Sir John Chas. Ready
Compton, Lord Alwyne (Beds.)
Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
Cotton-Jodrell, Col. Edw. T.D.
Cox, Robert
Cranborne, Viscount
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Curzon, Rt. Hn. G. N. (Lanc. S. W
Curzon, Viscount (Bucks.)
Dalbiac, Major Philip Hugh Dalkeith, Earl of Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Davenport, W. Bromley-
Davies, M. Vaughan- (Cardigan)
Denny, Colonel
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Douglas, Rt. Hn. A. Akers-
Drage, Geoffrey
Drucker, A.
Duncombe, Hn. Hubert V.
Dyke, Rt. Hn. Sir Wm. Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn Edward
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J (Manc'r)
Finch, George H.
Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir R. U. Penrose
Flannery, Fortescue
Fletcher, Sir Henry
Folkestone, Viscount
Forster, Henry William
Forwood, Rt. Hn. Sir Arthur B.
Foster, Colonel (Lancaster)
Fowler, Matthew (Durham)
Fry, Lewis
Galloway, William Johnson
Garfit, William
Gedge, Sydney
Goldsworthy, Major-General
Gordon, John Edward
Gorst, Rt. Hn. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Rt. Hn. G. J. (St. G'rg's
Goschen, George J. (Sussex)
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Green, Walford D. (Wednesb'ry)
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury)
Greville, Captain
Gunter, Colonel
Halsey, Thomas Frederick
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord Geo.
Hanbury, Rt. Hn. Robert Wm.
Hanson, Sir Reginald
Hardy, Laurence
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Hayne, Rt. Hn. Chas, Seale-
Heath, James
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Hermon-Hodge, Robt. Trotter
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Hill, Rt. Hn. Lord Arthur (Down)
Hill, Sir Edw. Stock (Bristol)
Hoare, Edw. Brodie (Hampstead)
Hobhouse, Henry
Holland, Hon. Lionel Raleigh
Hopkinson, Alfred
Hornby, William Henry
Horniman, Frederick John
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Howard, Joseph
Howell, William Tudor
Hozier, James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutchinson, Capt. G.W. Grice-
Hutton, John (Yorks, N.R.)
Jebb, Richard Claverhouse
Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
Jenkin, Sir John Jones
Johnson-Ferguson, Jabez Edw.
Johnston, William (Belfast)
Johnstone, John H. (Sussex)
Joicey, Sir James
Kenny, William
Kenrick, William
Kenyon, James
Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
Kimber, Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Lees
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverp'l.)
Lawson, John Grant (Yorks)
Lecky, William Edward H.
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Leighton, Stanley
Lloyd-George, David
Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A.R. (Essex)
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col Chas. W. (Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hn. Walter (Liverpool)
Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
Lowles, John
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lubbock, Rt. Hon. Sir John
Maclure, John William
McIver, Sir Lewis
McKillop, James
Malcolm, Ian
Maple, Sir John Blundell
Mellor, Colonel (Lancashire)
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monk, Charles James
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
More, Robert Jasper
Morley, Rt. Hn. John (Montrose)
Morrell, George Herbert

Mount, William George
Murray, RtHn.A.Graham(Bute
Murray, Chas. J. (Coventry)
Myers, William Henry
Newdigate, Francis Alexander
Nicol, Donald Ninian
O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens
Palmer, Sir Chas. M. (Durham)
Parkes, Ebenezer
Pearson, Sir Weetman D.
Pease, Arthur (Darlington)
Pease, Sir Joseph W. (Durham)
Pender, James
Phillpotts, Captain Arthur
Plunkett, Hon. Horace Curzon
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pryce-Jones, Edward
Rasch, Major Frederic Carne
Renshaw, Charles Bine
Richardson, Thomas
Rickett, J. Compton
Ridley, Rt. Hn. Sir Matthew W.
Ritchie, Rt. Hn. Chas. Thomson
Robinson, Brooke
Russell, Gen. F.S. Cheltenham)
Russell, Sir George (Berksh.)
Rutherford, John
Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
Seely, Charles Hilton
Seton-Karr, Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Smith, Abel (Herts)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Smith, James Parker (Lanarks.)
Spencer, Ernest
Stanley, Lord (Lancs.)
Stanley, Edw. Jas. (Somerset)
Stanley, Henry M. (Lambeth)
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Strachey, Edward
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
Sutherland, Sir Thomas
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Thorburn, Walter
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Wm. Edw. Murray
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Ure, Alexander
Waring, Col. Thomas
Warkworth, Lord
Warr, Augustus Frederick
Webster, Sir R. E. (Isle of Wight)
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon-
Wharton, John Lloyd
Whiteley, George (Stockport)
Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L.)
William, Joseph Powell- (Birm.)
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wilson, John (Govan)
Wilson-Todd, Wm. H. (Yorks.)
Wodehouse, Edmond R. (Bath)
Wolff, Gustav Wilhelm
Wyndham, George
Wyndham-Quin, Major W. H.
Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy
Younger, William

TELLERS FOR THE AYES, Sir William Walrond and Mr. Anstruther.

NOES.

Acland, Rt. Hon. A. H. Dyke
Asquith, Rt. Hn. Herb. Henry
Atherley-Jones, L.
Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Baker, Sir John
Balfour, Rt. Hn. J. Blair (Clackm)
Barlow, John Emmott
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Bethell, Commander
Billson, Alfred
Birrell, Augustine
Blake, Edward
Brigg, John
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Burns, John
Burt, Thomas
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Sir Chas. (Glasgow)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Channing, Francis Allston
Clark, Dr. G. B. (Caithness-sh.)
Colville, John
Commins, Andrew
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crombie, John William
Curran, Thomas B. (Donegal)
Daly, James
Dalziel, James Henry
Davitt, Michael
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Dillon, John
Doogan, P. C.
Doughty, George
Dunn, Sir William
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Ellis, Thos. Edw. (Merionethsh.)
Evans, Sir Francis H. (South'ton)
Farrell, James P. (Cavan, W.)
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Gladstone, Rt. Hn. Herbert John
Gourley, Sir Edwd. Temperley
Haldane, Richard Burdon
Harrison, Charles
Harwood, George
Hedderwick, Thos. Charles H.
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Chas. H.
Holburn, J. G.
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Jacoby, James Alfred
Jones, David Brynmor (Swansea)
Jones, Wm. (Carnarvonshire)
Jordan, Jeremiah
Kinloch, Sir John Geo. Smyth
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Langley, Batty
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cumb'land)
Leng, Sir John
Lockwood, Sir Frank (York)
Luttrell, Hugh Fownes
Macaleese, Daniel
McArthur, William
McEwan, William
M'Hugh, E. (Armagh, S.)
M'Hugh, Patrick A. (Leitrim)
McKenna, Reginald
McLeod, John
Mappin, Sir Frederick Thorpe
Molloy, Bernard Charles
Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Mundella, Rt. Hn. Anthony John
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Connor, James (Wicklow, W.)
O'Kelly, James
Oldroyd, Mark
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, Alfred E. (Cleveland)
Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
Pickard, Benjamin
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Pinkerton, John
Priestley, Briggs (Yorks.)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Roche, Hn. James (East Kerry)
Roche, John (East Galway)
Samuel, J. (Stockton-on-Tees)
Schwann, Charles E.
Shaw, Charles Edw. (Stafford)
Sinclair, Capt. John (Forfarshire)
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Souttar, Robinson
Spicer, Albert
Stanhope, Hon. Philip J.
Stuart, James (Shoreditch)
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Tanner, Charles Kearns
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, David Alfred (Merthyr)
Tully, Jasper
Wallace, Robert (Edinburgh)
Wallace, Robert (Perth)
Walton, John Lawson
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Wayman, Thomas
Wedderburn, Sir William
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, John Carvell (Notts.)
Wilson, Fredk. W. (Norfolk)
Wilson, Henry J. (York, W.R.)
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Woodall, William
Woodhouse, Sir J.T. (Hudrsfld.)
Woods, Samuel
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE NOES, Mr. Fenwick and Mr. William Abraham (Rhondda).

*MR. RENSHAW (Renfrew, W.) wished to move an Amendment, in order to put the question whether the arbitrator was to have power, when the facts were brought before him, to decide whether the workman claiming was to go to a court of law to obtain his remedy, and whether, if the workman lost his case in the court, he was to be still entitled to go again to the arbitrator. Hon. Members had expressed a desire to prevent litigation as far as possible, but it seemed to him that unless this point was made clear, an employer of labour might be called upon to defend two actions where it might be possible to have only one.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said the query of his hon. Friend was a very natural one. The first question was whether the arbitrator was to have power to decide that there was such a state of circumstances that a man could have a greater remedy than the compensation under the Bill. As matters now stood a workman had the right to go either before the arbitrator or to the Court. It might possibly be necessary to insert some words to prevent the cost of a double litigation. His impression was that the proceedings taken must be final and conclusive for all parties, but he would take care there was no possibility of double proceedings being taken.

MR. J. L. WALTON (Leeds, S.) said he would be glad to know the view of the Attorney General with regard to a position which, it seemed to him, must necessarily be created under the operation of the first words of the clause. As he read the clause, a court of law was debarred from deciding whether the Act did or did not apply to an action which was brought before it. An engineer employed by a colliery company and receiving £1,000 or £1,500, might be injured, and might seek compensation on a larger scale than that provided by the Bill. He would possibly be advised he had an action at common law. He might take action and go through all the usual ramifications of pleading. When the case came before a Judge and jury the Judge might find there was a question whether the Act applied or not. The costly proceedings would be avoided, and the plaintiff forced back to the arbitrator to have the preliminary question determined. He would suggest that words should be struck out so that any competent Court should be entitled to decide whether or not the Act did or did not apply to the case brought under its notice.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL asked what were the words the hon. and learned Gentleman suggested should be struck out?

MR. WALTON: "If any question arises whether employment is one to which this Act applies."

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Those words have been struck out.

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY moved in Sub-section (3) to leave out the words "wilful or wrongful act or default" and to insert "personal negligence or wilful act," explaining that the Amendment was consequential upon what had been previously decided by the Committee.

Amendment agreed to.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL proposed another consequential Amendment, namely, to insert in Sub-section (3) after the words "injured," the following words:—

"or whether the accident was solely attributable to the serious and wilful misconduct of the workman in respect of whose injuries compensation is claimed."

Amendment agreed to.

*MR. RENSHAW moved after the words last added, to insert the words,

"or whether loss or damage has resulted to the dependants from the death of the workman."

He desired to have it made clear that the arbitrator was to consider when he was arriving at his award whether or not the dependants were entitled to claim. In the first schedule the expression "dependants" was defined as—

> "such members of the workmen's family as are entitled to damages in cases under the Fatal Accidents Act 1846"; and under that Act, which, by the way, did not apply to Scotland, grandfather, grandmother, father, mother, stepfather, stepmother, and stepchildren were regarded as dependants. What he thought ought to be made clear was that compensation ought only to be given to those who had really and truly suffered loss or damage. Supposing a father was killed, it ought not to be in the power of the arbitrator to award damages to a son who was in full employment, and who was not really dependant upon his father. While at the present moment good employers did not grudge showing every consideration to those dependants who were really dependant upon an individual who met his death in the course of his employment, he thought there ought not to be, through the operation of this Bill, a suggestion that compensation was to be paid to individuals who really and truly suffered no loss or damage. The question was one of importance, and he thought it would reassure employers if they were perfectly certain that the arbitrator would have the whole question in his discretion.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said no doubt it would have to be considered, when they came to the definition of dependants in the Schedule, whether the words "must have suffered pecuniary damage" must be the limit. He would suggest that it would be better that the discussion should be taken on paragraph 3 of the Schedule.

*MR. RENSHAW said it seemed to him that in this part of the Bill there was the power of giving to the arbitrator a discretion in this matter. If they waited until they came to the Schedule it seemed to him they would possibly be met with the argument that they had given the arbitrator no power to deal with the matter.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN said that could not be. Paragraph (3) of the Schedule said that any question as to who was a dependant or as to the amount payable to each dependant should be settled by the arbitrator. Therefore they had only got to define "dependants" in the paragraph previous to prevent any question arising out of it.

*MR. J. B. BALFOUR (Clackmannan and Kinross) said that there was a difference in the law of England and the law of Scotland in regard to the persons who had a right of action against an employer in respect of the death of a workman, and that if any definition was put in here it should be without prejudice to the existing rules of Scotch law on that subject.

*MR. RENSHAW said it seemed to him that the third sub-section of the schedule failed in doing what he suggested.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN said he did not say that the schedule did it now. He was only suggesting that that was the proper place to raise the question whether or not it should be done.

MR. HOPKINSON said it appeared to him that his hon. Friend was right in his contention. They were enumerating here the issues which the arbitrator had got to determine, and it appeared to him better to enumerate them all here.

*MR. J. B. BALFOUR said he understood that the provision as to arbitration was not to arm the arbitrator with the power to determine the legal question who should fall under the class, but rather the question of fact whether certain particular persons did fall under the class, which should be defined by the law.

MR. SETON-KARR asked whether it would be competent for them to introduce into the third clause of the schedule the point, not whether certain persons were or were not dependants, but whether such persons had suffered loss.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL rose to point out that not only could that course be taken but that it was the right place to take it. The proper way was, when they came to discuss the meaning of the third paragraph of the schedule, to move an Amendment that dependants should mean such members of a workman's family as had sustained pecuniary damage. There was no doubt that then that question could be properly raised. It was very inconvenient to prejudge in this section the question whether or not the arbitrator should have power to decide whether loss or damage had resulted to dependants before they determined whether that should be the governing condition or who were to be dependants under the Bill.

SIR ROBERT REID pointed out that if his words were included now it would not make it obligatory upon the arbitrator to require proof of loss or damage in the least. All it would do would be to add another to the number of questions which were enumerated as being appropriate for consideration by the arbitrator. In his judgment none of these questions were in the least degree necessary. It would be sufficient to say that all questions arising as to liability or amount under this Act should be referred to the arbitrator.

MR. GRANT LAWSON (York, N.R., Thirsk) said the question raised by his hon. Friend's Amendment was just one of the questions which the Bill as it stood did refer to the arbitrator. One of the questions was as to the amount of compensation under this Act, and the amount of the compensation under the Act would depend upon the amount of damage suffered.

MR. J. WILSON (Durham, Mid) said that if he understood the Amendment aright it would restrict the operation of the Bill very much, because, where a man was killed except the dependants showed that they had suffered pecuniary loss by his death, the sum held out in the schedule—this death legacy of £150 or £300 or any sum between—would not be paid.

*MR. RENSHAW said the hon. Member was quite right in his interpretation of the Amendment, but in view of what had fallen from the Attorney General, who, he understood, would bring forward words dealing with this question when they reached that portion of the schedule, he would ask leave to withdraw the Amendment.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said he was not aware that he had given such a promise. What he intended to say was that, if it was the opinion of the Committee that the compensation to dependants should be paid only to those dependants who could show that they had sustained pecuniary damage, then at the proper time it would be necessary to deal with that opinion in the second schedule. He did not pledge himself or the Government on the matter.

MR. ASQUITH hoped the hon. and learned Gentleman would not pledge himself either.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. REGINALD McKENNA (Monmouth, N.) moved in Sub-section (3) after the word "agreement" to insert the words "and any question as to whether the employment is one to which this Act applies shall."

MR. WALTON said he opposed the insertion of these words for the reasons he had already given. The question whether the Act applied or not was an initial question which was outside the scope of the questions connected with the Bill, and that question, he submitted, was one which any legal tribunal ought to be entitled to decide when the matter was judicially brought into the Court.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL thought there was a point here which required to be dealt with, and it was only fair to say that his attention was called to it by his hon. Friend the Member for Oldham. But he did not think the remedy which the hon. Member suggested was the right one. He thought it was quite clear when he assented a little while ago to the Amendment, that these words must come in, for this reason, that they could not exclude this question from the jurisdiction of the arbitrator. It was quite clear that there might be cases in which it would be necessary for the arbitrator to decide it. What he could assure the hon. Member was this. Possibly a question might arise in an action at law brought by a man who was mistaken as to his rights. There were two courses which might be adopted, and he was bound to say he did not think it unreasonable that when a man elected going to law under such circumstances, the penalty should fall on himself. But there was another course that would not be so hard; that was to say, if an exceptional case arose of an action being improperly brought, the Court should have power to decide the question as though it had been an arbitration under the Act. He would consider the point, if the hon. Member would allow him, between this and a later stage of the Bill, especially as the remedy suggested by the hon. Member for Oldham was that if a mistake should be made any Court should have power to deal with that exceptional case. He thought it was quite plain that these words must be re-inserted, but they must consider what was to happen if and where a mistake arose as to the form of litigation.

Sir ROBERT REID said that he was not going to press the Attorney General to deal with this matter finally at present, after his appeal for time to consider it. But he could not conceive the necessity for inserting the words, because they had already stated not only a large number of questions to be left to the arbitrator, but he was also to decide whether there was any liability to compensation under this Act. Now, supposing the arbitrator had before him this fact, that the employment was not an employment within the scope of the Act, how on earth could he refrain from deciding that there was no liability under the Act? But supposing the question arose in another case, for example in the High Court, was it really intended that litigation arising in the High Court or the County Court, under the Employers' Liability Act should be interrupted, and there should be a remission of this matter to the arbitrator? Replying to an observation of the Attorney General which was not audible in the Gallery, Sir R. Reid said he would not occupy the time of the Committee further, but he must say that when a Bill—without making use of any observation of an unduly critical character—was presented in this form, it was not unreasonable to comment upon it, and he hoped the Attorney General would not resent suggestions provoked by the character of the Bill.

Mr. CRIPPS urged that the door must not be opened to the workman to take a wrong course of procedure, in order to get compensation in another way than was contemplated by the general principle of the Bill.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. J. WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) moved to insert, as a new sub-section, the words:—

"(4.) Proceedings for the recovery under this Act of compensation for an injury shall not be maintainable unless notice that injury has been sustained is given within six weeks and an arbitration is commenced within sx months from the occurrence of the accident causing the injury, or in case of death within twelve months from the time of death. Provided always that in case of death the want of such notice shall be no bar to the maintenance of such proceedings if the arbitrator shall be of opinion that there was reasonable excuse for such want of notice. The notice shall be served in the manner provided by the Employers' Liability Act 1880, section seven."

In moving this Amendment, he wished once again to express what he expressed on the First and Second Reading of the Bill, namely, his sincere desire to assist in passing the Measure. He cordially approved the principle of the Bill. But he had also said that it certainly required some important alterations. He trusted the Government would recognise that employers like himself—and there were many in the House—had no desire to withstand the principle of the Bill, but they wished to make it a workable and a harmonious Bill. It was workmen who were to call the tune, but it was the employers who would have to pay the piper. Well, they wished to have the tune somewhat soft, harmonious, and pleasing. They wished to avoid friction. [A laugh.] Well, that had been the great argument, that they were not to have more litigation, or that the litigation was to be reduced to the minimum. He hoped that was their intention, and it was their (the employers) desire to assist them in realising it. He had framed his Amendment with that object, and he thought it would be admitted on both sides of the House that it was an Amendment which did justice to both employers and employed. Speaking on behalf of a mining constituency, from which he had been returned largely by the votes of the mining employés, they all thought that the Amendment was required. The Bill fixed no term for giving notice of claim or action, and it was a great and a serious omission. The Employers' Liability Act required notice, and he did not think any hon. Member could resist the contention that some notice at all events should be given, and he thought the term set out in his Amendment was a reasonable one. He trusted, from the remarks which fell from the Attorney General last night, that the Government would favourably consider his Amendment.

Mr. URE hoped the Government would not consent to the Amendment just proposed. If there was one serious defect in the Employers' Liability Act of 1880 it was the requirement that notice of claim should be given. It had been found in the great majority of cases—and he was speaking from long experience—to be quite useless. No accident could occur without its being known to everyone concerned, and to require notice of the accident was hopelessly futile. On the other hand, no time limit ought to be raised in the way of a workman making a claim or bringing his action. Depend upon it, self-interest would in every instance induce the workmen to take steps at the earliest possible moment and no inconvenience had ever been felt in securing that sufficient evidence on both sides should be available. The notice clauses, in the experience of those closely acquainted with the working of the Act of 1880, had proved a great injustice to workmen, and had resulted in no corresponding advantage to the employer.

MR. W. J. GALLOWAY (Manchester, S.W.) supported the Amendment. There was no argument against it in what the hon. Member who had just sat down had said. Surely, if no accident occurred without its being known, there could be no hardship in asking that the employer should have notice.

MR. URE: My contention was that the requirement of notice was futile.

MR. GALLOWAY: Surely, if the hon. Member suggests that notice is futile, it cannot work hardship on the workman. He will forgive me if I cannot see it in the same light as he does.

MR. URE said his contention was that notice was futile because it was unnecessary.

MR. GALLOWAY: If notice is unnecessary, surely I am not wrong in contending that there can be no hardship in its being given. They were putting on the employer a responsibility which some of them thought very heavy and grievous indeed; and surely they had a right to ask that they should know at some time in their lives when their responsibility for a particular accident would cease. It was a small pittance they were asking, when they asked that they should at least know the extent of their liability. If he thought his Amendment would work any hardship to the workman, or prevent for one moment any just claim being substantiated, he would not submit the Amendment. They were told that justice and equity were not to be found in the Bill; but surely, even on the ground of expediency, which seemed to be the great argument used in favour of the Bill, they might well ask that the employer should be protected in this small way.

MR. ASQUITH observed that they spent a considerable time in discussing this matter the previous day, when he understood the Government to say they intended at some later stage to introduce some provision to the effect that the delivery of a notice of the accident within a prescribed time should not be made a condition precedent to a claim for compensation. That being so, he could not see any justification for again going over a matter which had already been discussed and as to which he understood the Government had come to a final decision.

MR. LEES KNOWLES said he thought the proposal with regard to the notice a reasonable one. As this appeared to be a Bill chiefly affecting mining industries, he would like to call attention to a rule which appeared in the book of rules of an accident relief society connected with his own district, and which was worked mainly by the working men themselves:—

> "Rule 20. Reporting Injury. Any workman on being hurt must report the injury to the head banksman and also to the steward as soon as possible and before leaving the premises, or bring sufficient evidence from the colliery of his injury."

Surely if such a rule was considered reasonable by the workmen, the Committee might also adopt that view. The main object of requiring notice of the accident to be given was that evidence might immediately be collected of the way in which the accident was caused, whereas if a long time was allowed to elapse before notice was given all traces of the cause of the accident might long ago have been swept away.

Mr. J. M. PAULTON (Durham, Bishop Auckland) opposed the Amendment. There were, he said, a great many cases in which the operation of such a clause as this would be injurious to the workmen. Take the case of a fall of the roof in a mine. A workman might have received some spinal injury, but not have given notice of it at the time, thinking that by continuing at his work he might work off the effects of the accident, the full force of which would not develop till long afterwards. If men were compelled to give notice of an accident within a specified time they would feel bound, in order to safeguard themselves, to give notice at once, even in those cases where they had received an even slighter injury than they at first imagined, and which they would soon have worked off. The matter was a small and trifling one, and he hoped the Committee would not spend further time over it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN could not agree with the hon. Member that this was a small matter, nor yet was it unimportant. On the contrary, he regarded it as one well worthy of consideration and although at the present moment there appeared to be a considerable difference between the two sides of the House, he hoped that in the course of the discussion they might arrive at some common agreement in reference to it. He thought his right hon. Friend opposite somewhat misunderstood the position of the Government, because he seemed to have assumed, from something that was said when this matter was under discussion, that the Government had expressed themselves as opposed to requiring any notice either of the accident or of the claim, and that, therefore, they might be expected to be hostile to the principle of the Amendment. [Mr. Asquith: "As a condition precedent!"] That was not the position taken by the Government. As to the notice of claim, they undertook to give further consideration to the matter and see if they could not meet what appeared to be a reasonable demand; and as regarded the question of notice of the accident, to which they attached less importance, they said they would consider it at the same time, and they might possibly find some means of dealing with that also. He considered, therefore, that as far as the Government were concerned, they were entitled to say they still had an open mind on the subject, and were not pledged against the consideration of an Amendment which, he thought it must be admitted, was at the first sight, at any rate, extremely plausible. He would go so far as to say he should consider it to be more than that, if it were not for the fact that they had behind them the experience of the Employers' Liability Act, in which almost precisely the same words occurred, and where, undoubtedly, the clause had not been found to work altogether satisfactorily. ["Hear, hear!"] It had led to a great deal of irritation and litigation, and he doubted very much whether the employers or the workmen would express themselves as satisfied with the results of this clause, so far as their experience of the Employers' Liability Act had gone. On the other hand, surely the object of everybody should be to see that the persons who enjoyed the benefits of this Act should be deserving of them, and it was as much the interest of the workmen that the benefits of an Act of this kind should not go to malingerers or persons putting forward fraudulent claims as it could be of any Member of that House. ["Hear, hear!"] Undoubtedly, if notice of the accident was indefinitely delayed, and, above all, the claim was indefinitely delayed, there was much more room for a fraudulent claim than there would be if it was possible to give notice of the claim immediately. That, he believed, was admitted. On the other hand, it must be equally admitted that there were cases in which notice could not very easily be given, and where a claim could not be made for a considerable time afterwards. Take the case of a fall of a roof in a mine, in which a man was injured, but in which evil consequences were not developed until long afterwards, either in connection with the spine or brain. These were, therefore, cases in which the claim could not be made at the moment of the accident. There was no reason, however, in the case suggested, why notice should not be given of the accident, and all the information concerning it might be in possession both of the person who might subsequently have to claim compensation and the person who might have to resist such a claim. All he should ask for would be notice of the accident, and if that were given that would be sufficient as regarded the question of notice. The question whether injury had been sustained would arise when the claim was advanced. With regard to the claim, the Amendment proposed that that need not be commenced within six months from the occurrence of the accident in the case of injury, or in the case of death within 12 months.

MR. ASQUITH was understood to say that his objection was not merely to the notice of injury, but to the notice of accident, and he thought the right hon. Gentleman had agreed that it was not necessary for the protection of the employer that notice of the accident should be given. When it was necessary, no doubt the claim should be made within a reasonable period.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN had admitted that in the opinion of the Government the question of the notice of the accident was a matter of less importance, because in the great majority of cases the knowledge of the accident would come to the employer or his representative at the same time. Although he did not think it was of the same importance as notice of the claim, yet on the other hand he did not think there could be much objection in requiring, with proper safeguards, that notice of the accident should be given, especially when, as in this Amendment, they provided that the arbitrator might relieve the claimant of the condition if he found there was a reasonable excuse.

MR. ASQUITH: That is in the case of death.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN begged the Committee not to consider that he was asking for any more than the principle of the Amendment. He agreed that if they accepted the Amendment, it would require to be further amended, and one Amendment should be that the proviso should apply to all cases of injury, and should not be confined, as it was in the Employers' Liability Act and in this Amendment, to cases of death. There might be many cases of accident which did not result in death, but in which claims might be bonâ fide delayed for a considerable period; and, if the arbitrator was satisfied that there had been reasonable cause in that case as well as in cases of death, he should be allowed to take notice of it. The Government might accept the principle of the Amendment, but he suggested that his hon. Friend should abandon reference to notice of injury or accident and confine himself to notice of claim, the Amendment to read:—

> "Proceedings for the recovery under this Act of compensation for injury shall not be maintainable unless the claim is made within six months of the occurrence of the accident causing the injury, provided always that in every case want of such notice shall be no bar to subsequent proceedings if the arbitrator shall be of opinion that there was reasonable excuse."

If this alteration were consented to, the Amendment would be worthy of acceptance by the House.

MR. J. WILSON (Durham) considered the Amendment unnecessary, as notice would be given of every accident, and a claim made a long time before the six months expired. Accidents often seemed trivial at first, but subsequently developed serious complications which incapacitated a man for life. Because an accident seemed trivial, and a man, therefore, did not give notice of action for compensation, was he to lose his right of action?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN said the proposal he had made would not be open to the hon. Member's objection. He would read how the Amendment would stand if his own suggestions were accepted:—

> "Proceedings for the recovery under this Act of compensation for an injury shall not be maintainable unless notice of the claim is given within six months from the occurrence of the accident causing the injury, or, in case of death, within twelve months of the time of death, provided always that the want of such notice shall be no bar to the maintenance of such proceedings if the arbitrator be of opinion that there was reasonable excuse for want of notice."

If an accident to a workman had been trivial, no notice of it need be given. He would have to make his claim within six months, and in a case apparently trivial at first, he would do so if the effects of the accident made themselves known before the expiry of six months. If a longer period elapsed before notice, he would be able to argue that he had had reasonable excuse.

Mr. W. E. M. TOMLINSON (Preston) suggested that there should be a direction in the Bill that notice of the accident should be given, but that the Bill should not state specifically what would be the consequences of not giving notice. The arbitrator might be left to inquire whether notice had been given, and, if it had not, he might draw his own inferences.

Sir R. REID said there were many statutes under which notice of action was required to be given, but it was a bad policy to require notice of action, and he was opposed to it in principle. Notice of claim was here made a condition precedent, and if it was not given, the workman's right to compensation might be set aside if the arbitrator thought there was not reasonable excuse. The true test was whether the employer had been prejudiced in his defence by the absence of notice. If the arbitrator thought he had not been, was it fair to allow a technical point to prevail against the claim of the workman. He suggested that a provision in the Employers' Liability Act of 1880 (which afforded a precedent) should be adopted, and that the words should be:—

> "Provided always that the want of such notice shall not be any bar to the maintenance of such proceedings, unless the arbitrator considers the employer is prejudiced in his defence by the absence of such notice, and the omission to give such notice was with the intention of misleading."

Sir J. JOICEY was very much surprised that there should be any strong objection to the just demand on the part of the employer for notice of an accident. He failed to see that any case could arise in which it would not be prejudicial to the employer if notice were not given. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not want to prejudice the workman in any degree in regard to his claim, but the employers wanted some notice by means of which they could verify the accident. He was really surprised that any fair-minded man could object to a reasonable notice. It was most unjust and unreasonable that no notice should be given, and he was sure that if he were to appeal to any body of workmen in the country there would be a sufficient number of fair-minded men among them to agree to giving the employer fair notice. Every benefit society and every insurance company required a notice of this sort. Why, then, should such a reasonable demand on the part of the employers be refused? ["Hear, hear!"]

*Mr. ROBERT ASCROFT (Oldham) said that the notice under the Employers' Liability Act was unsatisfactory in its form and required lawyers to construe it. The time within which it had to be given was at present six weeks. That length of time was considered by the workmen far too short, and within the last few weeks he had had the opportunity of handing to the Secretary for the Colonies a resolution passed by the representatives of 200,000 operatives in favour of an extension of time for notice from three to six months. He would suggest to the right hon. Gentleman that he might alter his proposed Amendment by providing for notice within six months, action within 12 months, and, in the case of death, action within 12 months of the date of death. He thought that would get rid of a very difficult position.

Colonel DENNY (Kilmarnock Burghs) denied that any man on his side of the House desired to prejudice the workman in any way. In all their friendly society rules provision was made for notice, and if it did not prejudice them in connection with friendly societies, why should it prejudice them in this case? ["Hear, hear!"] He would make an offer on behalf of the employers, and that was that whatever was the best notice of accident under any friendly society's rules, they would be content with. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said he hoped a decision would be come to before half-past five.

Mr. J. WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) said he was quite willing to withdraw his Amendment so far as it was necessary to give effect to the intention of the right hon. Gentleman.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I move to leave out from the word "notice" down to "commence," in the third line, in order to insert after the word "notice" the words "of the claim is given."

*Mr. RENSHAW said he wished to point out that one of the great difficulties with regard to this question of notice, from the employer's point of view, was, not that the employers wished to have notice in order to prevent the workman substantiating his claim, but to be perfectly certain that the injury was met with in the employment of a particular employer. If no notice whatever was to be given, a workman, who had been off work for a time sufficient to entitle him to get compensation, might go to other employment, and, meeting with an injury in it, might make a claim on his previous employer. He submitted that some words ought to be inserted to the effect that notice should be given that the injury had been sustained before the workman entered such second employment. The words the right hon. Gentleman proposed might then be inserted.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) hoped that this question would not be rushed through. ["Hear, hear!"] There were a number of propositions before the House, all of which required consideration, and, as it was within a few minutes of half-past five, he suggested that the Government might now report Progress, in order to give time for consideration. ["Hear, hear!"]

Whereupon Motion made, and Question, "That the Chairman do report Progress, and ask leave to sit again"—[Mr. Chamberlain]—put, and agreed to.

Committee report Progress; to sit again To-morrow.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) [EXPENSES].

Committee thereupon deferred till To-morrow.

BENEFICES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

EDUCATION ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday 29th June.

BENEFICES (No. 2) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

COTTON CLOTH AND OTHER FACTORIES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

PRISON-MADE GOODS (IMPORTATION) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 30th June.

ALIENS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday 30th June.

WORKING MEN'S DWELLINGS BILL [H.L.].

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

MILITIA BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday 29th June.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (COUNTY COUNCIL CLERKS) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

GROUND GAME ACT (EXTENSION TO COPYHOLDERS) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

JURORS' EXPENSES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

CEMETERIES RATING BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

COMMONS REGULATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

RIVERS POLLUTION PREVENTION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

POLICE PENSIONS AND SERVICE BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

POLICE APPOINTMENT AND PROMOTION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

SMALLER DWELLINGS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 3rd June.

SUPPLY.

Committee deferred till Friday.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till Friday.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Select Committee [24th March] further adjourned till Monday next.

LABOUR BUREAUX BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

PARISH REGISTERS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

EVICTED TENANTS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

COUNTY GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

MONEY LENDING.

Ordered, That Mr. Lloyd-George and Mr. A. K. Loyd be added to the Select Committee on Money Lending.—(Sir William Walrond.)

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT (1880) AMENDMENT BILL.

MR. J. G. BUTCHER (York) asked for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and explained that the object of his Measure was to abolish the doctrine of common employment.

Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Butcher, Sir Edward Clarke, Sir William Houldsworth, and Mr. Ascroft; presented accordingly, and Read the First time; to be read a Second time upon Monday next, and to be printed.—[Bill 270.]

House Adjourned at Twenty Minutes before Six o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 27th May 1897.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

RAILWAY CLEARING HOUSE BILL [H.L.].

Mr. W. E. M. TOMLINSON (Preston) moved:—

> "That it be an Instruction of the Committee that they insert provisions requiring the promoters to publish for the use of traders, on such terms and conditions as the Board of Trade may direct, any sectional or other railway maps constructed for the Railway Clearing House, indicating the different lines of railway and the distances along the same."

He said he did not think that it would be desirable for him upon that occasion to go at any length into the history of the Railway Clearing House. It was originally formed as a voluntary association in 1842. It performed the necessary work of breaking up traffic which went over more than one line of railway and apportioned the proceeds arising from it among the various companies interested. The Railway Clearing House formed one of the links that bound the great railway companies together for their united advantage. It was inevitable that as time went on the great railway companies would be fused into one body, and he had no objection to offer to the Railway Clearing House upon that ground. For some years past Airey's railway maps, showing in miles and chains the distance between the different stations and junctions on the railways of Great Britain, published by Mr. John Airey of the Railway Clearing House and certified by the railway companies, had been in general use by traders and had been procurable by them through the booksellers. In 1896 complaints were made by the traders that they could not obtain these maps, and in answer to a question asked by the hon. Member for Denbigh Burghs, the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade, said:—

> "I am informed that Mr. Airey, clerk in the Railway Clearing House, has been allowed to compile, publish, and sell various maps relating to the railways of the United Kingdom, that in 1894 it was considered by the Committee of the Clearing House undesirable that such business should be carried on by a clerk without control, and the Committee therefore, by mutual arrangement, took over from Mr. Airey his plant and paid him a considerable sum for the loss of his business, which is now the property of the Clearing House. I am also informed that the Committee do not propose in the future to publish for public use any maps beyond those of England and Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. If this decision of the Committee is adhered to, I shall regret the loss of information which is of decided advantage to the public, for although the distances between stations are continually subject to variation, by the alteration of a junction or the opening of new routes, stations, or junctions, and although distance tables are prepared by all companies in compliance with their obligations, the advantage to the public of such practical and intelligible maps as have hitherto been published by Mr. Airey must be considerable. I have no control, however, over the decision of the Clearing House Committee."

The withdrawal of the maps, which were the only ones of the kind obtainable by the public, and which had been of the greatest possible assistance to traders, rendered it impossible for them to ascertain, in the case of through traffic, which had to pass over more than one line of railway, whether the railway companies concerned were or were not exceeding their powers of charging, and also made it impossible, without having reference to the companies' rate books, to ascertain the real distances between any two stations or places. The railway companies did not set out the distance travelled over the system of each company, which might be a party to a through route, and the rate-books frequently omitted even the total distance from the place where the book was kept to the point of destination on another company's line. In July, 1896, he himself had asked a question on the subject in that House to which the President of the Board of Trade had replied as follows:—

> "I am in communication with the Railway Association with reference to this matter, and it is engaging their attention at the present time. The Statute (i.e. the section of the Regulation of Railways Act 1873, which requires the railway companies to keep for public inspection at each of their stations a book showing inter alia the distance from that station to any place to which any rate is charged), to which my hon. friend refers imposes a penalty for a contravention of Section 14, and it is, of course, open to any person aggrieved to institute proceedings. I cannot compel the companies to do more in the way of publication of distances than the law demands. The distance tables referred to are compiled by the companies for their own use, but they are, no doubt, valuable in assisting the companies to compute the distances for insertion in their rate books."

In January last, in reply to a further question asked by him the President of the Board of Trade gave the following answer:—

> "I regret that the correspondence with the Railways Companies' Association has not led to any satisfactory result. The association hold that the question of the publication of these maps is one for the consideration of the Committee of the Railway Clearing House. I cannot hold out any hopes that the Government will undertake the preparation of such maps."

The maps had been provided by the Railway Clearing House, and had been drawn up from information supplied by the railway companies, who now sought to minimise the value of them. Although under the Act of 1894 every railway company was under an obligation to give information as to its distances and rates, it was not bound to give the distances which goods had to be carried over other lines. These maps supplied the traders, in a convenient and ready form, with the information they desired on the subject, and, moreover, enabled them to select the best route for their traffic. This question did not come upon the railway companies as a new one, and, although they had not seen their way to concede this extremely reasonable request, he hoped that, now that the opportunity presented itself, the companies would reconsider their decision. Personally he had no desire to act in any hostile way towards the railway companies, because he believed that their interests and those of the traders were identical. He did not see what the companies could gain by pursuing a policy of mystery and concealment in the matter. He begged to move the Instruction which stood in his name. ["Hear, hear!"]

*MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.), in seconding the Motion, said that it appeared to him that the Railway Clearing House could hardly be considered merely as a railway companies' institution. It partook in some degree of the character of a national institution, and had to deal with interests other than those of the railway companies. The course taken by the companies in suppressing these maps was wholly inconsistent with the recent policy of railway legislation. When the Act of 1894, was passed, an Amendment was expressly inserted to require the companies to keep for inspection all the rate books of 1892, which would enable traders to prove their case and check new demands. The withdrawal of these maps was impolitic, and would provoke further action as to railway charges. ["Hear!"]

MR. J. W. MACLURE (Lancashire, Stretford) said that this Bill had been promoted by the committee of the Railway Clearing House merely for the purpose of enabling them to carry on their own business more conveniently, and the Measure had nothing whatever to do with the public. In these circumstances he regarded the Instruction as irrelevant to the objects of the Bill. Every railway company might refuse to give the information upon which the maps were based, and, therefore, it would be absurd for a Select Committee of that House to require the Railway Clearing House to furnish these maps when they had no power to compel the railway companies to give them the necessary information for preparing them. Moreover, the maps were frequently most misleading, owing to the changes that were daily taking place through the construction of new lines and new junctions. He hoped that the House would not accept the Motion of the hon. and learned Gentleman. ["Hear, hear!"]

SIR JOSEPH PEASE (Durham, Barnard Castle), while of opinion that railway companies ought not to withhold any necessary information from traders, desired to point out to the hon. and learned Member for Preston that this Bill had nothing whatever to do with railway rates. It was simply a Measure for the incorporation of the Railway Clearing House. He agreed with the hon. Member who had just sat down that these maps were most misleading. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. C. T. RITCHIE, Croydon) said that, while he was in entire sympathy with the hon. and learned Gentleman who had moved the Instruction, he thought that the House ought not to call upon the Railway Clearing House to do that which was impossible for them to perform. ["Hear, hear!"] There was nothing in the Instruction which would enable the Railway Clearing House to call upon the railway companies to furnish them with the necessary information for drawing up these maps. The only result of this Instruction being carried would be that the promoters would withdraw the Bill, which had been introduced for the wise and proper object of providing for the incorporation of the Railway Clearing House. It was all very well for the hon. Gentleman to say that this information was of no real service to the traders, and that it might be of a misleading character. Perhaps the traders might be allowed to judge. ["Hear, hear!"] The railway companies had formed their opinion, as they had a right to, but the traders had formed an entirely different view. They thought that the information would be of a valuable character, and that it might guide them in their operations and put some kind of check on the charges of the railway companies. He thought they might dismiss the argument that the information was not of a character that would be valuable to the trading community. Believing, as the Board of Trade did, that this information was of value, they had made more than one effort to induce the companies to publish it, but he regretted to say that up to now the information had not been given. He hoped that the companies would very seriously consider the speech of his hon. Friend and the speech of the hon. Gentleman opposite, which he had no doubt could be supported from all parts of the House. ["Hear, hear!"] He thought if the companies did not give the information, they would be doing themselves a great disservice. The interest of the railway companies was to render all the assistance they could to trade. In doing that they were serving their own interests. Under all the circumstances, he hoped his hon. Friend would not persist in pressing this Instruction. It was an Instruction which could not possibly be worked. He thought time ought to be given to the companies to reconsider the matter between now and the Third Reading. If the railway companies still declined, his hon. Friend could take such action as he thought proper on the Third Reading of the Bill.

*MR. MELLOR (York, W.R., Sowerby) was afraid that if the hon. Gentleman gave way to this suggestion, he might lose his hold upon the Bill and the machinery to carry out what he desired to promote. There was hardly a Member of the House who had not had a letter from his constituents on this matter. He believed that throughout the country there was a widespread belief that these maps were very valuable. It was urged that the maps might be misleading, but surely the traders could judge for themselves. ["Hear, hear!"] When the railway companies came to that House to ask for Parliamentary powers, that House might well say, "You are placing yourselves in a very different position from what you were in, and, while we grant you these powers, you must do something for the public in return." ["Hear, hear!"] What was the reason why the companies would not give them these maps and this information? Strong pressure had been put on the companies to give it. At one time the information had been given. Then it was said these maps were incorrect. But if the people thought they could get information out of them they should have them. What was the real grievance? The railway companies were advised that if the maps were published, the Assessment Committees would get them as well as the traders, and that the position as to rating would be altered. He did not believe that a company got any benefit from refusing information such as this. The best plan was to be open with the public, the traders, and the Assessment Committees. It was said that if this Instruction were carried there was no machinery to compel the companies to give this information, but if the Instruction were carried, the machinery would soon be provided.

MR. CHARLES MURDOCH (Reading) said he thought it was a new departure to pass any such Instruction with regard to a private Bill. The railway companies would gladly give any information that might be required. [Cries of "No, no!" and an HON. MEMBER: "They don't!"] They were now asking the House to do that with regard to the railway companies which they would not do with regard to other associations. They would not attempt it, for instance, with regard to the banking companies, and he objected to a penal clause being inserted in these Bills. It was hard that documents which were copyright should be, under compulsion, given to the public.

MR. JAMES BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.) was glad to observe that the hon. Member who had just sat down had not adopted an attitude of absolute hostility. He understood him to say that the railway companies would not be unwilling to do what they could. Under these circumstances, the House would be unwilling to force on an Instruction which might involve the loss of the Bill. The President of the Board of Trade had suggested that the matter might stand over until the Third Reading, and with that view he begged to move the adjournment of the Debate. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. TOMLINSON said that the course suggested by the right hon. Gentleman would be entirely satisfactory to him. He did not desire to press hardly upon the railway companies, but was quite willing to give them time to consider in what form they could give the information.

Mr. R. W. PERKS (Lincolnshire, Louth) trusted the hon. Member for Preston would carry the Instruction to a Division, so that there might be some security that the Railway Clearing House would, in consideration of the large powers they sought, perform that duty to the trading community which they ought to have performed long ago.

Mr. SPEAKER said that the hon. Gentleman must confine his remarks to the question of the adjournment of the Debate.

Mr. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.) asked the President of the Board of Trade whether, in the event of an amicable arrangement not being arrived at, he would, on the Third Reading, support an Instruction such as that they had been discussing?

Mr. RITCHIE did not think it was right he should be asked to give such an undertaking, or that it was right he should give it. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not desire that the railway companies should consider this question under any threat at all. He had expressed the opinion of the Board of Trade in terms which could not be misunderstood, and thought he had said quite sufficient.

Sir JOSEPH PEASE said that he would endeavour, with his hon. Friend the Member for Reading (Mr. Murdoch), to bring the subject fairly before the Railway Association, of which he was a member. His own view was that if the trader wanted this information, he was perfectly welcome to it. It could only be given, however, by the united railway companies publishing an authentic map, such as was described by the hon. Gentleman who seconded the Instruction.

Debate adjourned till Monday 28th June.

SUCCESSION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred from Tomorrow till Wednesday 30th June.

QUESTIONS.

INHABITED HOUSE DUTY (SCOTLAND).

Sir THOMAS SUTHERLAND (Greenock): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate if he is aware that inhabited house duty is now, for the first time since the passing of the Lunacy (Scotland) Act of 1857, being imposed on the parochial asylum at Smithston, which is under the management of the Greenock Parish Council; and will he explain the reason of this action of the revenue officials, which is opposed to the usual practice of the Government, in exempting from inhabited house duty asylums which are occupied by paupers and maintained by a parish rate?

*The LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. Graham Murray, Buteshire): I understand that an appeal against this assessment was heard before the District Commissioners of Taxes on April 29, and that the Commissioners decided that the case was governed by the decision of the Court of Session in the case of Musgrave v. Dundee Royal Lunatic Asylum. They therefore confirmed the assessment, and, as the Parish Council have not demanded a case for the opinion of the Court, the decision of the Commissioners must stand until another opportunity occurs of reviewing it.

POSTAL FACILITIES (CO. CAVAN).

Mr. JAMES DALY (Monaghan, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that a petition was sent in December last from the inhabitants of the townlands of Coravaddy, Carnabosh, Libru, Mullaghboy, Tullygally, Rathkenny, and Drumrene, in the County of Cavan, requesting the establishment of a post office at the house of Mr. Brown, Rathkenny; whether he is aware that the nearest money or postal order office to Rathkenny is Coothill, which is four miles away; and whether he will take steps to carry out the wishes of the petitioners in this case?

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston): The Postmaster General received the petition referred to. The nearest post office to Rathkenny where money order and postal order business can be transacted is apparently Lisnageer, which is about 3½ miles distant. The inquiry made on receipt of the petition showed that the number of letters for the district was insufficient to justify the establishment of a post office at Rathkenny, but the question of extending the free delivery of letters in the locality is about to be taken up, and the hon. Member shall be informed of the result.

NATIONAL SCHOOL MONITORS (IRELAND).

MR. DALY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can say if monitors in National Schools are paid as much salary as monitors in Model Schools; and, if not, can he state the reason?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): Monitors in ordinary National Schools are paid according to the same scale of salary as those in Model Schools.

TUSKAR LIGHT.

MR. GEOFFREY DRAGE (Derby): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether, in view of the great importance attached by the shipping trade to the prompt reporting of vessels which pass the Tuskar Light and Signal, he can see his way to make temporary arrangements with the Post Office under which permission can be given for the use of the existing telephone for signalling purposes?

MR. RITCHIE: Until the general question of the desirability of allowing lighthouses to be used for the purposes of commercial signalling has been decided, I do not think that I should be justified in sanctioning the use of the telephone at any particular lighthouse for such purpose.

DISCHARGE OF BRITISH SEAMEN ABROAD.

SIR GEORGE BADEN-POWELL (Liverpool, Kirkdale): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the Report of the Departmental Committee on the Discharge of British Seamen abroad has yet been sent in, and whether it will be presented to Parliament; whether the scheme for the transmission of seamen's wages experimentally tried at Dunkerque, has already been extended to four other Continental ports; and whether the present excessive charges on seamen's money orders can be abolished, seeing that the fees for discharges of seamen more than cover the cost of extra office work entailed on the Consulates by the new system?

MR. RITCHIE: I have not yet received the Report to which my hon. Friend refers, but I understand that it will be sent in shortly, and it shall in due course be presented to Parliament. The transmission scheme for seamen's wages, experimentally tried at Dunkerque, has been extended to three other Continental ports—viz., to Antwerp, Hamburg, and Rotterdam. The question whether it is desirable to abolish the fee charged for sending home seamen's wages is receiving consideration.

EQUIVALENT GRANT (SCOTLAND).

SIR LEWIS McIVER (Edinburgh, W.): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, having regard to the fact that the principle of Equivalent Grants has apparently been abandoned in respect of Ireland, he is in a position to state what annual sum will in future be allocated to Scotland in correspondence with the relief of rates recently announced for Ireland?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.): It is at least premature to assume that the principle of Equivalent Grants has been abandoned, because it is proposed to accompany a great reform in Irish local government with a much larger relief from rates than Ireland would have been entitled to on the basis of Equivalent Grants. But if that principle had been abandoned, it would follow that the necessities of Scottish agricultural ratepayers would have to be considered rather than any question of corresponding amount in grants, and these necessities were met to the extent of five-eighths of the occupiers' rate of the Act of last Session. In any case, no question can arise during the current financial year.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES.

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether cyder, perry, and British wines, containing up to 15 per cent. of alcohol, can be manufactured and sold without duty being paid on them; whether any statistics exist of the quantity of these beverages manufactured; and whether they are chiefly made in England; and if so, whether any compensating immunity from duty can be granted to the native stimulants produced in Ireland and Scotland?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: There is no duty on the manufacture of the liquors mentioned by the hon. Member, but a licence duty has to be paid on the sale of them by retail. There are no recent statistics as to the production of them; but it was found, after an exhaustive enquiry which was made in 1887, that about one-sixth of the whole annual production of British wines came from Ireland, and it was estimated that about the same amount came from Scotland.

MR. LOUGH said the right hon. Gentleman had not answered the question as to the percentage of alcohol. Was it a fact that alcohol up to 15 per cent. was free of duty?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: I cannot answer that, but I should not think it is. These liquors contain very varying amounts of alcohol; some very little indeed.

BALLINAMORE CANAL.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury if he can state the names and addresses of the Trustees of the Ballinamore Canal; whether there is any public office in which they meet or where they can be seen; and, can he state in what form they can be approached, i.e. whether by private letter or by memorial presented through a legal channel?

MR. HANBURY: The canal is under two bodies of trustees, one for navigation and one for drainage purposes. I assume that the hon. member refers to the navigation trustees, who are appointed as vacancies occur, by the Grand Juries of the adjoining counties. The Roscommon Grand Jury have refused to appoint any trustees at all, but the Grand Juries of Cavan, Fermanagh, and Leitrim have appointed representatives, and I have here a list of their names and addresses which I shall be happy to give to the hon. Member. I am not aware whether they have any office, but the secretary to the trustees is Mr. B. St. George Harrison, Carrick-on-Shannon, and I suppose he can be approached by private letter.

ARMY SERVICE RECORD (JOSEPH DENISTON).

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office if he can explain why Joseph Deniston, formerly of the 10th Foot, who recently applied for a copy of his record of service to the War Office, was not supplied with the record along with such other copies of discharge as are granted to soldiers leaving the service?

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, W.): It would be contrary to the Queen's regulations to issue to discharged soldiers duplicates or copies of their discharge documents.

LABOURERS (IRELAND) ACTS.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he has any further statement to make concerning the repeated applications of William M'Donnell, of Caldragh, in the union of Longford, to have a cottage erected for him under the Labourers (Ireland) Acts?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member's previous question of the 5th February on this subject, except to say that, so far as the Local Government Board are aware, the Guardians do not at present propose to make a new scheme for the erection of additional cottages in the Union.

CYCLES (CARRIAGE BY RAIL).

MR. JAMES BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will communicate with the leading railway companies on the subject of the carriage by rail of bicycles, with the view of inducing them to convey bicycles at lower rates than the present very high rates, to provide upon some trains vans or compartments of vans fitted for the conveyance of bicycles, and to supply at the left luggage offices of the large stations a better provision than now exists for the reception and safe keeping of cycles?

MR. RITCHIE: I shall be happy to communicate the points referred to in the right hon. Member's Question to the Railway Companies' Association, and ask that they may receive favourable consideration.

LONGFORD UNION WORKHOUSE.

MR. DALY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the attention of the Local Government Board has been drawn to the strong protests of the medical officers of the Longford Union against the practice of having the sick poor conveyed to the workhouse hospital in the antiquated van at present in use: and whether, as within the last few months verdicts have been returned by two coroners' juries in two inquests that the deaths were directly attributable to the patients having been forced into this van, and the Board of Guardians have persistently refused to provide a suitable van, the Local Government Board intend to take any action in the matter?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The attention of the Local Government Board has been drawn to the unsuitability of the ambulances referred to, and they have frequently urged the Guardians to provide suitable conveyances. In the case of two recent inquests, the coroner's jury found that death was accelerated by removal to the Workhouse Infirmary in the existing ambulances. The Guardians, on the 15th inst., authorised the Medical Officers to employ a carriage or other suitable conveyance when they considered it advisable, and with a view to determine if this order will meet with the necessities of the case, the Local Government Board have instructed their Inspector to ascertain whether suitable vehicles are available for this purpose.

ANTIQUITIES (IRELAND).

CAPTAIN DONELAN (Cork, E.): On behalf of the hon. Member for South Donegal (Mr. J. G. SWIFT MACNEILL), I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education (1) whether he is aware that the Council of the Royal Society of Antiquaries, Ireland, offered to the Science and Art Department some Irish antiquities which had formed part of a small museum belonging to the Society located in the city of Kilkenny, and that the Director of the Science and Art Museum, Dublin, wrote in reply that the acceptance of the offer must be postponed for a short time, awaiting the appointment of a superintendent of Irish antiquities in the Dublin Museum; (2) whether he will explain why on the 10th of the same month an official letter from the Science and Art Department, South Kensington, informed Alderman Murphy, of Kilkenny, that they had no intention of accepting the collection; and (3) whether communication to this effect has been made to the Royal Society of Antiquaries, Ireland; if not, what reason can be given for this treatment of a proposal apparently approved of a week before by the Committee of Council on Education.

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): The offer mentioned in paragraph 1 was made, and was still under consideration of the Science and Art Department, when they received a memorial, largely signed, from the secretary of the Kilkenny museum, protesting very strongly against the proposal. Under these circumstances the Department declined the offer; but, through an oversight their decision was not officially communicated to the Royal Society of Antiquaries.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS (LONDON).

CAPTAIN DONELAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for South Donegal, I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been directed to the report of the proceedings in Scotland Yard on the 14th May, when Sir Edward Bradford, the Commissioner of Police, received a deputation from the Humanitarian League to lay before him a resolution passed at a public meeting in St. Martin's Town Hall, on the 5th May, urging that the London Police should be instructed to act more promptly and on their own initiative when they witness any ill-usage of horses by flogging or overloading in the streets, and to the remark of the Commissioner of Police with reference to the contrast drawn between the action of the Metropolitan and City Police in cases of ill-usage of horses, that the City Police are able to act more vigorously because they have a much smaller area to control, and convictions may be more easily obtained before Aldermen of City Courts; and, whether he will take any steps to assimilate the practice of the Metropolitan to that of the City police in checking cruelty to animals in the streets?

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool): I have communicated with the Commissioner, and he informs me that he had what he thought was a private conversation with three gentlemen representing this league; but that he cannot accept the report alluded to in the Question as an accurate account of what passed, and that he certainly did not intend to convey that the practice of the City Police in the matter differs from that of the Metropolitan Police. I am fully confident that the Commissioner will do everything in his power to further the humane objects which the league has at heart.

CAPTAIN DONELAN asked whether it was not the duty of the police to see that gravel was used on the streets in slippery weather?

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY was not aware that such was the duty of the police; he imagined it was the duty of those who had charge of the roads.

QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE.

SIR JOHN LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the Diamond Jubilee Day in Scotland, so far as the Post Office is concerned, will be celebrated on the same lines as in England, and the duties confined to one delivery and one dispatch of letters?

Captain Donelan.

MR. HANBURY: Yes, Sir; as far as possible.

MR. M. J. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in commemoration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, now approaching, he would consider the propriety of advising the release of the treason-felony prisoners now still in prison?

MR. W. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether he is aware that at many public meetings recently held in Ireland resolutions were unanimously passed asking for the immediate and unconditional amnesty of the Irish treason-felony prisoners now confined in English and Irish gaols; and whether, in view of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, the request of the Irish people will be granted?

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I am afraid that I can add nothing in answer to this Question, or the Question of the hon. Member for the St. Patrick's Division of Dublin, to what has been already stated in this House both by the Leader of the House and by myself.

MR FLAVIN: Will the right hon. Gentleman take the Question into his consideration before the Jubilee?

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: Sir, I am always considering this question. [Laughter.]

MR. FLAVIN: I mean with a view to a favourable answer?

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, seeing the amount of extra duty and responsibility which will be cast upon the Metropolitan Police Force during several days at the time of the Jubilee festivities, he will consider the advisability of giving to each member of the force a substantial gratuity in addition to an extension of the customary annual leave?

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I have nothing to add to the answer which was given last week—namely, that it was hardly necessary to remind me as to this, and that at present any statement would be premature.

Captain NORTON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, following the precedent established in 1868–69 with reference to Waterloo and Peninsula veterans, he will consider the advisability of marking this Jubilee year by granting a small pension to veterans who have served through the two most important campaigns of the present reign, namely the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny?

Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS: Special campaign pensions have, under certain conditions, been awarded to men who took part in the Crimean and Indian Mutiny campaigns. It is not at present contemplated to go further in that direction.

MARYBOROUGH GAOL (PRISONER THOMAS COLLINS).

Mr. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will again take into consideration the petition in favour of the release of Thomas Collins, a Kerry prisoner, at present confined in the invalid prison at Maryborough; and whether, owing to the seriously injured condition of the prisoner's mind, his release will be granted?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The case of this convict was considered, on memorial, so recently as last month, and the Lords Justices, who had before them a special medical report on the mental and physical condition of the prisoner, decided that there were no grounds for a remission of sentence. It is not correct to say that the mental state of the prisoner is seriously impaired.

IRISH FISHERIES.

Mr. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if his attention has been called to the report of C. H. Smith, divisional officer at Ballyheigue, County Kerry, in which he states that immense shoals of herring, mackerel, and other fish appear in Ballyheigue Bay; and whether, with a view of developing the fishing industry, a suitable pier will be erected, as recommended by the divisional officer?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The construction of a boatslip at Ballyheigue was at one time under the consideration of the Congested Districts Board, but the project was abandoned. I will call the attention of the Board to this Question, but of course I cannot express an opinion as to whether their funds could be advantageously expended on this particular work.

Mr. FIELD asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in view of the fact that steam trawlers were accidentally captured and seized for trawling within the prescribed limits, and that an inquiry had recently been held by the Irish Fishery Commissioners, whether it was intended to place a gunboat on that coast to protect the line fishermen and smaller trawlers respectively?

[The hon. Member explained that the words "Galway Bay" had been omitted from the Question.]

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: This question presumably refers to Galway Bay, where some steam trawlers were captured about a year ago. The Inspectors are not aware of any recent violation of the law by trawlers in these waters.

POLICE FORCE (COUNTY KERRY).

Mr. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that Kerry is the heaviest taxed county in the United Kingdom, and that white gloves were presented on several occasions lately to the County Court Judge owing to the absence of crime; and whether, as the county is in a peaceable condition, a further reduction will be made in the extra police force so as to give immediate relief to the ratepayers?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I am not aware whether Kerry is the heaviest taxed county in the United Kingdom, though I believe it is a fact that the county cess is higher there than in any other county in Ireland. The poor rates are levied by unions, and it would take some time to compare the incidence of these rates with the poor rates in other counties. Arrangements have been made consequent upon the continued improvement in the state of Kerry, to reduce the extra force of police stationed in the county to seven men, and it is hoped that after a short time these also can be dispensed with.

Mr. FLAVIN asked whether the right hon. Gentleman was aware that the First Lord of the Treasury had stated that Kerry was the heaviest taxed county in Ireland.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member must not make it a practice to comment on the answers he receives.

Mr. FLAVIN: It is because he denies facts. [Loud cries of "Order!"]

Mr. D. KILBRIDE (Galway, N.) asked whether it was a fact that in the barony of Corkaguinny the taxes were 13s. 6d. in the pound, and that in the barony of Ivereagh——

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! Notice should be given of a detailed Question.

PORTUMNA RAILWAY.

Mr. FIELD: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether he can state who is the owner of the derelict Portumna Railway; (2) what are the financial responsibilities attached thereto; and (3) whether the Government intend to aid in having the line put into working order?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: In answer to the first paragraph, the Board of Works are mortgagees in possession of this line of railway. The second paragraph is obscure and I cannot answer it. As regards the third paragraph, I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member's previous similar inquiry of the 29th March last.

Mr. KILBRIDE asked if the right hon. Gentleman could say what became of the metal and iron of the permanent way of this railway—who removed it?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I believe a good portion of it was stolen. [Loud laughter.]

SCHOOL ATTENDANCES (IRELAND).

Mr. FIELD: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Government intend to bring in a Measure to amend the law so that compulsory attendance of children at school can be enforced in Ireland?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I have nothing to add to my replies to the Questions addressed to me by the hon. Member on this subject on the 11th February and 2nd April last.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD AUDITORS (IRELAND).

Mr. J. H. PARNELL (Meath, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) what were the salaries of the Local Government Board auditors previous to the additional duties thrown upon them in auditing corporation, town commissioners, etc., accounts; (2) whether the auditors get all the fees imposed for audit on these bodies in the first year for this additional duty, and what did it amount to; (3) did the Treasury increase the auditors' salaries; and, if so, how much; and do they receive the several sums fixed upon for the audits of corporation, etc., accounts, and how much does it amount to; (4) whether, if the fees of the Treasury exceed the increase made in the salaries, he will consider the advisability of reducing the amount paid by corporation town commissioners or of paying for these audits out of the Imperial Treasury; and (5) whether he can say in what manner are the audits of corporation, town commissioners, etc., paid in England, Scotland, and Wales?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The salaries of auditors before the additional duties referred to in the first paragraph were imposed upon them were £600 annually. The reply to the second paragraph is in the affirmative. The cost of audit of the accounts in question was originally calculated at £1,516. 13s. 4d., which is still the amount charged to the local authorities, although the number of towns and the expense of auditing their accounts have since largely increased. The salaries of the auditors were increased to £700 in December 1872, and the contribution of £1,516. 13s. 4d. by local authorities is repaid to the Treasury under Section 6 of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1872. I see no reason to believe that the local authorities are overcharged in respect of the work done for them. I have no information regarding the last paragraph of the Question.

LIGHTHOUSES (RED SEA).

Mr. WILLIAM REDMOND (Clare, E.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether, in view of the increased shipping from India and Australia, the Government will take steps to have an adequate number of lighthouses stationed on the shores of the Red Sea?

Mr. RITCHIE: As stated in my reply to the hon. Member for the South Division of Bristol, a circular has been addressed by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople to the representatives of the Great Powers inviting their co-operation on the subject of additional lights in the Red Sea. No steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government until the replies to these communications have been received and considered.

CAVALRY RECRUITING STANDARD.

General RUSSELL (Cheltenham): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, as regards the recent regulations, which make it impossible for any man between the heights of 5 ft. 9 in. and 5 ft. 11 in. to enlist in the British Cavalry, efforts will be made to prevent desirable recruits of this height who are disinclined to enlist in the Infantry or Artillery being lost to Her Majesty's Service?

Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS: The hon. and gallant Member may rest assured that the recruiting authorities will not omit an effort to induce such recruits to enter some branch of the service for which they are eligible.

KING'S LYNN PILOT COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. J. A. WILLOX (Liverpool, Everton): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will explain on what grounds the King's Lynn Pilot Commissioners, having refused to grant a pilotage certificate to the foreign captain of a foreign ship occasionally visiting King's Lynn, the Board of Trade superseded the local Commissioners and appointed special examiners to grant a pilotage certificate to the said alien; and whether this power was exercised by the Board of Trade under Section 600 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894?

Mr. RITCHIE: The King's Lynn Pilotage Commissioners refused to grant a certificate to Captain Ferange to pilot his own vessel on the ground that his vessel was a foreign vessel, commanded by a foreign master, notwithstanding the fact that the pilotage sections of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894, apply both to British and foreign ships. An application having been made by the Belgian Vice Consul at King's Lynn to the Board of Trade to appoint a person to examine Captain Ferange under Section 600 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894, this was done, and, the examiners having reported that he was competent, the certificate was granted.

PORT NESS HARBOUR (LEWIS).

Mr. J. G. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate if he will state who prepared the original plans, specifications, and quantities for Port Ness Harbour, and the amount of the original estimate; whether any departure has been made from the original plans; and, if so, will he describe what departures have been made, and the additional cost incurred in consequence of the changes?

*The LORD ADVOCATE: The details asked for are not such as can well be given in the form of an answer to a question, but if the hon. Member will address a communication to the Scottish Office on the subject, the Secretary for Scotland will be prepared to give him a reply.

Mr. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether, having regard to the fact that no work it at present being done at Port Ness Harbour, he will state whether it is the intention of the Government to have the work proceeded with; and, if so, when?

*The LORD ADVOCATE: Yes, Sir. It is intended to employ to the best advantage the unspent balance of the grant for this work; but it is necessary first to come to an understanding with the trustees, and the Scottish Office is now in correspondence with them.

FISHERY CRUISER (SCOTLAND).

Mr. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate if he will state whether any tenders were received in response to the specification, dated 20th March 1897, and issued by the Fishery Board for Scotland, for a new fishery cruiser which was to be delivered to the Board on or before the 1st July 1897; and, if so, will he state the names of the firms who tendered?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: I am unable at present to give the names of the firms who tendered, because, so far as I am aware, the matter referred to is still under negotiation.

ARTILLERY PRACTICE (PLYMOUTH SOUND).

MR. F. B. MILDMAY (Devon, Totnes): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether he has received any recent complaints on behalf of fishermen, of dangerous firing in the vicinity of Plymouth Sound; and whether he will give such instructions as will prevent its recurrence?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover Square): Nothing is known at the Admiralty on the subject. My hon. Friend has given me some details with reference to the alleged dangerous firing near Plymouth Sound, and I have referred his communication to the Commander-in-Chief at Plymouth, in order that an inquiry may be made into the matter.

NEWINGTON VESTRY ELECTION.

MR. JAMES BAILEY (Newington, Walworth): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he is aware that Mr. Levi Joseph Dunham, returning officer at the vestry election on Saturday next, 29th May 1897, for the parish of Newington, has written a letter to The South London Press of Saturday last, 22nd May 1897, in which he makes a long attack in a partisan spirit on the election address of one section of the candidates, and concludes by calling upon the ratepayers to vote for the opposite party; and whether, considering that this returning officer has thus declared his partiality to one section of the candidates, the Local Government Board will take steps to prevent his presiding at the coming election?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. HENRY CHAPLIN, Lincolnshire, Sleaford): My attention has been called to the letter of Mr. Levi Joseph Dunham, the returning officer at the vestry elections for the parish of Newington on Saturday next, which was published in The South London Press of Saturday the 22nd inst., but only since a notice appeared of the Question of my hon. Friend, and I have thought it my duty to call for an explanation, which I have received. It affords, in my judgment, no excuse for conduct on the part of the returning officer which appears to me to have been grossly irregular and most reprehensible. It would be too late now to take action to prevent his presiding, the elections being on Saturday next, but I have no doubt that care will be taken by the candidates to guard against any irregularity on the part of the returning officer. Under the statute a returning officer who is guilty of any wilful misfeasance is liable, in addition to any other penalty or liability to which he may be subject, to forfeit a penal sum not exceeding £100 to any person aggrieved.

READING PRISON (DISCHARGE OF WARDER).

MR. DAVITT (Mayo, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the circumstances which induced him to dismiss a warder recently from Reading Prison included the giving of some bread to a youthful prisoner who was found crying from hunger in his cell; (2) what other circumstances, if any, led to such dismissal; and whether, in case the giving of the food in the manner mentioned was the only breach of discipline committed by the warder, he will reconsider the penalty inflicted on the erring officer; and (3) whether the offence for which an ex-prisoner has been sentenced to 14 days' imprisonment for throwing some cigar ends among convicts at Borstall is in itself legally punishable by imprisonment; and, if not, what were the other grounds on which this punishment was inflicted by the magistrates who tried and sentenced the prisoner?

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: The answer to the first paragraph is in the negative. As regards the second, I think it would be very undesirable to enter in detail into the circumstances attending the dismissal of prison officers. I have already informed the hon. Member that the account which he appears to have received is an incorrect one, and that I am perfectly satisfied that the dismissal of this warder was a proper step. The answer to the third paragraph is in the affirmative. The statute under which the prisoner was convicted was 2 and 3 Vict. cap. 56, Section 22, and his sentence of imprisonment was in default of payment of a fine.

BROADMOOR CRIMINAL LUNATIC ASYLUM (ISABELLA HEWSON).

Sir SEYMOUR KING (Hull, Central): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether application has been made to him to consider the case of Isabella Hewson, committed to the York Assizes in May 1885 on a charge of manslaughter, who, having at a time when her mind was unbalanced taken the life of her illegitimate child, was ordered, in consequence of the medical evidence, to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure, and has been in custody 12 years, and is now detained at Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum; (2) will he explain why the prisoner is still detained, in view of his reply on 6th April to an application made by her sister for her release, in which he declined to authorise her discharge, and stated that it should be understood that her continued detention in the asylum is not for the purpose of punishing her for a crime committed when she was not responsible; and (3) whether he has ordered, or is prepared to order, a special inquiry into her mental condition, with the object of ascertaining whether she can be discharged and committed to the care of her relatives?

*Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: Yes; I received such an application last March, and being satisfied, after a careful inquiry into the case, that the woman could not safely be discharged, directed the answer to be sent to which the hon. Member alludes in the second paragpraph of his Question. I have made fresh inquiry since the hon. Member gave notice of his Question, and regret that her condition remain unchanged, and that discharge is impossible at present.

INDIAN STAFF CORPS.

Sir SEYMOUR KING: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India, whether he would call upon the Government of India to make a Report as to the effectiveness of the steps taken by the Indian Government in 1894 to prevent the supersession of officers of the Indian Staff Corps by those in the line by granting temporary rank to commandants and seconds in command in native regiments?

*The SECRETARY of STATE for INDIA (Lord George Hamilton, Middlesex, Ealing): The question of the supersession of officers of the Indian Staff Corps by those in the line is now under my consideration in connection with a letter recently received from the Government of India.

CHARGE OF LARCENY (CO. TYRONE).

Mr. DALY: I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland whether he will order the immediate release of two men named Maguire, County Tyrone, who are at present in prison on a charge of larceny from William Triston, considering that in July 1896, when charging the jury before whom the Maguires were tried, Judge Andrews remarked that if money found upon the accused could have been identified as upon the deceased on the night in question, no one could fail to see the importance of such evidence, but that they had not the materials upon which they could come to such a conclusion; and what is the reason for the detention of the Maguires in prison on the charge of larceny after substantial bail being offered for their appearance when called upon?

*The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND (Mr. J. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.): I have already, in answer to several questions from hon. Members stated to the House that the brothers Maguire are at present in prison on the charge of robbery from the person of one, Triston, deceased, and that it is intended to put them on their trial at the next Summer Assizes for that offence. From the only report of Judge Andrews' charge which has been furnished to me, the learned Judge does not appear to have made the statements attributed to him in the question. The application to be admitted to bail was made to the learned Judge who presided at the case, and refused by him, as appears from the report, on the ground that they were apprehended when they were fleeing from justice.

Mr. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.) asked whether the right hon. Gentleman could say how many questions he had answered on this subject, and whether, in the interests of justice, he would decline to answer any further questions?

Mr. DALY: May I ask whether it is because the Maguires are Catholics that they are kept in prison?

Mr. J. DILLON (Mayo, E.) asked whether it was intended by the Crown to proceed on the charge of robbery before the death, or only on the charge of larceny?

*The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND: Both.

MERSEY DOCKS BILL.

Mr. DALY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Mersey Docks Bill, which is to be read a Third time on Thursday, will seriously interfere with the shipment of cattle from Ireland to Liverpool; and whether he will take steps to prevent injury to one of the remaining industries of Ireland?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I know of nothing in this case which would justify the Irish Government in taking the very unusual course of opposing an English private Bill.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny) asked the right hon. Gentleman whether, as this Bill was postponed for nearly a month, he would take the trouble to inform himself of the opinion of the shipowners and those interested in the cattle trade of Ireland; and whether, if he found that the Bill would be detrimental to both, he would use his influence to prevent the passing of the Bill?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I cannot undertake to take action on such inquiry, and it has been ruled already, I believe, that the shipowners have no locus standi in the matter.

GLEBE ACT (IRELAND).

Mr. P. J. O'BRIEN (Tipperary, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he would favourably consider the extending the time of repayment of loan to clergymen in Ireland under the Glebe Act to a longer term than 35 years, as such loans are mostly for the charitable purpose of building parochial houses in poor and out of the way districts where repayment is often difficult?

Mr. HANBURY: The hon. Member's proposal could not be carried out without legislation, and I think that experience has shown the disadvantage of piecemeal legislation on the subject of Government loans. I may remind the hon. Member that it is only in Ireland that clergymen are allowed the advantage of borrowing from the Government at all.

VOTERS' LISTS (CO. WESTMEATH).

Mr. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether it has been brought to his notice that in the county of Westmeath the tenders for the printing of the voters' lists are decided in secret by the sub-sheriff of the county; and can he state whether the contract for the present year has been given to the lowest tender, and at what price?

*The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND: Under the 70th Section of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 69, it is the duty of the Clerk of the Crown and Peace to have the lists of voters prepared and printed. For the expenses incurred by him in this work the Grand Jury pay him such sum as they consider proper. He is not bound to advertise for tenders or to take the lowest tender. In point of fact, the Clerk of the Crown and Peace advertises every year for tenders, and last year accepted the lowest tender, but the work was done so unsatisfactorily that the contractor's tender for £61 was not accepted this year, but the tender for £64, being next in amount to his, was accepted. There is no foundation for the statement that the business was transacted by the sub-sheriff in secret or at all in the Sheriff's office.

Mr. FLAVIN asked to whom the contract was declared?

*The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND said he was not aware.

Mr. P. O'BRIEN asked the name of the person who sent in the lowest tender that was not accepted.

*The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND: A Mr. J. G. Tully.

MULLINGAR UNION.

Mr. JASPER TULLY (Leitrim, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the requisition forms under the Franchise Act of 1885 have not been issued for years past to every occupier in Mullingar Union as directed by the Statute; and, what steps the Local Government Board propose to take to have the provisions of the law enforced in this instance.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The Local Government Board have been informed by the Clerk of the Mullingar Union that, so far as he is aware, the requisition forms under the Franchise Act have always been duly served.

RIVER NETHY (INVERNESS-SHIRE).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate, in view of the fact that the water of the River Nethy, in the Badenoch district of Inverness-shire, is polluted by the discharge into the river of sewage from several lodges and large farms above the village of Causer, will he state whether the sanitary or other authority propose to take steps to free the river from pollution and, if so, will action be taken before the arrival of the summer visitors at this fashionable resort?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: The matter referred to by the hon. Member is engaging the serious attention of the various authorities whose duty it is to attend to it, with a view, if possible, of overcoming the difficulties, which undoubtedly exist, in dealing with it.

TELEGRAPH EXTENSIONS (SCOTLAND).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate, having regard to the need of telegraph extensions in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, and to the fact that the Fishery Board for Scotland are empowered to spend in telegraph guarantees a sum not exceeding £1,500 yearly out of the Herring Brand surplus, will he state why the Fishery Board, instead of spending this amount, have only expended for this purpose £925. 7s. 3d. in 1894, £966. 10s. 11d. in 1895, and £290. 17s. 1d. in 1896?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: I am informed by the Fishery Board that they have not recommended that telegraphic extensions should be guaranteed from the surplus brand fees, as they have always contended in their Reports and otherwise that such extension when in the public interests should be carried out without guarantee. This contention is strengthened by consideration of the limited funds at the disposal of the Board for Harbours which are partly derived from these fees and of the fact that provision has of recent years been made for this service in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland (Public Works and Communications) Vote.

SALLEEN PIER (CO. KERRY).

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, if he is aware that great public inconvenience is caused in the shipping of cattle, horses, &c., for want of suitable accommodation at Salleen Pier, county Kerry, where, under ordinary circumstances, animals have to be lowered ten feet from the pier to a boat by the owners themselves; and whether inquiries will be made, from the harbour master, with a view to recommending some improvement to facilitate the public who ship a large number of animals to and from Salleen Pier?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I understand that the shipment of cattle and horses at this pier is very small. The tolls on cattle for the past three months amounted to less than five shillings. The Board of Works are unable, at present, to say whether the inconvenience alleged in the question could be remedied at a reasonable cost, having regard to the traffic and the receipts, but upon these points the Board are making inquiries.

VACCINATION (LYMPH SUPPLY).

SIR WILLIAM PRIESTLEY (Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board, whether he is able to say what course he proposes to take in consequence of the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Vaccination as to the lymph supply to be issued in future by the National Vaccine establishment?

MR. CHAPLIN: Shortly after the issue of the Report of the Royal Commission on Vaccination I issued fresh Instructions to public vaccinators by which they are enabled, whenever they deem it desirable, to use calf lymph instead of humanised lymph. I have also been making inquiries abroad as to the preparation and employment of glycerinated calf lymph. The Report on this subject has been somewhat delayed by reason of the fact that in some Continental countries public vaccination is practically suspended during the winter months, and is only resumed in May. But, from the information already before me, it is more than probable, in my opinion, that glycerinated calf lymph will be found to present distinct advantages over other forms of vaccine lymph; and one of the points which I shall have to consider will be how far it may be practicable for me to issue a gratuitous supply of vaccine lymph in this form to all registered medical practitioners applying for it. I shall also have to consider how far any considerable change, such as is indicated, in the form or the extent of the lymph supply from the National Vaccine Establishment will be practicable pending fresh legislation on the whole question.

CASTLEBLANEY PETTY SESSIONS.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that several persons were summoned by the police of Castleblaney to appear before the Justices of that town last Petty Session Court, and that when the cases were called the police did not appear, and the cases had to be dismissed; and whether he will direct that persons summoned in these instances will be paid their expenses?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Neither the police prosecutor nor the defendants summoned to appear at the Petty Sessions referred to, were in attendance; the cases were not dismissed, but were adjourned by the Court. No hardship was inflicted on the defendants, nor was any expense incurred by them.

JHALAWAR.

MR. W. JONES (Carnarvon, Arfon): On behalf of the hon. Member for West Denbighshire (Mr. HERBERT ROBERTS), I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether 200 rifles and 50 sabres of the Deoli irregular force have been ordered to Jhalrapatan in view of the unsettled condition of the State of Jhalawar; and whether, seeing that the unrest which this force is intended to deal with is the result of the long period of uncertainty as to the future government of the State, will he consider the advisability of restoring His Highness the late Maharaja Rana to the Gadi, with limited powers and an experienced Political Agent?

*LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: I have received no official information as to the movement of troops to which the Question refers, but assuming that such a movement of troops has occurred, I cannot admit the hon. Member's view as to its cause. As regards the restoration of the Maharaja Rana, I informed the hon. Member on July 21 last year that the decision of the Government of India was final, and I see no reason for altering the view that I then expressed.

MR. PARKER SMITH (Lanark, Partick): Arising out of this, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for India a Question of which I have given him private notice—whether, in view of the misconduct of the late Maharaja Rana and the failure of heirs, he is not prepared to terminate the uncertainty by restoring Jhalawar to the original parent State of Kotah; and whether such action would not be most in accordance with Rajput customs and the desires of Rajputs?

*LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: It is true that the greater part of Jhalawar was part of Kotah, and was ceded on the condition that in the event of the failure of heirs it should lapse to Kotah. Such an arrangement would be in accordance with treaty obligation, and not, I believe, repugnant to the wishes of a majority of the inhabitants.

ARMY STAFF APPOINTMENTS (INDIA).

CAPTAIN PIRIE (Aberdeen, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether it is the case that, by the Indian Army Regulations, an officer who has passed through a two years' course at the Staff College is still kept on exactly the same footing, as regards claims for staff employment, as one who has merely been through the two months' garrison class and passed the usual examinations for promotion to field rank; and whether the great majority of appointments on the Army Headquarter Staff and District Staff in India are held by officers who are not Staff College graduates; and, if so, whether he will consider the advisability of altering these Regulations so as to assimilate them with those which prevail in the Home Army, whereby preference in the giving of staff appointments would be given to Staff College Officers, thus enabling the Indian Government to profit to the full extent of the payments which it makes towards the maintenance of the Staff College, and allowing it to give legitimate reward to its officers whom it encourages to pass the course?

*Lord GEORGE HAMILTON: The selection of officers for staff employ in India is vested in the Government of India and the Commander-in-Chief in India, and I am confident that in making such selection these authorities weigh carefully the merits and qualifications of all candidates, and that due weight is given to the possession of Staff College certificates. I see no reason to interfere with their discretion, or to alter the Indian Army Regulations, which on this subject are substantially the same as the Queen's Regulations.

FINANCE ACT (NEW SOUTH WALES).

Mr. R. COX (Edinburgh, S.): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is aware that, by the provisions of the Finance Act of 1894, hardship is presently inflicted upon the heirs of persons domiciled in this country and dying possessed of movable property in New South Wales, in respect that Death or Estate Duties upon such property are exacted both here and in the Colony, and no allowance is made to executors in the United Kingdom in respect of the duty they have paid in New South Wales; and whether, considering that New Zealand, Victoria, South Australia, and other Colonies have by an Order in Council been brought within the scope of Section 20 of the Finance Act of 1894, there is any immediate prospect of this section being applied to New South Wales by an Order in Council, which will be retrospective in its application?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: No application, so far as I am aware, has been made by the Colony of New South Wales to be brought within the scope of Section 20 of the Finance Act, 1894, and I am not in a position to say whether the law of that Colony with regard to death duties is such as to allow of Section 20 being applied to it.

UGANDA RAILWAY.

Mr. R. W. PERKS (Lincolnshire, Louth): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs how many miles of the Uganda Railway have been laid and are ready for traffic; what was the total amount expended upon the railway works, including material, up to the 31st March last; and when the First Report and Statement of Accounts of the Railway Committee will be presented to Parliament?

The UNDER SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. Curzon, Lancashire, Southport): The rails were at mile 58 on May 18. The completed portion of the line will not be open to traffic until after it has been inspected and passed. The final accounts have not yet come in from Mombasa, but the revised estimates of expenditure for 1896-97 amount to £387,000. The papers are in course of preparation and will probably be presented and distributed by the end of next month.

POSTAL DELIVERIES (CIRCULARS).

Mr. M. M. BHOWNAGGREE (Bethnal Green, N.E.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, if it is possible to deal with circulars by special deliveries, instead of retaining them and issuing them in lots of 30 at each delivery, as is at present the practice in the eastern district of London?

Mr. HANBURY: It is already the practice to deal with circulars by special deliveries when they are sufficiently numerous, and when their delivery in the ordinary course would appreciably retard the postmen. The practice in the eastern district is the same as in the City and other parts of London.

TEACHERS (SUPERANNUATION) BILL.

Mr. W. YOUNGER (Lincolnshire, Stamford): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if it is the intention of the Government to introduce a Superannuation Bill for Teachers during the present Session; and, if so, if he can mention the probable date of its introduction?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): I must refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave on May 10 to a Question on the same subject.

SALE OF FOOD AND DRUGS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury when the Sale of Food and Drugs Bill will be introduced?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: The Bill will be introduced this Session, but I do not think there is much chance of its being passed into law.

MR. DILLON: May I ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he will endeavour to get the Bill passed this Session, inasmuch as two Irish Bills have been blocked, and surely some of the time spent on those Bills might have been spent on this?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: It depends on a general survey of the business of the Session. I am afraid I cannot add anything to the statement I have already made. Of course, if it should unexpectedly turn out that there is a universal enthusiasm for this Bill, it might possibly be carried.

DRAINAGE WORKS (IRELAND).

MR. TULLY: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he is in a position to state if the baronial charges for light railways and drainage works, which are included in the county cess, and press so heavily in some parts of Ireland, will form portion of the rural rates of which the Government propose to pay half for the occupiers?

MR. P. C. DOOGAN (Tyrone, E.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if the Local Government Bill which he is to introduce next Session will contain any provision for relieving agricultural land in the Lough Erne district from the existing burden of drainage tax?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I think it would not be convenient that, in answer to the Questions before the House, I should deal with questions of detail in a Bill to be introduced next year.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) BILL.

MR. SETON-KARR (St. Helen's) asked the Attorney General a question of which he had given private notice—whether he now had any reason to correct the statement he made in Debate in that House on Tuesday last that the Committee could not place much reliance upon the figures given in the said Debate on the authority of Mr. Neison as to the burden of compensation imposed on the coal-mining industry by the Workmen's Compensation Bill, because those figures did not correspond with figures previously supplied by Mr. Neison to Her Majesty's Government; also whether he still had any reason for stating that Mr. Neison had in any way altered the said figures?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir RICHARD WEBSTER, Isle of Wight): I am only too glad to have the opportunity of saying that when I spoke the other evening I had only one set of figures given me—namely, those given under date May 18 in the Report of the Labour Commission. Those figures in no way corresponded with the figures quoted by my hon. Friend. I did not know that within an hour or two afterwards there had been another Report respecting another coalfield, which accounted for the difference in the figures. Of course, had I known that, I should not have said that Mr. Neison had altered this figures. I drew the conclusion that the figures had been changed; but, of course, I wish now to withdraw the statement entirely. I wish to add, in order to avoid misunderstanding, that Her Majesty's Government do not consider that either set of Mr. Neison's figures support the conclusion drawn from them.

MR. SETON-KARR: Arising out of the Attorney General's answer, may I ask whether the right hon. Gentleman will take into his careful consideration the figures of Mr. Neison to which I have alluded?

MOTION.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (METRIC SYSTEM).

Bill to legalise the use of Weights and Measures of the Metric System, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Ritchie and Mr. Balfour; presented accordingly, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Monday next, and to be printed.—[Bill 271.]

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) [EXPENSES].

Considered in Committee.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool) moved:—

> "That it is expedient to authorise the payment, out of moneys to be provided by Parliament, of any expenses of and relating to arbitration which may become payable under any Act of the present Session to amend the law with respect to compensation to workmen for accidental injuries suffered in the course of their employment, and of any compensation that may become payable in respect of accidents to workmen employed by or under the Crown in pursuance of such Act."

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean) said the terms of the Resolution as now submitted cleared up all doubts previously expressed as to whether or not it was sufficiently wide to cover reasonable Amendments on the question of the costs of arbitration and medical officers. The Home Secretary, on the introduction of the Bill, was understood to say that the costs were to be paid by the public. When the Bill was published it was found that the promise was not kept. Since then the Government had undertaken to widen the words of the Bill, and the words before them were wide enough. The Resolution seemed to be satisfactory, and the words used all that could reasonably be asked for.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY only wished to say he could not be held to have given an undertaking with reference to the expenses of the medical officers employed. As regarded the expenses of the arbitrators, he stated that these would be paid by the State, and that when the County Court Judge acted as arbitrator there should be no fees paid in respect of his services.

Resolution agreed to; to be reported To-morrow.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) BILL.

Considered in Committee.

[PROGRESS, 26TH MAY.]

[The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, in the Chair.]

Clause 1,—

LIABILITY OF CERTAIN EMPLOYERS TO WORKMEN FOR INJURIES.

(1.) If in any employment to which this Act applies personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation in accordance with the first schedule to this Act.

(2.) Provided that:—

(a) The employer shall not be liable under this Act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed;

(b) When it is decided, as hereafter provided, that the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer or some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible, nothing in this Act shall affect the liability, civil or criminal, of the employer or persons for whom he is responsible; but the employer shall not be liable to pay compensation both independently of and also under this Act, and shall not be liable to pay compensation independently of this Act, except in case of such wilful and wrongful act or default.

(3.) If any question arises as to whether the employment is one to which this Act applies, or whether the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer, or of any person for whose act or default the employer is responsible, or whether the injury was caused by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment of the workman injured, or as to the amount or duration of compensation under this Act, or otherwise as to the liability for compensation under this Act, the question, if not settled by agreement, shall, subject to the provisions of the first schedule to this Act, be settled by arbitration, in accordance with the second schedule to this Act.

(4). If the Registrar of Friendly Societies certifies that any scheme of compensation or insurance for the workmen in any employment is on the whole not less favourable to the workmen than the provisions of this Act, the employer may, until the certificate is revoked, contract with any of those workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this Act, and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with the scheme, but, save as aforesaid, this Act shall apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after the commencement of this Act.

Another Amendment proposed, in Subsection (3) to insert, as a new sub-section, the words.—

> "(4) Proceedings for the recovery under this Act of compensation for an injury shall not be maintainable unless notice that injury has been sustained is given within six weeks, and an arbitration is commenced within six months from the occurrence of the accident causing the injury, or, in case of death, within twelve months from the time of death. Provided always that in case of death the want of such notice shall be no bar to the maintenance of such proceedings if the arbitrator shall be of opinion that there was reasonable excuse for such want of notice. The notice shall be served in the manner provided by the Employers' Liability Act 1880, Section 7."—(Mr. John Wilson, Falkirk Burghs.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there inserted."

Amendment proposed to the proposed Amendment, in line 2, to leave out from the word "notice," to the word "within," in line 4, in order to insert the words "of the claim is given."—(Mr. Chamberlain.)

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the proposed Amendment."

Question again proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the proposed Amendment." Debate resumed.

Mr. W. J. GALLOWAY (Manchester, S.W.), in view of the fact that there were different Amendments before the House, asked for an explanation from some Member of the Government as to how matters precisely stood.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir Richard Webster, Isle of Wight) understood that the Colonial Secretary was prepared to accept part of the Amendment which had been suggested by the hon. and learned Member for Dumfries. That part of the Amendment was:—

> "Provided always that the want of such notice shall not be any bar to the maintenance of such proceedings unless the arbitrator considers the employer is prejudiced in his defence by the absence of such notice, and the omission to give such notice was with the intention of misleading."

There would have to be some slight alteration of the words. Thus, the expression in the original Amendment "the arbitrator shall be of opinion," would, if adopted, exclude the committee, and the question would arise whether the committee had power to deal with the question, notice not having been given. He thought it would be desirable to alter those words to "it is settled on the arbitration" so as to give power to dispense with notice to the Committee as well as to the arbitrator.

Sir JOSEPH PEASE (Durham, Barnard Castle) very much regretted that the Government proposed to take no account whatever of the notice of accident. It seemed to him to be far more important than the claim. If there were no early notice of accident, there would not be an opportunity of immediately sending a medical man to do the best he could for the poor sufferer. But there was another reason. He had known a great many cases, especially in the railway world, where early notice was essential in order to prevent a similar accident occurring on the same spot or ground. He believed that more had been done by early notice of an accident to prevent the occurrence of similar accidents than any other thing he had known. He felt certain from the miners' point of view that notice was necessary to prevent similar accidents occurring. In regard to wages, if this Bill were to add to the question of cost to the employer, the first defect would be that instead of the workmen receiving an advance in wages, the Bill would prove to a certain extent a deterrent against a rise in wages. If that were so they were bound to do the best they could for the workmen by not throwing upon the employer that cost which could be prevented by early notice, and which would deprive a man of the advance in wages which would be due to him.

Mr. R. B. HALDANE (Haddingtonshire) agreed with the hon. Baronet about the desirability of early notice of accidents, but cases in which men had failed to give notice for reasonable cause should be provided for. They should save the case of the man who made a bonâ-fide mistake, exclude the man who presented a bogus claim, and save the case of the man who, through sheer ignorance had not given notice. He recommended his hon. Friend to accept the view that there should be notice of accident as distinguished from mere notice of claim, if there were a proviso which would include the three main pleas, of mistake, real genuine ignorance, and reasonable excuse.

*MR. EMERSON BAINBRIDGE (Lincoln, Gainsborough) said he was glad to state that he and his hon. Friends had conferred with the representatives of the workmen and of the employers, and had arrived at a solution of the matter which would probably commend itself to the Committee. An Amendment had been agreed to as follows:—

> "Provided that the recovery under this Act of compensation for injury shall not be maintainable unless notice of the accident has been given as soon as practicable after the happening thereof and after claim for compensation with respect to such accident has been made within six months from the occurrence of the accident which caused the injury, or, in case of death, within 12 months of the time of death, provided always such want of notice shall not be a bar to the maintenance of such proceedings unless it is settled on arbitration that the employer is prejudiced in his defence by the absence of such notice, or shall be of opinion that there was reasonable excuse for the want of notice. Notice shall be served in the manner provided for by the Employers' Liability Act 1880, Section 7."

The hon. Member added that a copy of this had been submitted to the Government, and he believed it met with the approval of the Home Secretary. He hoped the hon. Member would withdraw his Amendment, and that the Amendment he had submitted would be adopted.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said that on behalf of the Government he was prepared to accept the Amendment. As far as he could judge it afforded a reasonable solution of the difficulty raised on both sides of the House. Provided notice of accident did not become a condition precedent, which it might, for technical reasons, be difficult to get over, adequate notice was fair for the employers to expect. He agreed with the ex-Home Secretary that if they made a notice of accident within a fixed period a condition precedent to the workman recovering under the Act, they might be imposing obligations which it would be extremely difficult technically to fulfil and bar claims which no one desired to bar. But it was reasonable that an employer, who had to ascertain what the facts were concerning a particular accident, should have adequate and proper notice. If notice of accident were guarded as in this Amendment, it would do injustice to no one, and adequately meet the reasonable demands of the employers.

MR. GEORGE WHITELEY (Stockport) asked what was meant by the words "as soon as practicable."

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said he believed it was an understanding arrived at by those who knew best the circumstances of the case as regarded employers and employed. It was proposed to give wide powers to the arbitrators to settle such matters.

MR. H. H. ASQUITH (Fife, E.) said they might all assent to the Amendment as a reasonable settlement of an undoubted difficulty. His own objections and those of others as to requiring notice were based on their experience of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880. The fixing of time had best be left to the discretion of the arbitrator. The circumstances of different trades and accidents varied so much that if a hard and fast rule were laid down it might lead to injustice.

MR. JOHN WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) asked whether the words "although a claim to compensation in respect of such accident has been made," implied that the proceedings for the recovery of compensation must have been begun; because if not, there would be a sword of Damocles hanging over the head of the employer. If the Attorney General would add the words "after proceedings begun," he thought they would meet his view.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL asked his hon. Friend not to press that. When the hon. Gentleman remembered that it was contemplated in the first instance the matter might go before the Committee, it would not be apt to speak of the commencement of the proceedings. In his view the commencement of the arbitration was the sending in of the claim.

*MR. J. B. BALFOUR (Clackmannan and Kinross) asked whether the word "practicable" would cover the case of excusable ignorance.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said he thought the case would be covered.

MR. ATHERLEY-JONES (Durham, N.W.) said that by this proposed Amendment the function would be vested in the arbitrator on deciding whether or no the notice was reasonable. Although he quite agreed that possibly in the majority of cases the arbitrator would take a reasonable view, and would not allow the workman's cause to be injured by the fact that notice had not been given, yet he had known many cases in which a County Court Judge had said, "I shall apply the Act strictly. I think notice ought to have been given," whereas another County Court Judge would take a totally different view. He thought it would be a most pernicious step to take to make it necessary that either notice of the accident or notice of the claim should be given. Under this Bill the question of compensation only had to be dealt with, and except in the case of wilful misconduct the workman would be entitled to compensation in any case. Therefore, there would be no value in the notice except in the case of wilful misconduct. The effect of insisting on notice would be to shut out men who, but from the absence of notice, would be entitled to compensation. He thought it was most undesirable that the Amendment should be pressed, and he should vote against it.

MR. THOMAS BURT (Morpeth) thought that the Amendment would form a basis of agreement; but his hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough rather misled the House when he said that the terms had already been agreed upon. Some consultation had taken place in the Lobby it was quite true, and he himself was personally quite prepared to agree to the Amendment, but not exactly in the form in which it now stood. He wanted to include ignorance or mistake, and to those words he attached very great importance.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said the Committee was now engaged in discussing an Amendment not before it, and he thought it would be more convenient that the two Amendments before the House should be withdrawn, and that the hon. Member for Gainsborough should then move his Amendment.

SIR J. JOICEY did not think that it was the intention of his hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough to say that the exact wording of the Amendment had been approved of by all the representatives of the workmen, but that they substantially had their approval. His hon. Friend the Member for North-west Durham spoke entirely against any notice whatever, but every reasonable person was agreed that some reasonable notice should be given to the employer. ["Hear, hear!"] After all, this Bill conferred an immense boon on the working classes—["hear, hear!"]—and while there was not an employer in the House who wished to place any bar whatever in the way of workmen who were entitled to compensation under the Bill receiving that compensation, yet he thought that every Member in the House, except, perhaps, one or two lawyers—[a laugh]—would agree with him that it was absolutely necessary that the employer should be protected as far as possible from bogus claims. ["Hear, hear!"] He hoped this Amendment would form a satisfactory settlement, and he thanked his hon. Friend the Member for Lynn for his action the previous night, for had it not been for the hon. Member's intervention, the Amendment proposed last night would have been carried. ["Hear, hear!"]

*MR. JOHN WILSON (Durham, Mid) sad he should like to know why the Home Secretary had receded from the position taken up by the Secretary for the Colonies last night. He did not, however, intend to find serious fault, for he wished the Committee not to try captiously for one side to get the better of the other, but to try to come to an agreement which would work well for both parties. ["Hear, hear!"] This question would not be regarded from the lawyers' point of view, as cases would be decided more from practical knowledge of the circumstances than by lawyers' advice. The arbitrator need not be a lawyer. He was more likely to be a common-sense man like himself. [Laughter.] The words "ignorance or mistake" covered cases which no other words would cover. They would give no support to bogus claims, but would prevent just claims from being defeated by technical objections. The employers need have nothing to fear; for cases where "ignorance or mistake" was pleaded could be settled by a committee of the trade concerned, and need not come before the arbitrator.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said that he could not advise the Committee to accept the word "ignorance," as it would be open to the reasonable objection that ignorance could always be pleaded. But the word "mistake" might be inserted, and that would include cases of genuine ignorance. He proposed that the words should read:—

> "Provided always that the want of such notice shall not be a bar to the maintenance of such proceedings, if it is found in the proceedings for settling a claim that the employer is not prejudiced in his defence by the absence of such notice, or that such absence was occasioned by mistake or other reasonable cause."

Mr. HENRY BROADHURST (Leicester) asked whether there was a vital objection to the words "ignorance of the law."

The ATTORNEY GENERAL: Yes, a serious objection.

Mr. BROADHURST said that he very much regretted it. [Laughter.] How was the workman who was honestly ignorant of the provisions of the Act to escape being penalised? In the case of large industries, where the men were in contact with the unions, there might be no ignorance of the Bill; but the isolated working man would be under a great disadvantage. It was very inconvenient for a long Amendment such as that before the Committee to be suddenly sprung upon hon. Members. He had not been consulted about it, and had only seen it for a few moments. If the Attorney General could accept the phrase "ignorance of the law," he thought that this would relieve the Committee from the difficulty. Otherwise great injustice would be done to many workmen who were isolated from their fellows.

Mr. JOHN BURNS (Battersea) suggested to the Attorney General that as the hon. and learned Gentleman objected to the word "ignorance" he might be able to accept the word "inadvertence" instead. It would probably cover many of the cases to which reference had been made.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said it was impossible to do this. "Inadvertence" was only another form of "mistake," but if hon. Gentlemen, when they saw the Amendment in print, had any serious objections to the form in which it was incorporated in the section it could be dealt with on the Report stage. At present, however, the Government had endeavoured to meet the objection which had been raised by suggesting the alteration.

Mr. BURNS said he was perfectly content to leave the insertion of the words to the Attorney General. He merely suggested the word because in the Courts he had heard that mistakes were described as "inadvertences."

Mr. CHARLES FENWICK (Northumberland, Wansbeck) thought that the Committee would be prepared to accept the Amendment, always reserving to itself the right to judge of it finally on the Report stage.

*Mr. BAINBRIDGE said he was quite prepared to accept the variation of wording proposed.

Mr. BURNS called attention to the description of the mode of serving the notice of accident under Section 7 of the Act of 1880, which insisted that in every case the notice of accident should be by letter, message by hand, or registered letter. It might, however, be inconvenient or impossible, in a case where a man was seriously injured, to comply with the terms of the section; and he suggested that a man who gave verbal notice through his foreman ought to be deemed to have given notice in compliance with the Act.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said that the words in the Amendment moved the previous day were agreed to by the workmen and the employers, and he had never heard of any difficulty arising as to the mode of serving the notice since 1880.

Amendment to the proposed Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

*Mr. ROBERT ASCROFT (Oldham) proposed to leave out Sub-section (4) in order to insert the words:—

> "Any agreement made between an employer and workman for the purpose of contracting themselves out of this Act shall be void."

He pointed out that the Bill covered factories, and that the description of factory was very wide. The Factory Act of 1878 contained a description of no fewer than 26 different kinds of factories; and they were, therefore, placed in this position:—The Registrar of Friendly Societies would have to examine every scheme which came before him in relation to all the different works, and he would have to say whether or not the scheme was, on the whole, not less favourable to the workmen than the provisions for compensation under this Bill. It was utterly impossible for any Registrar, however able, to competently deal with the numerous questions that would arise on the construction of the various schemes. If schemes were allowed and carried out the arbitrator would have thrown upon him the responsibility of construing what the scheme was. [Cries of "No!"]

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): Under this clause any scheme proposed as a substitute for the Bill would have to obtain a certificate of the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and all that would arise subsequently would be that the arbitrator would have to say whether or not there is such a certificate.

*MR. ASCROFT said that if there was a scheme between the employer and the workman, and the question came before the arbitrator, the point might often arise whether or not the workman was to be paid in accordance with the terms of the scheme. If a certificate had been granted the arbitrator would have nothing to do with the Act; he would only have to deal with the scheme as he found it, and would have to construe it. Therefore, they were inaugurating a series of schemes all over the country which the arbitrator would have to construe, and the workmen and the employers would in future be exposed to litigation arising out of the construction of schemes. But there was something even more objectionable. Although the Bill provided that the scheme should be fair and reasonable to the workman, it did not provide anything as to administration and supervision. The friendly societies protested strongly against the policy of this sub-section. It was only recently that the representatives of friendly societies, numbering 2,800,000 Members, met in London. They had a fund of over 27 millions sterling accumulated and invested.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I fail to see how the remarks of the hon. Member are relevant to the Amendment. He seems to be going rather far afield from the question he wishes to put before the Committee.

*MR. ASCROFT: On consideration, Mr. Chairman, I am certain I was. [Laughter.] But he thought he was justified in saying it would only be fair and reasonable if they insisted upon a scheme being forced upon employés, that they should make provision for an annual account being presented or a periodical audit, by which, when complaints arose, the matter could be brought before the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and the scheme cancelled. He might be asked: How could a question of administration arise? He would give a case. Suppose a man entitled, on being injured—

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Order, order! The general position of these insurance societies does not arise at all. The only question is whether the compensation which they propose to give is not as favourable as that given under the Bill. The general position and administration of the societies cannot be discussed here.

*MR. ASCROFT explained that he wished to show that circumstances might arise, and that there was no provision whatever for bringing these circumstances before the Registrar, and that that was an omission which should be supplied in Committee.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I do not think it would be relevant to insert any Amendments except in so far as they deal with the position of the workman in regard to this Bill—that is to say, whether the compensation is more or less favourable than that which he would get from the Society.

*MR. ASCROFT was afraid the Chairman did not realise the point, but he would not pursue it. He had a happy knack of always saying the wrong thing. [Laughter.] It was not from intention, but rather from ignorance of the forms of the House. But there was one point which could not be denied, and that was that any scheme which came before the Registrar without the workman being heard was objectionable. And as soon as they had got the scheme there was this difficulty, that no matter how good the scheme might be, they had the employer on the one side differing with the man who had not a free hand. He considered that there was no advantage or benefit either to employers or workmen in having this Section included, and, therefore, he submitted that the Government would act wisely in removing it from the Bill.

MR. BROADHURST while thinking that not much time need be occupied upon this Amendment, believed the Government would lose nothing by accepting it. If the scheme of contracting out were to be such that the workman should not be placed in a less advantageous position, he did not see what was to be gained for the employer in having a scheme for contracting out at all. He should be glad, however, to hear from the Government what strong reasons could be urged for retaining this clause.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN very much hoped that the recommendation of the hon. Gentleman opposite would be followed. The Government did not wish to exaggerate the importance of the matter, but at the same time they considered that it might be of advantage to the workman to have a sub-section of this kind in the Bill. They did not see why they should profess, even at this stage, to be incapable of error and to have devised a plan which could not by any possibility be improved. Was it not conceivable that an employer and his workmen, considering this matter in the light of the experience of their special trade, and having the most friendly feelings one for the other, might devise a scheme which for them, at any rate, would be much better than the scheme proposed in the Bill? What the Government asked was that the House should not say to them violently, "You shall not have this improved scheme, although you all desire it, and it is proved to be equally as good and perhaps for you much better than the scheme of the Bill."

*MR. EDWARD STRACHEY (Somerset, S.) desired to present the case from the point of view of the friendly societies. When the Employers' Liability Bill introduced by the late Home Secretary came back from another place with the contracting-out clause inserted, Mr. Gladstone argued strongly against contracting out, and cited the opinion of the friendly societies in support of his view; their judgment, the right hon. Gentleman said, being almost decisive of the question. In reply, the First Lord of the Treasury stated that he had not received a single representation from any friendly society indicating that they had any rooted objection to the scheme of contracting out inserted in that Bill by the other House. However that might be, the friendly societies had now made it perfectly clear by the circular which had been issued that they objected without reservation of any kind to this sub-clause relating to contracting out.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN suggested that the point which was being raised by the hon. Member could be dealt with more conveniently when the Amendment which the hon. Member had himself put upon the Paper was reached. That Amendment ran: —

> "The Registrar of Friendly Societies shall not certify any scheme which restrains any workman from remaining in or joining any friendly society."

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said that the hon. Member, although he was addressing his remarks to his Amendment, objected to the whole of the sub-clause under consideration, and it was in order for him to ask the House to reject it.

*MR. STRACHEY regretted that he was unable to adopt the suggestion of the Secretary of State for the Colonies. But he had been informed that the Amendment standing in his name and which was referred to by the right hon. Gentleman was outside the scope of the Bill, and would be ruled out of order. The National Conference of Friendly Societies had asked him to oppose the whole of the sub-clause. This sub-clause would encourage the formation of benefit societies by employers. To this the friendly societies took objection, fearing that their position might be endangered by the unfair competition of the societies set up by the employers. Cases would arise in which men would be told that they must join an employer's society as a condition of their employment, and in certain industries the wages were not such as would enable a workman to be a member of more than one benefit society. The direct effect of the sub-section, therefore, could not but fail to be prejudicial to the existing friendly societies. He had been sent a statement by the Secretary of the Hearts of Oak Benefit Society, giving the case of a workman who had been told by his employers that he must leave the Hearts of Oak Society, to which he belonged, and join their own club. The hon. Member proceeded to read the communication, which was of considerable length. Before he had reached the end,

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said the hon. Member was taxing the patience of the Committee. The hon. Member was objecting generally to the fourth sub-section upon the ground that friendly societies might be injured by its operation. That hardly justified his reading long extracts. The hon. Member ought to state his reasons for objecting more generally, and abstain from going into such details. ["Hear, hear!"]

*MR. STRACHEY said that if the Chairman ruled that he must not place the case fully before the Committee, he would, of course, bow to the hon. Gentleman's decision.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS observed that he had not given any such ruling as that. He believed the hon. Member was quite competent to put his case fully before the Committee without reading long and elaborate extracts. ["Hear, hear!"]

*MR. STRACHEY said he would, of course, follow the advice of the Chairman. The end of the case to which he was referring was that the man, because he refused to resign his membership of the Hearts of Oak Society, was in consequence given notice to leave, and lost his employment.

MR. GALLOWAY asked for a fuller explanation than had yet been given to the Committee of the character of the schemes which the Registrar of Friendly Societies was to be empowered to certify. There was one other point which was not quite clear from the Bill—that was whether the certificate which the Registrar was to give would be applied not alone to accident funds which might be formed after the Bill was passed, but also to those that were already in existence. It had been said that one of the strong objections which friendly societies had to contracting out was that it competed with them in their sphere of work; and the Resolution of the National Conference of Friendly Societies had been quoted in support of that contention. But the Resolution proved nothing of the sort. The Resolution said, first of all, that the Conference protested against employers having the power to contract out of the Act. He entirely agreed with that. He thought the workman should be allowed to choose for himself what course he would adopt. The Resolution then went on to say that the Conference protested against restraining in any way the liberty of action of the workmen in joining any friendly society. He agreed that it was most unjust for an employer to say to a workman that he should have his friendly society lodge where he made friendships, such as the employer made at his club, and compel him to do so under threat of dismissal. But he submitted that the Resolution in no way justified the hon. Member in saying that the friendly societies took up the selfish position of objecting to any of their fellow workers getting a larger benefit than they could themselves provide. He agreed that it would be well to secure that the certificate of the Registrar should only be given where it was proved the scheme was actuarially sound, or in a condition to pay all the benefits it professed to be able to pay.

MR. S. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow) said the Amendment raised one of the most important points connected with the Bill. The power of contracting out of the Employers' Liability Act of 1880 had given the greatest possible dissatisfaction to the whole of the working classes of the country. [Ministerial cries of "No!"] Therefore it was natural that they should look with very grave suspicion on any proposal which would allow the opportunity of contracting out of the provisions of this Measure. He would like to know how those schemes were to be created. Was the Registrar of Friendly Societies to draw up the schemes himself, or was he to consult the workmen and the employers? There was another important point. If a body of workmen agreed to enter into an arrangement with their employer, would the employer have the right to make the acceptance of the arrangement a condition of hiring? He was certain that if those schemes contained a condition of hiring it would be greatly resented by the working classes of the country. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. G. WHITELEY hoped the Government would stand firm by the sub-clause and that the Committee would reject the Amendment. It seemed to him that the Amendment restricted the liberty of action and the rights of the working people of the country, and dealt with them as if they were children unable, in this matter to look after themselves. ["Hear, hear!"] If the Bill were passed the working classes would undoubtedly secure valuable provisions for compensation in cases of accident; but if workmen in conjunction with their employers could devise and elaborate a scheme which they thought more desirable or beneficial to them than the provisions of the Bill, why should they be debarred from doing so? ["Hear, hear!"] He controverted the statement of the hon. Member for Walthamstow that contracting out had given a great deal of dissatisfaction to the whole of the working classes of the country. In the borough he represented there was a large body of railwaymen who were members of the Mutual Insurance Society of the London and North-Western Railway, and they valued its benefits so highly that when, in 1893, it was proposed under the Bill of the late Home Secretary to prevent contracting out, they sent him numerous Resolutions and representations in favour of maintaining the principle.

MR. BURNS said he did not understand the hon. Member for Walthamstow to say that all the members of the working classes were opposed to contracting out.

MR. G. WHITELEY said he took down the hon. Member's words, which were that contracting out had given the greatest possible dissatisfaction to the whole of the working classes of this country.

MR. BURNS said that statement might be qualified, perhaps, but at all events 999 workmen out of 1,000 objected to it. [Cries of "Oh!"] The Oddfellows, one of the largest benefit societies in the world, whose membership was nearly a million, were unanimous as a society against contracting out. The National Conference of Friendly Societies which met the other day, where nearly three million members were represented by elected delegates, decided unanimously that contracting out was a principle which ought not to be allowed by law. The Trades Union Congress, which, whatever its political difference might be, was generally united on industrial matters, came to a similar decision. During the last ten years all the friendly societies and all the trades unions, representing roughly six million working class members, had protested against contracting out being allowed. The Secretary for the Colonies the other night had said this was a clause which allowed contracting out only in cases where the terms offered to the workmen were better than those contained in the Bill, and their object in inserting the clause was that they did not wish to prevent a workman doing better for himself by the consent and good will of his employer than legislation could do for him. The right hon. Gentleman assumed that these contracting out schemes were based upon good will, and were matters of friendly arrangement between masters and men. That was not so—["hear, hear!"]—and could not be so, so long as assent to a contracting-out scheme was a condition of employment. These schemes were imposed upon the workmen, not collectively, but individually, when they were out of work. They therefore interfered with the liberty of contract—["hear, hear!"]—and the freedom of combination, and the men collectively had no voice whatever in determining the benefits, the superannuation, or the other conditions which were submitted to them. When men did object their promotion was not so rapid and their dismissal occasionally followed. He did not see why the masters and the workmen collectively should not be consulted by the Registrar as to the equivalent to the Bill. He submitted, however, that all existing contracting-out societies should be abolished, and the opinion of the workmen as to the equivalent ascertained by means of a secret ballot. He contended that this Bill ought not to infringe on sick, superannuation, funeral, or other benefits. The fact was they were giving too much work to the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and referendum to a Registrar would be a most objectionable form of tyranny. If the Registrar were fair he would kill all the contracting-out schemes submitted to him, for there was not one of them which gave its members actuarially anything like the financial benefits which the workmen got from their benefit and friendly societies. [Laughter.] If that were done, they would have the railway companies and other big monopolies coming to that House for amended Bills, besides pressure being brought to bear upon the House in other ways. There was only one way, and that was to give to masters and men absolute freedom of employment and of organisation. He would not put it even in the hands of the Board of Trade, but would leave it to voluntary effort. He cited the case of an engine driver in his own district who received 35s. a week. This man belonged to the Hearts of Oak, to which he paid 10d. or 11d. a week, and another society to which he paid 1s., and he paid 6d. a week to his trade union. This man was compelled, as a condition of employment, to pay 4d. or 6d. a week towards a contracting-out scheme. He could not pay more than 2s. 6d. out of 35s. a week, and he was thus driven to choose between keeping on his connection with the Hearts of Oak, which gave him 18s. a week when sick, or join the contracting-out scheme which gave him 10s. a week. Moreover, if he was dismissed by the railway company he got no surrender value for what he had paid in, and if then his health failed him he would have no means of support. These contracting-out schemes sometimes precluded the poorest of our workmen from joining friendly societies, and absolutely prevented them from joining trade unions, and in this way made intimidation possible. He would agree with these arrangements in the abstract if they gave the workmen value for their money, but they did not, and therefore could not be defended. In practice, also, they tied men down to one district, and prevented the mobility of labour. If they wished to kill contracting-out schemes by this Bill let them do so on the front-door step, and not strangle them in the back yard. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.] The contracting-out system was one of the most nefarious systems of compulsion which had ever been sanctioned by that House.

COLONEL MELLOR (Lancashire, Radcliffe) said he regretted very much the tone of the speech of the hon. Member. He had pledged himself against contracting out because he believed that the great majority of the working men of this country viewed contracting out with suspicion. ["Hear, hear!"] They looked on it as something humiliating to them. But this Bill dealt with the matter on a totally different basis. They were told that the working man would not contract himself out unless he satisfied the Registrar of Friendly Societies that he was going to get something better than that which he relinquished. There was nothing like compulsion in the Bill. If what was suggested were to take place he should vote against the proposal. Surely that House would stultify itself if they prevented the working man enjoying benefits of this character. They had heard a great deal about benefit societies. Were they legislating for the sake of benefit societies or for the benefit of working men who were injured in the course of their employment? He should be the last man to say a word against the benefit societies, which were great and valuable institutions. But there was something more important, and that was preserving the liberties of the subject—["hear, hear!"]—and if workmen saw their way to falling into an arrangement that would be for their benefit the Members of that House would not be doing their duty if they imposed obstacles.

*MR. J. WILSON (Durham, Mid) thought that the Member who had just sat down had hardly read the Bill. Perhaps when the Home Secretary got up to make a statement he would tell them in what part of the sub-section provision was made for the workman to go before the Registrar. What was the meaning of the word "contract?" Why was this alternative scheme placed before them? Was the employer going to give more than was given under the Bill? The employers looked on this Bill as a burden placed upon them. ["Hear, hear!"] What, beyond this Bill, were the employers going to give the workmen? Were they going to give the workmen better terms? He apprehended the employer would expect to get something in return for his money. What they said on behalf of the men was that this contracting-out scheme ought not to be allowed. He believed that the working men of the country were opposed to it. He did not think that the Secretary for the Colonies was enamoured of this clause; and did not care whether it was passed or not. He hoped, therefore, that the Secretary for the Colonies would agree to have the clause eliminated and so allow the workmen to receive the full benefit which the Bill proposed to give. To many men like those who were working on railways at a low wage, and who were qualified for a higher post to which they could not attain, this proposal would be a mockery, a delusion, and a snare. He appealed to the Secretary for the Colonies not to destroy what benefits might be contained in the Bill.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said he had been asked whether the Government attached importance to this clause. Well, he had said at the opening of the Debate that if there were one thing to which the Government were pledged it was to embody in that Bill the principle of enabling employer and employed to make their own terms. ["Hear, hear!"] It was no fault of the Government to have fulfilled that pledge. If they had not done so they would have been open to a serious charge of having violated their pledges. The hon. Gentleman the Member for Walthamstow said the workmen of the country viewed with general dissatisfaction the principle of contracting out. It was, however, notorious that in the Division upon the question in Committee on the Bill of the late Government the Ministerial majority fell to the most narrow margin. And, without desiring to introduce any matter of a controversial character, he might fairly recall to the recollection of hon. Members the fact that in many constituencies at the last general election it was made a test question whether workmen should be allowed to contract out. The result was a Unionist majority of 150. [Ironical Opposition cheers.] He did not say that the Unionist majority of 150 was actually due to the decision on that question, but he affirmed that from those constituencies where contracting out was practically made a test question there was no evidence forthcoming that the principle of contracting out was unpopular with the electorate. All the evidence, electoral and otherwise, which they had pointed to the conclusion that there was a general desire on the part, not only of employers, but of workmen, to be allowed, under certain conditions, to make their own contracts. As to friendly societies, he assured the Committee that the last thing the Government wished to do was in any way to injure such societies. Their desire was to carry the friendly societies with them, and their belief was that there was nothing in the Bill which would prevent those societies giving supplemental aid in the cases which arose. Of course, as he had already admitted, the question of contracting out came before the Committee in a different shape from that in which it came up under the Bill of his right hon. Friend opposite. ["Hear, hear!"] This Bill conferred larger benefits upon the working man than the Bill of his right hon. Friend. It conferred definite, if limited, pecuniary advantages upon the workman; but if a mutual society chose to arrange that, by some machinery different from that of the Bill, it would provide benefits like those given by the Bill and go further and give even other benefits, such as aid in time of sickness, he was at a loss to see how the workman could be prejudiced. The Registrar General, a most capable and able officer, would, when a mutual scheme was brought before him, estimate the whole benefits under the scheme, and see that, if workmen contributed to the scheme, they would get a quid pro quo for their subscription over and above what the employers were bound to give under the Bill. If the Government were right in proposing the measures of compensation they had laid before the Committee, surely they were right in providing that if a permanent or mutual society chose to adapt themselves in any way to the new conditions, there should be a field open to them. He trusted that the Committee would, without much further delay, come to a decision upon this question. The Government had purposely made the wording of the clause wide. They did not believe in tying up the Registrar of Friendly Societies too closely. They believed they had sufficiently indicated that there was thrown upon him the obligation of seeing in those cases where schemes were brought before him, that, upon the whole, the workman would have by mutual agreement at least as favourable terms as he would have under the Bill.

MR. ASQUITH said they had heard a good many theories as to the causes of the magnitude of the present Ministerial majority, but it was novel to him to hear that it was attributable to the desire of the working classes to have the privilege of contracting themselves out of rights which the law would otherwise give them. [Opposition cheers.] The right hon. Baronet had spoken of what he called test constituencies. There was one constituency which would afford a better test almost than any other—[cheers]—of the opinion of the working classes upon this and most other questions, and yet Her Majesty's Government would not allow the electors in that constituency to express their opinion. [Ministerial cries of "Oh!" and Opposition cheers.] Well, he had looked carefully at the other side, and neither to-night, nor, so far as he knew, in the course of these discussions had he seen the hon. Member for Crewe in his place. [Renewed cheers.] However, he was anxious not to discuss this matter in a spirit of party recrimination. He must say the question of contracting out had assumed a different complexion, and was of very much less practical importance to-day than it was when it was raised three years ago in connection with the Bill of the late Government. ["Hear, hear!"] But, having made that admission, he must express his surprise that the Government had thought it worth while to introduce this clause. ["Hear, hear!"] He could not for the life of him see, except as a piece of pious homage to an abstract principle, what possible effect the clause would have in protecting workmen. A mutual scheme must either be as good as the scheme proposed by the Government, or less good than that scheme. If it were less good than the scheme proposed by the Bill, then, notwithstanding the right hon. Gentleman's rather rhetorical language about the expediency of allowing workmen to make their own contracts, the Registrar of Friendly Societies was bound to pronounce against it, and prevent the men from acting upon it. On the other hand, if the scheme were as good as, or better than, the provision made under the Bill, what was the necessity for allowing contracting out? If an employer were to give as much under a scheme as the law forced him to give, what possible inducement had an employer to require a man to forego the benefits which the law gave him? That appeared to him to be a dilemma from which there was no possible escape, and, that being so, it showed, not that this clause was noxious, but that it was totally unnecessary. He must go on to say that, having had some considerable number of these schemes brought under his notice in connection with the employers' liability legislation of the late Government, he had never seen, and he did not know of, any which would satisfy the conditions contained in this clause. The scheme which was the great stalking horse in the battle of that time—the North Western scheme—would not hold water for a minute if the test of this clause were applied to it. That, he thought, was a tribute—a tribute which he made most willingly—to the comparative generosity of the scheme proposed by the Bill. But it was not unworthy of remark that, if that were the case, it showed they were not going, in point of fact, by the operation of this clause, to protect these schemes. On the contrary, they were going to require, he thought he might almost say without exaggeration, 99 out of every 100 of the existing associations to be completely remodelled from top to bottom—["hear, hear!"]—and that with very little benefit, as far as he could see, either to the employer or to the men. If, as he thought he had shown, the clause were not needed for the protection of sound schemes, for what purpose was it put in the Bill? He accepted entirely the statement which the Government made of their object, but let them consider what they were going to do. They were going to put on the shoulders of the Registrar of Friendly Societies—an official as to whose competency in his own duties he made no suggestion whatever—a task of enormous perplexity—["hear, hear!"]—for the performance of which, however skilled he might be in the determination of actuarial questions, neither he nor any other Government Department possessed the necessary knowledge, the necessary experience, or the necessary powers of judgment. It was all very well to say, in the vague language of this clause, that the Registrar was to certify that a scheme was, on the whole, not less favourable to the workman than the Bill, but what a problem they were presenting to the Registrar! What had he got to take into account? If it were a mere question of whether the amount contributed by the employer independent of the amount contributed by the men—if the scheme were perfectly solvent in other respects—would or would not produce a benefit equal to that contained in the schedule, that was not an insoluble problem. But unfortunately these schemes were not of that simple character. They were not simple accident schemes. They were schemes which contained a number of other provisions relating to other matters. Take such an elementary thing as this. Was the Registrar to consider whether or not it was made a condition of employment that every man who entered into the service of a particular employer should contribute to the funds? That was a fundamental consideration—["hear, hear!"]—because, although he did not want to use exaggerated language about this matter, he was perfectly certain that the imposition of that condition as one of the terms of employment was found to a very large extent to fetter the men's freedom of action, and was undoubtedly introduced with the object of making these funds insurance funds against strikes, against labour disputes, and, indeed, against labour organisations. [Cheers.] He did not say that that, from the employers' point of view, was an illegitimate thing, but no one would deny that that was an element which did not enter into the calculation of those by whom these schemes were promoted. That was only one particular provision in regard to these schemes, but as a matter of fact they contained clauses, extremely complex in their character, which related not merely to the payment for accidents or even sickness, but very often to the general conditions of employment, and to the regulation of the every-day relations of masters and men. How the Registrar of Friendly Societies was going to disentangle from this mass of complicated provisions those parts, and those parts alone, which related to accident insurance, and how, having segregated that part from the rest, he was going to determine whether or not in any given set of circumstances they must be as favourable to the workman as that proffered to him by this Bill, was a matter which he confessed passed his comprehension. He did not think—and he was not saying this in any spirit of undue hostility or carping criticism—this would be found to be a practical way of dealing with the question. If there were any serious object to be gained then he should say by all means let them even run some risk in trying the experiment, but inasmuch as he had endeavoured to show there was no practical object whatever, either in the interests of the masters or of the men, he did earnestly trust the Government might be disposed to reconsider their position in regard to this matter and to drop altogether this sub-section, which excited a good deal of suspicion among the representatives of the working classes, and which would not lead either to the integrity of their own scheme or to the attainment of the objects which both sides had in the prosecution of this legislation.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN asked whether they were really not wasting too much time over matters of secondary importance when they had in face of them questions of very great importance and perplexity? He had observed that the Government did not attach an exaggerated importance to this matter, and now his right hon. Friend opposite, although he found it necessary to criticise it and to object to some of its features, felt that, on the whole, in view of the changes which had been made since the matter was discussed on the occasion on which he introduced his Bill, it was not a matter of practical importance.

MR. ASQUITH: Of not so much importance.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN said he agreed. He could only say that he did not think the clause would be found in practice to give rise to any of those imaginary evils which had been conjured up by several hon. Members. There was no man better qualified to undertake this duty than the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and he was informed that, although he acknowledged it might cast some additional work upon him, he did not anticipate any difficulty in carrying it out. There was a great fear on the part of some hon. Members lest any scheme suggested under this clause should be enforced upon a workman as a condition of hiring. Well, there was an Amendment on the Paper which was supposed to prevent that, so far as legislation could prevent it, and to which the Government had no objection whatever. [Cheers.] Only let him remind his hon. Friends who believed that by legislation they could prevent a matter of this kind that they were entirely mistaken. ["Hear, hear!"] They might say that no such condition should be enforced, but they could not help an employer or his managers allowing it to be known that he would require such and such things from his workpeople, and that he would not employ any workpeople unless they complied with them. That was true of every condition of trade, and no legislation which they could enact would prevent it. Even if there were no contracting-out clause, it would still be possible for an employer to make arrangements, and no legislation would prevent that, although it might be worth while to insert such a provision in the Bill in order to indicate what they considered would be right and what they desired should be done. His right hon. Friend opposite asked whether they really thought that any employers would offer better terms under a scheme of this kind than were proposed in the Bill. He did think so, very much. He did not agree with his right hon. Friend that there were no such schemes at present. On the contrary, he could himself quote an important firm that already gave better terms, although they were rather differently framed from those offered in the Bill; and he did not see why, especially in the trades which were not really dangerous—like the textile industry, for instance—and where the operation of this Bill would not be more than from a shilling to half-a-crown per cent. of the wages, a generous employer should not be prepared to come forward with a scheme which would give a good deal more than the scheme of the Bill. Then, said his right hon. Friend, if he offered a scheme of that kind, why did they want a contracting-out clause? What the employers said, and what he thought experience showed had sometimes occurred, was that, if they had not the security of a contracting-out clause, their workpeople might take advantage, as it were, of two worlds. They might take the scheme which the employers offered when it was to their advantage, and they might go back to the scheme of the Bill in any particulars in which they considered they got greater advantages, although it had been a tacit condition that they should accept the employers' scheme not as a part, but as a whole. When he added to these considerations the fact that very many hon. Gentlemen were pledged to the principle of contracting-out, he thought he had given sufficient reasons for introducting this clause. He hoped they might now come to a decision, at all events, on the principle of the clause.

Mr. FENWICK said it was some satisfaction to learn that the Government did not look with disfavour, at all events, upon the Amendment to prevent contracting out being made a condition of hiring. He did not agree with the Home Secretary that the Government needed no justification for the insertion of this principle in the Bill, because the whole of their attitude in 1893 was in favour of contracting out. That was perfectly true, and if the Government had introduced an Employers' Liability Bill instead of a Compensation Bill, he could have understood that there would have been some force in the argument of the right hon. Gentleman. But this was not such a Bill as was contemplated in 1893. He certainly thought, with the late Home Secretary, that the Government would have been well advised to have omitted the contracting-out principle from the Bill. He did not think any employer was likely to offer any contracting-out scheme giving better terms than the workman was entitled to under the Bill. It was very significant that when the Colonial Secretary, in his reply to his right hon. Friend, said there were many employers who would offer their workmen much better terms than the Bill gave, that observation was received with very faint cheers from the Government side of the House, or from employers. He certainly did not think, as he had said, that employers were at all likely to offer any better terms. He would ask the Home Secretary's attention to this question. The sub-section contemplated the formation or creation of mutual insurance schemes. Upon whose initiative were those schemes to be sanctioned? Were the workmen to be consulted in any way as to the constitution of these schemes? If not, he was bound to say that he agreed with the criticisms which had been made that the sub-section was very crudely drawn, because there was nothing giving the workman any right whatever to be consulted in the constitution of a scheme that was to be submitted to the Registrar for his approval. Now, if the scheme were to be framed on the initiative of the employer, and on his initiative it was to receive the sanction of the Registrar, he was bound to say there was great danger that the scheme might be forced upon great bodies of workmen against their wishes and contrary to their desires. If the Government intended to retain this principle in their Bill, they ought to introduce some form of provision which would give the workman an equal right with the employer to be represented when any such scheme was being framed for submission to the Registrar, and unless they recognised that right, the Measure would still remain very imperfect. He regretted that the Government had at all attempted to introduce this principle of contracting out into a Measure which dealt, not with employers' liability, but was simply and purely a Compensation Bill. He repeated that they would have had every justification in the policy they had pursued of late years for introducing the principle of contracting out into an Employers' Liability Bill, but they were not at all justified in introducing it into a Bill of this kind. [Cries of "Divide!"] He hoped the Government would not retain the principle in their Bill.

MR. TOMLINSON, who rose amid continued cries of "Divide!" said there had been some confusion as to what would happen under the Bill. The only arrangements that could be made under it were those affecting accidents. As an employer, he would have nothing to do with any alternative scheme unless he was satisfied the workmen of their own motion desired it. [Cries of "Divide!"]

MR. HENRY SETON-KARR (St. Helens) said that if the Amendment were carried to a Division, he should certainly vote against it. [Cries of "Divide!" and "Order!"] But if he could get a satisfactory answer on one point it would make him support the Bill much more heartily than he did at the present moment. It was said on the part of the Government that the friendly societies would supplement the Bill, and the hope had been expressed that they would not suffer in consequence of it. He had already criticised the Bill on the ground that it would damage the friendly societies, and although he had carefully listened to the Colonial Secretary's speeches, he had not heard a word that did not confirm his doubts on that point. He should be very glad if the right hon. Gentleman would only give him an answer that would relieve his mind as to the danger contained in the Bill for these societies. ["Cries of "Divide!"]

Question put, "That the words 'If the Registrar of Friendly Societies' stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 170; Noes, 97.—(Division List, No. 219.)

*MR. ASCROFT moved in Sub-section (4) after the word "societies," to insert the words "after ascertaining the views of the employers and workmen or either of their representatives." He observed that at the present moment there was nothing in the Bill to provide that the Registrar should take any steps whatever to ascertain whether the workmen had been consulted. The position, therefore, would be that an employer without consulting his workmen might send a scheme to the Registrar of Friendly Societies which he might approve, and unless every workman consented to join it he might lose his employment. He was desirous that both the representatives of the workmen and of the employers should be consulted, and an Amendment such as this would certainly tend to make the Bill more workable.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said he was willing to accept the Amendment if the words "or either of their representatives" were left out.

*MR. ASCROFT agreed to the omission of these words.

Amendment, as amended by the omission of the words "or either of their representatives," agreed to.

MR. J. A. PEASE (Northumberland, Tyneside) moved in Sub-section (4) after the word "certifies," to insert the words "with the approval of the Secretary of State." He regarded this Amendment as necessary in the event of the Registrar of Friendly Societies not being able to do his work properly. He did not desire to indicate for one moment that the present Registrar was not prepared to do his work properly, but he thought the workmen ought to have some check on the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and if they introduced a Government department into this clause they could then debate any question in that House in the event of the Registrar of Friendly Societies failing to perform his work properly, or abusing the powers conferred upon him by this section.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY thought that the hon. Gentleman by his Amendment was asking a Government Department to do a very great deal more than it could carry out. There was no objection to the Registrar of Friendly Societies being under the Home Office for certain purposes, but to insist on every scheme being considered and approved by the Home Office—after having been certified by the Registrar General—before it could come into operation was asking too much. He was afraid, therefore, he could not accept these words, though he was willing to consider whether what he gathered to be the hon. Gentleman's object could not be secured in some other way.

MR. A. H. DYKE ACLAND (York, W. R., Rotherham) considered that the objection the hon. Member had raised was not unreasonable and that there should be some method of raising any question which might arise in connection with this matter in the House of Commons on some particular Vote.

CAPTAIN SINCLAIR (Forfar) would like to give a reason for associating some one else with the Registrar of Friendly Societies in this matter. Hitherto the simple registration of a Friendly Society had been mistaken for a guarantee of solvency by intending members. Some friendly societies were in a stronger financial position than others and registration should not be allowed in any sense to be mistaken for a guarantee of solvency in any direction. If the right hon. Gentleman would refer to the past reports of the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and to past literature on the subject, he would find that that aspect of the question had been discussed. It would be well to associate some Government Department in the work it was proposed to give to the Registrar under this Bill.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY undertook to consider the matter.

MR. J. A. PEASE said that, in these circumstances, he would withdraw the Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Mr. J. A. Pease

*COLONEL DENNY (Kilmarnock Burghs) moved, in Sub-section (4), after the word "insurance," to insert the words, "whether mutual or otherwise." He said that as he was anxious to see the Bill passed in a workable form he would not take a minute to move his Amendment, and judging from precedent he was afraid the Attorney General would not take much longer to reject it. His reason for moving it was that if these words were not inserted the Registrar of Friendly Societies might debar mutual associations on the ground that the men having to contribute anything at all would make them on the whole less favourable than the Bill.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL stated that the hon. Member, as far as regarded the probable reception of the Amendment, appeared to be that very rare being a true prophet. He submitted the words would not be appropriate and it would not be right to describe an arrangement or scheme of the kind as in any sense mutual insurance. It could not be a mutual insurance association to which the masters contributed but from which they would derive no benefit. He objected to the insertion of the words, and did not believe that any harm would result to mutual societies from the Bill.

*COLONEL DENNY said he would rather lose his Amendment than his character as a prophet—[laughter]—and he begged leave to withdraw the Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

*MR. STRACHEY had on the Paper an Amendment proposing, in Sub-section (4), after the word "employment," to insert the words:—

"does not interfere with their membership of any friendly society or the benefits derivable therefrom and."

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said the Amendment was not in order, as it went beyond the purpose of the Bill.

*SIR C. DILKE on behalf of Mr. T. G. ASHTON (Beds, Luton) moved, in Sub-section (4), after the words "employment is," to insert the words, "so far as regards the contributions of the employer in particular, and." He said he moved the Amendment to get the opinion of the Government whether the words of the sub-section were clear. The sub-section had been misread and misunderstood. Contracting out in the old bad sense was dead, but it was believed it would continue in an aggravated form in the clause unless clearly provided against.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said he did not think the clause, although it was a difficult one to draft, was open to that adverse criticism. He opposed the insertion of the words of the Amendment, which would not have any elucidatory or clarifying effect.

*SIR C. DILKE said he only wished it to be made clear that there will be no deductions from the wages of the workmen for the purposes of the Bill. He withdrew the Amendment, but suggested that the Government should further consider the matter before Report.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. PERKS, on behalf of Mr. HALDANE, moved, in Sub-section (4), to leave out the words, "on the whole not less favourable," and to insert the words "more beneficial."

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said it would be very unwise to alter the clause as suggested, and the adoption of the words would throw an extremely difficult task on the Registrar General.

Question put, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 138; Noes, 64.—(Division List, No. 220.)

On the return of the CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, after the usual interval,

MR. J. WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) moved an Amendment to the effect that if the Registrar of Friendly Societies certified that any scheme of compensation or insurance for the workmen in any employment was on the whole not less favourable to the workmen "and others deriving right through them" than the provisions of the Bill, the employer might contract with any of the workmen that the provisions of the scheme should be substituted for the provisions of the Bill. He urged that, though the Amendment involved a point of detail, it was of importance to employers in Scotland, who had been advised by the late Lord Advocate that they had not the power to contract themselves out of the Employers' Liability Act of 1880. It was therefore desirable to extend to Scotland the same rights that existed in England.

*MR. T. COCHRANE (Ayrshire, N.) stated that, having had an opportunity of consulting the Lord Advocate and the agent of the Mine Owners' Association of Scotland, he found that they were agreed that the Amendment would not meet the case.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said the Amendment would defeat the object, and suggested that the case would be met by inserting after "workman" the words "and their dependants." If that were accepted he should take care to insert in the schedule a definition of "dependants."

*MR. J. B. BALFOUR agreed with the view stated by the learned Attorney General. According to the law of Scotland certain persons had an indefeasible claim in their own right, not derived through husband or father, and therefore the words "deriving right through them" would not touch that case. He had himself handed in a definition of "dependants" which, he thought, would cover the Scotch case.

Amendment by leave withdrawn.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL moved in Sub-section (4) after the words "favourable to the workmen," to insert the words, "and their dependants."

Amendment agreed to.

MR. GALLOWAY moved in Sub-section (4) after the words "provisions of this Act,' to insert the words,

"and also certifies that any scheme of compensation or insurance for the workman in any employment does not contain any obligation upon the workman to join in such scheme."

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL suggested that it might save time if he stated that the Government were prepared to accept the principle of the Amendment later on, but in a more desirable form of words, namely,

"No scheme shall be so certified which contains an obligation upon the workmen to join the scheme as a condition of their hiring."

MR. GALLOWAY had no hesitation in accepting the words suggested by the Attorney General, and refrained from moving his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. J. A. PEASE said he begged to move in Sub-section (4) after the word "Act," to insert the words, "and certifies that the financial position of such a scheme is satisfactory." It would be hard lines on a workman that he should go on contributing for weeks and months and even years, it might be, to a scheme which was unsatisfactory, and from which, after all, he would derive nothing in the event of an accident befalling him.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL asked the hon. Member for Tyneside not to press his Amendment at this stage. He had not had notice of it, and the matter had not been considered from that point of view. His reason for asking that was this, that they should have to consider later on whether any steps ought to be taken to make anybody bound. He was not sufficiently acquainted with the position of the Registrar General to be able to say whether he would be the sort of authority that ought to deal with the financial capabilities of schemes, and in the event of a fund coming to an end owing to the number of claims made upon it, an objection might be raised by an employer. "This was certified by the Registrar, and therefore I ought not now to be made liable." The point could be discussed in line 18 at the end, and in the meantime he should have an opportunity of ascertaining the views of the Home Secretary upon the matter.

MR. J. A. PEASE said that if the Government would undertake to consider the matter at the end of line 18 he would ask leave to withdraw the Amendment.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL: Certainly.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

*MR. ASCROFT, when called upon to move the next Amendment to Sub-section (4)—after the words "employer may," to insert the words—

> "so long as he complies with the provisions of such scheme and fairly administers the same or"— said he understood from the Attorney General that the question was intended to be dealt with by the Government at a later stage. He, therefore, did not move the Amendment.

MR. GALLOWAY, on behalf of Mr. ELLIS GRIFFITH, moved in Sub-section (4) after the words "contrary made," to insert the words "before or." He said that the friendly societies considered this a matter of the utmost importance, because it seemed to them, and to him, that it would distinctly define once and for all that the certificate of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies applied not only to any schemes which should be made after the commencement of this Act, but also to any schemes which were in force at the present moment, and before the Act was passed.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said the proper way of dealing with existing agreements was pointed out in Clause 4, as they were, he believed almost in terms proposed to be enacted by the Bill of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife. Section 4 provided that any contract existing at the commencement of the Act should be deemed to continue

> "after the time at which the workman's contract of service would determine if notice of the determination thereof were given at the commencement of this Act."

He thought it was obvious that the question of existing contracts ought to be dealt with on that clause and not now.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. R. McKENNA (Monmouth, N.) moved to add the following new Sub-section to Clause 1:—

> (5.) Where the injury is caused by the wilful and wrongful act of any person in the service of the workman's employer, the employer shall be as responsible for such act or default as if the workman had not been a workman of nor in the service of the employer nor engaged in his work.

He thought that after what had fallen from various Members of the Government with regard to the doctrine of common employment there could be no objection to the acceptance of this Amendment. All he proposed to do was to do away with the doctrine of common employment.

MR. TOMLINSON: On a point of order, asked whether this Amendment was within the scope of the Bill. As he understood, it amounted to an Amendment of the provisions of the Employers' Liability Act.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said that if the Amendment were inserted it could only apply to the employments to which this Act applied. It was therefore in order.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL thought the words were either unnecessary or absolutely mischievous. When he first saw the Amendment he thought it was intended to be put down with the view to some such clause not being adopted as was now in the Bill. He thought that what the hon. and learned Member was afraid of was already met in substance by Sub-section (2), paragraph (b) of the clause, and if it were not, the Amendment would be open to serious objection. By that sub-section the arbitrator would have decided that the employer was liable for the injuries caused either

> "by the personal negligence or wilful act of the employer or of some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible."

After that the only thing that was left was the assessment of damages. Therefore, from the point of view of making the employer liable in the particular case which was contemplated by Sub-section (2), paragraph (b), the words were not necessary. If the hon. and learned Member got these words in, they being unnecessary for the purposes of that Sub-section, then it would be open to the suggestion that the doctrine as to the liability of the employer for the workman's default had been extended and altered. If any such words must be inserted, they should be put in all the conditions under which the employer was to be liable in the issue which was going to be decided by the arbitrator. To put in these words now would, as he had said, either be to extend the scope of the Bill beyond what the Committee intended, or to add words which were unnecessary for the purpose of the previous sub-section.

MR. HALDANE said that in Sub-section (2), paragraph (b), they were dealing with cases to which the ordinary law was to apply, and what they wanted to make sure of was that to these cases the doctrine of common employment was not applicable. They insisted that this doctrine of common employment was not to be re-enacted.

MR. C. A. CRIPPS (Gloucester, Stroud) said he thought that as regarded the first part of the sub-section the words proposed were obviously unnecessary. The question of liability had already been discussed and defined under Sub-section (2), paragraph (b). When they went outside that and said that an employer should be as responsible for such act and default

> "as if the workman had not been a workman of nor in the service of the employer nor engaged in his work," they went much beyond that sub-section as to the extent of the liability. The fact of the liability would not be altered, but the extent of the liability might be very largely increased. It seemed to him that this Amendment not only ought not to be admitted, but that the subject-matter of it had already been dealt with in Sub-section (2), paragraph (b).

MR. ATHERLEY-JONES argued that the Bill for the purposes of compensation under the Employers' Liability Act abolished the doctrine of common employment. But outside the Act the doctrine existed. The Amendment would therefore only be operative in the case of responsibility of employers outside the Act, in which case it would be outside the scope of the Bill.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: If the argument of the hon. Gentleman is correct, I cannot submit the Amendment to the Committee. [Laughter.]

MR. McKENNA said the argument of his hon. Friend was not correct. [Laughter.] His Amendment did not cover the general law of employers' liability. The Committee had already decided that in regard to acts of default on the part of persons for whom the employer was responsible, a particular procedure was to be allowed; and, therefore, any Amendment which dealt with that particular mode of procedure must be relevant to the Bill.

Question put, "That those words be there added."

The Committee divided.—Ayes, 93; Noes, 165.—(Division List, No. 221.)

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL moved to insert at the end of the clause the following words:—

"No scheme shall be so certified which contains an obligation upon the workmen to join the scheme as a condition of their hiring."

Amendment agreed to.

MR. B. PICKARD (York, W.R., Normanton) moved to add after the words last inserted the following words:—

"or which has not been approved by three-fourths of the workmen ascertained by ballot vote."

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said he was afraid the Government could not agree to these words. They thought it better that the responsibility should be put upon the Registrar of Friendly Societies, especially in view of the Amendment which had just been agreed to.

*SIR C. DILKE suggested that if his hon. Friend wished to add the ballot provision, he should wait until the Report stage, and then insert the proposed words which referred to the previous Amendment.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Does the hon. Member withdraw his Amendment?

MR. PICKARD: No, Sir.

*MR. J. WILSON (Durham, Mid) asked would it be competent to submit the scheme to the Registrar if only one-half of the men voted, and would that bind the other half?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN said that there could hardly be a doubt that this scheme would be impracticable. In order to give effect to it they must have a clause almost as long and as complicated as a Franchise Bill. It was absolutely absurd to believe that any injustice could be done, as different precautions had been taken to obtain the opinion of the men.

MR. PICKARD asked whether the women and boys would have compensation under the Bill?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: Certainly.

MR. PICKARD said that from his experience there was no difficulty in carrying out the suggestion.

MR. FENWICK: So that boys would be entitled to ballot as well as others?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: Certainly.

MR. FENWICK did not see that it was so clear that each workman should be consulted before such a contract could be forced upon him. He should like to point out that the Bill was not sufficiently clear in that sense.

MR. S. WOODS hoped that the right hon. Gentleman would accept this proposal in its present form or some other form.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN thought the Committee might come to a decision.

*MR. J. WILSON (Durham, Mid) asked was it desirable that one-half of the workmen should overrule the other half. Would it not be better for the smooth working of the Act that they should have some arrangement whereby the question could be put to the whole of the workmen, and accepted or rejected?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN said he should try to find out words, after consulting with hon. Members, which would meet the difficulty which they apprehended.

MR. BURNS said that, as the Colonial Secretary was in a concilatory mood, he would like to make a suggestion to him. He had no doubt the right hon. Gentleman and hon. Members who had just addressed the Committee would fix upon words which would enable a ballot to be taken in circumstances advantageous to the men, but what provision was to be made for the abandonment of a scheme through, say, actuarial insolvency coming upon it?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL: There is an Amendment lower down dealing with that point.

MR. BURNS said he desired to know, before his hon. Friends and the Government entered into conference, whether the workmen would have power to refuse a scheme, even though they had previously assented to it?

MR. PARKER SMITH (Lanark, Partick) said that the discussion so far had had reference only to coal mines, but it was as well to take cognisance of other industries, shipbuilding, for instance. In ship yards it would be extremely difficult to take a ballot because the men were constantly shifting from one yard to another, according to the circumstances of the work.

MR. THOMAS BUCKNILL (Surrey, Epsom) hoped the Government would not be too conciliatory. The Registrar of Friendly Societies had been chosen to act in these matters, because, having great experience and great knowledge, and being a non-party man, and absolutely free and independent, he might bring to bear on the questions brought before him a free and independent and a desirous mind to do right between employers and employed. Given that condition of things, why should they too much fetter his hands? What was the use of putting on record in this Bill that he should not allow a scheme under any circumstances, good as it might be, unless three-fourths of the workmen agreed to it? There might be a transcient difficulty, there might be a spirit reigning for the moment between employer and employed, not entirely of a pacific nature. How great must the difficulty of the Registrar of Friendly Societies be if he was bound hand and foot, and unable to approve a good scheme because three-fourths of the men had not consented to it. He hoped the Government would take the opinion of the House upon the point.

Mr. G. W. WOLFF (Belfast, E.) said that in 1893 employers had some object in trying to get the men out of the action of the Bill of that year. It was, he thought, the hon. Member for Battersea who said that no doubt the employers would contribute heavily towards the sick or accident fund, but that, very naturally, they would want somthing in return. He fancied they all knew that what they wanted in return was to keep their men out of the trades unions. [Opposition cheers.] He did not know whether that was a good or a bad thing, but in the works with which he was connected they had never had to any great extent any skilled men who were not trades unionists, and they had got on very well with them. [Cheers.] Under this Bill, contracting out was surrounded with so many conditions that it would be made so excessively expensive an operation that very few employers would attempt it. ["Hear, hear!"] He therefore did not see why hon. Gentlemen opposite should fight so tenaciously over little details. He knew nothing about coal mines, but in respect to ship yards the proposal that a scheme should be approved by three-fourths of the men was almost impracticable. The men were consistently shifting, and a scheme approved at one time might be rejected at the end of six months. Considering that the Amendment had really never been acted upon, they might safely pass on to the discussion of some other point. [Cheers.]

Mr. PICKARD thanked the Colonial Secretary for the courteous manner in which he had met the proposal, and asked leave to withdraw the Amendment. [Cries of 'No, no!"]

Question put, "That those words be there added."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 110; Noes, 189.—(Division List, No. 222.)

*Mr. J. A. PEASE moved to insert after the words last added the following words:—

"and no scheme shall be so certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies unless he is satisfied as to its financial position as ascertained by actuarial examination."

He said it was conceivable that the workmen might themselves be contributors for some months or even some years to a scheme of which a preponderating amount might be contributed by the employers. It would be very unfair to the workmen, therefore, if on a sudden they found all their contributions cast to the wind and they were deprived of all benefits because the scheme was financially unsound. To put a case. A disaster might occur, and the workmen suffering by the accident would be unable, owing to the unsatisfactory financial position of the scheme, to obtain any compensation, or, at any rate, any compensation in accordance with the amount the arbitrator would give them under the Bill. But that there should be any necessity for moving Amendments of this kind was only another indication that the State rather than the employer ought to be made responsible. The workmen ought to be guaranteed compensation for accidents. He did not in his Amendment propose that any guarantee of absolute solvency should be inserted, but he did feel strongly that the Registrar of Friendly Societies ought to be satisfied in his own mind that these schemes were actuarially sound.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said the hon. Member for Belfast, who had probably as large an experience with regard to industrial occupations as anyone in the House, told the Committee just now that the provision proposed by the Government was one that would hardly ever be applied in practice; and he was cheered by hon. Gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. [An HON. MEMBER: "Ironically!" and laughter.] Ironically! He had thought that hon. Members were sincere, and now he was told that they were ironical. On the contrary, he still believed that they were sincere. Almost every hon. Member on that side of the House had expressed the same opinion, and yet on a clause which they held would hardly ever come into operation, more hours had been spent than had been spent upon very important propositions. He really could not see what motive led hon. Members opposite to pile Amendment on Amendment on a clause which they thought had no practical importance whatever. The hon. Member for Tyneside was, he thought, one of those who were rather hostile to the Bill; but he was only anxious to amend it on points of detail. He credited the hon. Member with good intentions as to the Bill, but he certainly had not taken the best way of securing the result he desired. He wanted to secure that any scheme proposed under the clause should be actuarially sound. How could that be? It was quite possible to ascertain whether the contributions would be sufficient to pay the benefits offered. But that was not the point. The real point was, Would the workmen and the employer pay their contributions? Or if the contributions settled by the scheme proved insufficient would the employer pay the deficiency? All that was matter that could not be the subject of actuarial calculation. They might have a scheme actuarially sound, but if either party declined to make their contribution, well that was a difficulty inherent in every proposition that employers should contribute or should provide for the compensation of their workmen. All they could do—and this he admitted they ought to do—was to secure that under the scheme the workman should have the same guarantee of payment that he had under the Bill; in fact, to carry out the idea expressed in the provision, that he should not be put in a worse position. Under the Bill the position of the workman was this. As long as the employer was solvent he was certain to get the amount to which he was entitled; and he thought it would be quite right to provide that under any scheme of contracting out the employer should guarantee the payment under the scheme. ["Hear, hear!"] He hoped hon. Gentlemen followed him. That was to say, that the employer should take under the scheme the same liability he had under the Bill—his liability to pay his contribution. If that met the views of the hon. Gentleman, the Government would be prepared to deal with the matter when they reached the Amendment of the hon. Member for Bow and Bromley. He hoped that if he had satisfied the hon. Gentleman he would withdraw his Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"]

*MR. J. A. PEASE: Does the right hon. Gentleman accept my words?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: No, I do not. I propose to carry out the only object which is a practical and feasible object in other terms, and I will state the terms I think applicable to the situation when I come to deal with it.

*MR. J. A. PEASE: On that undertaking, I agree to withdraw.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. LIONEL HOLLAND (Tower Hamlets, Bow and Bromley) moved to insert after the words last added the following words:—

> "(b) Any such scheme shall be deemed to be less favourable to the workmen unless it provides that the contributions to be made by the employer under the scheme of compensation or insurance for the workmen in his employment shall be sufficient to secure the full amount and duration of the compensation payable under this Act."

He said that of course the two sections of the Amendment stood entirely distinct. The first part, which he now moved, aimed at securing that the employer should contribute in advance, so that one employer should not stand in a better position than another, but that every employer who had induced his men to contract out should contribute what would have been the full amount of his liability under the Act. As to the second part of the Amendment, he should hope that the purpose of that Amendment, even if the words had to be different, might be accepted by the Government, as its object was merely to safeguard the workmen in the event of the contribution by the employer falling short of the amount which he should pay.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL did not think his hon. Friend was present at an earlier part of the evening when they had a short discussion on an Amendment which practically raised the same point. The Amendment of the hon. Member proposed that there should be some separate calculation of the scheme under Subsection (4) as to the amount contributed by the employer so as to see that it was sufficient to secure the full amount and duration of the compensation payable under the Act. He would point out that that would be a calculation it might not be possible to enter into in regard to a scheme. It was quite impossible to say that in all schemes the amount paid by the master should be calculated solely with reference to the amount of compensation payable under the Act. He would again remind the Committee that the duty was thrown upon the Registrar of coming to the conclusion that the pecuniary benefits which a workman would get under a scheme were at least as good as those given by the Act, and, therefore, by an Instruction to tell the Registrar he must make a separate calculation to see that the contributions were sufficient to secure the full amount and duration of the compensation payable under the Act, would be to prevent his taking into consideration as he ought to do other pecuniary benefits which might be given to the workmen, and for which the master would have to begin his contribution at the same time, possibly, as the workmen began theirs. He did not think the Amendment would at all add to the security of the workmen, while it might tend to direct the mind of the Registrar to calculations which might be inapplicable to the circumstances of the case.

MR. HOLLAND asked leave to withdraw his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. HOLLAND moved to insert after the words last added the following words:—

> "If the contributions of the employer, as fixed by the scheme, shall prove in any event to be insufficient to meet any claim or claims to the full compensation payable under this Act, the deficiency may be recoverable from the employer under the provisions of this Act."

MR. CHAMBERLAIN was not quite certain whether he understood what the intention of his hon. Friend was in moving this Amendment. It stated:—

> "If the contributions of the employer, as fixed by the scheme, shall prove in any event to be insufficient to meet any claim or claims—"

But the principle of the scheme was that it should be a joint contribution of employer and workman, and, therefore, if there was any deficiency it might be because the contribution of the workman was too small, or that of the employer was too small. The employer had to make a contribution under the scheme which would be equal to the one he would have to provide if he came under the provisions of the Bill, and under those circumstances it would clearly be unfair to make him liable for a larger amount. What, undoubtedly, the Government wanted to secure and what he understood hon. Gentlemen opposite desired to secure was that under no circumstances should the employer under a scheme get out for less than he would have had to pay if he had not been in the scheme. That, he thought, was perfectly right and fair, and he believed that intention was carried out by the clause as it stood. If, however, his hon. Friend thought it insufficiently provided for, then he had to say that he did not think the Amendment which had been moved exactly met the difficulty. The following words would make the matter clear:—

> "If the funds under any such scheme are not sufficient to meet the compensation payable thereout, the employer shall be liable to make good the amount of compensation which would be payable under this Act."

MR. PARKER SMITH hoped the Government would not adhere to the suggestion of the Colonial Secretary, because it would knock on the head the possibility of any contracting-out scheme. [Opposition cheers.] The whole principle of any contracting-out scheme was that a bargain was made beforehand before the circumstances had taken place out of which one side or the other might possibly gain. The whole object of the employer in entering into an alternative scheme of the kind would be that his liability might be known and determined by giving a certain contribution as large as what was actuarially probable he would have to pay if he had not made a contracting-out scheme.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said the Amendment would not have the effect his hon. Friend supposed. It provided that where the workman did not get compensation provided by the scheme, or if the scheme provided for certain accidents or certain cases lesser compensation than the Bill, but the scheme was, on the whole, recognised as a better scheme; provided the amount contracted for was paid, the scheme would be substituted. In fact, if employer and workman mutually contracted out of the Bill for a definite object, as long as that object was observed there was no alternative. But if the employer entered into a pledge that certain compensation should be provided for the workman, it would be perfectly fair to say, "Your scheme has failed in the object you had in view, and therefore you must go back on the original Bill." That was all the Amendment intended.

Mr. PARKER SMITH accepted this explanation and regretted that he had misunderstood the Amendment.

Mr. CRIPPS said it did appear to him that in substance the criticism of the hon. Member was accurate, and that the result of the Amendment would be that none of those funds would survive in the future. ["Hear, hear!"] It was not a question whether the compensation payable by the employer should be under the Act or under a scheme, because one or the other, it did not affect the point. He assumed that an employer and his workmen had entered into a scheme which they considered for their common benefit. For a long period of years the workman had had the benefit of it, that was to say, each workman when an accident arose received far better terms than under the Act, and the employer had carried out his full obligations. After the workmen had had that advantage, say for 15 years or more, to turn round on the employer and throw the whole obligation upon him, if at any given time the fund was not sufficient to meet the claims made upon it, certainly did not amount to a game of "heads I win and tails you lose." ["Hear, hear!"] Surely that amounted to a case in which two parties having entered into an arrangement for their common benefit, in the ultimate result the liability was thrown upon one only. He could not imagine any plan more directly calculated to put an end to such funds than the plan proposed by the Colonial Secretary. He did not think he had misapprehended the Amendment, and it seemed to him that if his view of it was accurate, the whole of this clause as to contracting out might as well be deleted. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. ASQUITH said that the argument of the hon. and learned Member was a very good argument against allowing contracting-out at all; but inasmuch as contracting-out was to be allowed, he must say that he entirely agreed with the Amendment proposed by the Colonial Secretary, the effect of which was that, in whatever way a scheme of this sort was carried out, the workman should always be secured, under any fund, the minimum compensation allowed by the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"]

*Colonel DENNY said it seemed to him that the Opposition could very well afford to sit still and smile, for this simple reason, that they objected to contracting out, and they now saw it being effectually killed. ["Hear, hear!"] If the employer was to get no benefit out of a scheme between himself and his workman, what on earth was he going to enter into it for? ["Hear, hear!"]

The ATTORNEY GENERAL thought that some hon. Members who spoke for the employers overlooked the advantages which the clause would confer upon them. The Government assumed that the employer's contribution to a substituted fund would cover the payments which he might have to make under this Bill. As a result of the system of substituted funds there would be no litigation and no trouble. The system would work automatically. The Amendment, however, was necessary in order to safeguard workmen in cases where the funds, under a substituted scheme might not be sufficient to meet the compensation payable. In such cases it was only reasonable to hold the employer liable to make good the amount of compensation which it was proposed to sanction and be most useful, inasmuch as they would be likely to promote harmony between employer and employed.

Mr. W. R. BOUSFIELD (Hackney, N.) thought that this Amendment would effectually kill contracting out. An employer would be required to guarantee the solvency of the scheme which he had arranged, and to which he contributed. That would impose a considerable burden upon him. He was anxious to see these funds established because he believed that they would induce employers and workmen to associate together for their collective good, and such association would be a guarantee of the ultimate success of the system. He knew that the hon. Member for Battersea and the representatives of trade unions held a different view; they thought that these private benefit societies were inimical to trade unions. He supported their formation, on the other hand, because he believed them to be conducive to harmony. But if these funds were to be administered with economy it must somehow be made the workmen's interest that they should be so administered, and he feared that if the guarantee contemplated in the Amendment were to be required of the employer, the inducement to economy would disappear. When the workmen knew that they had the purse of the employer to fall back upon in any eventuality, they were not likely to act economically. The guarantee which was to be required of the employers would practically be a guarantee in favour of the workmen against the results of their own extravagance.

Mr. STUART-WORTLEY (Sheffield, Hallam) was surprised that this Amendment should cause so much uneasiness. In a previous Measure the contracting out clause contained the same provision for the guarantee of the solvency of the substituted fund. That provision was accepted, and stood the test of discussion. It was desirable that the employer should have the strongest possible interest in maintaining the financial stability of the substituted fund.

Mr. J. M. PAULTON (Durham, Bishop Auckland) thought that the Government had behaved with extreme fairness and impartiality. [Ironical Ministerial cheers.] The Government was anxious that the workman should not suffer more than was necessary through the introduction of this subsection; and in the words suggested by the Colonial Secretary the Government had done their best to minimise the effect of it. His regret was that so much time had been wasted on the consideration of the sub-section, which to all intents and purposes would result in no substantial or important effect either one way or the other.

Mr. G. WHITELEY urged the Government, in view of the attitude of hon. Members on the Opposition side, to make no further concessions on this clause, because it was evident that the appetite was growing on what it fed. [Ironical laughter.] He could not agree with the view that this clause would kill contracting out. He believed that in some form or another there would be contracting out to some extent, even after the clause had passed in its present shape. The workman had ample security. The schemes formulated between workmen and employers had to be thoroughly sifted by the Registrar, and if this gentleman did his duty he would turn his special attention to the financial and actuarial side of the question.

Mr. SETON-KARR was disposed to look on the Amendment as another nail in the coffin of the friendly societies. [Laughter.] Judging from the ominous silence of hon. Members opposite, he felt that they also took that view. Nothing, in his judgment, should be done to injure the friendly societies, but here the employer was being asked to guarantee the solvency of other persons over whom he might have no control. If there was anybody on the Treasury Bench who could carry conviction to his mind, it was the Attorney General, but even the hon. and learned Gentleman failed to convince him. Why should they make the employer responsible, not only for his own payment, but also for the possible non-payment of other people in the future? It seemed to him that to impose the obligation involved in the words of the Colonial Secretary they would take away the last possible shred of chance of any person consenting to go into any of these friendly society schemes.

*Sir C. DILKE thought hon. Gentlemen opposite had an undue apprehension in regard to the existence of the great railway societies. He was as strongly opposed to their existence as any one on his side could possibly be, but he was sorry to say that their existence was not likely to be affected by what was being done to-night. The great societies which they had in their mind were mainly the railway societies. They would be destroyed by this Bill. But they would be re-constituted as societies for old-age pensions and for other purposes. He was certain these societies would not be prevented by the Amendment from coming into existence in that way. In regard to the words proposed to be inserted by the Colonial Secretary, he was sure they were necessary. One of the great railway societies was insolvent at this moment. Of course, the railway company was solvent, but it was debarred by statutory conditions from using its funds to aid this particular society. Although he believed the great railway societies would cease to exist, they would again come into being in a new form.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

*Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY moved, after the words last inserted, to add the words:—

"The Registrar of Friendly Societies shall in every year make a report of his proceedings under this Act, and that report shall be laid before Parliament."

Amendment agreed to.

Sir J. JOICEY moved, after the words last inserted, to add the following words:—

"It shall be lawful for the employer at any time to substitute for his liability under this Act the engagement or guarantee of any insurance corporation or association previously approved by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and on such Secretary of State certifying that he is satisfied as to the sufficiency of the engagement or guarantee of such corporation or association, and that it has undertaken the liability of the employer, any liability of the employer under this Act so undertaken shall thereupon cease."

He said that the provision would be of mutual advantage to the workmen and the employers. In districts where both had organisations, joint insurance would be substituted for individual responsibility and thus the security of the workmen would be increased. But he realised that it was useless to ask the Committee to agree to anything which would be of use to the employers. The present temper of the Committee was to put every burden on the employer that was possible. He knew numbers of employers who would be affected by the Act to whom he would not give credit for £100 for a month. [Laughter.] This showed the necessity for his Amendment.

*Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said the proposal was that the State should become the guarantor of the insurance companies to whom the employers might resort to meet their liabilities under the Bill. The Government could not accept such an Amendment.

Mr. PERKS said there was no such proposal in the Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"] The declaration of the Home Secretary seemed to him to be one of the most serious which the right hon. Gentleman made in the course of the discussions. One of the difficulties created by the Measure was that annuities or pensions might be created on an employer's estate which would render it absolutely impossible for that estate to be wound up by the executors after the death of the employer. That was a very serious matter; while, on the other hand, it could not be in the slightest degree a disadvantage to the family of an injured workman or to the workman himself if, on the death of the employer, there could be substituted, at the request of the executors the covenant of some substantial insurance company for the pension or annuity. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. SETON-KARR thought the Amendment was one which the Home Secretary should have accepted, for it seemed to him to be perfectly innocent, harmless, and friendly to the Bill. It was partly in the interest of the employer and very largely in the interest of the men. [Opposition cries of "No!"] The provision of a guarantee against the insolvency of an employer must surely be in the interests of the men. He maintained that the objection of the Home Secretary was not sound. A number of small employers, if they were not allowed to transfer their liability in this very satisfactory way, might be called upon to pay a large amount, which would render them insolvent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN confessed that at first he could not see what the object of the Amendment was, and he thought in its present form it was altogether unacceptable. Although he did not know that it actually amounted to a guarantee, yet it did call on the Secretary of State for the first time to give an engagement or a certificate which assumed the solvency of a private institution. That had not been done with regard to friendly societies; it would be a new precedent, and he thought a dangerous one. But he could understand that there was some substance in the Amendment in this respect—that if the Bill remained in its present form, with continuing liabilities, it would involve very considerable difficulties in winding up estates. That appeared to him to be a serious difficulty which the Government ought to take into consideration. He suggested that if the Amendment were withdrawn some alterations would probably be made in the schedule for compensation which might remove the difficulty; but, if not, they would consider before the Report stage in what way the difficulty might be met.

Sir J. JOICEY said he had been rather alarmed at the answer given by the Home Secretary. It was quite evident that the right hon. Gentleman did not really appreciate the importance of the matter.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN said his right hon. Friend had not understood the Amendment as it was drafted.

Sir J. JOICEY said that after the assurance which had been given, he would ask leave to withdraw the Amendment.

Mr. J. W. LOGAN (Leicester, Harborough) hoped the right hon. Gentleman would bear in mind that many of them on that side of the House who supported this Bill did so because they believed that in throwing the responsibility on the employers it would make them take greater care than they did at present.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Committee report progress; to sit again upon Monday next.

EXTRAORDINARY TITHE BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

MERCHANT SHIPPING (UNDERMANNING) BILL.

Third Reading deferred till Monday next.

BERRIEW SCHOOL BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Third Reading [24th May] further adjourned till Monday next.

PRISONS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

POLICE (PROPERTY) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

POOR LAW BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

POST OFFICE (SITES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

FINANCE BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

FOREIGN PRISON-MADE GOODS BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, Etc. [17th May] further adjourned till Monday next.

SCHOOL BOARDS' EXPENSES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

BICYCLES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (ALDERSHOT AND FARNBOROUGH) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [1st April] further adjourned till Monday next.

BURIAL GROUNDS LOANS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [11th May] further adjourned till Monday next.

ISLE OF MAN (CHURCH BUILDING ACTS) BILL [H.L].

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES' JURISDICTION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

POOR LAW FRANCHISE (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

COUNTY SECRETARIES SUPERANNUATION (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday 29th June.

LABOURERS' COTTAGES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 25th June.

BAKEHOUSES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 28th June.

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

BOROUGH FUNDS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 24th June.

CANALS PROTECTION (LONDON) BILL.

Order for Second Reading read, and discharged; Bill withdrawn.

COTTAGE HOMES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday next.

MIDWIVES' REGISTRATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, Etc. [17th February] further adjourned till Monday next.

DISTRICT COUNCILS (WATER SUPPLY FACILITIES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1888) AMENDMENT (No. 2) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1888) AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

VEHICLES (LIGHTS) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS (IRELAND) REGISTRATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 4th June.

POOR LAW OFFICERS' SUPERANNUATION ACT (1896) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till Tuesday next.

ARCHDEACONRY OF LONDON (ADDITIONAL ENDOWMENTS) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [24th February] further adjourned till Monday next.

COTTON CLOTH AND OTHER FACTORIES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

POLICE APPOINTMENT AND PROMOTION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

LABOUR BUREAUX BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

PARISH REGISTERS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

EVICTED TENANTS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday next.

COUNTY GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

MOTION.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT (1880) AMENDMENT (NO. 2).

Bill to amend the Employers' Liability Act of 1880, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Provand, Mr. Lowles, Mr. Martin, Mr. Strauss, Mr. David Thomas, Mr. Ascroft, Mr. Hogan, and Mr. Holland; presented accordingly, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Monday 7th June, and to be printed.—[Bill 272.]

House Adjourned at Ten Minutes after Twelve o'Clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday, 28th May 1897.

EXCISE LICENCES BILL [H.L.].

Second Reading (which stands appointed for Tuesday next) put off to Thursday next.

FINANCE ACTS (WORKS OF ART).

*EARL STANHOPE rose to move:—

> "That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that Her Majesty's Government should take such steps to amend the Finance Acts of 1894 and 1896 as may be necessary to preserve in the country 'such pictures, prints, books, MSS., works of art, and scientific collections, not yielding income, as are of national, scientific, or historic interest.'"

He urged that steps ought to be taken without delay to determine the manner in which Clause 20 of the Finance Act of last year should be administered. Before Easter he had asked the Lord Privy Seal a Question upon the subject, and the noble Lord was unable to give him a satisfactory reply on behalf of the Treasury. The noble Lord said:—

> "The Treasury will be disposed to interpret the clause with due liberality, after taking the advice of experts in such matters, and in process of time a series of precedents must necessarily be accumulated which will be of practical importance in guiding future decisions."

He would point out that if they were to wait for these precedents many pictures of importance and interest might probably, meanwhile, go out of the country, and it would then be too late to rescue them. Clause 20 read as follows:—

> "Where any property passing on the death of a deceased person consists of such pictures, prints, books, manuscripts, works of art, scientific collections, or other things not yielding income appear to the Treasury to be of national, scientific, or historic interest, and is settled so as to be enjoyed in kind of succession by different persons, such property shall not, on the death of such deceased person, be aggregated with other property, but shall form an estate by itself, and while enjoyed in kind by a person not competent to dispose of the same be exempt from estate duty; but if it is sold or is in possession of some person who is then competent to dispose of the same shall become liable for estate duty."

The expression "not yielding income" had led a great many people to suppose that pictures and books, MSS. etc., which were left as heirlooms and which were merely held by a tenant for life would be exempt from estate duty. But the section had not been interpreted by the Treasury in that way. In one case a noble Lord had added a codicil to his will in order to make his valuable pictures heirlooms; they were nevertheless not held exempt from duty. In another case an owner asked to have his pictures scheduled and to be allowed to pay the duty on them during his lifetime, but the application was refused. In administering the clause to which he had referred, the Treasury, he believed, consulted the President of the National Gallery, but that gentleman could not be ubiquitous, and supposing several possessors of art treasures were to die at the same time, how could he be expected to value their collections and to ascertain their historic or national interest? Such a system of administration must break down. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, whose disposition officially was naturally grasping—[laughter]—had said that pictures must be something more than artistic in order to escape duty. The right hon. Gentleman's words were:—

> "Works of art were not excluded from operation of the clause, but they must be of national or historic interest."

What was to become of their Sir Joshuas and of their old Italian masters if the clause was to be interpreted in this rigid way? His objection to the clause thus interpreted was that it had led and would lead in the future to the sale of many pictures and to the dispersion of collections which it was desirable to keep in this country. It would also discourage the purchase of pictures by connoisseurs in the United Kingdom. That pictures should merely change hands did not matter to the public, but it did affect their interests when good pictures left the country to go to the United States or elsewhere. It should be remembered that many of the existing collections were accessible to the public, and that the privilege was highly valued. He did not suggest the adoption of the Italian law, which made it illegal to sell collections of pictures of national and historic interest, but he did say that something ought to be done to encourage owners of works of art to retain possession of them. It was difficult to obtain any definite information as to the number of pictures that were leaving the country, because many of them were not sold at public auctions. Only the other day a famous Holbein was sold at Christie's, and afterwards purchased from Messrs. Colnaghi by M. Bodé, the representative of the great collection at Berlin. Foreign collectors and dealers were very vigilant, and were always ready to buy pictures. They had been told by the Chancellor of the Exchequer that there were two test cases before the Treasury. Those cases were, he believed, the Rufford and the Cobham cases. It was said in the Rufford case that the Death Duties amounted to £100,000, and he supposed that the tapestries and pictures in that historic house would have to be sold in order to pay this large amount. With regard to Cobham Hall, he had received a petition from the Mayor and Corporation of Gravesend, in which they expressed the fear that under the operation of Clause 20 of the Finance Act of 1896 the pictures which had been accessible to the public every week by the courtesy of the Earls of Darnley, eventually might have to be sold and dispersed. The pictures at Cobham formed a very valuable collection, and by the kindness of Sir Henry Longley, one of the executors, he was permitted to quote from a letter of April 12, which he had received, as follows:—

> "We executors claimed to have the collection as a whole exempted, and, I think, with reason, when one looks at the working of the Act of 1896. The three collections of portraits at Cobham, viz.—(1) a collection of Stuart family portraits, 17th century; (2) a similar Bligh collection 18th century (Reynolds, Gainsborough, and Hoppner); and (3) miscellaneous collection of Elizabethan and Jacobean portraits of statesmen, poets, men of letters—are one and all of special historical interest as a series, the first and last being of additional interest as being in a Stuart house. The great collection of Italian and Dutch pictures is much of the same interest as other similar collections, and have, in many cases, their own interest and function as connecting links in the history of Art."

A wider interest was involved than that of a merely class or personal interest, and it was not a Party question. In the other House, hon. Members took a large and liberal view of this question, and an advanced Radical like Mr. Birrell—

> "thought the introduction of the word artistic was rational, and that they ought not to confine the clause merely to things connected with a place or ancestors, but ought to try and preserve in the country works of the kind referred to, because they were of interest to the nation at large."

Sir William Harcourt, on July 8, 1896, said:—

> "If it were found possible in future to make a net to let the small fishes through and to retain the large fishes, he should not object very much to such a proposal."

But the Government were making a net which would destroy all the small fishes and drive the large fishes into other waters. For this reason he thought that some notice ought to be taken of the rule laid down as to the administration of this clause. They were grateful to the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the concession made in Clause 20 last Session, but it did not mean very much. It was calculated to be a relaxation of less than £100,000 a year at the outside. He called attention to the unwisdom of doing anything which would cause the dispersal of historic collections like those at Knowle, Woburn, Petworth, Grosvenor House, Bridgwater House, and Stafford House, and stated that his remedy was a very simple one. He wished to have a permanent consultative Committee appointed to advise the Treasury. It ought to consist of the President of the National Gallery, the Director of the National Portrait Gallery, and a representative of the British Museum, and, perhaps, of the Science and Art Department. The establishment of such a consultative body would save a great deal of correspondence with the Treasury, and of heartburning, and as the proposal was so reasonable, he hoped that the Chancellor of the Exchequer might be inclined to accede it. If he could obtain an expression of opinion among their Lordships, he would certainly go to a Division. Pictures, manuscripts, and scientific collections were not only very valuable, but they were a glory to the country and a source of pride to the people of England. [Cheers.]

THE EARL OF LEVEN AND MELVILLE said that the pictures which were in our family galleries had been to a great extent largely enjoyed by the public during many years. ["Hear, hear!"] He believed that Burlington House alone had provided thousands of pictures of the highest value and artistic merit, which had tended to raise the artistic feeling of the country, and had been otherwise of the greatest benefit. Many of the men who supplied these pictures were landlords whose incomes might have been diminished, and many of whom found it to be extremely difficult to maintain those galleries. It was generally supposed that there was no expense attached to these galleries; but the insurance of pictures of special value alone was a very heavy charge, amounting as it usually did, to 4s. 6d. per cent. This was a great consideration to a man with a gallery worth £100,000, and whose income had been reduced from £10,000 a year to £5,000 or £6,000. This man might have a family of several sons, and he could not run the risk of leaving his heirs to pay the heavy duties which might become due on the parent's death. The case of this man was aggravated by the uncertainty which existed, or, as one man remarked, "No one knows what he will have to pay until he is dead." [Laughter.] If an owner could send a list of pictures to the Treasury for examination he might be able to learn. It was this element of uncertainty which drove away many of the pictures which might otherwise remain in the country. The estimate which the highest authority had given him of pictures that had gone abroad since the passing of the Act of 1894 was £3,500,000. [Cheers.] A few days ago he met a gentleman who said that he was sending a picture abroad which was almost unique; it was considered to be about the second best picture of a very great master. When asked the reason for sending it abroad, the gentleman said:—

> "Because I am offered this large sum. I cannot expose my heir to the risk of the enormous duty he may have to pay; it is far better for me to send it away than to sell it in this country. If you sell a picture in this country, one says, 'Poor soul, he is in rather a bad way, he is selling his pictures'; but if I send them abroad no one knows anything about it, and my heirs are free."

[Laughter.] Was it wise, statesmanlike, or right thus to tax the men who at their own expense supplied the public with this great advantage of seeing the best pictures? He hoped that some means would be found by which an owner of pictures, libraries, and works of art should be able to know before he died what duty his heirs would have to pay. He suggested to the Government whether some system could not be adopted by which an owner might make a small ready-money payment down—say, half per cent.—to free him from all death or other duties on the pictures until they were sold. The present system was not only killing the goose that lays the golden egg; it was worse, it was sending abroad the eggs already laid.

*LORD LECONFIELD remarked that the difficulty he saw in the definition which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had made was that it was extremely uncertain. Of course, any picture that describes or depicts an event of interest in the history of the nation might be said to be an historical picture, but surely the works of the great masters of the past were no less entitled in an important sense to such an appellation. Each individual picture might be described as a chronicle from which the history of the various schools of painting that had existed in Europe for a great length of time might be worked out. Such histories had been of great advantage, not only to past generations, but to the present, as they would be to the future, and, therefore, he thought those pictures ought to come under the definition of historical and receive the same remission. He was very much struck at the dinner of the Royal Academy with a remark of the noble Lord at the head of the Government, when he said it was of advantage that pictures should leave the country, because the artists of this country would be called upon to increase the supply. It was impossible that our artists could make progress in painting if they had not the examples of the great artists of the past always before them. We were said to be a nation that was not given to artistic devolpment as regards designs and patterns. There could be no better study for that than a fine picture; the colouring, everything that would lead to the making of fine designs was there.

He should be glad to see some little concession on the part of the Government in this matter. It would be to the advantage of the nation. Surely art was a thing which ought to be cultivated. It was part of the development of civilisation, and he could see no reason why impediments should be put in the way.

LORD KELVIN, as an ex-President of the Royal Society, desired to point out the great importance of the Motion of the noble Earl so far as scientific collections were concerned. It might have an exceedingly injurious effect upon scientific investigation in this country if the heavy Death Duties were charged upon apparatus for scientific research or upon natural history collections, the property of private owners. Very large sums of money had been spent on private observatories. Members of the House knew well something of what had been done in that way. A large part of the astronomical investigation in the United Kingdom had been performed by amateur astronomers, if he might use the word, who stood at the very head of scientific men in respect of knowledge and skill in scientific investigation. A large amount of money had been spent upon private observatories, on great telescopes, and on other instruments of research which would be subject to exceedingly heavy Death Duties, and the heirs of the proprietors might find it impossible to keep them. The result might be that it would be necessary to sell them; foreign purchasers might get them, and those valuable tools for scientific work might be sent out of England and leave this country so much the poorer in respect of scientific work. The same might also be said of natural history collections. Such collections were of unique value. A man might spend his whole life in the work of making such collections and leave something that was of priceless value in reality and which would be estimated at a very high money figure if the expense involved in creating the collection was to be taken into account. It would be most disastrous that such natural history collections or apparatus for scientific investigation should be subjected to the severe Death Duties that were charged on those to whom was left property which they could use, and which might be sources of income and revenue to the inheritors, when that which was inherited could only be of use through the inheritor devoting himself, as the creator of the collection had devoted himself, to the public good and for the advancement of science. He thought it would be exceedingly bad and in every way undesirable that a duty anything more than merely nominal should be charged in such cases. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE EARL OF CRAWFORD said the treasure house of England was the stalking horse of the foreign dealer at the present time. ["Hear, hear!"] Europe had been ransacked. Spain, Italy, France, and other countries of the Continent contained but a small amount of art treasure, of books, and of manuscripts compared to that which lay in private hands in England. There was greater wealth in this country than in any other in private hands. These dealers, these seekers to purchase objects of beauty and of value, hailed these Death Duties with delight, because they felt that it was certain that in course of time these objects would fall into their possession. He should suggest that all such objects should not be taxed at all. ["Hear, hear!"] All such objects being of a quality that produce no interest or return to their owners—which were a constant source of outlay, whether in the way of keeping them in due order or in premiums to the insurance offices in order to guard aganst the risks of fire or theft—should be left in the safe custody of their owners, without the necessity of their being compelled to sell them owing to the infliction of these terrible duties. There was another way in which the matter might be looked at. When a man died and his executors had to prove his will they had to examine and see what were his assets. Now it frequently happened that in a man's strong box lay the record of a purchase, an investment in a business, in which the money was practically lying idle. That investment at the present moment was valued for probate as lying idle and was returned as nothing whatever. His pictures, his books, his manuscripts lying on his walls and shelves were returned as paying nothing, and yet they were to be taxed according to their utmost value. Again, it was very difficult indeed to say what, in the clause of the Finance Act, was of "national importance" or of "historical interest." Of historical importance, of course, might be said to be a picture which portrays a great event, or it might be a manuscript in the hand of a great man, dealing with a subject which was of great interest to the nation; but he would venture to say that there were pictures which ought not to leave this country which were not necessarily of historical interest. The collection which was made by the late Lord Hertford was not, in a sense, of historical interest to England, and therefore, technically, would not fall within the lines of exemption. Any one might by judicious selection make magnificent collections from the Academy and other galleries—collections which would be worthy of the nation and its art. Such pictures ought not to place a huge burden on the unfortunate heir of the collector, whose ordinary income might, from depression in trade, be greatly reduced at the moment, and who might have no option but to sell the pictures to pay the debt. Allusion had been made to a certain law in Italy, applying to certain districts, which provided that where any collection of pictures or statuary had been thrown open to the public—such, for instance, as the Villa Borghese at Rome—the owner had only a limited interest in the collection, and it could not be dispersed. He did not wish such a law to be enforced in this country, but it had the advantage of keeping pictures in the country, whereas the Finance Act had the very opposite effect. He knew of a case in which a man inherited a large property, consisting of landed estates, commercial interests, a fair collection of pictures, and a large library with many valuable MSS. He also inherited large liabilities in the shape of settlements and mortgages. The commercial interests were of a fluctuating nature; so much so that at one time they produced an income of £160,000, and within a few years not more than £5,000. Certain mortgages were called in at short notice, and the only available asset was the library, and a certain proportion of the books and MSS. had to be sold. Naturally, too, that had to be sold for which there was a demand. He urged that such possessions should be allowed to pass free, for when heavy duties were imposed it became incumbent on the possessor to look to the future and think of his successors. In the case he had alluded to, the person who inherited the books and pictures also inherited his father's love for them, and he who would next inherit them had the same passion for them. There were, therefore, three generations who had done or would do their best to maintain the value of this collection, which had always been freely placed at the disposal of those interested. The MSS. and books were sent all over Europe; at present some were on their way to the Imperial Government of Austria, and others would shortly go to the Imperial Government of Germany. He hoped an appeal would be made which would result in freeing these objects from liabilities which must end in their dispersal, and he could only add that the case which he had mentioned was his own. [Cheers.]

LORD STANLEY OF ALDERLEY said that there were many works of art which had not a national or historic importance, and which could not be left exposed to the operation of the Finance Act without a great restriction being put upon the collection. The noble Marquess at the head of the Government must be rather indifferent to the old masters, for speaking at the last Academy banquet, the noble Marquess said:—

> "I have seen complaints that the old masters are leaving this country rapidly, and that, under the pressure of financial difficulty and severe Chancellors of the Exchequer, the numbers of these artistic treasures which we used to possess are diminishing rapidly. So you see, at all events, that will not be a matter of profound regret, for if the old masters are leaving us, we must always remember that you are at the head of a manufactory of new masters."

The noble Marquess went on to hold out hopes of "undeveloped Raphaels and unsuspected Rubenses" in the society which he was addressing—an idea suggested rather by that of mute, inglorious Miltons than by the pictures exhibited this year, for by common consent the exhibition this year was the worst that had been held for many years. The noble Marquess also praised the liberality of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his freehandedness. This freehandedness resembled that of Robin Hood, who plundered the rich to give some portion as alms to the poor. It was easy to be lieberal to a new collection, when an exhorbitant fine was levied on every Sir Joshua and Gainsborough at the death of its owner. The value of pictures more than of anything else, was a matter of opinion. The Succession Duty Office employed a gentleman called Rossetti to visit and estimate the value of pictures, the object being, if possible, to raise the aggregate amount so that duty could be charged on the higher scale.

THE LORD PRIVY SEAL (Viscount CROSS): I am sure that every Member of the House will be grateful to the noble Lord for bringing forward this Motion, because the matter is of the greatest importance to the country. ["Hear, hear!"] But I do not follow the noble Lord in the terms of the Motion. It is hardly possible for Her Majesty to take any steps beyond the Act of Parliament. Her Majesty could not pass an Act of Parliament, and the Motion ought to point to the action of the Treasury under the Act of Parliament, or to request the Government to amend the Act if necessary. Although I entirely sympathise with everything the noble Lord has said, the Motion is in its terms hardly one which it would be safe to pass. If the terms were altered it might be another matter. A great deal which has been said in this Debate has been really directed against the Act of 1894 and not the Act of 1896. The former Act imposed the Death Duties, and under that Act there might have been great hardship in respect of works of art. But the Act of 1896 was passed to remedy the former Act, to a great extent at all events:—

> "Where any property passing on the death of a deceased person consists of such pictures, books, prints, MSS., works of art, scientific collections, and other things not yielding income as appear to the Treasury to be of national, scientific, or historic interest."

The question was one of administration or of still further amending the present law. If under the present statute these works of art cannot be kept in the country, then let us alter the statute. But if, on the other hand, by way of administration, the Treasury can do more than they have hitherto done, the present Chancellor of the Exchequer, with the views he holds on the matter, will only be too ready to fall in with the views of the noble Lord so far as he can do so under the Act. When I was asked a question on this subject last Session the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not feel able to lay down any special rule. He said he must see how the Act would work before he could tie the hands of his successors. Further consideration of the matter has led the Chancellor of the Exchequer to lay down certain instructions, which were given to the Inland Revenue. Those instructions are:—

> "Gentlemen,—The Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury have had before them your reports, dated respectively the 8th and 15th ult., on applications that certain pictures and works of art bequeathed as heirlooms by the late Mr. R. Wilbraham and by the late Earl of Darnley, may be exempted from estate duty under the provisions of Section 20 of the Finance Act of 1896.
>
> "My Lords consider that this exemption was intended to apply not to collections as a whole but to particular works of art, which are of such national or historic interest that they would be purchased or accepted as a bequest by one of the national collections, and they agree with the suggestion that, before reporting to the Treasury that any particular works of art fall within this definition, you should cause them to be examined by an expert appointed by you, and that you should invite the opinion of the Trustees of the National Gallery or of the National Portrait Gallery on his report, according as the works are represented to be of national or of historic interest. The cost of the expert's inspection should be borne by the executors of the testator's will, and the same rule should apply if the trustees of either gallery find it necessary to send someone to look at the works on their behalf before endorsing the opinion of your expert. In deciding the question whether a picture or series of pictures are of historic interest, my Lords consider that the term may properly be held to cover pictures which, though of moderate artistic merit, directly illustrate the history of a county or of a county family of historical importance. Their Lordships agree with your suggestion that, pending the decision of the Treasury on the question whether the whole or any part of a bequest falls within the exemption of Section 20, the executors should proceed with the valuation of the estate, excluding the works of art which are in question, for consideration later on, but entirely without prejudice. I am further to return to you the letters and enclosures from Messrs. Rowcliffe and Rawle, and from Messrs. Thorold Brodie and Co., and I am to add that those firms have been informed of the instructions now given, and have been requested to place themselves in communication with your board on the subject."

The noble Earl will see that there was a great desire on the part of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to deal fairly with this matter. I am certain that anything he can do within the terms of the Act of Parliament will be done by him to keep those works of art, whether they be pictures, manuscripts, scientific collections, or scientific instruments, in the country. I hope, therefore, my noble Friend will not press his Motion, but will rest content with the general expression of opinion on the subject which he has elicited from all sides of the House and rely upon the assurance of the Chancellor of the Exchequer that he will give as extended an interpretation of the Act as it is possible to give it.

*EARL STANHOPE said the answer of the Lord Privy Seal was in a great measure satisfactory, but he would like to obtain the opinion of the House on his Motion. They had been told that if they had grievances they ought to air them. [Laughter.] Well, here was a real grievance. He therefore begged to move his Motion in a slightly altered form:—

> "That Her Majesty's Government should be invited to take such further steps as are necessary under the Finance Act 1894-96, to preserve in the country 'such pictures, prints, books, manuscripts, works of art, and scientific collections, not yielding income, as are of national, scientific, or historic interest.'"

VISCOUNT CROSS said he really thought the noble Earl might leave the matter in the hands of the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and if his noble Friend found that the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not carry out everything he (Viscount Cross) had said he could again bring forward his Motion.

VISCOUNT CLIFDEN: Yes, but meanwhile Rome is burning. [Laughter.] The noble Lord says we should trust the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Not where it is a matter of taxation. [Laughter.] I hope my noble Friend will press his Motion in its amended form.

Resolved in the negative.

CHURCH PATRONAGE TRANSFER BILL [H.L.].

Considered in Committee (according to Order); reported without amendment; and re-committed to the Standing Committee.

LIGHT RAILWAYS ACT.

THE EARL OF CAMPERDOWN asked the Government whether there was any objection to including in the annual Report by the Board of Trade of their proceedings and of the proceedings of the Commissioners under the Light Railways Act, (1) a Return of the cost to the promoters of each light railway scheme, in a schedule showing how much of the said cost was incurred in payments to agents, counsel, witnesses, and otherwise; and (2) a statement of the number of opponents who made appearance at the local inquiry against each opposed scheme, and whether they were represented by counsel or agents. There was great difference of opinion as to the relative cost of these proceedings, and therefore such a Return would be of great public use.

VISCOUNT CROSS said he was requested to state that the information asked for in the second part of the Question would be included in the annual Report referred to. The Board of Trade, however, had no power to obtain the particulars of cost mentioned in the first part of the Question except in cases—none of which had yet arisen—where the local authorities were the sole promoters. They could not give those Returns, therefore, because they had not got them.

THE EARL OF CAMPERDOWN said he understood from the Light Railway Commissioners that it would be at all events easy to ask the promoters to give such Returns.

VISCOUNT CROSS did not think there would be any objection to ask for them, but they could not promise to get them. [Laughter.] It was undesirable to promise Returns which the Board of Trade had no power to obtain, and for the accuracy of which they could not be made responsible.

THE EARL OF CAMPERDOWN said if they could not get a loaf they must be content with half. If these Returns were asked for, he thought that would effect his object.

JURIES DETENTION BILL.

Question proposed "That the Report of Amendments to this Bill be received."

Clause 3,—

EXTENT OF ACT.

This Act shall not apply to Scotland or Ireland.

Lord COLERIDGE moved to leave out the words "or Ireland," and said it was the desire of both sides that he should do so.

The LORD CHANCELLOR of IRELAND (Lord ASHBOURNE) said his attention had not been directed to the matter, and he did not know what the opinion was in regard to it. He would, however, consider it.

Lord COLERIDGE asked leave to withdraw the Amendment so that he might bring it up on the Third Reading.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Amendments reported (according to Order), and Bill to be Read 3ª on Monday next.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT (1870) AMENDMENT BILL.

Considered in Committee.

On the Motion "That the Bill be Reported without Amendment,"

The LORD PRESIDENT of the COUNCIL (The Duke of DEVONSHIRE): On the Debate on the Second Reading my noble Friend opposite, Lord Kimberley, expressed some apprehension that one effect of the Bill might be to induce the local authorities unduly to lower the assessment. I have made some inquiry into that matter, and I do not think there is any real ground for my noble Friend's apprehension. In the first place, it is one of the duties of the Income Tax Commissioners, and one which I am informed they very carefully discharge, to prevent any such action on the part of the local authorities, and to do all they can to prevent it. Another reason is that the Education Rate is only one of a great many rates, and in most cases only a very small fraction of the whole amount of the local expenditure; therefore the local assessment committee would have very little object in unduly lowering the valuation, because such a proceeding on their part would apparently raise very greatly the amount of all the other rates which it was their duty to levy. I do not, therefore, think there is much foundation for the apprehension my noble Friend expressed.

The Earl of KIMBERLEY: I am afraid I cannot accept that explanation as in any way meeting the case. I must point out, in the first place, that the Income Tax Commissioners have no power whatever over the assessment except as regards the income tax. In the second place, there really is no force in the argument which my noble Friend used, because it is perfectly indifferent to the ratepayers in any given district whether the assessment is high or low, because if it is equally distributed between one property and another as a fair assessment the amount between them will be exactly the same thing. I did not mean to imply that it was likely to be done to a large extent, but it is possible that it may occur.

Bill reported without amendment; Standing Committee negatived; and Bill to be Read 3ª on Monday next.

MERSEY CHANNELS BILL.

Considered in Committee (according to Order); reported without amendment; and re-committed to the Standing Committee.

LAND LEGISLATION (IRELAND).

Order of the Day read for resuming the Debate on the Motion to resolve—

1st. That in the opinion of this House the time has arrived when, in the interests of justice, some compensation should be granted to landowners for the rights of which they have been deprived by the State;

2ndly. That some relief might equitably be afforded to landowners by granting State loans on same terms as those given to land occupiers, to facilitate the purchase by the landlord of the tenant-right or goodwill of the occupier where he is willing to sell such interest, or for any other purposes sanctioned by Parliament—

*LORD CLONBROCK moved "That the Debate be further adjourned until after the Whitsun Recess."

VISCOUNT CLIFDEN said he knew it was no use opposing this Motion, although he was opposed to it in spirit. To put the matter off until after Whitsuntide meant to put it off until next year. They had got the Government "on toast" for once, and if they chose to neglect the opportunity he was afraid they did not deserve another. If he might use a vulgar expression he should say the wild Irish had been "got at."

Motion agreed to.

MARKET GARDENERS' COMPENSATION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Read 1ª; and to be printed.—[No. 101.]

House Adjourned at Six o'Clock, to Monday next, a Quarter before Eleven o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 28th May 1897.

PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS (IRELAND) REGISTRATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred from Friday next till Monday 14th June.

QUESTIONS.

ALIEN IMMIGRATION.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that in the past 40 months 104,656 Foreigners, besides over 30,000 Foreign seamen, have arrived at eastern ports in Great Britain from Europe, not en route for other countries, and mainly as deck or third-class passengers, and that upwards of 35,000 were Russians and Poles, three-fourths of whom came to London; that in 1896 no less than 8,000 of these destitute alien classes settled in this country; and, in such case, if he will endeavour to deal effectively with this Foreign accession to the overcrowded labour market early next Session?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. C. T. RITCHIE, Croydon): My attention has been drawn to the number of alien immigrants arriving in this country, and "not stated to be en route for other countries," and I have no doubt that the figures quoted are substantially accurate. The subject will continue to receive my careful consideration, but I am not in a position to make any promises for next Session.

CLEANING MACHINERY IN MOTION.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been called to a case at Morley, in which the ex-mayor, Alderman Scarth, charged at the instance of the Factory Inspector with a breach of the Factory Act, was fined 1s. and costs by the Borough Bench for allowing the cleaning of machinery in motion by a male young person; and whether a report can be obtained from the inspector on the circumstances of the case?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool): I have received a report from the inspector upon this case. The proceedings were not for allowing the cleaning of machinery in motion, but, under the Act of 1895, for allowing a person to be between the fixed and traversing portions of a self-acting machine without the machine being stopped on the outward run. I am informed that this dangerous practice, now prohibited, has been common in the district, and trust that the publicity given to the present case will lead to its discontinuance. The amount of penalty was a matter within the discretion of the magistrates, but I understand they took into consideration the prevalence of the practice up till now, and the fact that no previous complaints had been made against the defendant.

ANNALY ESTATE (COUNTY LONGFORD.)

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the present position of the purchase proceedings on the Annaly Estate, county Longford; whether the legal difficulties have yet been overcome; are the tenants to receive the full benefit of their agreements for the coming gale; and when may they hope to have their conveyances completed?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): The rental for sale has been lodged with the Land Commission, and the solicitor having carriage of the sale expects to receive a proposal to purchase by the Land Commission within a fortnight. The terms of purchase include the payment by the tenants of their rents up to the gale day preceding the date of payment of the purchase money by the Land Commission. The solicitor having carriage of the sale expects that the vesting orders will be made by the end of June.

QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE.

MR. JOHN AIRD (Paddington, N.): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works (1) if Members with the ladies accompanying them, and also the Press, may be allowed to enter the Houses of Parliament on Jubilee Day by the entrance to the House of Lords; and (2) if arrangements can be made for a military band to play in Palace Yard during the morning?

THE FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): Members of this House and their friends holding tickets for seats on the House of Commons stands can enter the Palace of Westminster on Jubilee Day by New Palace Yard, by St. Stephen's Porch, or by the garden entrance behind the Victoria Tower, and those desiring to come by water can approach by Speaker's Stairs. I think every needful facility will thus be afforded, and I should deprecate the use of the House of Lords entrance in consideration of the unnecessary labour it would cast on the minor officials of that House if they had to be on duty on that day. The answer to the second paragraph of my hon. Friend's Question is in the negative.

MR. M. J. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether it is possible, to mark this year of the Diamond Jubilee, by offering to the senior auxiliary postmen, who are too old for staff appointments, appointments as supernumerary postmen, whereby they would rise from 18s. to 26s. weekly?

*THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston). The Postmaster General regrets that it is not possible to offer appointments as supernumerary postmen to senior auxiliaries who are too old for established appointments. The class of supernumerary postmen is a temporary one, and is being gradually abolished as vacancies occur.

MR. AIRD: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty if his attention has been drawn to the great additional pleasure it would give to Members and their friends if the opportunity were afforded of seeing the illumination of the Fleet on the great Naval Review day; and whether he can make any arrangements in the matter?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover Square): Negotiations are proceeding with one of the companies, whose tender for the conveyance of visitors has been accepted, with a view to affording an opportunity of seeing the illuminations to the Members of both Houses who propose to attend the Naval Review, but the extra cost of such an arrangement would have to be borne by the Members who desired to prolong their stay. [A laugh.]

MR. J. G. HOLBURN (Lanark, N.W.): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate if he is aware that the Local Government Board of England have recently issued general orders empowering boards of guardians to grant additional allowances to the legal poor on the occasion of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee; if he will explain the difference in the law which prevents parish councils in Scotland being similarly authorised; and whether anything can yet be done to assimilate the powers of the Poor Law authorities in both countries on the occasion in question?

Mr. H. T. ANSTRUTHER (St. Andrews Burghs, for The Lord Advocate): In reply to the hon. Member, I need only say that the statutes governing such matters in England and Scotland are quite dissimilar, and that it is obviously impossible to assimilate the law in time for the purpose specified in the Question.

Sir JOHN LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether representatives from the Crown Colonies, as well as from Colonies possessing representative government, have been invited to attend the Diamond Jubilee celebrations together with members of the various Native races; and, if not, why this distinction has been made to the disadvantage of the Crown Colonies; and whether any official position will be assigned to the civil officers of the Ceylon Government and representative Native gentlemen visiting London?

The SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES (Mr. J. Chamberlain, Birmingham, W.): The question of the representation of the Crown Colonies at the celebration of the 60th year of Her Majesty's reign has from the first received my most careful consideration. There is no one in these Colonies occupying an analogous position to that of the Premiers of the self-governing Colonies, and I have arrived at the conclusion that representation will, on the whole, be best effected by the presence in London of representative detachments of their local military forces. Invitations to this effect have accordingly been addressed to all Crown Colonies, including Ceylon, where such a representation appeared practicable, and no official position can therefore be assigned to any civil officers of the Ceylon Government or to the Native gentlemen who are about to visit London. I may add that this decision was communicated to the Governor of Ceylon, and that I learn from him that it was distinctly explained to the Native gentlemen in question before their departure.

Sir BARRINGTON SIMEON (Southampton): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether he will consider the advisability of giving a medal in commemoration of Her Majesty's long reign to members of the Royal Naval Reserve?

The FIRST LORD of the ADMIRALTY: I do not see how I could consider the question of granting a medal in commemoration of her Majesty's reign to the Royal Naval Reserve except in conjunction with a proposal to give such a medal to all branches of Her Majesty's Naval and Military forces.

Mr. JAMES DALY (Monaghan, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, whether, in commemoration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, he will advise the release of the treason-felony prisoners still imprisoned in Irish gaols?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR; There are no treason-felony prisoners in Irish gaols.

Mr. FLAVIN; I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office, whether it is proposed, in commemoration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, to grant a special bounty to the surviving veterans of the Crimean War?

*The FINANCIAL SECRETARY to the WAR OFFICE (Mr. Powell-Williams, Birmingham, S.): I beg to refer the hon. Member to the answer I made yesterday to the hon. Member for Newington, to the effect that no further step in the direction indicated was at present in contemplation.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS.

Mr. D. NICOL (Argyll): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the petitions from the lighthouse keepers of the United Kingdom for an increase of pay and for prospective pensions in their service have now been considered by him, and if he can state what decision he has arrived at?

Mr. RITCHIE: The Board of Trade are now engaged in considering the recommendations of the lighthouse authorities with regard to the position of the lighthouse keepers in their service, but having regard to the varying circumstances in each case, it must be some time before a decision can be arrived at.

STATIONERY OFFICE.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL (Cavan, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether any complaints have reached him from the various classes of clerks in

Her Majesty's Stationery Office as to their employment on duties of a superior nature to those specified in the regulations under which they were appointed: whether in one branch of that Department clerks of the old establishment, clerks of the second division, abstractors, and boy copyists are employed side by side on precisely similar duties; and whether considering the long period that has elapsed since the staff of this Department has been re-organised, he will consider the advisability of appointing a Departmental Committee of Inquiry?

*MR. HANBURY: No, Sir; I am not aware of such complaints by the various classes of clerks referred to. I am assured that in no branch of the Stationery Office do the several classes of clerks named work together on precisely similar duties. It is the fact that the work and the conditions in which it is done have much changed since the last rearrangement in 1879, and I have assented to a suggestion which the Controller recently made to me that the organization of his office should now be inquired into by a Departmental Committee.

AMERICAN CATTLE.

MR. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan, N.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture if he can explain upon what principle American cattle intended for slaughter at the port of debarkation may be landed at Liverpool or Glasgow and not at Belfast; and, whether, in the interest of Irish victuallers, he will undertake to modify the rules so that foreign cattle may be landed in Belfast?

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. WALTER LONG, Liverpool, West Derby): The matter to which the hon. Member refers is not within my own jurisdiction but within that of the Irish Privy Council. I answered a question respecting it on the 24th July last, and I shall be happy to hand the hon. Member a copy of the reply I then made.

MR. G. W. WOLFF (Belfast, E.) asked whether it was not the fact that the Irish authorities were not averse to these cattle landing at Belfast, but that the right hon. Gentleman had frightened them by saying that if a single case of disease occurred it would stop the importation of all Irish cattle into England?

*MR. LONG: I am not prepared to reply on behalf of the Irish Department; but, as far as my action goes, all I did was to intimate to the Irish Government that if they ran the risk certain results might follow, and that if they did follow certain things would happen.

POST OFFICE ESTABLISHMENTS.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster-General, whether he is aware that postmen are to-day being passed over for stripes for irregularities, already expiated, committed more than four years ago; and, if so, whether that portion of the Inter-departmental Report on Post Office Establishments referring to unblemished character for five years can be so modified as to insure to these postmen the issue of their stripes now due, and be not made to act retrospectively?

*MR. HANBURY: A good conduct stripe can be earned only by five years' good conduct, and the Postmaster General is not prepared to modify the regulation in the manner suggested.

POTATO CROP (LISTOWEL DISTRICT.)

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) if he is aware that the potato crop was seriously injured by heavy rains and other causes in the Listowel Union last harvest; and (2) whether, in view of the possibility of the blight setting in from the injured condition of the seed planted this year, the Guardians of the Listowel Union will be allowed to purchase a number of sprayers for the protection of the potato crop from blight?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I believe the fact is as stated in the first paragraph. As regards the second paragraph, there is no legal authority by which the Guardians are empowered to expend the rates of the Union in purchasing spraying machines for the use of occupiers of land in the various electoral divisions of the Union. I may add, however, that the Congested Districts Board proposes this year to apply a sum of £1,000 towards supplying spraying materials within the congested districts.

CIVIL SERVICE (TEMPORARY MEN COPYISTS).

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury if he will state the date when the present class of temporary men copyists were first advertised for by the Civil Service Commissioners in the public Press; the date of the first public examination for temporary men copyists; and the date when the first batch of successful candidates were registered by the Civil Service Commissioners?

*MR. HANBURY: The first notice of examinations being held for temporary copyists (then called writers) was issued 15th August 1870, inviting applicants to present themselves for examination on any Thursday or Friday during August or September. A large number of applicants attended accordingly for examination in the weeks ending August 20th and 27th, and on August 30th. The Commissioners passed a minute, directing that the names of 18 successful in the examinations should be registered, as the inquiries respecting age, health, and character, were completed. Names were thus registered on September 3rd, 6th, 8th, and later dates. This register of temporary men copyists was closed in December 1886 (on the issue of the Treasury Minute giving bonuses for good service and gratuities on retirement). Since then, 745 men, then serving as temporary copyists, have obtained permanent appointments in the Civil Service (as "Abstractors," or otherwise) and only 122 are now serving as temporary copyists.

IRISH MAIL SERVICE.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, if he is aware that great inconvenience is caused by the early hour at which the Sunday mail train leaves Limerick for Tralee; and whether the Postmaster General will allow the railway company to change the hour of departure to a more convenient one?

*MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General is not aware that inconvenience is caused by the earliness of the hour at which the night mail train is dispatched from Limerick to Tralee on Sundays. The dispatch is made at 7.30 a.m., 2 hours 40 minutes later than on weekdays. Tralee itself is served by an earlier train from Mallow; but there is reason to believe that if the train from Limerick were made later on Sundays than at present, complaints would be received as to the later delivery of the correspondence of the towns between Limerick and Tralee. Under these circumstances, the Postmaster General does not see his way clear to agree to a later dispatch of this train on Sundays.

ROYAL CANAL HARBOUR, LONGFORD.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland whether he can now state the result of the promised investigation of their statutes by the Midland Great Western Railway Company on the subject of the fencing of the Royal Canal Harbour at Longford; and whether the people of Longford may hope for anything being done in the matter?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND: I am informed that the Midland Great Western Railway Company have been advised that they are under no legal obligation to fence the canal, nor can they legally so fence the canal as to prevent reasonable access to it, or to do any act which would obstruct its navigation. This advice cannot, of course, interfere with such legal rights as the Town Commissioners have, to put up, for the protection of the public, a fence on the township property—provided the same be not an obstruction to the navigation.

IRISH CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS.

MR. SERJEANT HEMPHILL (Tyrone, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether there is any money provided by Parliament for the publication of ancient chronicles and memorials connected with the history of Ireland; whether he is aware that there are several most valuable ancient Irish chronicles and documents still unpublished, whilst large sums have been annually granted for the publication of like documents connected with the history of England and Scotland; and whether a like provision will be made in future for the publication of ancient Irish chronicles and memorials.

*MR. HANBURY: For many years, since about 1825, provision has been made by Parliament for the publication in full of public and private documents connected with the history of Great Britain and Ireland prior to the reign of Henry VIII., forming what is known as the Rolls Series. Of these the Irish have formed a considerable proportion; and over and above these the Celtic documents have been provided for by special Parliamentary grants, while the Royal Irish Academy (who deal with them) receive, in money and housing, a subsidy of over £2,000 a year. We have received no representations as to important Irish documents still unpublished. This branch of antiquarian work is being replaced by that of calendaring official documents of public interest; but of the only two new works which have been undertaken since 1885, one is wholly, and the other mainly, Irish. Private collections of historical documents are dealt with by the Historical Manuscripts Commission, who, I observe, are at work on the Ormonde papers and on the Acts of Queen Elizabeth's Privy Council in Ireland. The right hon. and learned Member may be interested to know that we have just bought for the Irish Record Office some State papers of about two centuries back at the sale of the Phillips library. ["Hear, hear!"]

POSTAL ORDERS.

MR. G. B. HUDSON (Herts, Hitchin): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General whether he is aware that the Postal authorities refuse to pay halfpennies in postal orders although a half-penny stamp is affixed to an order, causing inconvenience to those forwarding remittances by post where an exact sum is required, such as in the payment of rates; and whether this rule can be done away with?

*MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General is aware that the payment of half-pennies on postal orders is refused, and he would refer the hon. Member to the rule on the subject which appears at page 435 of the Post Office Guide. One difficulty was that many postal orders were passed through bankers and they did not pay half-pennies. In view of the inconvenience which would arise if the practice were changed, the Postmaster General regrets he is not able to do away with the rule.

ZANZIBAR.

MR. JOSEPH A. PEASE (Northumberland, Tyneside): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether, under the decree issued by the Sultan of Zanzibar on 6th April last, British officers have been appointed to watch the cases and to prevent injustice, in accordance with the instructions sent to Mr. Hardinge on 10th February by Lord Salisbury, in each of the district courts on the Islands of Pemba and Zanzibar; and, if so, whether such officers are carrying out this work?

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (MR. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): In accordance with the recommendation of Her Majesty's Government, Mr. Hardinge proposed that Mr. Last, who has had large experience in the interior of the island of Zanzibar, and Archdeacon Farler, late of the Universities Mission, should be appointed for Zanzibar and Pemba respectively; and they are believed to be now engaged upon these duties.

FUGITIVE SLAVES (BRITISH EAST AFRICA PROTECTORATE).

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY (Devon, Honiton): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's representatives in the Coast strip of the British East Africa Protectorate have been in the habit of issuing formal documents giving to the bearers permission to proceed to given places to search for slaves, on which permits they have levied a fee; and, whether runaway slaves fetched by soldiers in British employ, as wanted by the Commissioner, with letters signed by the Commissioner, have after their surrender been taken before British Courts for proof of ownership, and, after proof, handed over to their masters?

*SIR CHARLES DILKE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he is acquainted with the manner in which Her Majesty's Representatives administering the Coast strip of the British East Africa Protectorate over a length of 200 miles have hitherto exercised the discretion vested in them to claim or not to claim fugitive slaves; whether British subjects have been compelled to surrender fugitive slaves by the British authorities, and have in fact surrendered great numbers of such slaves; and whether the recent direction to Her Majesty's Representatives to conform to the terms of the Brussels Act will prevent such practices in future?

*MR. CURZON: Under the system which till lately prevailed in the mainland dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, legally held slaves who had run away without justification or excuse were restored to their owners. More recently the British Administrator has received instructions to exercise his discretion in each case as it occurs. The hon. Member is no doubt aware that the abolition of the legal status of slavery is confined to the insular dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar. It would not at present be possible to carry into effect such a measure on the mainland. Her Majesty's Representatives have instructions to conform to the provisions of the Brussels Act; but as I pointed out the other day, they do not apply to the majority of the cases to which allusion appears to be made in the two Questions.

DISTRESS RELIEF WORKS (CO. CAVAN).

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether any, and if so what, steps have been taken to complete the public road in the electoral divisions of Benhack and Templeport, in the Bawnboy (Co. Cavan) Union, which was commenced during the period of relief of distress works in 1894-95; whether he is aware that the sum of £50, voted by the Treasury to complete the road, had to be returned because the work could not be finished within the financial year; and whether, under all the circumstances, and seeing that the road has already cost a very large sum of money, yet is wholly useless for the want of surface metalling, he will again ask the Treasury to re-open the matter and advance the necessary amount of money to complete this useful public convenience?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member's previous question of the 1st May 1896 on this subject, and must decline to ask the Treasury to re-open the matter.

LOAN FUND BOARD (IRELAND).

MR. JASPER TULLY (Leitrim, S): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state why the annual Report of the Irish Loan Fund Board for 1896 has not yet been presented to Parliament; and whether he can indicate when it will be possible for Members to obtain copies of this Report?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The Report is now practically complete, and will be presented with as little delay as possible.

MULLINGAR UNION.

MR. TULLY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Local Government Board last year cancelled the medicine contract in Mullingar Union, and declared the local contractor unfit to hold the contract, on account of the system of overcharging practised, the Local Government Board pointing out that the local contractor charged £70 for drugs which Messrs. Leslie, Dublin, tendered to supply for £40; whether the Local Government Board have sanctioned the action of the Guardians this year in voting the medicine contract to the same local contractor, although there were five lower tenders from competent and respectable houses in Dublin, Sligo, and Cork; and whether he can state the reasons that have induced the Local Government Board to sanction this year what they cancelled last year?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The reasons for the termination of the medicine contract last year were explained by me in answer to the hon. Member's previous question of the 26th January. Boards of Guardians are at liberty to enter into Union contracts, including the supply of medicines, without the sanction of the Local Government Board. The Board have not expressed their sanction to this year's contract, but should it hereafter be found that overcharges are made in connection with the contract the Board would then take cognizance of the matter.

IRISH ANTIQUITIES.

MR. WILLIAM LECKY (Dublin University): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education whether a superintendent of the Irish Antiquities in the Science and Art Museum, Dublin, has yet been appointed; and, if not, when it is expected that such an appointment will be made; and if he can state how much of the grant in aid, amounting to £3,300, which is placed on the votes for the Dublin Science and Art Museum and National Library, it is proposed to allocate to the section of the Museum devoted to Irish antiquities, or whether the increase of the vote by a sum of £900 over the last financial year is meant to be expended on adequately displaying the Museum of Antiquities transferred from the Royal Irish Academy's house?

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): The Committee of Council hope to be able to announce the appointment at an early date. No part of the sum of £3,300 is separately allocated to the Irish Antiquities Section. None of the grant can be spent on the structure of the Museum.

GAMBLING IN PRODUCE FUTURES.

MR. W. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade, whether he has received or asked for any reports from British Consuls stationed in the capitals of the various European nations which have legislated or are considering legislation respecting gambling in futures of produce: and, whether he will cause such inquiry to be made and reported to this House?

MR. RITCHIE: Reports have been called for from Her Majesty's Representatives in the capitals of the countries referred to, and the replies are now being received.

COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, DUBLIN.

MR. FIELD: I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education whether it is contemplated to restore the College of Science, Dublin, to its original constitution as embodied in the Report of the Commission held in 1866; and whether, as that report was drawn up and signed by the best authorities of local requirements, including Dr. Sullivan, Sir Robert Kane, Professor Tyndall, and Lord Rosse, being amongst the experts, the proposed new college will be included amongst the institutions to be governed by local authority?

SIR JOHN GORST: The college is carried on in accordance with the Report referred to, with some slight modifications. The Report did not contemplate its being governed by local authority.

DELAGOA BAY ARBITRATION AWARD.

MR. HENNIKER HEATON (Canterbury): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he can state when the Delagoa Bay Arbitration Award will be promulgated; and whether, seeing that eight years have passed since the claim came before the Jurists at Berne, Switzerland, he will explain the cause of the delay?

*MR. CURZON: I cannot yet say when the Award will be given. Delay has been caused by the successive applications for postponement which have been made by both parties to the arbitration, and by the necessity which had arisen for sending an expert out to report upon the Delagoa Bay Railway and other South African lines.

MAGNETIC OBSERVATORY (GREENWICH).

LORD HUGH CECIL (Greenwich): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether any steps have been taken to fix the site of the new Magnetic Observatory at Greenwich?

MR. AKERS-DOUGLAS: Yes, Sir; and a site has been selected with the concurrence of the Astronomer Royal. May I take this opportunity of stating that Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify her consent to the handing over of the Ranger's Lodge at Greenwich to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and it will, in future, form part of the Hereditary Land Revenues of the Crown? That portion of Greenwich Park, some 15 acres in extent, which has hitherto formed part of the grounds annexed to the Ranger's Lodge, Her Majesty has been pleased to throw into the Royal Park for the use of the public, and I may say that it will add very materially, both in extent and otherwise, to the beauty of the park. Her Majesty's gracious act will, I am confident, be duly appreciated by the House.

ARMY REGULATIONS (ST. PATRICK'S DAY).

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if it is the intention of the authorities to issue regulations with regard to the wearing of the shamrock on St. Patrick's day by soldiers of Irish nationality in Her Majesty's Army?

MR. POWELL-WILLIAMS: It is not intended to issue any regulation specially affecting the wearing of emblems by Irish soldiers.

NAVAL MANŒUVRES.

MR. FLAVIN: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether it is the intention of the authorities in the coming Naval manœuvres to direct any of the Fleet to visit Tarbert Bay, on the coast of Kerry?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY: No decision has been arrived at as to the places to which Her Majesty's ships will be sent in the coming Naval Manœuvres.

RURAL POST MESSENGER (DISMISSAL).

MR. MACALEESE: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, what were the grounds for the dismissal of Rural Messenger Corley, of Emyvale, who discharged the duties of letter-carrier between Emyvale and Mullan for a period of four years without a single complaint having been made against him; and will employment be found for him when the staff of rural messengers is being increased?

*MR. HANBURY: It can scarcely be said that the man was dismissed. When the situation was recently converted into an established appointment, imperfect information respecting Curley was furnished, and this led to another person being selected. I have made inquiries and find that the imperfect information respecting Curley (not Corley) was owing to his being thought to be another man who had only one leg. But upon fuller information being forthcoming, steps were taken to reverse the decision, and Curley, who was placed on the duty on Monday the 24th instant, will be appointed if he can obtain the necessary Civil Service certificate.

SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.

LORD WARKWORTH (Kensington, S.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he is able to state what course the Government propose to take in view of the unanimous Report from the Select Committee on Museums of the Science and Art Department, with regard to the serious danger of destruction by fire to which the collections at the South Kensington Museum are exposed?

MR. T. SKEWES-COX (Surrey, Kingston): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury what steps are proposed to be taken to forthwith protect the collections at South Kensington Museum, which are described in the recent Report of the Committee as priceless, against loss or damage from fire, having regard to the Report submitted on the subject by the Select Committee on the Museums of the Science and Art Departments?

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) asked when the authorities first became aware of the danger from fire, and whether they had continued to add to the collection thus exposed to danger?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): In reference to the Question just put to me by my hon. Friend, I must ask for notice. With regard to the Questions on the Paper, I have to say that the Report is engaging the serious attention of the Government. ["Hear, hear."]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

MR. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he will give an assurance that the Education Vote will not be taken until after the Whitsuntide Recess?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said he hoped the Education Vote would be taken shortly after Whitsuntide, not before, but he could give no promise as to the day.

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON (Manchester, N.E.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury when he proposes again to take the Army Estimates; and, if he will be so good as to arrange to resume the discussion of the Vote for the Secretary of State's salary on the Friday following Her Majesty's Commemoration, or as soon after as may be convenient?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said he thought it would be convenient to resume the discussion of the Army Estimates next week. They would not, however, take Vote 13—War Office Salaries—until after Whitsuntide, and he would give his right hon. Friend ample notice of the date when it would be taken.

MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.) asked whether they were to understand that the Education Vote would not be taken in the third week in June, which week, they had been told, would be reserved for non-controversial Supply?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY could not give any pledge that they would not take the Education Vote in that week.

COLONEL MILWARD (Stratford-upon-Avon) asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether, having regard to the general wish that the Committee stage of the Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill should close before the Whitsuntide recess, and to the possibility in that event of an extra holiday on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of June, it was not desirable to suspend the Twelve o'clock Rule next week?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I think it is a matter of some importance that the House should consider what steps we ought to take with the Committee stage of this Bill; not that I for a moment suggest that any undue length of time has been taken up in discussing the Bill, for I admit the discussion has been of a very businesslike character, but because, unless we succeed in finishing the Committee stage before the holidays, it will be necessary for us to meet on Monday the 14th, and go on with it then. That, I feel sure, would be very inconvenient, and I think it would be worth our while making a little extra effort next week in order to avoid that necessity. If we succeed in finishing the Committee stage before we separate for the holidays, I suggest we should not meet until Thursday, the 17th, and that then we should take up Supply. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR C. DILKE pointed out that there were several controversial points to raise on the schedule to the Bill.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I admit that that is so. Of course, if we suspend the Twelve o'clock Rule, it will not be for the purpose of any prolonged sitting, but simply to gain an additional three-quarters of an hour or an hour. I hope the House will consider the alternative. Both alternatives undoubtedly are open to some objection, but I think the general convenience of the House would be met by a little extra sitting upon the three nights which still remain before the holidays.

MR. J. P. FARRELL asked whether it was the intention of the Government to take Irish Supply on the day of reassembling?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: No, Sir.

MR. J. J. CLANCY (Dublin Co., N.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury when the promised Bill dealing with technical education in Ireland will be introduced, and what is the estimated amount of money to be disposed of under the provisions of the Measure?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: The proposals with respect to technical education which the Governmen intended to introduce were in connection with the Agriculture and Industries Bill. That Bill, as the hon. Gentleman knows, has been dropped, and of necessity, therefore, the technical education proposals dropped with it for the present Session.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

SUPPLY.

[TENTH ALLOTTED DAY.]

Considered in Committee.

[The Chairman of Ways and Means, Mr. J. W. Lowther, in the Chair.]

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES, 1897-8.

Class I.

1. £132,291, to complete the sum for Survey of the United Kingdom.

Mr. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.) called attention to the case of the Civil assistants of the Ordnance Survey, who, according to the information supplied to him, had been unfairly deprived of their rights to promotion and superannuation under certain rules introduced some 25 years ago. He believed that the rule against the Civil assistants was made by the then head of the Survey on the distinct understanding that the Survey would be completed in or about the year 1880, and that therefore it was not desirable ot take on any more assistants in that Department who could be treated as permanent Civil Servants of the Crown. This was now 1897, and the Ordnance Survey was not completed; in fact, he was informed it might go on for an indefinite number of years. Perhaps the responsible Minister would state to the Committee the view he took in regard to the claim of these men.

*Mr. HANBURY thought the hon. Member was under some misapprehension as to the real merits of the case. As he understood, these Civil assistants who were without pension rested their claim to pension upon two grounds. They maintained, in the first place, that when they entered the service they thought it was a pensionable service. No doubt up to the year 1870 this had been a pensionable service, but in that year Sir Henry James, who was then Director of the Survey, came to the conclusion that the survey ought to be completed in about ten years—about 1880. That being so, it was absurd to enter men who would be pensionable; and, consequently, orders were given by the Office of Works, who were then the controlling authority of the Survey, to the effect that no more men should be admitted upon pensionable terms. That Order was sent to Sir Henry James on September 29, 1870, but it was not made known to the men generally until about the end of August, 1872, when the Order was officially announced in the House, and a Parliamentary Paper was issued stating publicly the effect of the Order. The men apparently refused to treat that as an official notice, and on January 4, 1873, an official notice was issued to the men warning them as to the Order that had been given. The men who had entered the service between September 29, 1870, and January 4, 1873, contended that between those dates they had had no official intimation that they were not pensionable, and they claimed pension. In 1894 that claim was conceded. Now, however, those who entered the service since January 4, 1874, said that, although no doubt they had full notice, they were in the same position with regard to pay as the men who had entered during the two previous years, and they ought to be treated in exactly the same way. The answer was complete—namely, that they entered the service with full knowledge of their position. Then they said, "Yes, that may be true, but we are paid on the same terms as those men." That, again, was not exactly accurate, because there were two sets of men who were receiving the same wages. There were those who had received the same salary and prospective pension in addition, owing to an alleged mistake which did not exist in the case of the men who had complained; and the only other men who received the same rate of salary and pensions in addition were the men of higher position, who had been promoted to supervising and superintending posts. There was, therefore, no analogy between the two cases. Another point raised was that in 1870 this service was made a non-pensionable service, under the idea that the ordnance survey would come to an end in about ten years. That was perfectly true, but what had happened in that time? In the first place, all the men whose work was necessarily permanent were pensionable as it was. Then, again, they found that the work was quite as well, and perhaps better, done by a non-pensionable staff, where they could dismiss the men either if they were not required or their work was not quite up to the mark. According to the Report of the Committee of 1891, the number of pensionable men was 300, as compared with 1,350 who were not pensionable, and it would be perfectly ridiculous to put the whole of these 1,350 men (or whatever the present number was) when they had no special claim whatever, in exactly the same position as the pensionable men. He was bound to say that they had not very much encouragement to give pensions, because some of the trouble with regard to this staff had really arisen with the men who were pensionable already. The Committee of 1891 had gone into this case most carefully, and they reported that these men were receiving the full pay their services required, that there was a great demand to enter the service, that sons of civil assistants themselves were constantly applying to be put on the list, and that many who had left the service were constantly asking to be restored. That showed that the men were receiving adequate and full salary. The Committee also said it would be a great disadvantage to the service if these men were pensioned, because undoubtedly, in a great number of these cases, the work would be quite as well done by the Royal Engineers, and that in the case of vacancies, it would be more advantageous to the service, instead of having pensionable men, to employ Royal Engineers in their place. A further argument raised by the men was that if the Government could not pension them all, at any rate, they should pension those who had been 15 years in the service. That, of course, gave away the case of all the men who had not had 15 years' service. It was an admission that their salaries were adequate. He did not know why men with that amount of service should be treated differently to men of shorter service. They must have the whole of the men in a similar position, either pensionable or not pensionable. As a matter of fact the men who had served 15 years were already in a somewhat better position than the men who had not served that time, because on their retirement after 15 years' service they were entitled to a very considerable gratuity. Then, again, the men raised the point that they had been in continuous employment and that, therefore, they ought to be put on the pension list. The answer to that was equally plain. They had had the benefit of being in this continuous employment, a benefit which they might not have had if they had been in private service. Their case by no means differed from that of a large number of men in the employment of the Government.

SIR BARRINGTON SIMEON (Southampton) was sure the Financial Secretary to the Treasury would not think he was in any way contradicting him, or being at all uncivil, if he said that the account he had given of the knowledge of these men, many of whom were in his own constituency, when they joined that they were not going into a pensionable service, was perfectly different from that which they themselves gave. He could bring forward many of these temporary civil assistants who would take their oath that they joined this service believing, and having every possible good reason to believe, that they were joining a service in which they would get pensions at the age of 60 years. He had seen in Colonel Leech's own handwriting a letter in which he said that the taking of pensions off these men was not a publication, but was simply a direction to the Director of the Ordnance Survey Department, the then Sir Henry James. They were told that these boys might have found out from the Parliamentary Papers that they were joining a survey which was not pensionable, but how were these young clerks to get hold of Parliamentary Papers at the age of 14 to find out whether, when they were 60 years old they were to have a pension or not. He absolutely maintained that proper steps had not been taken, and he did not know that they had been taken at this moment, to tell these men that they were not to receive a pension. They were told that the pay was so good that pensions were absolutely unnecessary. When a man was 29 years old and had got 15 years' service he had a pay of 30s. a week. If he had 30 years' service his pay was 50s. if he had been of the best possible conduct. They had to remember that every one of these men was an educated man, and that he quite naturally wished to educate his children as well as, or better than, he had been educated himself. He maintained that it was absolutely impossible for a middle-aged man, out of 50s. a week, with children to educate and himself to keep respectable, to save money. He completely, but as politely as he could, denied the idea that the pay was sufficient to make pensions unnecessary. The right hon. Gentleman had told them—and he quite allowed that he must know—that a great many sons of these men were anxious to go into the same service as their fathers. All that he could say was that a very great many sons of these men were not anxious to go into the same service. The number of sons of men in this employment who wanted to go as clerks in the railway and said they were better treated than they would be in their father's service was perfectly annoying at times when the postbag came in in the morning. He was sorry the right hon. Gentleman had not been able to say anything that would have been comforting to the hearts of these people. He supposed the only thing to do was to hammer away year after year, because it was absolutely necessary that the state of these people should be kept as much as possible before Parliament. He hoped that some day the Treasury would change their minds and be a little more soft-hearted to these most deserving, but most necessitous, people.

MR. J. J. CLANCY (Dublin Co., N.) agreed with the Secretary to the Treasury that there was no distinction between those men who had 15 years' service, and those who had not, but he thought that the claim on behalf of these men for pensions was sustainable on another ground. The work in which these men were employed was of a peculiar and exceptional character, and required a very special training, and when they ceased to work at this employment they were absolutely useless for any other employment. He desired to press that point on the right hon. Gentleman because he had not touched it at all. He wanted to ask him this question. Were the Treasury under the circumstances, knowing that these were educated men—personally, he knew several of these men to be men of education and real gentlemen—were, the Treasury, knowing the character of these men, and knowing that after 15 or 20 years' service they would be absolutely helpless and idle, and if they had not saved money absolutely without resources—were they going, under these circumstances, to stand on the strict letter of their contract? He would admit for the moment the strength of the point made by the Secretary to the Treasury as to the men having knowledge of the fact that they were to be without pensions; though, indeed, he must say that the reply of the hon. Member for Southampton on that subject came home to him with peculiar force, because he knew, as a matter of fact, that these public notices, supposed to be given, did not come within the knowledge of the persons affected. But, admitting for the moment that these men knew on entering the service that they were entering a non-pensionable service, was it in the public interest to hold them to it? Putting the public interest aside, was it common justice to take the services of a man of special education and exceptional training, who at the end of 15 or 20 years' service, when he lost his employment, would be absolutely without resources and without the means of earning his bread—was it common justice for the Treasury to say, "Oh! we made a contract with you 20, or it may be 30, years ago; you knew you were entering an unpensionable service, and we will bind you now to the strictest terms of that contract." It would be a mean and shabby performance on the part of the Treasury of this great country, which was able to spend on one shell fired into Crete the other day, as much money as would provide pensions for the whole of these people. There was another reason why these men were entitled to generous treatment in the matter of pensions. The right hon. Gentleman had hinted at the desirability of employing Royal Engineers to do some of this work according as vacancies arose. He was informed that when vacancies had occurred, men on the temporary list, well qualified by training and character—had been passed over, and instead of appointing these men to the posts, and thereby mitigating to that extent the grievance of having no pension, they had dragged in men of the Royal Engineers, men who had been worn-out in the service, and who had a pension already, and who, in his opinion, were not fit for the work, at all events, not as fit as the persons who had been passed over.

*MR. HANBURY wished to correct the hon. Member. In 1894 there were 43 civil assistants appointed, as against 12 Royal Engineers.

MR. CLANCY said that was just his case. Why should any of these vacancies be given to the Royal Engineers? Why should they not be all given to the temporary civil assistants? It was out of the nature of things that these Royal Engineers, after long service in other parts of the world, and who were already provided for, should be as fit for the duties as men who had specially trained; and it was most unjust that they should be promoted over the heads of men who had practically spent the whole of their lives in doing the drudgery of the Department. The course pursued seemed to him to be shabby, mean, and unjust, and as long as he was in the House he should never cease to say so, until the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary to the Treasury or some one else representing his Department, gave way upon this question.

Mr. C. J. MONK (Gloucester) said that in spite of what had been urged, he thought the Committee would be of opinion that the reply of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary to the Treasury was quite unanswerable. The appeal to justice could hardly come fairly from hon. Gentlemen opposite. He thought that justice had been fully done to the employés of the Ordnance Survey. He rose, however, for the purpose of asking how long the Survey would be continued? Parliament was informed many years ago that it would probably be concluded in 1880. Seventeen years had passed, and he should like to know if the right hon. Gentleman could give them any idea how many years more it would be prolonged. He observed that there was an increase in the estimate this year of upwards of £7,000. That increase probably arose under the head of stores. There was an increase of £2,500 for maps and printer's ink; and he had hopes that perhaps this might be an indication that the labours of the Survey were approaching an end, and that the time had arrived for finishing and printing off the maps. But he also saw a new item this year—"contract work." Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman would explain what part of this work was done by contract. His chief object, however, was to inquire how long the Ordnance Survey was likely to be prolonged?

Mr. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.) said he should like to hear some statement in reference to the claims of these officers from the President of the Board of Agriculture, who was responsible.

*Mr. HANBURY: The Treasury is responsible on the question of pensions; but with the exception of the amount referred to by my hon. Friend behind, the amounts are already passed.

Mr. DILLON said the Secretary to the Treasury had, no doubt, with his usual ability, made a case against throwing an additional charge on the Treasury. But he trusted that before the discussion was over they would have some statement from the head of the Department responsible for the work of the Survey. The Secretary to the Treasury made one remarkable statement. He said it had been reported by a Departmental Committee, which sat, he believed, in 1892, that the work was quite as well done by non-pensionable men as by men who were drawing pensions. That was a very wide issue to raise, because hon. Members knew there were many people in this country who opposed pensions of all kinds in the Civil Service, and if they were to be told that sort of thing with regard to one Department of the Civil Service, they would begin to ask, "Why not extend the principle to other Departments of the Civil Service?" The right hon. Gentleman went on to say that in spite of the fact that these men knew they were not going to have pensions, and that their salaries were fixed at a certain figure—which appeared to him to be very moderate—still plenty of men were willing to enter the service. Well, that argument, carried to its full extent, would justify sweating. ["Hear, hear!"] They knew well that with the competition which existed in this thickly populated country, they might probably do away with pensions in the Civil Service altogether, and reduce salaries at the same time, and yet be able to get plenty of poor fellows who were anxious to get in as long as they could earn a subsistence allowance. But that was not the point. The right hon. Gentleman had not, in his judgment, satisfactorily stated what were the grounds on which this Department of the Civil Service was to be treated worse than any other Department. The only attempt he had made at giving a reason for this discrimination as against the civil assistants of the Ordnance Survey Department was that some time ago it was the opinion of Sir Henry James—then the head of the Department—that his Department was going to come to an end in 1880, and that, therefore, it was unjust and unwise to the finances of the country to take on a fresh number of pensionable servants in a Department that was going to cease—and accordingly a minute was made enforcing the system of giving no pensions to the civil assistants. But it had turned out that the opinion of Sir Henry James was not a well-founded opinion. The Ordnance Department had not come to an end in 1880, and, as the hon. Gentleman who had just spoken had pointed out, in 1897, not only were there no signs of its coming to an end, but there was an actual increase of expenditure. At the present moment there were 1,600 Civil assistants at work in the Ordnance Survey. In the Report of the Departmental Committee of 1892 it was stated that the question of superannuation was not one of the points referred to the Committee for consideration, but in the course of the proceedings several protests were made by witnesses against its exclusion, and the Committee thought it right to draw attention to the fact that this could not be regarded as a temporary Department of the Civil Service, but that it was necessary to maintain it as a permanent Department, and that although the question of superannuation was not referred to them in their reference, they felt that the question must sooner or later arise. That was to say that in 1892, 12 years after Sir Henry James recommended the abolition of superannuation on the ground that the Department would be wound up in 1880, this Committee give it as their judgment that it must be regarded as a permanent Department. It was only natural that when these clerks found themselves discriminated against and boycotted in the public service, they should consider they had a grievance.

*MR. HANBURY: That Report was considered the very next year, and 76 pensionable posts were created.

MR. DILLON said the Report of the Committee referred to the whole question. It stated that this Department must be regarded as a permanent Department of the Civil Service, and these men, being permanent Civil servants, it was not fair to say they should be treated on a different footing to other Civil servants of the Crown. In this country, whether for good or evil, the superannuation system had been extended to the whole of the Civil Service, and if they accepted that principle for one Department they were bound, in common equity and justice, to extend it to all Departments, unless there were special grounds why, in this particular Department, the superannuation principle ought not to apply. No ground or justification had been offered the Committee by the Secretary to the Treasury for treating this particular Department, which was admitted to be a permanent branch of the Civil Service, on different principles from those adopted in regard to every other branch. The right hon. Gentleman led the Committee to suppose that these officials were amply paid, and had no ground for grievance at all. But their maximum pay was very little over £2, while their minimum pay was something like 30s. per week, and that, too, for men who must be above the average clerk of the Civil Service in point of acquirements, education, and skill. Again, it was alleged that their work was particularly trying on the eyesight, and that a great number of them broke down because their sight became weak; and they were thus left without any resources at all. Another ground on which he thought that these servants were specially entitled to be better, rather than worse, treated than the servants of other Departments, was that, while promotion in every other branch of the Civil Service was open to the lower ranks, in this Department the upper ranks were almost entirely closed to the temporary Civil assistants, the whole of the superior and highly-paid offices being in the hands of the officers of the Royal Engineers. He thought it a cruel thing to deny them this right to a pension—whether they had notice of it on entering the Service or not—when there was no equivalent increase in their salaries in consequence of this denial of pension. He trusted that before this Vote was taken the President of the Board of Agriculture would endeavour to soften the stony heart of the Secretary to the Treasury and induce him to reconsider the matter.

MR. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.) suggested that those interested in this subject should induce the Secretary to the Treasury to receive a deputation, when the whole matter could be presented before him. He desired to thank the right hon. Gentleman for inaugurating a most useful change, by which Ordnance maps were now on sale at the post offices. He saw by the Report which was issued the previous day that, whereas in England and Wales there were formerly 111 agents for the sale of the maps, they were now procurable at 492 post offices in addition to the agencies; that, whereas in Scotland there were formerly only 15 depôts, the maps were now obtainable at 137 post offices; and that, as regarded Ireland, whereas there were previously only 12 places where the maps could be obtained, they were now on sale at 116 post offices. Altogether the maps could be bought at over 700 post offices throughout the United Kingdom, and that was a change upon which the right hon. Gentleman deserved to be congratulated. Something like a quarter of a million a year was spent in connection with the Ordnance Survey, and the receipts for the sale of the maps only amounted to £13,000 or £14,000. That was not at all satisfactory, and they ought to consider whether steps could not possibly be taken to increase the sales. He would suggest that, in order to bring about this result, more liberal terms of commission should be offered the agents who sold them, and that the price of the maps should be reduced. If this were done he was convinced the sales would rapidly increase. He had lately taken a house at Littlestone in Kent, not far from London, and neither in the one-inch nor in the six-inch map was Littlestone shown, nor the railway that led to it. This might possibly explain why the maps were not sold, although £250,000 a year was spent on the Ordnance Survey. The place had grown up within the last 15 years, and yet was not in the maps, which were not brought up to date as quickly as they ought to be.

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. WALTER LONG, Liverpool, West Derby) said the hon. Member for East Mayo asked for his views with reference to the claim for pensionable rights on the part of the Civil Assistants in the Ordnance Survey Department. It was not his duty as a Minister to decide the questions relating to pensions. The decision on those points rested with the Treasury. The Secretary to the Treasury had announced what that decision was, and it seemed to him that he had firmly established the position taken up in regard to the administration of the Ordnance Survey. He himself did not believe it was in the best interests of the Civil Assistants that their case should be repeated and reinforced. If an attempt were made to increase the cost of the administration of the Department, the alternative indicated by the Secretary to the Treasury would be arrived at with greater rapidity than he hoped it would be. The hon. Member for Gloucester asked when the existing survey would be completed. Dates were given in the Estimates for the completion of the various services, but it was not for himself to say, having regard to the great interest attaching to the Survey, and the great importance of having useful and efficient maps, that the work would be finally determined even by 1920. The increased Estimate was accounted for in this way. Under the head of "Pay" there was an increased Estimate of £1,500. That was a slightly increased sum which he obtained from the Treasury in the hope that he might be able, by means of the employment of additional men, to complete certain portions of the work within the time specified. £1,000 was for the engraving work which had been put out on contract, it being found impossible to get the hill engraving performed within the necessary time unless outside assistance were obtained. It was an experiment, and until they saw the result it was impossible for him to express an opinion. Owing to the increase in the sale of the 25-inch map, further expenditure on paper and materials was necessary. The hon. Member for Islington expressed satisfaction with the new arrangement for the sale of ordnance maps, and asked some detailed questions which it would be premature for him to answer. The new arrangement had only just come into existence. The deposit of index maps at post offices, and the appointment of various agents in the provinces, were entirely new. It did not rest with postmasters to sell the maps. They were supplied with the prices of the maps, which could be seen on application, and were to send in requisitions for such maps as might be applied for, which would then be supplied from Southampton. It was, therefore, undesirable to give them more than a small commission on that part of their work. The hon. Member found fault with the existing Survey because Littlestone was not found on the map. He could not account for the non-appearance of this place, but now that the hon. Member had gone to live there no doubt it would soon obtain notoriety. [Laughter and "Hear, hear!"] When the Survey was taken the existence of the place was certainly not known, but no doubt it would find a place in the map when the next survey of that part of the country was taken. He could assure the hon. Member that the Department would do all it could to increase the usefulness and sale of the maps and to bring them easily within the reach of the public in all parts of the country. He did not, however, think there could at present be any reduction in price. The Department were doing their best with the money at their disposal, and if they increased the salaries of the staff he did not see how the price of the maps could be reduced.

Mr. CLANCY pressed for a further answer to the points raised by the hon. Member for East Mayo, with regard to the Civil Assistants in the Ordnance Department. The Secretary to the Treasury was standing out for strict observance of the contract with the Temporary Civil Assistants. But the Government were not observing their part of the contract, because he found that these Temporary Civil Assistants were subjected to all the restrictions of the Civil Service, such as being debarred from taking outside employment, and compulsory retirement at a certain age, and these restrictions were not imposed until long after they entered the service—in fact, they were imposed during the last few years. If the Government had not observed their part of the contract what right had they to assume that they ought not to give pensions because 20 or 30 years ago it was announced in a mysterious hole and corner fashion that pensions would not be given?

Vote agreed to.

2. Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a sum, not exceeding £24,037 (including an additional sum of £11,950), be granted to Her Majesty to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for maintaining certain harbours, lighthouses, etc. under the Board of Trade."

Mr. CLANCY said he objected to any Vote proposed—not that he had any objection to any particular item, but on the ground that he should object to every shilling that it was attempted to give to England or Scotland. His sole and simple objection was to vote money for Great Britain, while under existing circumstances Ireland was called upon to pay an undue proportion according to her resources to keep up English establishments, and the present Government having refused redress on that subject, the Irish Members were bound to take the course of opposing every Vote for England and Scotland until there was redress. He might be allowed to say that what was promised last week had in no way redressed the grievance of which Ireland complained. The statement of the First Lord of the Treasury meant the giving to Ireland in one particular matter only equal treatment to that already accorded to England and Scotland. Under the Agricultural Railway Act there was taken for England out of the Imperial purse—

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: Order, order! To discuss that would be out of order. The point the hon. Member is anxious to raise should be raised in Committee of Ways and Means. There is here no question of taxation, it is only a question of granting the money.

Mr. CLANCY said they were now granting public money, and as to the Committee of Ways and Means he gathered that it was a fiction and of no consequence at all. The Government had not attempted to grapple with the financial grievances of Ireland, which remained unredressed.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford) said with all respect he could not take the view that they were not entitled to raise the question on this Vote. That seemed to be a proper and constitutional occasion for raising a grievance of which Ireland complained. ["Hear, hear!"] They were voting money, than which nothing could be more important, and his hon. Friend argued, as he would argue, that Ireland was paying more than her fair share. He certainly should regret if they were debarred from raising a question of this sort. The organ of the Government in the public Press had taken up the position that the recent concession to Ireland was a concession meeting the Financial Relations Commission. It was nothing of the kind. All that was promised was that on one little narrow point equal treatment with England would be dealt out to Ireland.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said it must be obvious to the hon. Member that they could not discuss on the Vote for harbours and lighthouses whether or not Ireland paid her fair share of the general taxation. The hon. Member would be perfectly entitled to discuss whether too much money under this Vote was spent on English and Scotch harbours.

MR. J. REDMOND said that the position he was taking up was absolutely relevant to this Vote. He objected to vote this money. Why? Because Ireland had to pay too large a proportion of it. He pointed to the Report of the Commission, and he contended that the recent promise of the Government did not meet the case. He did not, of course, attempt to go into the details of this matter, but he felt it to be his duty to point out at the earliest opportunity that the proposals of the Government did not in the remotest degree touch the contention that Ireland had to pay too much. What had recently been proposed by the Government did not touch the fringe of that question.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I see no reason to change the opinion which I have expressed, and I hope the hon. Member will not persist in discussing the subject.

MR. J. REDMOND: I must, Sir, insist on my rights.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I must ask the hon. Member to resume his seat.

MR. REDMOND: That is a request which has not been made to me for 15 years.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Does the hon. Member decline to resume his seat?

MR. REDMOND: Yes, Sir; I must respectfully decline.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Then I must name the hon. Member, Mr. Redmond, for disregarding the authority of the Chair.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. C. T. RITCHIE, Croydon): I therefore, Sir, beg to move that the hon. Member for Waterford be suspended from the service of the House.

MR. CLANCY: Must you not Report that to the Speaker?

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Yes, but the Committee must decide first.

Question put, "That Mr. John Redmond be suspended from the service of the House."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 223; Noes, 32.—(Division List, No. 223.)

The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS left the Chair to make his Report to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER having resumed the Chair,

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said: Mr. Speaker, I have to report to you that, during the discussion of a Resolution in Supply, it became my duty to call to order the hon. Member for Waterford City, and, in consequence of persistent irrelevance, I requested him to resume his seat under the Standing Orders of the House. He stated that he would decline to comply with my order, and it then became necessary for me to name the hon. Member. In consequence of that, a Motion was made that the hon. Member should be suspended from the service of the House, and I have to report to you, Sir, that that Motion was put and was carried in Committee.

*MR. SPEAKER forthwith put the question, "That Mr. John Redmond be suspended from the service of the House."

The House divided:—Ayes, 238; Noes, 52.—(Division List, No. 224.)

*MR. SPEAKER having declared the result of the Division, said: I do not see the hon. Member in his place, but if he is here I must call upon him to withdraw from the House.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND, who had, before the House was cleared for a Division, taken a seat in the Distinguished Strangers' Gallery, made no sign of obedience to Mr. Speaker's order.

*MR. SPEAKER (after a brief interval): If the hon. Member is in any part of the House, he must withdraw from the precincts in obedience to the orders of the House.

Mr. John Redmond at once left the Distinguished Strangers' Gallery.

Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, and the House again went into Committee of Supply, the Chairman of Ways and Means in the Chair.

Mr. CLANCY resumed the Debate on the Vote. He said that before the Vote was passed or put to the Committee he desired to reiterate the reasons he had already given for objecting to it, and to every other Vote for England and Scotland. His reason was that Ireland was called upon to contribute out of its due proportion to the cost of English and Scottish services. A Royal Commission had recently sat and inquired into the question of the over-taxation of Ireland, and the Report of that Commission established beyond doubt or question that Ireland was overtaxed. That being so—

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: I have already ruled more than once on that point, that that question cannot be raised upon Votes in Supply. It must be raised in Committee of Ways and Means. This is not the proper time to raise it. I hope the hon. Member will therefore not persist in continued irrelevancy.

Mr. CLANCY: I thought, and I still think, that to raise the question, in general terms, of the over-taxation of Ireland on every Vote was the most relevant thing I could do—[Irish cheers]—when we are called upon to contribute to the cost of English and Scottish services. And I must respectfully press my right to discuss this matter. [Ministerial cries of "Order!"]

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: I understand the hon. Member desires to persist in disregarding the authority of the Chair.

Mr. CLANCY: I desire to say that I persist in discussing this question which is now before the House upon the grounds —[loud Ministerial cries of "Order!"] —which I have already stated, and I think—

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: I have already ruled that that is not a sufficient ground, and that the matter cannot be discussed in Supply. If the hon. Member persists in discussing it in Supply I must regard his conduct as grossly disorderly, and, under these circumstances, I must request him to withdraw from the House.

Mr. CLANCY: I consider the decision unjust—[Ministerial cries of "Order!"] —and I am not disposed to submit to injustice. [Irish cheers and Ministerial cries of "Order!"]

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: I have directed the hon. Member to withdraw from the House. Do I understand the hon. Member refuses to obey?

Mr. CLANCY: I do, Sir.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: Then I must call on the Serjeant-at-Arms to enforce the order I gave. [Cheers.]

Mr. WILLIAM REDMOND: Send for the Horse Guards! [Laughter.]

The Serjeant-at-Arms approached the hon. Member for Dublin County, N., who at once rose from his seat and left the House amid Nationalist cheers and Ministerial laughter.

Mr. W. REDMOND rose, amid Ministerial laughter and Nationalist cheers, and said: On a point of order, Mr. Lowther, I desire to ask you whether it is in order for you to order the Serjeant-at-Arms to remove an hon. Member without having first asked the leave of the House to do so? [Cheers.]

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: Oh! yes, certainly. [Ministerial cheers.]

Mr. W. REDMOND: May I ask, Sir, on a further point of order, whether we are to understand that we are in this position—that at any time we are liable to be removed from the House by the Serjeant-at-Arms by an order from the Chair?

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: That depends on hon. Members. If hon. Members are disorderly in their conduct it is my duty to order them to withdraw under the Rules of the House. [Ministerial cheers.]

Mr. W. REDMOND: Well, Mr. Lowther, opinions may differ—[cries of "Order!" and laughter]—as to what is disorderly conduct; but I think it is not only grossly disorderly, but grossly criminal, to rob a country and then gag its representatives—[cheers and cries of "Order!"]—and order them out of the House when they simply raise their voice in order to enforce a demand which has been unanimously given utterance to throughout the length and breadth of Ireland. [Cheers.] I certainly on this Vote now before the House desire to say that I take this opportunity, and shall take every opportunity, of objecting to the participation of Ireland in a single one of these Votes in the present circumstances. It has been abundantly proved that the Irish people are taxed altogether out of proportion. [Cries of "Order, order!"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I do not know whether it is really necessary for me to repeat what I have already ruled—that that question cannot be raised in Committee of Supply. There are other and proper opportunities for raising that question. ["Hear, hear!"] All I have ruled this afternoon is that this is not a proper occasion for raising that question, and if the hon. Member persists in disregarding my ruling I am afraid I shall have to put the Standing Order in force. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. W. REDMOND: I think you should take into consideration, Mr. Lowther, that when you gave your, no doubt, weighty ruling I was not present. I cannot, therefore, be expected to know what your ruling was, and if you have got a ruling that applies to me, I must ask you to explain it. My point at the present time is that I object to this Vote because I object to the Irish people being called on to bear a share in these expenses, and I fail altogether to see—and I say so with great respect—how it is I am out of order in endeavouring to show why it is I object to the Irish people being called on to participate in this Vote. [Cheers.] I do so because I think it is unjust to the Irish people, in view of the fact that it is perfectly well known to the House and this country that the Irish people are taxed more than they ought to be in proportion to the people of this country, and that, as a matter of fact, we are being robbed in Ireland. [Ministerial cries of "Order, order!"] I do not know whether that is grossly disorderly or not, but I consider that I am but discharging a very simple duty to my constituents and the Irish people when I take this opportunity of protesting as strongly as I can against what is undoubtedly a system of robbery practised on the Irish people. [Cheers.] In view of the Report of the Royal Commission on the financial relations—[cries of "Order!" and cheers]—

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: The hon. Member is perfectly entitled to object to this Vote on the ground that it is too large and that too much money is spent on English and Scotch harbours and not enough on Irish harbours; but the question of the financial relations between Great Britain and Ireland cannot be discussed on this Vote. I think the hon. Member will see—on reflection it will be obvious to him—that it must be so, because otherwise the same question can be raised on every Vote, and that would clearly be against the ordinary rules and practice of the House. ["Hear, hear!"] Therefore that seems to me to be sufficient ground, amongst others, for saying that the question cannot be discussed now, and therefore I must ask the hon. Member to confine himself to the Vote.

MR. W. REDMOND: I have listened to your ruling, Mr. Lowther, very patiently. [Loud laughter.] I think every patience is required by hon. Members who, if they say a word on behalf of their countrymen, are liable to be suspended. [Cheers.] Hon. Members opposite seem to think it is extremely amusing to see Irish Members interfered with in expressing what they consider to be the demands of their countrymen. ["Hear, hear!"] I should like very much to see English, Scotch, and Welsh Members labouring under the same grievance we are labouring under in this financial matter. Such treatment as we have received would not be meted out to them. [Cheers.] I really cannot see how it is possible for me to give my reasons for objecting to this Vote without going into the question of the relative taxation of Ireland and Great Britain. [Cries of "Hear, hear!" and "Order!"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: If that is so, the hon. Member will be disorderly, for he will be violating the ruling I have laid down. If the hon. Member persists in that course I shall have to put the Standing Order in force. [Cheers.]

MR. W. REDMOND: May I ask you, Mr. Lowther, in all seriousness—[laughter]—upon my word and honour—[renewed laughter]—it is extremely hard for Irish Members to take this treatment seriously—do I understand you to say that I am grossly disorderly in simply referring to the relative taxation of Ireland and Great Britain? Because, if that is your ruling, all I can say is that it is like a ruling in one of Gilbert and Sullivan's operas. [Laughter, cheers, and cries of "Order!"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: The hon. Member is grossly disorderly in his last remark. [Cheers.] My ruling is not to the effect quoted by the hon. Member. My ruling is that the hon. Member is not entitled on the present occasion to discuss the question of the financial relations of Great Britain and Ireland. If he cannot state his objections to this Vote without discussing that question, there is no necessity for him to state them, and he can remain silent. ["Hear, hear!"] If, however, he persists in stating them, and bringing that question in, I shall have to take some steps. [Cheers.]

MR. W. REDMOND: On the question of whether it is necessary for me to state my objections or not, I beg leave to state that you really are not the judge. [Cries of "Order!" and cheers.] I am, after all, sent here to say what may be considered necessary, in the opinion of my constituents, and not in the opinion of either the Chairman of Committees or the Speaker of this House—[cheers]—and at the risk of being considered disorderly, I do say it is adding insult to injury to say not only that we are overtaxed, but when we attempt to say so, we are practically gagged and subjected to—— [Loud cries of "Order"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: The hon. Member is now grossly disorderly, and I must request him to withdraw from the House for the remainder of this day's sitting. [Cheers.]

MR. W. REDMOND: I certainly shall not withdraw unless you send the Serjeant-at-Arms to remove me.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS directed the Serjeant-at-Arms to remove the hon. Member.

Mr. ERSKINE approached the hon. Member for Clare, E., who at once rose from his seat and passed down the Gangway, previously exclaiming, "I simply protest against the continual robbery of Ireland. You have done it for a century. It is a most outrageous thing." The hon. Member then left the House, amid cheers from his supporters and Ministerial laughter.

MR. W. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick), who rose amid loud Ministerial laughter and Nationalist cheers, said he objected to this Vote because it was proposed to expend a large sum on English harbours without making any provision for Irish harbours, although for many years past the Irish Members had been complaining of the want of funds for the repair of various harbours in Ireland. It was well-known that many harbours in Ireland were in a very unsatisfactory state. The hon. Member proceeded: I have no intention whatever of taking up the time of the House, but I do protest as one who takes an interest in the financial relations of the two countries. [Laughter.] Hon. Members may laugh, but this is an exceedingly serious question to the Irish people. I have no wish to run counter to the Rules of the House or to dispute your ruling, Sir; but I claim the right of free speech—[cheers]—in a matter on which I believe the majority of my countrymen agree with me; and I challenge any Gentleman who represents a Unionist constituency to deny that the majority of the people of Ireland believe that they are overtaxed. [Cries of "Order!" and cheers.]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Order, order! The hon. Member is evidently anxious to disregard the ruling I have recently given. I hope he will not force me to put the Standing Order in force. I have had to do it in the case of some of his colleagues, and I warn him that if he persists in the course he is pursuing I shall have to do so in his case

MR. FIELD: I am exceedingly sorry, but I consider it my duty to obey what I believe to be the opinion of the majority of my countrymen, that we are overtaxed—[Cries of "Order!"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: The conduct of the hon. Member is, in my opinion, grossly disorderly, and I must request him to leave the House during the rest of the sitting.

MR. FIELD: I will obey.

The hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick, rose and withdrew accordingly, amid laughter and cheers.

Question put, and agreed to.

3. Motion made and Question proposed :—

> "That a sum, not exceeding £18,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1898, for constructing a new Harbour of Refuge at Peterhead."

Mr. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.), who rose amid cries of "Hear, hear," and "Order," said he had been nearly 15 years in the House, and during the whole of that time they had been voting something every year towards Peterhead Harbour. The time had come, he thought, when they ought to have from the Government some definite information as to when the work would be completed.

*General RUSSELL (Cheltenham) said he happened to have a villa in the Peterhead district, and he had watched this money being thrown into the sea. Very recently he took the opportunity of visiting the works on the harbour of refuge and consulting with the very able and intelligent engineer in charge. He had put down a Motion to reduce this Vote by £10,000, but after consulting with the engineer and discussing the whole question with those best qualified to judge, he withdrew his Motion, for he came to the conclusion that the only thing to be done was to continue the work if they did not sacrifice the large sum of money that had been already spent upon it. The House must bear in mind that a large convict prison had been built there solely for the purpose of making the harbour of refuge. He was doubtful whether it would be of much use when made. Formerly, before steamers existed, sailing vessels used to take refuge between the heads of the bay, which give protection from the north and north-west winds, the prevalent winds in that part of the country. But now that so much of their carrying trade was done by means of steam transport, it was very doubtful whether a harbour of refuge at that spot would be of any use at all. As far as he could make out, he should never see it finished. The engineer told him the other day that, calculating according to the most favourable circumstances, it could not be finished for twenty-six years. He wished to call the attention of the Committee to the circumstance that originally the scheme was adopted by the gentlemen who sat opposite when they were in office, so that hon. members on the Government side of the House were in no way responsible for this waste of money, as he considered it. Still, he should be very sorry, taking all the circumstances into consideration, if this Vote were to be suspended, and hence that the money which had already been expended on the harbour of refuge should not be put to some use. It was asserted, as a reason of making this harbour of refuge, that it was the only way to employ the convicts, and, as he had said, for that reason a very large convict prison had been built at a cost of about £25,000. At the end of the 26 years, if the work was ever finished, there would be a harbour of refuge magnificent in size, capable of sheltering a large part of the British Navy ; but whether it would be of much use was a matter of great doubt. Still, under all the circumstances of the case, seeing that the present Government was not responsible for the scheme being entered into, he hoped the Committee would sanction the continuance of the expenditure and make the best of a bad bargain.

Mr. DILLON said that after the remarkable speech they had just listened to, he hoped the Government would re-consider their policy. The hon. Member concluded a strong speech against the Vote by hoping that the Vote would be sanctioned. He had given the Committee the information for which he had himself been seeking in vain ; for he had told them on good authority that the harbour would probably not be finished for the next 26 years. They were told 10 years ago that it would be finished before now. In the judgment of the hon. Member who lived in the neighbourhood, when finished it would be a magnificent harbour, but probably there would be no ships to enter it, and it would be perfectly worthless.

*General RUSSELL : I did not quite say that, I think, but I do not believe it will be of the use it was originally intended to be when the idea was first conceived, as then most of the merchant traffic was carried in sailing ships.

Mr. DILLON: What was the principle set forth by the hon. Member? It seemed that this harbour of refuge at Peterhead was to cost close on a million sterling. He was told by an hon. Member sitting near him that the sum so far expended on the work was £297,000. Therefore the argument was because you had spent £297,000 on a useless work, you must spend £600,000 more for fear the £297,000 should be wasted. Was there ever such logic? [Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member came from the district and the money would be spent in his own constituency——

*General RUSSELL: It is not my constituency.

Mr. DILLON: I beg pardon — in the district in which he lives. I apologise. He admitted, practically speaking, that according to the original intention of those who sanctioned the undertaking, it would be useless—that was to say that it was not going to be of any use that would justify the expenditure of such an enormous sum of money. He was content to put it in that way. A sum of £297,000 had been spent; therefore to prevent that being wasted, they were to spend £600,000 more spread over a period of six years. He saw that the original estimate for Peterhead was £730,000, and £160,000 had been added. In addition to that expenditure, they had, of course, the cost of the convict establishment, and everybody knew that convict labour on such works was an extremely expensive form of labour. He protested against this Vote. He protested against it first of all as a British taxpayer—he could not protest against it as an Irish. He protested against this Vote of the money of the British taxpayer, and although his own contribution to the revenue of this great Empire was extremely small, still he gave it with a most grudging hand. It was but a small amount of income tax that it was his privilege to pay—he wished it was a great deal more; but he gave it with a grudging hand, and he objected to a portion of that income tax being spent on Peterhead Harbour. [Laughter]. And he objected to it all the more because the Chairman had been kind enough to point out that they were at liberty to discuss these Votes on from the point of view of the relative expenditure on these Votes in Ireland and England. He had in his mind at that moment the harbour of Wicklow, in regard to which appeals had repeatedly been made in vain to the Treasury, and in respect of which a most influential deputation, composed not of Nationalists alone, but of Unionists and men of all classes, had waited on the Treasury and on the Chief Secretary for Ireland. That harbour which could be put in repair for a small sum of money, was left to go to ruin, to silt up, the water rushing in and out of a big hole in the breakwater—he had himself inspected the scandalous condition of things. In a moment the whole thing might be swept away, and for the sake of a few thousand pounds they left that scandalous and disgraceful condition of things in a poor country like Ireland, while they were recklessly spending this enormous sum at Peterhead on a work that would be useless. It was a monstrous, an extravagant, waste of money; and they were entitled and bound to raise their voices against such Votes being passed. He protested against this with all the more confidence and strength because, as he had already said, Peterhead Harbour had been one of the chronic grievances of the House of Commons. It had come up every year for the last ten or fifteen years, and he should unquestionably divide the House against it unless an equivalent amount on a liberal scale was given where it was required in Ireland.

The CIVIL LORD of the ADMIRALTY (Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Worcestershire, E.) was not quite sure whether the hon. Gentleman opposite knew what the origin of this Harbour of Refuge was, or how this Vote came upon the Paper. It was the result of a Committee summoned in 1881 to inquire into various questions in connection with the employment of convicts. They reported that the best method of employing convicts was in the establishment of the most suitable form of public works, and that the most suitable form of public works on which they could be employed was the formation of harbours of refuge; and they recommended Peterhead as the best place on the east coast for constructing such a harbour.

In accordance with that recommendation a scheme was prepared by an eminent firm of engineers and sanctioned by the House. The progress of the work had necessarily been slow. He did not think that the House had ever been told that it was likely to be finished by the present time, and he certainly could not hold out any hope of its completion before many years had elapsed. His hon. and gallant Friend's estimate of the time that would be required was probably correct. Quick progress was next to impossible at present on account of the rocky nature of the bottom on which the breakwater had been founded. The sum included for this purpose in the Estimate was the largest sum which they could hope to expend this year, having regard to the difficulties of the work. It was expected when the structure was begun that on the average 500 convicts would be available, but during the past year the average number of available men had not exceeded 250. He supposed he ought to congratulate Scotland upon that fact, but it was not conducive to rapid progress with the work. He trusted that the hon. Member would not Divide the Committee against this proposal. Scotch Members had repeatedly urged that the work was of the utmost importance, and it was a means of employing convict labour usefully.

Sir HENRY FOWLER (Wolverhampton, E.) said that he was at the Home Office when it was decided to undertake this work, and that its main object was to provide employment for convicts. Portland breakwater was at that time approaching conclusion, and there was not a sufficient field for convict labour. The claims of Dover were urged in rivalry with those of Peterhead, and the Scotch Members, who were rather pertinacious in supporting the rights of their country, maintained that the harbour should be at Peterhead, and that Scotland should supply criminals for the purpose of constructing it. [Laughter.] They could not but feel gratified at the fact that the general reform in character and manners in Scotland had now reduced the number of those who could be employed upon the breakwater. He assured the Committee that the work was only decided upon after great consideration by the Home Office. It was a departmental undertaking, dictated by no political or party considerations. If the Committee desired that the harbour should be finished in a shorter time than was now contemplated, they must decide to employ other labour than that of convicts.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) said that if the object was to provide a harbour of refuge for vessels on the eastern coast of Scotland, the sooner the harbour was finished the better. An inordinate amount of time had already been spent upon the work. The whole coast of Algiers had been supplied with deep water harbours of this nature since this Peterhead harbour was begun.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN explained that there were great difficulties at Peterhead caused by the nature of the bottom on which the foundations of the breakwater had to be laid. The work could only be proceeded with at certain states of the tides and at low water.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES referred the hon. Member to the case of the harbour at Bona on the coast of Algiers. In that case great difficulties were encountered on account of the depth of the water, but they were successfully overcome. A rising and falling tide was not a disadvantage when a harbour was being built. It was, on the contrary, an advantage. At Bona there was no tide of the kind. When the Peterhead harbour was begun the science of constructing harbours on hard bottoms was in its infancy. In the last few years new methods had been devised. Bags containing Portland cement or other substances in a fluid state were let down, and the contents solidified when they reached the bottom. The harbour at La Guayra on the Spanish main was constructed in that way. He appreciated the affection for the convicts shown by Her Majesty's Government, but his affections inclined rather to the seamen on our coasts, and for their sakes he was anxious to see this harbour at Peterhead completed.

Mr. P. J. POWER (Waterford, E.) said that the construction of harbours of refuge had been recommended at other places besides Peterhead. Waterford, for example had long ago been mentioned by a Commission of experts as one of the best points at which to construct a harbour of refuge on the south coast of Ireland. Nothing, however, had been done, although a harbour could be constructed at Waterford at less cost than at any other place in the south of Ireland. At present Waterford was a fairly good harbour, but there was a bar there which could be removed with ease at a comparatively small cost, and which would then secure a harbour of refuge on that coast which was greatly needed. The Irish people had a right to complain that while they contributed largely to expenditure of this kind it was all for England and Scotland and Wales, nothing whatever being spent in improving the harbours of Ireland.

*General RUSSELL, replying to the hon. Member for Lynn Regis, stated that it was impossible to advance the work at Peterhead Harbour more rapidly, and the experiments which the hon. Member had described as being carried out in the case of a Spanish harbour would not be practicable at Peterhead. In the first place there was a very stormy sea, and it was only possible to work something like 115 days a year out of the 365. The only way the harbour could be completed sooner would be by working at night, and this would quadruple the cost, as the convicts could not be employed during the night. The Civil Lord of the Admiralty had said that the work might progress more rapidly when they got into deeper water, but the information he obained was just the opposite, and he was told that when they got into the deeper water the progress would be even slower than now.

Mr. DILLON said that his recollections of the Peterhead Harbour were somewhat different to those of the Civil Lord of the Admiralty, but the origin of this work was lost in the mists of antiquity, and its completion would be one of the events of the next century. Nobody knew when the work would be completed, but everybody agreed that it would not be before the next century. The hon. Member for King's Lynn was, of course, as usual, wide of the mark. The primary object of this harbour was not to afford protection to shipping. It had two objects with both of which he sympathised. One was to employ convicts, under healthy circumstances, on the sea coast, and the second was to spend some money in Scotland. Such being the condition of affairs, it did not in the least matter when the harbour was finished, and if it could be kept going for the next half century so much the better. He had listened to the appeal which the Civil Lord of the Admiralty had made to him to withdraw his opposition to this Vote. He would have been delighted to have done so if the Government would have given them some quid pro quo in regard to Irish harbours. They were now asked to vote £12,000, the sum required for this year being £24,000. It was universally admitted, firstly, that the longer the harbour took to complete the better it would be; and secondly, that the supply of convicts in Scotland was scarce, and unless they could be manufactured on a larger scale the harbour could not be built at the present rate with convict labour. Let the Government take say, £10,000 off the sum required for the year, and give it to Wicklow Harbour. If Scotch convicts were allowed to be employed in the healthy work of harbour construction, why should not Irish convicts be employed in the same way instead of being immersed in Mountjoy and other prisons? There were no convict prisons in Ireland where the Irish convicts had any outdoor occupation, and none where they were employed in building harbours of refuge, though the Irish required them much more than the Scotch. Every argument which could be used in support of convict labour for Peterhead Harbour was applicable in the case of Ireland, where convicts were manufactured out of material which would not be turned into convicts in England and Scotland. In Ireland, packed juries made convicts of men who had committed no crimes.

*General RUSSELL could assure the hon. Gentleman that on the occasion he last visited the prison at Peterhead, a number of Irish convicts were among those employed on the works there.

Mr. DILLON said that if the hon. and gallant Gentleman desired to insinuate that the Irish people, whether they lived in this country or in Ireland, contributed more than their share to the criminal jails, he had to reply that the statement was false. He had heard that charge made before, although there was not one shadow of foundation for it. A criminal judge made the same statement in Australia, and he at once challenged the assertion. It was then shown that while the Irish did maintain a high ratio as regarded minor offences, when it came to crimes of a grave kind the Irish people were considerably below what would have been their proportion. There was, therefore, no truth in the statement that his countrymen contributed an undue share to any convict prison, and the observation of the hon. and gallant Gentleman was most insulting.

*General RUSSELL could assure the hon. Gentleman that he did not intend the observation as an insult.

Mr. DILLON: It was a very insulting observation.

*General RUSSELL said that if he had unintentionally hurt the hon. Gentleman's feelings he withdrew the observation, repeating that he did not intend it in any way as an insult.

Mr. DILLON accepted the explanation, and intimated that unless some concession were made in regard to Wicklow or some other Irish harbours, he should be compelled to divide the Committee against the Vote.

Mr. WEIR maintained that if the work at Peterhead was to be of service it ought to be advanced speedily; if it was not to be of service then it ought to be dropped and the money spent in more useful ways on harbour accommodation elsewhere. He felt it keenly that while there were so many harbours needed all round the coast of Scotland, especially in the north, the Government were practically throwing this large sum of money into the sea. He called attention to the item of £21,840 for labour and materials for 1897-98, an increase of £404. The engineer-in-chief at Peterhead received £800 a year for 110 days' work, and the resident engineer £750. Was the engineer-in-chief a retired naval or military officer? [Mr. A. Chamberlain: "No; he is Mr. John Coode!"] How often did he visit the works? It seemed to him that £150 as expenses was a large item, and he had come to the conclusion that this official was a useless individual, whose services were not wanted. He believed that the resident engineer would do the work quite satisfactorily.

Mr. HUMPHREYS-OWEN (Montgomery) supported the appeal of the hon. Member for East Mayo on behalf of Irish harbours. It had been well shown that the money now being spent at Peterhead was spent for an indirect rather than for a direct purpose. At the same time he felt that the claims of the Irish harbours were largely bound up with the claims of the Welsh harbours. For example, there was no communication between mid-Wales and the opposite coast of Ireland, except by the long sea route from Waterford to Milford Haven. There was a harbour on the Irish coast called Roslare, which with a little expenditure of money could be fitted for cross-channel traffic, and by taking Aberdovey on the Welsh coast there would be a third alternative route made between the two coasts, and embracing districts which were at present destitute of communication. The Report of a distinguished civil engineer stated that by an expenditure of less than £100,000 a harbour could be made at Aberdovey with great depth of water at all times of the tide. Anything which would increase the traffic in that district would contribute materially to the prosperity of the population.

Mr. P. J. POWER hoped that the Government would give consideration to the Report of the Royal Commission which recommended the improvement of Waterford as a harbour.

Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN said that his position in this matter was simply this—when the work was decided upon the Admiralty were asked to take charge and superintend the execution of the work. It was not a part of the Admiralty policy that this harbour at Peterhead should be built, and the policy of building such works was no concern of the Admiralty. As to the salary of the engineer-in-chief he stated that the work could not be done by the resident engineer. The engineer-in-chief was connected with a firm which had probably the widest experience in this class of work of any engineers to be found. The Government had had their assistance in the preparation of the Dover Harbour plan, and they had designed harbours and dockyards in all parts of the world, and the value of whose advice could hardly be exaggerated. Though the resident engineer was a very competent man he was not in the position to take the place of the engineer-in-chief. The salary of the engineer-in-chief covered all clerical assistance and the payments for draughtsmanship in the office in London, but the travelling expenses were paid apart on a scale sanctioned by the Treasury.

Mr. WEIR proposed, "That Item B (Salaries) be reduced by £300, in respect of the salary of the Chief Engineer."

Mr. DILLON intimated that he contested the whole Vote.

Mr. WEIR said he would in that case withdraw his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Dr. CLARK (Caithness) remarked that a Royal Commission reported in favour of a harbour of refuge on the east coast of Scotland which was being constructed, and now it was proposed to stop the work that £12,000 should be devoted to similar work for Ireland. £40,000 a year had been spent on the construction of a harbour at Holyhead. The west coast of Scotland had plenty of natural harbours, but a harbour of refuge was much needed on the east coast which was often very rough and stormy, and where ships and lives were frequently lost. Convict labour was being used in the construction of the harbour which did not seem likely to be finished for the next 20 or 30 years. Free labour should be employed and more money devoted to the work that it might be finished in the near future.

Original Question put.

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 147; Noes, 32.—(Division List, No. 225.)

4. £189,367, to complete the sum for Rates on Government Property.

Lord HUGH CECIL (Greenwich) called attention to the injustice of the valuation of Woolwich Arsenal for the purpose of contribution in lieu of rates, and asked the Secretary to the Treasury whether he would consider appeals from the Government Valuer, inquire into the complaints of the assessment committee, and give them an opportunity of stating their case. The noble Lord stated that the Woolwich Assessment Committee were very much discontented with the way they were treated by the Government Valuer, who appeared to act in a very arbitrary and dictatorial manner, and would give no details as to the basis on which he made his valuation. The Assessment Committee greatly wished to have an opportunity of putting their side of the case before the Treasury.

Mr. J. C. FLYNN (Cork, N.) drew attention to the charge of £10,000 for the Metropolitan Fire Brigade. He failed to see why the Metropolitan Fire Brigade should get this subsidy from the Government any more than those of Dublin, Cork, Belfast, or anywhere else. No doubt there was a considerable amount of Government property in London, but so there was in Dublin also; and considering the enormous rateable valuation of the metropolis, he thought that Dublin was even more entitled to a contribution than London was. It was a paltry and contemptible thing that the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, which was under municipal management, should come on the general taxpayers in this way. Either the item should be struck out of the rates altogether, or the fire insurance companies, who made such huge profits, should subsidise this £10,000. Really, when property was insured up to the full value, the municipalty had no interest in extinguishing a fire. The insurance companies had obviously the paramount interest in the matter.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES called attention to the item of "rates on houses occupied by representatives of foreign Powers," which had gone up this year by £800. He was glad to see this figure in the Votes, because he thought all remissions granted on the ground of comity should be subjected to the control and criticism of the House of Commons; but he should like to have an explanation of how it was the charge had increased by 25 per cent. He did not know whether the habit was growing among foreign Ambassadors and Attachés of taking larger houses than they formerly occupied, but, if so, considering the enormous and increasing proportion that rates now bear to rental, the item would become a very large one in future years, more especially if this country should be invaded by a wealthier type of Attaché.

Mr. B. L. COHEN (Islington, E.) wished to see the contribution to the Metropolitan Fire Brigade increased rather than struck off the Votes. He agreed, however, that the fire insurance companies did not pay as much as they ought towards expenditure which went very much to increase their own profits. He pointed out that while the contribution had not been added to for a great many years, the expense of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, which falls on the County Council, had increased by an enormous sum in the last few years, while he claimed that the work of the Brigade was done with an efficiency which was a model to any provincial or continental town.

CAPTAIN PIRIE (Aberdeen, N.) drew attention to the fact that while the War Department properly contributed to rates Volunteer drill-halls escaped without any contribution at all.

MR. WEIR asked for an explanation of the item of rates paid on behalf of occupiers of apartments in Royal palaces.

*MR. HANBURY said that as to the question of remission of rates, they were not really remissions, as there was no power to enforce the payment by representatives of foreign countries. For some time the arrangement was that the rates on houses occupied by representatives of foreign Governments should be paid by the landlords. But the foreign Governments protested, and now it was arranged that some of the rates should be paid by Her Majesty's Government and the remander by the Diplomatic Body. This arrangement was confined to those representatives whose Governments gave reciprocal privileges to our Diplomatic Service. The reason why the item in the Votes on account of these rates had gone up was that one house, occupied by a foreign Attaché, was a great deal above the rateable value of the houses generally occupied by officials in that position. As to the Metropolitan Fire Brigade grant, he agreed that the contribution ought to be considered by the Treasury. This contribution was made originally because the Government did not pay their full share of the rates in respect of Government buildings. Now that the system—which he believed to be just—of the Government paying in the same proportion as private individuals had been introduced, the argument for making this contribution to the Fire Brigade was not so strong. As to the rating of Volunteer drill halls, one reason why the Government did not think that they should pay the rates was their opinion that the localities might fairly be asked to contribute so much to the local Volunteer corps. As to the rating of Woolwich Arsenal, the policy of the Government was to pay rates in the same proportion as the private person. But they felt it necessary to insist that the valuation of Government property should be made by Government Valuers. Government property differed very largely from other property, and was situated in many different localities. The Government could not place themselves entirely in the hands of the local authorities, who might make one estimate of the property here and another there, and possibly run up the valuation too heavily against the Government. As to Woolwich, there was less ground for complaint than elsewhere. Woolwich had been specially favoured. The question of revaluation came up, and the contention was that the arsenal was closely analogous to a large private manufacturing establishment, and ought to be rated on the same principle. The Government agreed, and, as had been done in no other case, an outside valuer—a gentleman from Manchester—was called in to assist the Government Valuer. Objections to the valuation were raised by the local assessment committee. They contended that the dockyard ought to be treated in the same way as the arsenal; but the Treasury properly resisted that contention on the ground that there was no comparison between the dockyard and private property. The result of the arsenal valuation was that the net rateable value had been raised by £15,000; and he, personally, believed that if, as the assessment committee had desired, a local valuer had been appointed instead of the gentleman from Manchester to assist the Government Valuer, there would have been no complaint at all. With respect to all Government, and especially War Office, property, the Government had steadily refused to allow local valuers to be employed. The War Office were exceedingly jealous of strangers being admitted to their premises, and even the Government Valuer had to obtain a special permission. If any one were allowed to visit the arsenals and dockyards, there would be an end of all secrecy. As to the appeal which was asked for, he would point out that the Assessment Committee had been thrown over by the Plumstead Overseers and by the Woolwich Local Board, who had written to the Treasury thanking the Government for the increase in the arsenal valuation, and saying that they had nothing to complain of. He had himself gone into the matter carefully, and he was satisfied that there was no grievance, as well as the hon. Member for Woolwich. He saw no reason for reopening the case.

LORD HUGH CECIL said that Plumstead had been dealt with in a most generous manner, and, therefore, it was not surprising that the overseers were satisfied. The arsenal had not been valued in a spirit satisfactory to the Woolwich Assessment Committee. The Woolwich Union did not receive an adequate return. He believed that the Woolwich Local Board had been induced to acquiesce in the Treasury arrangement on account of the pressure exerted by the Government Valuer. The Assessment Committee maintained that the arrangement was a very unfair one and they accepted it not without some discontent. They wanted to know the grounds upon which the valuation was made, and he thought that in fairness they were entitled to an opportunity for investigating the case of the Treasury.

DR. CLARK thought that if the Government paid rates like everyone else for watching and lighting they ought to get the cost of their own watching deducted as in the case of other large ratepayers. The local authorities could not have subventions from Parliament and at the same time require the Government to pay the same rates that other people were paying. He was glad, therefore, to hear that the Secretary to the Treasury intended to reconsider the matter.

Vote agreed to.

CLASS II.

5. £19,576, to complete the sum for House of Commons Offices. Agreed to.

6. Motion made, and Question proposed:—

"That a sum, not exceeding £132,859, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for the salaries and expenses of the Office of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Subordinate Departments."

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean) asked whether the President of the Board of Trade intended to take action on the recommendations of the Departmental Committee on the administration of the Mercantile Marine Fund, advising the reorganisation of the Fund. He noticed there was an enormous amount of money spent yearly in bringing home distressed British seamen from abroad; and he thought the House should be supplied with information as to the causes which lead to this expenditure. He would also like to know when it was likely the House would obtain the promised Return of merchant seamen. A Return had been supplied to the Departmental Committee on the Undermanning of Ships, but there was the greatest possible difference of opinion between various competent authorities as to its accuracy, and as the Registrar General of Merchant Seamen had better opportunities than anyone else for preparing such a Return, he hoped the completion of the one on which he was now engaged would be facilitated in every way.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES joined with his right hon. Friend in pressing for the Return of merchant seamen. He was quite unable to conceive on what methods the Returns of the Board of Trade, on this subject were prepared. They seemed to be got up anyway or anyhow. Certainly the Return of merchant seamen was absolutely delusive.

*MR. CUMMING MACDONA (Southwark, Rotherhithe) said he must join issue with his hon. Friend on the subject of the Board of Trade Returns. A very remarkable instance of Board of Trade Returns had been published that morning in its Report on the loss of life at sea, which reflected marked credit on the Department. That Report had given the fullest details in admirable form, accompanied by several maps of a most artistic and useful character.

MR. RITCHIE said his hon. Friend the Member for Lynn Regis was always rather severe in his criticisms, but he did not always mean what he said. [Laughter.] He was sure the Returns which were prepared by the Board of Trade were prepared with the greatest care. With regard to the mercantile marine he could assure the right hon. Baronet opposite that as full a Return as possible was made, and the right hon. Gentleman admitted the difficulty of making such a Return as he asked for. He would, however, look into the matter and see what could be done. With regard to the administration of the Mercantile Marine Fund, undoubtedly the whole system was rather anomalous and out of date. He had hoped that it might have been possible to have dealt with the matter in the present Session, but such a reconstruction or reorganisation as was suggested could not be carried out unless they had a larger contribution from the Treasury, and that was not possible this year. He hoped, however, that he should be able to deal with the matter next Session, and, although he did not commit himself to every detail of the recommendations of the Departmental Committee, he hoped they would be able to proceed somewhat on those lines.

MR. LOUGH thought the President of the Board of Trade might have given more assistance to the Home Office in the dispute between the cabdrivers of the Metropolis and the railway companies. The Board of Trade was the Government Department which had to deal with the railway companies, and if the right hon. Gentleman would use his influence with them perhaps an amicable settlement might be arrived at. The cabdrivers and proprietors were all united now, and were most anxious to arrive at a settlement, but the railway companies by standing too stiffly by their rights and a little more than their rights had prevented it. With regard to the service of workmen's trains in the metropolis in the early hours of the morning there were one or two lines which treated the matter reasonably, but only one or two. The consequence was that the vast population of Londoners who travelled by these trains had to submit to great hardships. He suggested that the time at which these trains ran should be extended. He suggested that in the Return which was made of the trade of Great Britain and Ireland the trade of Ireland should be given separately. If this were done the value of this excellent Return would be greatly increased.

MR. WEIR asked whether any portion of the £800 which had been spent in fees and expenses under the Conciliation Act of 1896 had been spent in respect of the Penrhyn quarries dispute. He noticed that £2,800 was asked for the Light Railways Commission, and he wished to know if any of the light railways were in progress. He thought the salary of the right hon. Gentleman was inadequate—[laughter]—having regard to the many duties he had to perform. He called attention to the overcrowded state of railway carriages, especially in and around London.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: That is a matter over which the President of the Board of Trade has no control.

MR. WEIR asked if the right hon. Gentleman would endeavour to introduce legislation in order to bring about a better state of things.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said that was as much in the power of the hon. Member as of the Board of Trade.

MR. WEIR said he should have then to adopt other means of bringing the matter to the notice of the Department. He complained that the Patent Office took money without any inquiry, sometimes permitting 50 patents for the same article, and moved to reduce the Vote by the sum of £1,000.

[After the usual interval, the Chair was taken by Mr. JOHN ELLIS.]

MR. JOHN BURNS (Battersea) joined in the appeal of the hon. Member for Islington to the President of the Board of Trade to renew his mediatory efforts in connection with the Privileged Cab question. The President of the Board of Trade had some Parliamentary control and some official regulation over the railways, and it seemed to him that if the right hon. Gentleman would again appeal to the managers of the railway cab companies he had not the least doubt that his efforts would be successful. The other day a director of one of the largest railway companies went so far as to say to him that if the cabmen would terminate the dispute and return to their situations as heretofore, he could almost guarantee that the railway companies would be prepared to make some settlement and some satisfactory compromise with the striking cab drivers. He believed that if this view was properly exploited by the President of the Board of Trade the dispute might be terminated on terms advantageous both to the travelling public and to the railway companies, and certainly satisfactory to the cab drivers. The reason he pressed this was because the railway companies, while declining to accede to the abolition of the privileged cab in railway stations, had been driven to adopt an interchangeable privileged cab system, which was in itself a step in the right direction. That should indicate to the President of the Board of Trade what the views of the companies were. It indicated that the privileged system had broken down, and had broken down, to some extent, with the concurrence of the railway companies themselves. He hoped the President of the Board of Trade would seize every opportunity of trying to persuade the railway companies to meet the men, and if they declined he should endeavour on his own initiative to do for the travelling public, by the abolition of the privileged cab system, what he had so well endeavoured to do for the Bethesda quarrymen. When he reminded the Committee that the cabmen had spent £20,000 on this dispute, he thought they would agree that that was an indication that they had some grievances, and when the fact was taken into consideration that the cab masters were on the side of the men, he thought he had shown sufficient reasons why an effort should be made to bring this dispute to an end as soon as possible.

MR. M. AUSTIN (Limerick, W.) desired to raise the question of the appointment of a correspondent for agriculture in Ireland. He put a Question to the President of Board of Trade on that subject last year, but although he expressed himself sympathetically, he believed that nothing had been done up to the present. The fact that out of the entire population of Ireland 78 per cent. were entirely dependent on agriculture showed there was a strong case for an independent correspondent for Ireland. From time to time reports had appeared in the Labour Gazette regarding the position of the agricultural labourers in England, Scotland, and Wales, but during the past four years only on two occasions had there been any direct reference to the exact position of the agricultural labourers in Ireland. It was very necessary that they should have a direct representative from the Board of Trade in Ireland. Under the present system the gentleman in England paid a cursory visit to Ireland, and made a report on the then existing condition of affairs, and that single visit did him for the entire year, but what would do in March would not do in September; and he asked the right hon. Gentleman that, as he required regular reports from England to be supplied to the Labour Gazette, he should also direct that an independent report of the agricultural condition of the labourer in Ireland should be supplied to the same journal. He would also point out that while four general reports had been supplied from Wales, not a single general report had been supplied from Ireland. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would be able to see his way to appoint an independent correspondent for Ireland.

MR. T. LOUGH said that it would be interesting to have from the right hon. Gentleman what had been done under the Light Railways Act—how far the Board of Trade had approved of the applications that had been made under the Act, and how far it was working satisfactorily.

MR. DILLON said he wished to direct the attention of the right hon. Gentleman to the treatment of certain of the Wexford pilots. He understood that the Board of Trade had the power to pass certain Provisional Orders making alterations in pilotage districts, and sometimes these Orders very materially affected the vested interests of pilots. There was a Pilotage Provisional Order before the House this Session, and that had reference to the harbour of Rosslare. That harbour was only used by the steamers of one English company, and up to the present it had been necessary for any steamer going into that port to take a pilot on board. A Provisional Order was in the process of being passed by which the district was to be altered, and by which ships would be allowed to go into that harbour without taking a pilot. He was not concerned to argue the question whether that was right or wrong, but he wished to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether it was fair to treat the Wexford pilots in this way? He was given to understand that the Order would very seriously affect their earnings. The Wexford pilots were 19 in number, and if the port of Rosslare, which was at the entrance of the Wexford harbour district, were freed from pilotage, much of the trade would be taken away from Wexford. He thought that, in the circumstances, it was only fair that the Board of Trade should make the Wexford pilots the ordinary allowance which in such circumstances was usually made. He would be glad to know what was the intention of the Board of Trade with regard to these pilots.

Captain NORTON (Newington, W.) said he wished to make an appeal to the Secretary to the Treasury, or rather to the President of the Board of Trade, with reference to a very deserving though small number of public officials. He referred to those who were known as abstractors in the General Register and Record Office of Shipping and Seamen. They had to perform work of a by no means light class, which could not be done by men who had not a certain amount of experience and mental training. So far back as 1867 a Committee was appointed to deal with the organisation of this office, and they decided that the work done by these clerks, then called writers or verifiers, was such as was done by clerks of the lower division. In 1887 another Committee reported that the whole organisation of the office should be placed on the basis of a lower division office. In 1889 the authorities at the Treasury departed from the views of the Ridley Commission, and placed these clerks in the category of what were known as abstractors—in fact, made them, so to speak, a class by themselves. By this all they gained was a new name and a maximum increase of £9. It was true that they were also put on the Pension List, but their pension was a very visionary one, and in accepting it they had to surrender a claim which they had to a gratuity of £100. In 1892 or 1893 they presented a memorial to the Treasury, and in 1895 they went to the head of their Department, Sir Courtenay Boyle, and he frankly admitted that they were doing work similar to that being done by other clerks in the same office who received a very much higher salary. It was also admitted that their rate of increment was very small. Encouraged by this statement, they again asked the Treasury in 1895 to consider the advisability of opening a certain number of posts in connection with the Mercantile Marine Office to them. The grievance of these men was that, as public servants performing somewhat high-class clerical work, they might expect, after 22 years' service, to receive the magnificent stipend of £150. There were only 17 of them, and they were serving in an office with 30 other clerks, and the total cost of the office showed that the 30 senior clerks received in salary six times the amount received by these men. What they felt most acutely was that they could never rise to a higher position. He thought the Committee would admit that it was scarcely fair to keep a few men doing practically the same work as others at a lower rate of pay, and he would ask the right hon. Gentleman whether it was not possible that something could be done to remedy the grievances to which he had called attention?

Mr. RITCHIE said that the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down had begun his remarks by appealing to the Secretary to the Treasury, and although he subsequently corrected himself and appealed to him, he thought that, on the whole, the grievances to which the hon. Gentleman had called attention were a matter for the Treasury. This case was another illustration of the fact that, although the House of Commons in the abstract always desired economy, yet in individual cases of this kind hon. Gentlemen were to be found urging on the Treasury an increase of pay all round. He did not dispute the fact that the gentlemen referred to were competent for the work which they did. At the same time he disputed the assertion that they were doing work which was the same as that done by others who were more highly paid. Even if it were so, that was a circumstance which occurred in every department of business. However conciliatory they might wish to be, it was impossible to go on raising salaries in the way that had been suggested. Two men might be sitting side by side at a desk and doing work which appeared to be very much the same kind of work; yet one of the men was a man who would anywhere command better wages than the other. As far as these gentlemen were concerned, it must be remembered that they were put in a better position than they at one time occupied. At one time they had no permanent employment, and were entitled to no pension. Now they had a permanency, and their salaries would rise to £150 a year. He did not hesitate to say that he should be glad if they received higher payment; but he did not know that the payment was inadequate for the work done, and certainly theirs was a better position than they were in a few years ago. The hon. Member for East Mayo had brought forward the question of the pilots of Rosslare. Not having known he was going to refer to that question, and being unable to bear in mind all the details of a great Department like the Board of Trade, he was not in a position to give as sufficient an answer as he might desire. His impression was that the Board of Trade had little or nothing to do with the matter; it was a matter dealt with by the Pilot Board of the district, of which he believed the Board of Trade nominated one member.

MR. DILLON was sorry to interrupt, but both sides had been arguing out the matter before the heads of the Department at the Board of Trade during the past week.

MR. RITCHIE said no doubt the Board of Trade had some power, as they were bringing forward a Bill in the House of Commons; but he thought they were acting ministerially on local initiative. If the hon. Member had mentioned that there had been a conference at the Board of Trade on the subject he would have said what he now said—that he would make inquiries as to what took place with a view of endeavouring to see if anything could be done in the direction desired. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member for Islington thought he was not sufficiently severe on the railway companies. He should like to know what the view of the railway companies was. [A laugh.] He confessed that he did not attempt to be severe with them; that was not his function. He thought his duty was best done by being, if possible, on good terms with the railway companies. The powers of the Board of Trade over the railway companies were extremely limited; but he was bound to say that with hardly a single exception the representations they made to the companies were generally very fairly considered and very often their recommendations were acted upon, not because the Board had any power, but the railway companies knew that they could not afford to be indifferent to the wishes of a Government Department representing the public. He had no reason whatever to complain of the way in which the railway companies received the representations of the Board. They must all remember a recent case in which the intervention of the Board of Trade had the effect of preventing what would have been a deplorable strike. That intervention was in no way resented by the railway company; on the contrary, it was welcomed, and the result was highly satisfactory to all concerned. So that when the hon. Member talked about his not being sufficiently severe to the railway companies, he must remember that most of what they could do was by way of persuasion. With regard to the matter of the maps, he had already said that he thought it a matter of great importance to the trading community that they should be published as they were before, and he had every hope that the railway companies would accede to it. ["Hear, hear!"] Then with regard to the cab strike, to which reference had been made by the same hon. Member and by the hon. Member for Battersea. The latter had referred to the fact that he had during the strike made some representations to the railway companies. He confessed that he had some sympathy with the cabmen in the effort they made to get rid of the disability under which they laboured. He had a soft corner in his heart for the London cabmen. ["Hear, hear!"] They sometimes heard him much abused, though not so much in recent years as of old; but, as far as he was concerned, he had rarely met with a case of incivility in a cabman; on the contrary, he had often had occasion to be very much satisfied with the way in which he had been treated by them. ["Hear, hear!"] If he could have been of any assistance in the late strike, he should have been glad. He did communicate with the railway companies, but they stated that they could not accede to the men's demands without causing great inconvenience to the travelling public, and when a great company managing its own affairs made a statement of that kind, the head of a public department with no power to enforce his views could go no further. He knew that the Home Office endeavoured to bring about a settlement; and he was glad to hear from the hon. Member for Battersea that there was a disposition on the part of the railway companies, now that the strike was over and the battle won, to give terms that would be acceptable to the cabmen. If he could do anything to assist to that end, he should be glad if his good offices were available. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member for Islington asked for some information as to the operation of the Light Railways Act. The position was this. Twice a year, in November and in May, the Light Railway Commissioners considered the applications made during the previous six months. In the first six months the number of applications for light railways was about 36. Nearly all had been dealt with. Inquiries had been held in almost every case, and as far as he knew the results had been eminently satisfactory. To illustrate the working of the Act in the reduction of costs in connection with railways, he might mention that last Session a railway was applied for in the ordinary way and the Bill was withdrawn. The railway was to have cost £400,000. Application for the same line was made to the Light Railway Commissioners, and after a two hours' inquiry the scheme was passed; and the whole cost of the line and expenses, instead of £400,000, would now be only £60,000. That alone was a sufficient indication of the enormous advantage that was likely to accrue from the Act. ["Hear, hear!"] He was not quite sure how many applications had been received in the second period up to the present moment; but a month ago he understood that the number amounted to about 50. It would be seen that the Act was working satisfactorily and economically. There would naturally be some delay in issuing the first orders, because it was rather a complicated proceeding and it was necessary to be extremely careful in drawing up these first orders, as they would probably be taken as models for the rest; but there was no reason to think that any unnecessary delay would occur. He would be sorry to hold out any hope that the Department would be able to separate British trade returns from Irish trade returns, for he was informed that such a separation would lead to considerable complication of accounts, and would not serve any very useful purpose. He would, however, inquire further into the matter. The hon. Member for Ross and Cromarty had put various conundrums to him, and he would endeavour to answer them. The sum of £800 to which the hon. Member had referred was the amount which it was expected would be required to meet charges which might become payable in connection with the working of the Conciliation Act in the ensuing year. Then the hon. Member asked how he accounted for the increase in the amount taken for special services. The largest apparent increase was the item of £2,000 for fees and travelling and other expenses in connection with special inquiries. That was, in fact, a transfer from the Treasury Vote and not an increase. It was considered to be better financially that each Department should be answerable for the amount which it spent than that the Treasury should be responsible for the whole amount. The money was required for the purposes of the various Departmental Committees now sitting at the Board of Trade. There was also an increase of £730 due to the expenses incurred in connection with the transmission of seamen's wages from certain Continental ports. Under this system the wages were taken from the seamen and transmitted to their homes. That had been done at Dunkirk, and the result had been so satisfactory that it had been resolved to extend the practice to three other Continental ports. Everyone who desired the welfare of our seaport communities must be glad to hear of these arrangements. Then £600 was expenditure in connection with light railways. This expenditure would be made up for by the fees received. The hon. Member for Limerick had expressed dissatisfaction with the Labour Gazette. Differing from the hon. Member, he believed that the information given in the Gazette was very much prized, and was of great service. The hon. Member had asked him to appoint a Labour correspondent in Ireland. The circumstances in Ireland were, however, essentially different from the circumstances in England or Scotland. He had inquired into the matter, and he could assure the hon. Member that if he believed that the results which the hon. Member anticipated would follow from the employment of a correspondent in Ireland, he would gladly make the appointment; but from information received by the Board of Trade, he considered that the appointment would not have the valuable results which the hon. Member expected.

Mr. DILLON expressed satisfaction with the right hon. Gentleman's reply to his representations.

Captain NORTON said he maintained that one or two posts in the Mercantile Marine Office ought to have been given to the abstractors. It was true that they had not entered the service by open competitive examination, but they had proved themselves capable of doing the work.

Mr. RITCHIE said that the Board of Trade could not ride rough-shod, so to speak, over the rules of the Civil Service. It was not in the power of the Department to do as the hon. Member wished. He had, he found, omitted to notice one point which had been raised. He was surprised that any complaint should have been made with regard to the fees charged in the Patent Office. Those fees, as the Committee knew, had been largely reduced with the best results. They were now extremely moderate, and could not be said to bear hardly upon inventors. The scale of fees was arranged in such a way as made it extremely easy for an inventor to obtain his patent, and the present plan had given great satisfaction. He did not say that a time might not arrive when even still more liberal treatment might be accorded to patentees, but it was too soon as yet to contemplate a change. A considerable amount of money was being spent in improving the accommodation at the Patent Office, there being every desire to encourage inventors.

Mr. WEIR insisted that the Patent Office ought not to be a profit-making Department, and, as a protest against the existing system, moved to reduce the Vote by £1,000. The receipts of the Office were now £205,000, of which only £60,000 was spent in the office. There was therefore a profit of £145,000.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) thought it unfair that inventors should be penalised for the benefit of the revenue.

Mr. RITCHIE said that great care was taken to render it easy for an inventor to protect his patent. Any inventor who desired to protect his patent could have protection for nine months for £1. He could have four years' subsequent protection for £4, and as he went on he paid £1 for every year. Thus for £14 he secured protection for 14 years.

Mr. WEIR expressed the opinion that some examining body should be set up, so that a poor inventor might be informed whether his patent was of any value or not before he was involved in any further expense.

Colonel MILWARD (Stratford-upon-Avon) could not see that there was the slightest hardship in regard to the fees which were charged at the present moment. Patents, as they all knew, formed very valuable property, and they were extremely valuable to the inventor when they were worth anything at all. If the State received a small sum for fees on patents, he was sure that must be recouped many times over if the invention was a success. As far as the system of examination was concerned it was carried out in America, but not, he believed, to the satisfaction of the inhabitants. It was impossible for any board of examiners, however clever they might be, to state at once, or, for that matter, even after examination, whether there was not something which had escaped their attention, which anticipated the patent. There was no real cause of complaint, and he hoped, therefore, that the hon. Member would withdraw his Amendment.

Colonel DENNY (Kilmarnock Burghs) was also of opinion that the hon. Member for Ross-shire had no real ground to complaint. He had had a good deal to do with patents, and he knew that the fees which were paid for researches, etc., to patent agents, came to a great deal more than had to be paid to the Governmen. Very often those researches were eminently unsatisfactory, and he must say that a system whereby a man might pay a patent agent a large sum of money, pay a trifling fee to the Governmen, and then find the patent was not worth the paper it was written upon, because it had been anticipated, was not altogether satisfactory. With regard to what the hon. and gallant Gentleman who had last spoken had said about America, he had had to do with many American patentees, and they all seemed to be much better pleased with their own system than with that of this country. The great initial expense in patents did not come from the Government, but from the private investigations an inventor made himself before he found out whether his patent was valuable or not. He thought if the President of the Board of Trade could devise some improvement in this public Department whereby a patentee, poor or rich, could have some ground of security that his patent had not been anticipated, it would be one monument to the right hon. Gentleman's political memory which would last longer than many of the useful monuments he had himself erected.

Mr. BURNS observed that the hon. and gallant Colonel had hit one of the blots of the patent system, and had asked for a suggestion to remedy the extravagant prices which poor inventors had to pay to patent agents. At the present time, mainly through the lack of a register of patents properly undertaken by the Department and brought up to date, many workmen would go and pay their initial fee for provisional protection, would effect their patent, go back again, and through the absence of a register of patents which everyone ought to be able to have access to on payment of a trifling fee, would be lured on to develop patents which a register of patents would at once have shown them had already been anticipated. He would suggest to the President of the Board of Trade that he should consult with the chief of the Patent Office —a well-informed official—and see whether it was not possible, even at a cost of £1,000 or £2,000, to have a register of patents, by means of which protection could be given to many poor, and also rich, patentees, who would thus be saved from the sharks and patent agents who frequently made many hundreds of pounds out of rich inventors by urging them to continue patents and developments of patents which they would discontinue doing were the patent agents to tell them the truth, or the inventors to have the means of finding it out for themselves.

Question propsed, "That a sum, not exceeding £131,859, be granted for the said Service."

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

Original Question put, and agreed to.

7. Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a sum, not exceeding £29,215, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for a grant in aid of the Mercantile Marine Fund."

Mr. WEIR urged the desirableness of having Norwegian lights fixed on the coast of Ross-shire. They were now in use on the coast of Argyllshire.

Colonel Denny.

Captain BETHELL (York, E. R., Holderness) asked whether the Board of Trade had nearly completed the communication between one lighthouse and another and the stations on the mainland, and whether electric communication with the lightships had been satisfactorily effected.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES asked for some information with regard to the electric communication with lighthouses, how far the system had gone, and what was to be effected in the ensuing year.

Captain PIRIE moved, as an Amendment, "That a sum not exceeding £25,000, be granted for the said Service." He referred to the establishment of electric communication between the lighthouses and the mainland. This experiment had now been going on for upwards of four years, and they had by no means reached finality. Every expert who had considered the subject and the Report of the Commissioners had shown that the experiment was most unsatisfactory and had led to no good result. The money would be better used to increase the number of lighthouses or fog signals so as to prevent accidents than in useless attempts to establish communication between the lighthouses and the mainland. The money spent on communication between lighthouses and the shore should be made to go as far as possible, especially as regarded Scotland. The Scotch coasts were notably deficient in lighthouses and fog signals. The secretary of Lloyds, writing to the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce, stated that the experience of Lloyds proved that the best means of diminishing loss of life round the coasts was the establishment of lighthouses and fog signals, which prevented casualties, rather than of telegraphic installations, which only availed after a casualty had taken place. Merchant shipping increased round the coasts of Scotland, and especially the north coast, every year. At present there was no fog signal between the Atlantic and Aberdeen. He moved to reduce the Vote.

Mr. RITCHIE said he understood the hon. Member to advocate that all means of electrical communication between lightships and the shore, for the purpose of signalling, should be abolished. His argument that the money should be spent on lighthouses was one that the Committee should not consider. If more lighthouses were wanted they should be provided, but the question whether electrical communication was good or bad must stand by itself, apart from whether more lighthouses were wanted. The Royal Commission of 1892 recommended a large number of electrical communications on our coasts, which had since been completed, and other recommendations would be carried out without delay.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES said he could not understand that anyone who knew the situation in which lighthouses and lightships were should desire that they should be cut off from communication with the land. In the outlying sands on the east coast of England it would be the salvation of thousands of lives a year if there was electrical communication with the lightships. He suggested that the President of the Board of Trade might inform himself as to the interesting experiments which had been initiated by an Italian scientist for transmitting electricity without wires or apparatus along waves of ether. That was a direction in which some money might well be spent in the hope of avoiding prospective expenditure hereafter. He trusted the hon. and gallant Member would not persist in his proposal to give up the attempt to establish most necessary and useful communication between lightships and the shore.

Captain PIRIE remarked that if the Government would give an assurance that they intended to strike out fresh lines and investigate the recent discovery of Martoni he would be delighted to withdraw his Amendment.

Mr. RITCHIE mentioned that £600 of the money asked for in the Vote was for experiments in connection with the system of communicating through space.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Original Question put, and agreed to.

8. £8, to complete the sum for Bankruptcy Department of the Board of Trade.—Agreed to.

9. £34,291, to complete the sum for Board of Agriculture.

Mr. CHANNING asked the President of the Board of Agriculture whether the Department had considered the advisability of extending the facilities for the voluntary use of the tests which were applied in Denmark and France in regard to tuberculosis. The results of the experiments on the Continent certainly tended to establish the accuracy of the test in the great majority of instances, and its general adoption would enable agriculturists to distinguish between healthy and unhealthy animals in their herds. Whatever might be the report of the Royal Commission, there could be little doubt that the general adoption of the experiments, which had been carried out with some success by the hon. Member for Midlothian on his estate in Scotland, would result in enormous saving to farmers at comparatively little cost. Had the Department considered the advisability of not waiting till the Report of the Commission was issued and of providing the means of carrying out this test in different parts of the country under supervision by the Board of Agriculture? Such a step would be a great boon to agriculturists. Only a short time ago the president of the French Shorthorn Society had written to the president of the Shorthorn Society in Great Britain stating that English stock could no longer be imported for sale to France, because the breeders had refused to sell their stock under this test. At least one-fifth of the stock of the country was contaminated by this disease, and its extermination would mean millions of pounds in the pockets of English agriculturists.

Mr. LEES KNOWLES (Salford, W.) said that as he introduced this subject to the notice of the House of Commons, and as the largest cattle market in the kingdom was in his constituency, he felt he had some right to speak on the question. It was only reasonable to wait for the Report of the Commission before expecting the Department to do anything. The test which the hon. Member referred to was quite as much a Local Government Board as a Board of Agriculture question. The chairman of the Commission was now busy preparing his Report.

*Mr. RADCLIFFE COOKE (Hereford) said that he wished to make a suggestion with regard to the cultivation of orchards. He suggested some time ago that a commission of inquiry should be instituted into the state of the orchards in the principal cider-producing districts of England, and that the Government should establish certain experimental farms in those districts. As a result of these suggestions a gentleman had recently revived the cider industry in Kent, and last February celebrated there what was called "Arbor Day"—an institution well known in America, where it had produced the best results. Arbor Day was instituted in the United States by a private individual 25 years ago. The notion was warmly supported by the Government, and on the first celebration over a million trees were planted; and a great number each succeeding year, so that in some parts quite a change had been effected in the appearance of the country. The gentleman who had started the institution at the village of Eynsford, in Kent, had done so with the intention of promoting the planting of vintage apples and pears in that county. He (Mr. Radcliffe Cooke) was invited on the occasion, and after the trees had been planted a meeting was held, at which two resolutions were passed. One was:—

"That, in view of the importance of the cider industry to this country, and the capability of vastly extending it to keep pace with the growing demand for genuine English cider, this meeting urges the appointment of a Commission for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of our orchards all over the kingdom, and the establishment by the State of experimental farms for the cultivation and dissemination of approved varieties of vintage fruit."

The other resolution was:—

"That this meeting urges the importance of encouraging the planting in Kent of vintage varieties of apples such as were formerly abundant in the county, and the introduction of prime cider fruits, many of which are also excellent keepers and cookers."

Copies of the resolutions were sent to the President of the Board of Agriculture. They elicited the following reply:—

"Board of Agriculture,
"4, Whitehall-place, London, S.W., "26th March 1897.
No. 582/97.

"Sir,—I am directed by the Board of Agriculture to thank you for your letter of the 3rd inst., communicating to me resolutions adopted at a meeting, held at Eynsford on 'Arbor Day,' 27th ult., and I am to say the Board take note of the various views expressed. The Board are in hearty sympathy with any well-directed efforts which can be made for the improvement of orchards in this country, but they are not at present disposed to think that they themselves could, with advantage, take action in the particular direction indicated. The appointment of a Royal Commission would scarcely appear to be required in order to bring to light the bad condition of certain apple orchards in the cider-making counties, and it is understood that the measures necessary for their improvement are already, as a rule, within the knowledge of fruit-growers.

"Nor do the Board think that the intervention of the State, with regard to the supply of young trees of good descriptions of vintage fruit would be well justified, inasmuch as such trees can readily be obtained at reasonable prices through the ordinary trade channels.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, (Signed) "T. H. Elliot, Secretary.

"E. D. Till, Esq.,
Priory, Eynsford, Dartford."

Sympathy was always largely kept in stock in the Government Departments—[laughter]—but, as the above letter showed, steps were invariably taken by the Department to find plausible reasons for not doing the thing they declared they were in complete sympathy with. The reply of the Board of Agriculture did not thoroughly satisfy the gentleman to whom it was addressed, and he wrote to the Board on April 1, 1897, as follows:—

"I thank you for your letter (582/97) by which I regret to learn that your Board are not able to take action in the direction of the resolution passed at the public meeting on February 27th. I have found extreme difficulty in obtaining good 6 ft. standards of both apple and pear of vintage varieties, and indeed had to place inferior sorts instead of the superior descriptions I wanted, such, for instance, as Foxwhelp, Dymock Red, Kingston Black, and Joeby Crab; neither could I get Barland nor Taynton Squash pear trees.

"If, with your wider experience, you will kindly tell me where good specimens of these or other proved varieties are obtainable, I shall be greatly obliged. I fear you take too favourable a view of the situation as regards supplies of young trees, except possibly from French nurseries.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

"E. D. Till."

A month elapsed before any answer came to that letter. Meanwhile, Mr. Till had applied to all known dealers, and had found that the trees could not be supplied. The reply of the Board of Agriculture was as follows:—

"Sir,—I am directed by the Board of Agriculture to advert to your letter of 1st inst., and with reference to your request to be referred by this Department to fruit tree growers or dealers from whom you could obtain good specimens of young cider apple trees. I am to say that the Board do not see their way to depart from their practice of abstaining from selecting or recommending particular persons or firms."

The Board, therefore, took a month to state what the established practice of the Department was. [Laughter.] It was evident that the Board had endeavoured to find out whether the statements they had made in their first letter could be substantiated, and, finding they could not, the Board fell back upon "the established practice" of the Department. His friend, sending him the above letter, wrote:—

> "I enclose the reply of the Board of Agriculture. They abstain from recommending particular persons or firms! A rich excuse for ignorance."

When people applied to him for information as to where they could get good cider—as the Chairman of Committees lately did him the honour of doing—[laughter]—he sent them a printed list of addresses and let them make a choice for themselves, and if the Board knew where those trees were to be obtained they could have adopted some such plan as that. The only explanation was that when the Board made the statement they had no foundation whatever for it. On last Monday he received a letter from a Mr. Gray, an official in the British Consulate at Christiania—apparently a very intelligent and able young man. He hoped he would not injure the young man's chances of promotion by stating those facts in his favour. [Laughter.] This gentleman told him that a person of some importance at Christiania—in fact, a member of the body which in Norway corresponded with Parliament—was desirous of trying English cider. He had tried Norwegian cider, and did not like it. [Laughter.] But he was about to give a political dinner to his constituents—[laughter]—so that Members of Parliament had their trials there as well as here—[laughter]—and wanted some samples of the English article; and if he liked the samples he was prepared to propose that the duty now imposed on the importation of cider into the country should be reduced. Suppose he had written to this gentleman and said that to recommend makers of English cider was contrary to his established practice, what would have happened? Why, there would be no prospect of the introduction of English cider into Norway. He, however, gave the gentleman the name of a firm, and the samples he required were despatched to him. He had recently also had a request from a gentleman in Denmark to send him English cider, with a view to its introduction into that country. If these people had not happened to know of his humble existence they would naturally have applied to the Board of Agriculture, and if they had done so the Board, after waiting a month, would have replied that the practice of the Department would not allow them to give any such information. In that way the opportunity for the opening up of what might be a considerable trade would have been lost by the action of a Government Department. In America they acted in a very different manner, and in Canada also. He had suggested that the Board of Agriculture should establish experimental farms in this country. In the United States there were 50 experimental farms, and there were some in Canada also. To show the practical use of these farms he cited the case of the State of Iowa, where it was found that the winters were so inclement that the apple trees were often destroyed. The Government thereupon sent a director of agriculture, accompanied by a Canadian horticulturist, to Russia, where in one of the coldest provinces, the Province of Kasan, they found not only varieties of apple, pear, and plum trees which could be cultivated with profit in the cold climate of Iowa, but also forest trees which would give these fruit trees the necessary shelter. That was the proper sort of Board of Agriculture—["hear, hear!"]—and that was what the people here wanted. Experiments necessarily implied failure, and the ordinary farmer could not afford to run the risk of failure. The Government, however, could afford to run this risk, and there was no doubt that agriculturists in this country might greatly benefit by these farms All that the farmer had to do in the States, or in Canada, was to go or write to the experimental farms in order to find out what fruit trees he could plant with the best chance of success on his farm. Not only so, he could have at cost price whatever trees he wanted. The cost of these five experimental stations in Canada was £15,000 a year in a poor country, against England's miserable £7,000 or £8,000 a year. What he wanted the right hon. Gentleman to do was to follow the example of our Colonies, and ask the Treasury, not for £8,000, but for £80,000, a year.

Mr. MELLOR (York, W. R., Sowerby) observed that the last speaker had given the Committee some very useful information with regard to apple growing and cider making. He had a small matter which he wished to bring before the President of the Board of Agriculture, and it was this—he wished to ask the right hon. Gentleman whether he could not issue some circulars to the farmers in the west of England, not to induce them to plant fresh trees but to take care of the apple trees which they had got. ["Hear, hear!"] Nothing was more depressing to his mind than to go through the west of England now and to see the careless way in which these trees were being treated. The Board of Agriculture had done nothing in the way of giving advice to the farmers and labourers as to the best known methods of preserving their trees. This was a small but a very important matter, and he hoped the President of the Board of Agriculture would turn his attention to it. In the west of England the farmers thought very highly of Mr. Walter Long, and his name had a power greater than that of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, or the Secretary to the Treasury, or anybody else. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.] The right hon. Gentleman might also give his attention to the preservation of kestrels. These birds which were very useful indeed in the destruction of vermin were becoming very scarce, while complaints were arising from many quarters in the west of England as to the great increase of rats.

Mr. PARKER SMITH also supported the suggestion of the hon. Member (Mr. Radcliffe Cooke) and referred to experience in India. Reference had been made to the transit of animals from Ireland. The evidence which came before them went to show that animals suffered far more in crossing the Channel from Ireland than cattle which came from Canada. The Committee of which the hon. Member for Brixton was Chairman, paid special attention to the question of the transport of animals across the Channel. Reform was needed, and he hoped the responsible Minister could assure them that he had the matter under consideration.

Mr. DENIS KILBRIDE (Galway, N.) asked the President of the Board of Agriculture to say what had been done to promote agricultural and dairy education, for which provision was made in this Vote. More than one deputation had waited upon the right hon. Gentleman to ask him to introduce legislation which would put the law with respect to dairy-farming in a more satisfactory condition, because Irish dairy producers were seriously hampered by the present state of the law. Reference had been made in the course of the Debate to the serious loss incurred by farmers in the West of England by the depredations of rats. He had a valuable suggestion to make to the President of the Board of Agriculture. There was a little animal indigenous to Ireland—the Irish terrier—which was the best rat-killer in the world, and perhaps the right hon. Gentleman could do something to adjust the financial relations between Ireland and England—[laughter]—by spending some money in encouraging the breed of Irish terriers and sending the dogs to those parts of the West of England which were infested with rats. [Laughter.] If the right hon. Gentleman were willing to adopt that suggestion he could give the names of several breeders of the best rat-killers in the world. [Renewed laughter.] He approved of experimental farms, but he did not think that they ought to be confined to experiments in fruit-growing. They ought to cover every branch of the agricultural industry. One of the principal advantages that would arise from such a farm as that indicated by the hon. Member opposite would be that it would place at the disposal of farmers in different parts of the country the grasses that they should sow, having regard to the particular soil and climate of the district. The sum of £8,000 which they voted in this particular year was only a drop in the sea—it could do practically no good. He thought that £80,000, or even a much larger sum might be extremely well spent in improving the condition of agriculture. He thought everyone would admit that what agriculturists were suffering from was mainly ignorance. How was it that the dairy farmers of Denmark were beating out of the markets of London and other places the dairy farmers of Devon and Ireland—simply because the Danish Government spend a large amount of money every year on the agricultural expert education of their people, and in carrying out these experiments. To forward the agricultural interests of their people they had in this country a Danish Commissioner, an officer of the Government, paid by the Government, whose business it was to safeguard the interests of Danish produce all over Great Britain, and to report periodically to his Government which were the best markets for any particular kind of produce. Here the Government had done practically nothing up to the present time to teach the British agriculturist how to farm his land. He knew a great deal had been done to safeguard the health of the flocks and herds in this country. He admitted that a good deal had been done in the direction of stamping out the plague of tuberculosis and pleuropneumonia, but with the exception of that one particular piece of good the Board of Agriculture had done nothing practically to benefit the agriculturists of Great Britain, and nothing at all to benefit the agriculturists of Ireland. He found that little or nothing had been done either by the Board of Trade or the Board of Agriculture to improve the conditions of the transit of cattle from Ireland into this country, although there was no subject more worthy the attention of either Department. If right hon. Gentlemen would go down to any of the ports of this country and go on board ocean-going steamers which brought Canadian and American cattle to this country, and steamers which carried cattle between Ireland and England, they could not fail to be struck by the difference of the accommodation provided in the two cases. The Irish cattle traffic would never be satisfactory until some Government Department insisted that cattle boats should be cattle boats, and passenger boats passengers boats. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR C. DILKE, referring to the remarks of the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. Radcliffe Cooke), said he thought it was very doubtful whether it should be left to a private individual to foster an industry like the cider industry, which he believed had a large future before it. He had been requested by a large number of his constituents to mention to the President of the Board of Agriculture the bearing of the muzzling order on the working of sheep dogs. They hoped that it would be possible for the right hon. Gentleman to make some modification in the order in favour of sheep dogs, as it was found very difficult for these dogs to work properly now.

MR. G. WHITELEY (Stockport) said that the complaint he always had to make against agriculturists was that instead of adopting the methods of other trades, instead of working out their own salvation, and themselves conducting the experiments necessary to develop their industry, they were always calling upon the Government to do something for them, and to spend money on their own particular industry. He did not think it was desirable that their demand for £80,000 should be agreed to at present. Last year the Government gave a sum of £2,000,000 to the agriculturists, and surely that should suffice for some little time. From rates to rats was an easy transition, and he was sorry to hear that rats were making such depredations in the West of England. He thought the best thing would be to issue an order that all rats should be muzzled. [A laugh.] He thought that would meet the case.

*MR. WALTER LONG said that the hon. Member for Northamptonshire had asked whether the Board of Agriculture were prepared to take any action of their own in anticipation of the Report of the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis. The Report would be, he believed, in their hands before long, and, pending that Report, he was certainly not prepared to make any recommendations as to Government interference in reference to this question. The hon. Member told the Committee it was a very serious question, and if it were so serious, it would certainly be a very hazardous thing for any Government Department to take steps affecting the agricultural community, unless they had behind them the recommendations of the Commission and the evidence upon which those recommendations were based. The suggestion of the hon. Member was that they should act somewhat in the same way as the Local Government Board acted in the supply of lymph—that they should supply tuberculine for voluntary use by agriculturists. That was a suggestion which he might entertain if it were shown to him that at present there was any practical difficulty in the way of agriculturists, if they wished to make experiments, obtaining the necessary means. But he saw no evidence of any such practical difficulty. For instance, the work done by the hon. Member for Midlothian without Government assistance was of the greatest possible value to his brother agriculturists, and reflected the greatest credit upon him. Pending the Report of the Royal Commission, he was not prepared to suggest that any definite steps should be taken by his Department. ["Hear, hear!"] He thought the majority of the recommendations that had been made to him had been in connection with experimental farms. No doubt there was a great deal to be said for experimental farms, but he was quite sure there was something to be said against them. He did not envy the lot of a President of the Board of Agriculture, who was responsible for them. He did not know what his lot might be in the various assemblies to which his hon. Friend behind him had referred, whether in the Colonies or in foreign countries. But he did not envy the lot of a President of the Board of Agriculture in that House who was responsible for the conduct of eight or ten experimental farms in different parts of the country. He knew that it was no easy matter to satisfy British agriculturists on any particular question; but he was quite certain of this, that if the Government conducted experimental farms with a view to showing farmers how to farm their land, the practical result would be that every agriculturist in the House or out of it would tell them that "whatever they did know, they did not know how to cultivate land"—[laughter]—and nothing but disastrous results would be attained. He confessed that he listened with regret to the ready way in which hon. Gentlemen in all parts of the House and in all parts of the country were found to talk about British agriculture as if it stood at the bottom of the list with regard to the agricultural products of the world. To listen to some of them, one would think that British agriculturists were the most ignorant and incompetent in the world. Whereas he did not think there were any producers in the world with whom the British agriculturists could not compete, both in the quantity and in the quality of his produce—["hear, hear!"]—and be believed that he was able to put on the market an article superior to that produced by any country in the world. How was this excellence obtained? And that it had been attained he had never heard gainsaid. Had it been by Government assistance? Had these experimental farms in other countries enabled those nations to produce a better article than we produce in England? He cared not whether it was their brethren in Canada, or the agriculturists of foreign countries. Take any kind of produce—potatoes, cheese, butter, crops of all kinds—take them either in quality, size, or general character—the British agriculturist had always more than held his own. That had been due, not to Government experiments or Government interference, but it was the result entirely of his own energy and initiative, and the risking of his own capital. [Cheers.] His hon. Friend behind him was anxious that they should undertake experiments in growing cider apples. He understood the suggestion was that they should set up experimental farms in order that upon them there should be grown a particular kind of apple, so that this kind of fruit tree might be supplied to those who applied for them. He was sorry that in the correspondence which had taken place on this subject, either the hon. Member or his Friends should have had to complain of any delay on the part of the Board of Agriculture in replying to their letters. But he was bound to say that this was the first time he had ever heard it laid down in that House that it was the primary duty or in any sense the duty of a Government Department to supply the public with the names of shops where they could get an article of the best character. Further than that, he could not conceive anything more undesirable or more to be avoided than that a Government Department should identify themselves with the advertisements of particular wares or manufactures, or of shops where these could be bought. ["Hear, hear!"] His hon. Friend dwelt on the difficulties in the way of getting these particular fruits. Yet he told them that in Kent a certain farmer had revived this expired industry with most successful results. Surely they could do in Hereford what had been done in Kent. He could not believe that the cider industry, if it was not a prosperous one already, was going to be carried on to a success if it could not be developed without a Government Department setting up fruit gardens. A dozen or more other industries were constantly brought under his notice as being suitable subjects for experiments on special farms. But there was no other country in the world that varied so much in respect of soil and climate as England did, and what might be suitable for production on one experimental farm would be unsuitable in another. Therefore, to meet all the suggestions that were made from 20 to 30 experimental farms would be required. Complaint had been made that only £8,000 a year was spent here by the Government on agricultural education, as compared with £100,000 spent in Canada; but it should be borne in mind that here it had been resolved to work in the first place not through the Government but through private enterprise, which was only to be supplemented by the help and action of local authorities in the shape of County Councils. When hon. Members said that nothing had been done by that House or the Government to assist agriculture by finding money for experiments and for improvements, they forgot or ignored what the House had done. Not long ago £160,000 a year was voted for technical and agricultural education, and that money was expended by the County Councils. Let hon. Members ascertain whether the duties entrusted to the County Councils were properly performed; and if they were not, let hon. Members take steps with a view to making the County Councils spend the money in a more useful way. It could not be said with truth that the Government had not provided money for these purposes. He was not a believer in the system of experimental farms carried on by the Government, but he did believe in experimental farms attached to agricultural colleges and similar institutions, and he would gladly do what he could to assist educational centres, county councils, or great agricultural colleges to obtain land in order that practical instruction in agriculture might be given to students. He agreed that it was unfortunate to find how greatly orchards had been neglected in many parts of the country, and he would consider the advisability of issuing a circular or leaflet on the subject. He deplored the destruction of kestrels and owls. Their annihilation was unsportsmanlike and injurious to the farmers' interests, because they destroyed many agricultural pests. A leaflet had already been issued on this subject by the Board of Agriculture, but he would see whether anything more could be done. In regard to the transit of cattle from Ireland, he was glad to say that there had been a distinct improvement. Last year he secured the assistance of four additional inspectors, who had been hard at work ever since their appointment. There was room for further improvement, but he was not at all sure that the damage entirely was done in the cross-channel stage of the journey. He and the Chief Secretary for Ireland were at the present moment engaged in an inquiry into this branch of the question, and with the aid of the officials concerned they hoped to be able to obtain information which would enable them to see if it were not possible to effect such changes in the transit of cattle as to secure that they were carried humanely, and also delivered in a condition that would insure their commanding the best prices. The right hon. Member for the Forest of Dean had mentioned certain matters of detail in connection with the muzzling of sheep dogs. The matter should have his attention, and he hoped soon to be able to communicate with the right hon. Gentleman. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. CHANNING remarked that the leaflets which had been issued by the Board of Agriculture had proved of great value to agriculturists. He should like to ask the President of the Board if he could see his way to include among them a translation of the very interesting and suggestive report of Professor Bang, the great Danish expert in tuberculosis. When he was in America he found that this work had been issued through several States of the Union, and that it gave in a careful and concise form the results of experiments which were of great service to agriculturists.

*Mr. LONG said he would be glad to consider the suggestion.

Resolutions to be reported upon Monday next; Committee also report Progress; to sit again upon Monday next.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS [EXPENSES].

Resolution reported—

"That it is expedient to authorise the payment, out of moneys to be provided by Parliament, of any expenses of and relating to arbitration which may become payable under any Act of the present Session to amend the law with respect to compensation to workmen for accidental injuries suffered in the course of their employment, and of any compensation that may become payable in respect of accidents to workmen employed by or under the Crown in pursuance of such Act."

Resolution agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

LAND TENURE BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 1st July.

TENANT RIGHT IN TOWNS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 24th June.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) (No. 2) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 25th June.

LONDON WATER COMPANIES AMALGAMATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

BOARDS OF GUARDIANS AND LABOURERS (IRELAND) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Amendment to Second Reading [7th April] further adjourned till Thursday 1st July.

SALE OF FOOD AND DRUGS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 24th June.

COUNTY COUNCILS (QUALIFICATION OF WOMEN) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 1st July.

VERMINOUS PERSONS BILL.

Considered in Committee, and reported; as amended, to be considered upon Monday next.

SALE OF DISTRESS AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

TRAWLERS' LICENSING BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday next.

MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 24th June.

POOR LAW FRANCHISE (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 24th June.

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS BILL.

Read a Second time, and committed to the Standing Committee on Trade, Etc.

PARISH REGISTERS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 1st July.

COUNTY GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 1st July.

WHITSUNTIDE HOLIDAYS.

On the Motion "That the House do now adjourn,"

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said: At Question time I threw out a suggestion in regard to the holidays and the possible necessity or desirability of suspending the Twelve o'clock Rule in order that our holidays might be extended to June 17th instead of only to the 14th. I have made such inquiries as I can in different quarters, and I find that on the one hand there is a strong objection to suspending the Twelve o'clock Rule, and that, on the other hand, there is a general desire to get through the work of the Committee stage of the Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill as soon as possible. Under these circumstances I do not propose to take any steps on Monday next. ["Hear, hear!"]

Adjourned at Five Minutes after Twelve o'Clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 31st May 1897.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

*LORD CLONBROCK: My Lords, I wish to be allowed to say a few words of personal explanation with respect to a remark made on Friday evening by the noble Viscount who spoke from the Cross Benches immediately after I moved the adjournment of the Debate. My noble Friend is reported to have said "he should say that the wild Irish had been got at." Now, my Lords, some centuries ago, according to an old chronicler, Irishmen were divided into "mere Irish, wild Irish, and very wild Irish." As a native of the Pale my noble Friend would be classed as "mere Irish," and would naturally look upon a poor Connaught man like myself as "wild Irish." I cannot complain of that; it was probably only from extreme politeness that he refrained from including me among the "very wild Irish." But I do not quite know what he meant by saying "the wild Irish had been got at." If, however, he meant to convey a suspicion that my Motion was at the instigation or with the concurrence of Her Majesty's Government, or prompted in any way by any previous communication with them, I wish to assure the House and assure him that his suspicion is a wild one—I may say a very wild one. In point of fact, when I mentioned my intention in conversation with a Member of the Government a short time before my turn came to speak, it was received with so much surprise as to leave me in considerable doubt as to whether the Government would agree to my Motion or not. I beg to thank the House for allowing me this opportunity of stating that the wild Irish have not been "got at," and that there was nothing underhand about my Motion on Friday.

VISCOUNT CLIFDEN: My Lords, I am very sorry if anything that I said displeased the noble Lord. It was certainly not him to whom I referred. Whether he is wild Irish or very wild Irish I leave to others to say. What I did think and now repeat is that, as far as I was concerned, it was sprung upon us at the last moment that the Debate was not to go on. How that was arranged I think the noble Viscount knows better than I do. When I came into the Lobby I was told the Debate was not going on. I am sorry we did not proceed with the Debate, which I do not think we shall hear this year, but I still say that an arrangement was made of which many of us were not cognisant until we came into the House.

FLOODS PREVENTION BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to give further powers to County Councils with a view to the prevention of floods and other damage arising from rivers or watercourses—Was presented by the Lord Thring; Read 1^a; and to be printed.—[No. 102.]

COPYRIGHT AMENDMENT BILL [H.L.].

*LORD MONKSWELL, in moving the Second Reading of this Bill, said it was a little Bill on a big subject, and he was rather doubtful whether its small scope would recommend it to the House. Some of their Lordships were no doubt familiar with the Report of the very strong Royal Commission which sat in 1878 to inquire into the then condition of the law of copyright. That Report contained a scathing denunciation of the then state of the law, both as to form and substance, and probably their Lordships would be of opinion that nothing would meet the case except a Bill of very wide scope indeed. He entirely agreed in that, seeing that the Report of the Commission showed that the law then existing was a disgrace to the Statute-book. In its main features the law had been in force for 55 years. Much of the principal statute was unintelligible, though during that long period numerous judicial decisions had been given which had enabled authors and publishers to take a more accurate view of their rights; but a great many points in the Act still remained obscure and undecided. During that long period of 55 years, persons for whose benefit the Act was passed had spent a great deal of their literary gains in litigation, and a good many had probably spent a good deal more than their literary gains in endeavouring to ascertain their rights under the Act. In these circumstances he thought that authors had a right to complain of their treatment by Parliament. The Legislature ought long ago to have passed a consolidating and amending Act, and nothing short of such a Measure could be accepted by authors in full discharge of the debt due to them from Parliament. But authors, like other people, must take Parliament as they found it, and if they could not get what they considered to be their due, they must ask for what they thought they could get. In the fierce competition for legislative favour and even justice, authors, he thought, laboured under some disability as compared with other classes of persons. Though it was exceedingly regrettable, it was not surprising that their just claims had been ignored by both Houses and both Parties. They were not well versed in the art of agitation. The great majority of them were not keen party men, and many were not party men at all; and he supposed that when a General Election came about there was no class of persons among whom there had been less disposition to go to the poll. They were not a very numerous class. There was, no doubt, a particular class, namely journalists, who were keen politicians, but they were less affected than other literary men by the law of copyright, for they generally wrote for the day alone. Authors would have to become much more proficient in the arts of the demagogue before they induced Parliament to pass a complete measure of reform. The attempt had been several times made, but the result had been by no means encouraging. The last attempt was made six years ago, when the Society of Authors, then led by the late Lord Tennyson, honoured him by asking him to introduce a Bill of a very comprehensive character to amend and consolidate the law. The same noble and learned Lord who now occupied the Woolsack occupied it then, and he was very much startled by the magnitude of the task which he endeavoured to impose on the House. The noble and learned Lord acknowledged that the law was in a shocking state, and consequently allowed the Bill to be Read a Second time, but on the condition that it should be proceeded with no further. He acknowledged to the full that there was a great deal of force in the arguments of the noble and learned Lord, for not only was the Bill then introduced a very large and comprehensive Measure, but it dealt with matters very much in dispute both as to colonial matters and matters of foreign policy, and it affected to a great extent America, Canada, and the Berne Convention. Therefore there was great force in the contention that a Bill of that character should be taken in hand by the responsible Government of the day. Since that time both sides in politics had been in office, and neither had shown the slightest inclination to take the matter up. It therefore appeared to the Society of Authors that having waited in vain for six years, the only way in which they could bring this matter prominently before the public and Parliament was by presenting a Bill. He would very much have liked to introduced a larger Measure, but had he again done so, the same arguments would have been used against him as were used six years ago. This Bill was of a totally different character, and he hoped their Lordships would not only give the Bill a Second Reading, but would view it favourably in its later stages. The Bill was a very small one in the sense that it was very short, but it dealt with several important matters, but matters of purely domestic concern. It did not affect the Colonies or foreign countries, and had nothing to do with the Convention of Berne. The Bill did not affect any question in which the Colonies were specially interested; he could not imagine that any Colony or British possession would object to be placed under the Bill; but if they should, there was a provision in it which met the case, for by Order in Council the Government of the day was to have the power of deciding whether or not any particular British possession should or should not come under the Bill. The Society of Authors placed great faith in their Lordships' House. They believed that quite independently of the other House their Lordships could do a great deal of good towards promoting the cause of copyright reform. If the Bill should pass their Lordships' House, he proposed that it should be sent to a strong Select Committee, upon which Lord Knutsford, who was a member of the Commission of 1878, had promised to sit. The Measure was by no means an author's Bill, although promoted primarily by the Society of Authors. Its provisions had also been carefully considered by the Publishers' Association and the Copyright Association, who were in the main satisfied with them. He trusted that a Bill that conciliated so many diverse interests would be considered as deserving of consideration. The Memorandum explanatory of the Bill divided it into five parts, the first of which dealt with the question of magazine copyright, as to which the law was very obscure and much in need of reform. No one pretended to know with certainty what the law was, but the better opinion appeared to be that there was no copyright in a magazine article for a period of 28 years, that a publisher could only print the article as part of his magazine, and that the contributor could not reprint it during the period which he had mentioned except by consent of the publisher. In practice the publisher generally did give his consent after a much shorter period, and all the Bill would do would be to bring the law into conformity with the almost universal practice. The change effected would be retrospective, and it was proposed that an author should be at liberty to republish a magazine article in separate form at the end of three years. This would be in accordance with the views of the Copyright Commission. It was not proposed to interfere with the copyright of the publisher of an encyclopædia, who would still retain his present rights over its contents. The Bill also proposed that a lecturer should have copyright in his lecture without its being necessary for him to give notice to two Justices of the Peace. A further provision made lectures and sermons delivered in endowed buildings subject to copyright. That was a proposal not in accordance with the recommendation of the Royal Commission, but the Society of Authors believed that they would be able to adduce good reasons for it before the Select Committee. The Bill dealt next with the question of abridgement, and, in accordance with the Report of the Royal Commission, proposed to enact that copyright should carry with it the right to abridge. The unauthorised dramatisation of a novel would be made an infringement of copyright, and the author would be provided with a simple remedy. The Measure would throw upon the British Museum the duty of certifying the date of the first publication of a book. It was necessary to ascertain the date of such publication, because the period of copyright ran from it, but at present it was often difficult to ascertain the date. It would be seen that this was not an ambitious Measure. It merely dealt with defects in the law, and the removal of those defects would bring welcome relief to a class of persons who were peculiarly entitled to the consideration of their Lordships' House. ["Hear, hear!"] He begged to move the Second Reading of the Bill.

THE SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF TRADE (The Earl of DUDLEY) said that he did not rise to criticise the provisions of the Measure, or to oppose its Second Reading. He feared, however, that he could only consent to the Motion on the same condition as was made by the Secretary for Scotland in 1891—namely, that the Bill should not be proceeded with further during the present Session. The whole subject of copyright was in a very unsettled state, and negotiations were being carried on respecting it between this country, the colonies, and foreign countries, and until those negotiations were completed, it was obvious that a Bill of this kind could hardly have the effect which was desired. He thought it also obvious that, if a subject of this kind was to be dealt with at all, it ought to be dealt with as a whole, and not in a piecemeal fashion. The noble Lord appeared to think that neither the present Government nor the Government of which the noble Lord was himself a member, had shown any disposition to take this subject in hand. With regard to the present Government, that supposition was not correct, and the Board of Trade would be quite ready to introduce a Bill, dealing not only with the amendment of the copyright law, but also with its consolidation, when the negotiations to which he had referred had been completed. In these circumstances, he trusted that if the Bill was read a Second time the noble Lord would forego his intention of referring it to a Select Committee.

LORD THRING thought the condition on which the noble Earl was willing to allow the Bill to be read a Second time was a most extraordinary one. Lord Monkswell had explained clearly that what the Bill proposed to do was simply to touch the fringe of a very large subject. The Bill would not interfere in the slightest degree with the great law of copyright in books. What it would do was to amend the law affecting lectures, sermons, and the dramatisation of novels. These were matters independent of and separate from the general question of copyright. They required minute and detailed investigation, and if the Government were to allow these points to be examined by a Select Committee, there need be no interference whatever with the Measure which the noble Earl said he would be prepared to introduce at some future time. On the contrary, the consideration of this Bill by a Select Committee would pave the way for the Government Measure, and remove obstructions from its path. He had never heard a more inconclusive answer than that given by the noble Earl. Here was a Bill to amend a certain definite part of the law; its consideration would not hamper or fetter in the least the action of the Government with respect to the rest of the law on this subject; and he quite failed to understand why the Measure should not be proceeded with.

LORD HERSCHELL said that he took a great deal of interest in this subject, because he was a member of the Royal Commission of 1878. Next year 20 years would have elapsed since the publication of their Report, and up to the present time it had produced no result. He feared that if they were to wait for legislation until a complete and comprehensive Measure was introduced and passed, the 20 years during which those who were interested in this subject had been compelled to wait, would have a considerable addition to their number. He did not see why this Bill should not be referred to a Select Committee in order that its provisions, which did not really go to the root of the copyright question, might be considered carefully and put into the best possible shape. That surely might be done, even if the Bill could not be passed. One reason why the settlement of this question had been delayed so long was that some of our colonies had raised objections from time to time to legal alterations which would affect them. One might almost say that there had been some friction between Colonial Governments and the Government of this country with regard to copyright laws extending to the colonies. But he did not think that these difficulties afforded any ground for not proceeding further with the consideration of this Measure now. It seemed to him that the matters with which the Bill dealt might be treated very much apart from the general question of copyright law, and that it would be a useful work for a Select Committee to inquire what was the best shape in which they could be put. So far from creating any difficulty with regard to the Bill which probably the Government might introduce, it would be of immense assistance if these separate and detached questions could be carefully considered by a Select Committee. They could then embody, if the results appeared satisfactory, those provisions in their Bill, or after seeing all that was to be said by the Select Committee they might make alterations or abandon any part of them. It struck him, therefore, that the consideration of this Bill by a Select Committee could not interfere with any negotiations that might arise with the Government in afterwards framing a Bill. He called attention to two provisions in the Bill that would require attention and further consideration. The first was the provision relating to the dramatization of novels. It made it an infringement of copyright without the consent of the author to take or embody the title of a book or colourably take from the book a substantial part of the dialogue. So far he thought that there would not be much difference of opinion. The Bill also made it an infringement to take or colourably take a part of the plot or incidents of the novel. But plot and incidents were very often to be found which were very similar in their character in more than one novel, and, supposing they found the same plot in two novels, was the owner of the copyright in each of the novels to be able to treat the adaptation as an infringement of his copyright? If so, then they might have several persons complaining of a breach of copyright in respect of one and the same drama. That was a part of the clause which would require further consideration. The other was an important point. He sympathised with the scheme as to the time when copyright began; but there was a difficulty in ascertaining when copyright had begun and when publication had taken place. The proposal was to make a certificate of the British Museum operative as to the time from which copyright had to run. Every author, no doubt, was bound to send a copy of his book to the British Museum under a penalty, but he was not sure that the effect of the provision had been thoroughly considered. Unless a person publishing in this country sent his book within a month he was liable to a penalty of £5. But supposing an author delayed to send beyond the month the only result was that he subjected himself to the penalty. If the copyright was to run from the date when the author first transmitted the book to the British Museum, obviously it might be of advantage to the owner to extend the period of sending his book to the British Museum. Six months' extension of copyright might be more valuable to him than the penalty of £5. If the book was published outside the United Kingdom, in another part of the British dominions, it need only be sent to the British Museum within twelve months of publication. In that case a book published in the colonies, if sent, say, at the end of the eleventh month, would allow the colonial author to obtain practically an additional year's copyright over the person who published in the United Kingdom. Therefore, the clause, though excellent in intention, might probably with some additional provisions be made capable of affording a satisfactory solution of the time of publication; and those were matters which might be carefully considered when the Bill was further discussed.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR (Lord HALSBURY) thought that the subject was one which would be, to some extent, assisted by the deliberations of a Select Committee. [Cheers.] He was not in the position to give his noble Friend any undertaking that the Measure would be passed into law this Session, because he thought that there was a great deal in it which required discussion. He thought that their Lordships would do well to read the Bill a Second time now, though, looking at the date at which they now were, he was afraid that there was not a great chance of actual legislation this year. He agreed that the deliberations of a Select Committee might assist both their Lordships and the other House in dealing with this subject on some future occasion. [Cheers.]

Bill Read 2^{a}, and referred to a Select Committee.

JURIES DETENTION BILL.

Read 3^{a} (according to Order), with the Amendments, and passed, and returned to the Commons.

ELEMENTARY ERUCATION ACT 1870 AMENDMENT BILL.

Read 3^{a} (according to Order), and passed.

VOLUNTEERS BILL.

Order of the Day for the House to be put into Committee, read, and discharged.

WHITSUNTIDE RECESS.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY: May I ask the noble Marquess when he proposes that the adjournment should take place, and for how long?

THE PRIME MINISTER (The Marquess of SALISBURY): If quite convenient to noble Lords opposite, I should propose to adjourn on Thursday until the 18th.

House Adjourned at Ten Minutes past Five o'Clock, till To-morrow, a Quarter past Ten o'Clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 31st May 1897.

COAL MINES REGULATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred from Wednesday till Wednesday 30th June.

QUESTIONS.

COVENT GARDEN THEATRE FUND.

Mr. J. F. HOGAN (Tipperary, Mid): I beg to ask the Parliamentary Charity Commissioner whether it would be possible for the Charity Commissioners, without interfering in any way with the operations of the Covent Garden Theatre Fund as a benefit society regulated by statute, to inquire and ascertain how far it is fulfilling the functions of its other capacity as a source of relief to distressed widows and orphans of the theatrical profession?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir Richard Webster, Isle of Wight): I have recently been informed that, owing to the charity in question being a friendly society, the Charity Commissioners have no jurisdiction. From a statement made to me I am clear that inquiry is necessary into the management of this society, and I will take steps to see that such inquiry is made.

IRISH LAND COMMISSION.

Mr. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is now in a position to state the terms of reference to the Royal Commission on the Irish Land Commission, and the names of the Commissioners?

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central) said he was not yet able to make any statement on the subject.

Mr. DILLON asked whether the right hon. Gentleman could give them any indication as to when he might be able to make a statement?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR said he was afraid he could not do that.

Captain DONELAN (Cork, E.): On behalf of the hon. Member for North Tipperary (Mr. Patrick J. O'Brien), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that there has been no sitting of the Land Commission for the district of North Tipperary within the past twelve months, that there are in consequence a large number of cases on the list in the neighbourhood of Nenagh, Borrisokane, Cloughjordan, and other places; and if he can say how soon may the parties interested expect to have their cases disposed of?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: A Sub-Commission sat for the hearing of cases from the Unions of Roscrea, Nenagh, and Borrisokane, at the end of last October. A further sitting was held at Roscrea on the 29th of last January, and at Birr on the 30th April last. The hearing of a list which contains cases from the Union of Nenagh was commenced at Kilkenny on the 25th instant. A sitting for the Union of Borrisokane will be arranged for at as early a date as possible consistent with the claims of other districts. There are at present comparatively few cases unlisted from these Unions.

Mr. JAMES GILHOOLY (Cork Co., W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Castletownsend estate, County Cork, is to be sold; and, if so, whether valuers from the Land Commission will visit it with a view to estimate the value of the agricultural holdings, and advance the full amount of the purchase money to the present occupiers?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The estate referred to has, I believe, been advertised for sale in the Land Judge's Court. The Land Judge has declared, however, that Section 40 of the Land Act of last year does not apply to this estate.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK.

Mr. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Postmaster General has the power to invest the funds of the Post Office Savings Bank in local loans, securities, and debentures of high class English railways; if so, whether this power has been taken advantage of, and to what extent; and, if not, whether he will consider whether the granting such a permission would assist the Postmaster General in maintaining profitably the present rate of interest paid on the deposits, and relieve the difficulties created by the constant purchase of Consols?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER (Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Bristol, W.): It is the duty of the National Debt Commissioners to invest this money, and the power of investment does not extend to any of the securities named in the Question, except Metropolitan stock. I think the extension of the power to such securities would be open to serious objections; and that their market price would be so much raised by it that the profit which the hon. Member anticipates would in all probability not be secured.

TELEPHONE SYSTEM (PETERBOROUGH).

MR. R. PURVIS (Peterborough): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether, having regard to the fact that the Secretary of the General Post Office promised, by letter of the 22nd of last July, to give careful consideration to the claims of Peterborough to be made one of the towns connected with the system of telephones by trunk wire communication, the Postmaster General is now prepared to so connect that city with the system?

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston): A further application, dated the 17th instant has been received from the Town Clerk, and is being considered at the same time as the question of the connection of Peterborough with the trunk telephone system. The Postmaster General regrets that he is not yet in a position to say whether the large expense which, he finds, would be involved, would be justified. But when the Inquiry is completed he will communicate with the hon. Member.

CIVIL SERVICE (CLERKS).

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether the regulation as to compulsory retirement at the age of 65, embodied in Clause 10 of the Order in Council of 15th August 1890, is intended to be applied to all clerks both of the higher and second divisions now serving in the Civil Service; whether he is aware that one of the clerks now serving in the office of the Registrar General, Scotland, with 40 years' service, is over 70 years of age, and by what authority a clerk of that age is retained in the service in view of the regulation referred to; and whether appointment to the class of district examiners in the office of the Registrar General, Scotland, is made by promotion from the second division or by the nomination of the head of the Department from persons outside the Civil Service; whether any second division clerks have actually been appointed to this class; and whether, on the occurrence of vacancies therein, the claims to promotion of the second division will be considered?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. GRAHAM MURRAY, Buteshire): The Order in Council of 15th August 1890, applies only to the higher division of the Civil Service. The clerk referred to, who is a diligent and useful officer, and quite efficient, is not in the higher division, and therefore does not come under the regulation as to compulsory retirement. The appointment to the post of district examiner is in the gift of the Secretary for Scotland and the persons selected have been sometimes from within and sometimes from without the office. The selection may be made from persons either inside or outside the Civil Service, but on the occurrence of a vacancy the claims of the second division clerks to promotion will be carefully considered.

HERRING BRAND FEES.

SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN (Banffshire): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate what amount of surplus revenue accrued in Scotland from the herring brand fees from 1858 to 1880; and has any part of this surplus been applied to purposes connected with the fishing interest; and, if not, will the amount be now paid over to the Scottish Fishery Board to provide harbours needed on the coast of Scotland?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: The Treasury decided in 1858 to retain the official brand for herrings provided it was made self supporting. There are, as the hon. Member will find on a perusal of the Estimates, many instances of appropriation in aid of the expenses of Departments which include official salaries. I see no reason for changing the present arrangement.

BOARD OF REVENUE (MADRAS).

SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether he will lay upon the Table of the House the proceedings of the Government of Madras of July 1895, revising the Settlement Manual and Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue, together with the Correspondence which led to such revision?

The SECRETARY of STATE for INDIA (Lord George Hamilton, Middlesex, Ealing): Having communicated with the Government of India, I am afraid I cannot promise to lay on the Table of the House the Papers referred to in this Question.

ROYAL HORSE ARTILLERY.

Mr. BROOKFIELD (Sussex, Rye): I beg to ask the Under Secretary for War whether, during the recent annual practice of D, E, and J Batteries, R.H.A., at Okehampton, out of the eighteen new 12-pounder cordite guns of 6 cwt. that were employed, no less than eleven of them became useless after firing only a few rounds, owing to broken elevating gear; whether these three batteries, D, E, and J, are the first for service in the First Army Corps; and whether, at Shoeburyness, a year ago, the Commanding Officer of one of these batteries made a strong report as to similar accidents which were happening then from the same cause?

The FINANCIAL SECRETARY to the WAR OFFICE (Mr. Powell-Williams, Birmingham, S.): It is the case that eleven of the nuts of the elevating gear in D, E, and J Batteries, R.H.A., broke during firing at the recent annual practice. These nuts were made of phosphor bronze, and until last year no instance of failure occurred, although tried for two years. When one broke last year it was not considered sufficient to condemn all those in use with the new Horse Artillery equipment. As, however, there appeared to be some doubt of the phosphor bronze standing, a number of nuts of manganese bronze were manufactured to replace them if necessary. When the recent failures occurred these manganese nuts were put on, and should they prove satisfactory, the whole of the guns will be provided with them. By the fracture of this nut the gun is only temporarily out of action till the broken nut has been replaced by the battery artificers. The three batteries alluded to are in the First Army Corps.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN AFRICA.

*Sir CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have now suggested to the Powers a Conference of the Powers signatory of the Brussels Act, or of the Powers possessing territory in Africa, on the subject of the African liquor clause of the Brussels General Act, or other subjects connected with that Act?

The UNDER SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. George Curzon, Lancashire, Southport): Her Majesty's Government are in communication with the Belgian Government as to the best means for bringing about a discussion between the Powers interested with regard to the regulation of the liquor trade on the West Coast of Africa.

SCOTTISH FISHERIES BOARD.

Sir WILLIAM WEDDERBURN: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether he will explain why nearly £5,000 per annum, on account of the salaries of the permanent establishment belonging to the Scottish Fisheries Department, is charged upon fees paid by the fishing industry; whether a similar charge is imposed on account of salaries of permanent officials in other public Departments; and whether this charge will for the future be remitted?

*The LORD ADVOCATE: The total amount of brand fees collected between 1858 and 30th December 1880 was £123,700, while the estimated cost of collecting these was fixed by the Treasury at £89,700, leaving a surplus of £34,000. This sum was lodged in Exchequer, and was not revoted to the Fishery Board for harbour and other purposes, as has been the practice since 1880.

Mr. J. G. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate, as representing the Secretary for Scotland, seeing that in the Fifteenth Annual Report of the Fishery Board for Scotland it is stated that a further representation has been made to the Russian, Austrian, and United States Governments on the subject of reducing the high import duties on cured herrings, will he state on what date those Governments were respectively approached, by whom, and with what result?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: Representations were made in the end of last year and in the beginning of this, through the usùal diplomatic channels, but no response has as yet been received.

POST OFFICE (ADULT MESSENGERS).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that the scale of pay of adult messengers in the General Post Office has not been revised during a period of 35 years, and, having regard to the fact that their position both as to pay and prospects of promotion is far worse than it would have been had they remained in the branches from which they were specially selected, will he consider the expediency of arranging for some substantial improvement in their position?

MR. HANBURY: The scale of pay for adult messengers in the General Post Office, which has remained unaltered, as the hon. Member states, for 35 years, has now been revised on the recommendation of Lord Tweedmouth's Committee, and runs from 24s., by 1s. 6d. to 40s. a week, instead of from 21s., by 1s. to 40s. These officers voluntarily entered their present class, and it is impossible to go into the question whether they would have been better off had they remained in other branches of the Service.

ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE (STORNOWAY).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether, having regard to the fact that the largest Naval Reserve station in the kingdom is at Stornoway, island of Lewis, and that no provision is made for the Reserve men in case of accident, will the Admiralty consider the advisability of making some contribution to the Lewis Hospital at Stornoway, seeing that it is the only hospital in the island where accident cases can be received, and is moreover maintained entirely by voluntary contributions?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. G. J. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover Square): No case of injury requiring hospital treatment has occurred among Royal Naval Reserve men drilling at Stornoway since the Lewis Hospital was built. In the event of any man being hurt and requiring hospital treatment he would be sent to that hospital, and the usual rate of 2s. a day would be paid for his maintenance. There is no reason for making a special contribution to the hospital.

ARTISANS' DWELLINGS (LONDON).

MR. HERBERT ROBERTSON (Hackney, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he is aware that in the Parish of Hackney the rate collectors, acting under directions of the Board of Inland Revenue, are, under 53 Vict. cap. 8, s. 26, requiring owners of houses who have obtained exemption from rates under that Act to furnish a fresh certificate of the medical officer of health before continuing the exemption so acquired, notwithstanding that no change whatever has taken place in the circumstances of such houses as regards valuation, accommodation, or otherwise, but merely on the ground that a new quinquennial valuation has been made for London; whether he will take steps to enable owners to continue in receipt of the benefits of the Act, as provided by the Act, without being required to obtain such fresh certificate; whether he is aware that the medical officers of health are not remunerated for the services rendered by them in granting such certificates, and are consequently unwilling to execute these duties, and owners consequently find it difficult to get the benefits of the Act; and whether he will take steps to render the operation of the Act more easily available to the public?

*MR. HANBURY: Section 26 of the Act, 53 Vict. cap. 8, does not exempt for all time the premises (Artisans' Dwellings) to which it applies. It provides that the assessment to the House Duty shall be discharged by the local Commissioners on production of a medical officer's certificate to the effect that the house is so constructed as to afford suitable accommodation for each of the families inhabiting it, and that due provision is made for their sanitary requirements. The assessment is made annually, and therefore a certificate ought strictly to be produced annually. It is not, however, the practice to require a fresh certificate except on the occasion of a new quinquennial valuation. The hon. Member assumes that no change has taken place in the accommodation or the sanitary provision necessary for the various families inhabiting such a house, but it is evident that structural alterations might be made, and that even if no change in that respect took place, the question of suitable accommodation and sanitary provision must depend upon the number and size of the families, which are constantly changing. As regards cases where no change of any kind has taken place, it is possible that, owing to the advance of medical science, a tenement might be condemned to-day which would formerly have been passed as sanitary, but I do not see how it could be seriously contended that the privileges of the Act, which are expressly limited to sanitary tenements, could be extended to cover such a case.

SWANSEA GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

Sir JOHN DILLWYN-LLEWELYN (Swansea Town): I beg to ask the hon. Member for Thirsk, as representing the Charity Commissioners, with reference to the old Grammar School at Swansea, which has been converted under the Welsh Intermediate Education Act 1889, into an intermediate and technical school, whether he is aware that for 200 years previously to 1894 it was a Church School, and that in 1872 a sum of about £500, derived from private subscriptions, was expended in adapting and decorating the chapel, which is now dismantled and used as a gymnasium; and whether the Commissioners will endeavour to induce the Education authority to restore to their former owners the lectern, Communion plate, and other church ornaments which have been removed under the scheme?

Mr. GRANT LAWSON (York, N.R., Thirsk): In considering the scheme in this case, submitted to them under the provisions of the Welsh Intermediate Education Act 1889, by the Joint Education Committee of the County Borough of Swansea, the Charity Commissioners were of opinion that the school did not fall within the protection accorded to denominational schools by that Act and by the Endowed Schools Act, and this view was upheld by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in an appeal against the scheme. The Charity Commissioners have no information as to the expenditure of the particular amount mentioned in the Question, nor as to the existence of the plate and church ornaments there mentioned. It is stated, however, in the Judgment of Lord Herschell in the case mentioned above, that a sum expended between the years 1872 and 1876 in converting a crypt under the dining-hall of the school into a chapel had become so mixed with the old endowment of the school as to withdraw it from the general protection given to modern endowments by the Endowed Schools Acts. If, as seems probable, the plate and other articles mentioned are also subject to the scheme, the Commissioners have no power to bring about their restitution.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT (JUNIOR EXAMINERS).

Captain NORTON: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury (1) whether the question of the continuance of the present system of appointment to the class of junior examiners in the Education Department, and the desirability of recruiting that class by means of open competition, have been considered by the Commissioners of the Treasury; (2) whether their Lordships have ever called upon the heads of that Department to fill vacancies occurring in that class by means of the Higher Division examination conducted by the Civil Service Commissioners; and, if so, on what grounds the Department have refused to comply with such request, and whether these grounds appeared satisfactory to the Commissioners of the Treasury; (3) whether the Higher Division examination referred to is adopted for recruiting the Higher Division staff of both the Colonial Office and the Treasury; and (4) whether the Commissioners of the Treasury are satisfied that the duties of junior examiners in the Education Department are so superior to those of Higher Division clerks in the two other offices mentioned that they could not be satisfactorily performed by men obtained by the same method?

Mr. HANBURY: The question of the best system for appointing examiners in the Education Office has not been formally raised for many years—not, I think, since 1871. The Treasury have not taken the step suggested in the second paragraph because they have no power to compel an independent Department to adopt the method suggested. The Higher Division examination is adopted for recruiting the Higher Division staff of both the Colonial Office and the Treasury. But it was stated by my right hon. Friend the Vice President of the Council on May 21 that the duties of the junior examiners in the Education Department are not analogous to those of clerks of the Higher Division, and could not properly be performed by them.

NAVY (PERSONNEL).

MR. ERNEST FLOWER (Bradford, W.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether the 100,000 men which appear on the Estimates as being on the Active Service List, include the 6,300 men some of whom began service on the 1st April last, and all of whom will not have joined till the 1st April 1898; and whether, in addition, the 100,000 includes 7,932 persons included under Vote A, but are not available for manning services?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY: The Question of the hon. Member conveys the erroneous suggestion that the Estimates state that 100,000 men were on the Active Service List. If the hon. Member turns to Vote A, he will see that the heading gives the numbers of all ranks for whom provision is made, i.e., 100,050. This provision includes the necessary amount of pay for the 6,300 by which the numbers are to be increased during the course of the financial year. The hon. Member will also see that the same page of the Estimates clearly shows that of the 100,050, a certain number of men and boys would not be immediately available for sea service, being instructors or under training or performing administrative duties.

LITTLEDALE ESTATE (CO. WICKLOW).

MR. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan, N.): On behalf of the hon. Member for West Wicklow (Mr. JAMES O'CONNOR), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether he is aware that the Secretary of the Irish Land Commission has informed Mr. James Byrne, an evicted tenant of the Littledale estate, that the landlord having objected to his application to purchase his holding, no further proceedings could be taken in the matter; (2) whether the Land Commissioners have received an offer of purchase from a man named Ellison; and (3) whether the Commissioners are in communication with Ellison with a view to the sale to that person of the farm from which James Byrne has been evicted?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The reply to the first paragraph is in the affirmative. The Commissioners are not in correspondence with Ellison, and no proceedings are pending with a view to the sale to him of the holding from which Byrne was evicted.

SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.

SIR FRANCIS POWELL (Wigan): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether he has taken into consideration the first Report of the Select Committee on Museums of the Science and Art Department; and, whether he is prepared to state what course the Government propose to adopt in order to protect the collection at South Kensington from the danger pointed to in that Report of injury or even total destruction by fire?

MR. WHITMORE (Chelsea): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works what steps he proposes to take to protect the contents of the South Kensington Museum from the immediate danger of fire; and whether, in view of the gravity of the interim Report of the Select Committee, the Government will at once proceed with the erection of the necessary new permanent buildings for the Museum?

THE FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): I am afraid I can at present only refer the hon. Baronet and my hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea to the answer given to a question on this subject on Friday last by my right hon. Friend the First Lord of the Treasury. With regard to the Report of the Committee, I desire to say that it was presented without the Treasury or the Office of Works being invited to furnish evidence in the case.

QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE.

Mr. PARKER SMITH (Lanark, Partick): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether the prices charged to Civil Servants for seats to view the Jubilee procession will leave any surplus after defraying the expenses incurred in providing the seats so paid for?

Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS: It is not anticipated that there will be any surplus.

Mr. PARKER SMITH: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether he proposes to make any provision for Civil Servants to witness the Jubilee Naval Review?

The FIRST LORD of the ADMIRALTY: One hundred and fifty tickets have been issued for distribution to representative members of the Civil Service.

Captain NORTON: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether the Officers of the Army in India at present on leave in England have been afforded accommodation to view Her Majesty's procession on the 22nd June; and, if so, how many seats have been allotted to them?

*Lord GEORGE HAMILTON: The seats to view Her Majesty's procession on June 22 placed at the disposal of the India Office for the Civil and military services of India have been allotted to those in this country who were considered to have the best claims without regard to the question whether they are at home on leave or otherwise.

Captain NORTON had given notice of the following Question:—

> "To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it has been brought to his notice that in the churchyard of St. George's, Southwark, tombstones are being disturbed in order to make room for a stand to view the Jubilee procession, the church itself being used as an office for letting seats; and whether he will use his influence to put a stop to these proceedings, which are distasteful to many of the inhabitants of the surrounding district."

The hon. Member explained that information had reached him that the displacement of tombstones was not so serious as he had been led to believe, and in these circumstances he did not propose to ask the Question.

Mr. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.): I beg to ask the Chairman of the Kitchen Committee (1) by whose authority 21s. is charged for tickets for luncheon on the 22nd June; and (2) whether, especially as the premises, fuel, table fittings, and many other charges are paid for out of Votes from this House, a more moderate luncheon, say 5s., excluding wine, may be provided?

Lord STANLEY (Lancashire, Westhoughton): The charge has been settled by the Kitchen Committee. I regret it would be impossible to carry out the proposal suggested in the second part of the Question. [Cries of "Oh, oh!"]

Mr. BARTLEY asked whether those hon. Members who could not afford to pay a guinea were to bring their own luncheons—[laughter]—and by whose authority was Westminster Hall to be closed on that day to hon. Members unless they paid for a ticket?

Lord STANLEY: By the permission of the First Commissioner of Works. [Cries of "Oh!"]

Mr. BARTLEY: On behalf of the hon. Member for Tower Hamlets, Stepney (Mr. Wootton Isaacson), I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether Her Majesty's Government has come to any decision as to the advisability of meeting the wishes of the inhabitants of the East End of London by allowing the Colonial and Indian troops, accompanied by bands, to march through some of the main thoroughfares, decided on by the War Office, on one occasion during the Jubilee week?

The UNDER SECRETARY of STATE for WAR (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford): This is a more difficult Question than appears at first sight. The Jubilee procession will involve much fatigue on the Colonial and Indian troops; and it will be undesirable to give them much extra work either immediately before or after the principal day. On the other hand, the Secretary of State recognises the reasonableness of the suggestion, and he will do what he can towards complying with it.

JURORS CHALLENGED (CO. TYRONE).

Mr. JAMES DALY (Monaghan, S.): I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland whether he can state how many jurors and the religion of each juror that was challenged by the Crown at the trial of the Maguire Brothers in County Tyrone in March last?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. J. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.): Forty-one jurors were ordered to stand aside by the Crown and forty challenged by the prisoners. No inquiry is made into the religion of jurors, nor am I in possession of any information on the subject.

MURDER OF YUSAF YUNAN.

MR. F. S. STEVENSON (Suffolk, Eye): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the sentences passed on the murderers of Yusaf Yunan have been carried out; whether any compensation will be paid to his wife and family; and whether Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople will be instructed to demand from the Porte the full restitution of the stolen relief money, in view of the statement contained in the letter addressed by the Foreign Office to the Secretary of the Armenian Relief Fund, to the effect that only £20 have as yet been recovered?

MR. CURZON: Our latest information is contained in a Dispatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, dated the 13th instant, in which he states that the sentence of death passed on the murderers had been referred to the Court of Cassation at Constantinople for confirmation, and that he had instructed the legal adviser of Her Majesty's Embassy to watch the proceedings when the case came on for trial. The question of claiming compensation to the wife and family of the murdered man must depend on whether there is substantial proof of negligence or complicity on the part of the Ottoman authorities. As to the relief money said to have been in the possession of Yusaf Yunan at the time of his death, it appeared that in spite of the efforts of Her Majesty's Vice Consul at Bitlis the whole sum till then recovered amounted but to £20 odd. His Excellency added that he was addressing a Note to the Porte on the subject of the relief money, as distinct from that of the murder.

MR. STEVENSON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether a Report has been received at Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople from the American Mission Superintendent at Mardin, stating that evidence has been produced at a local inquiry made with a view of ascertaining the cause of the murder of Yusaf Yunan, to the effect that the Mutesarif of Sert and a subordinate official procured a forced loan of relief money?

MR. CURZON: Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople forwarded last month a memorandum by Mr. Andrus, of Mardin, giving details respecting the murder of Yusaf Yunan, but there is nothing in that report to the effect that the Mutesarif of Sert and a subordinate official procured a forced loan of relief money.

PARISH COUNCILLORS (SCOTLAND).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate, as representing the Secretary for Scotland, if he will state for what period a parish councillor must have resigned his seat before it is competent for him to make an application for an appointment under the parish council; and if no period is fixed, will he consider the advisability of fixing a short limit of time?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: There is no statutory provision fixing a time within which it shall be incompetent for a Parish Councillor after resigning his seat to apply for an appointment under the Parish Council; and it has not been brought to my notice that any disadvantage has been experienced under the present arrangement.

INSPECTORS OF POOR (SCOTLAND).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate, as representing the Secretary for Scotland, whether, as in the last Report of the Local Government Board for Scotland allegations of a serious nature are stated to have been made against 15 inspectors of the poor, and that the Board was called upon to investigate eight charges against medical officers, he will state in what counties the inspectors of poor and medical officers were employed?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: To supply the information requested would be an entire departure from ordinary practice, and would not, in the opinion of the Local Government Board, be to the interests of sound administration.

CANADIAN MAIL SERVICE.

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether there is any objection to stating the conditions attached by Her Majesty's Government to their approval of the provisional agreement entered into between the Government of the Dominion of Canada and Messrs. Peterson, Tate, and Company for the establishment of a fast Atlantic service; and whether Her Majesty's Government have fully satisfied themselves as to the competency of Messrs. Peterson, Tate, and Company to carry out the contract on a subsidy so considerably smaller than that deemed necessary by firms of much longer and greater colonial shipping experience?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): The contract is between the Dominion Government and Messrs. Peterson, Tate, and Company, and I will ascertain whether they object to its publication at present. The Dominion Government have informed me that they fully satisfied themselves as to the competency of the contractors to carry out their engagement.

ARMY STAFF OFFICERS (INDIA).

COLONEL WYNDHAM MURRAY (Bath): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India, on what principles appointments to the Staff of the Army in India are made; and what are the numbers of Staff officers employed with that Army who come under the following heads respectively: officers trained at the Staff College; officers trained by practical experience in campaigns; and officers without special training for Staff duties?

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: Speaking generally, an officer is eligible for appointment to the Staff in India if he has four years' service, has passed the necessary examination in the native languages, has gone through the Staff College, or has passed the qualifying examination laid down in Indian Army Regulations, or has proved his ability in the field. Subject to these conditions, the selection of officers for Staff employ rests with the Government of India and the Commander-in-Chief in India.

CAPTAIN PIRIE (Aberdeen, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India what is the total number of appointments on the Army Headquarter Staff, Command Staff, and District Staff of the Army in India; and the number of such appointments which are held respectively by Officers P.S.C. and by Officers not so qualified?

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: Excluding personal staff, and the staff for Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, and musketry instruction, there are 142 appointments on the Staff of Army Headquarters, Army commands, and districts; of these 36 are held by officers who have passed through the Staff College and two are vacant. The rest are held by officers who have not passed through the Staff College.

CAPTAIN PIRIE: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether he can state the number of Officers P.S.C. of the Indian Staff Corps who are employed on staff duty at present, also the number of the same who are not so employed, and the average period for which these latter have remained without such employment after qualifying for it by passing through the Staff College?

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: There are at present on the active list 30 officers of the Indian Staff Corps who have passed through the Staff College; of these 20 are in Staff employ, five are commanding their regiments, and five are employed regimentally. I cannot say how long these officers have remained without Staff employment.

MILITARY PRISONS.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether his attention has been drawn to a book entitled "Scarlet and Steel," written by Mr. E. Livingston Prescott, which alleges that corporal punishment is administered in military prisons; whether such corporal punishment has been administered since the passing of the Army Act 1881, for the abolition of flogging in the Army; and, if so, did it form part of the sentences of the courts martial; and, if not, by what authority were the prisoners flogged; and, whether he has any objection to give a Return of the cases of corporal punishment inflicted in military prisons, Home and Foreign, since 1881?

MR. J. A. PEASE (Northumberland, Tyneside) asked whether it was not a fact that the Return previously presented to Parliament showed that the number of prisoners flogged in military gaols exceeded, in proportion, the number of prisoners flogged in the civil convict establishments throughout the country.

MR. BRODRICK: I am afraid I cannot give the hon. Member for Tyneside the comparison, but in 1895, out of 4,361 prisoners, five received corporal punishment. My attention has not been drawn to the book referred to, which is, I understand, a romance and not a statement of facts. The discipline of military prisons is carried out under the supervision of the Home Office. In all military and civil prisons there is, under stringent restrictions, provisions for corporal punishment in case of serious prison offences. The regulations for military prisons are presented to this House under the 133rd section of the Army Act; and all cases of corporal punishment are recorded in the annual report of the Inspector-General, which is presented to Parliament. A Return, showing the number of prisoners flogged in military prisons at home during the last six years was presented on the 25th inst.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN asked the right hon. Gentleman whether he would grant a Return of the prisoners flogged in military prisons abroad?

MR. BRODRICK said he saw no objection to such a Return being granted.

MR. LIONEL HOLLAND (Tower Hamlets, Bow and Bromley) asked whether the right hon. Gentleman was aware that the book referred to was written by a lady who had had no experience of military prisons.

MR. BRODRICK said he was not aware of that.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN asked whether these floggings always took place in the presence of the Governor?

MR. BRODRICK: Yes; they are carried out under the most stringent regulations.

BERRIEW SCHOOL SCHEME.

MR. A. HUMPHREYS-OWEN (Montgomery): I beg to ask the hon. Member for the Thirsk Division whether, in the event of the Berriew School scheme being laid upon the Table and rejected, the sum of £224 0s. 10d. now standing to the credit of the Berriew School in the books of the Montgomeryshire County Governing Body, will sink into the General Fund, from which it was originally derived, or will be dealt with by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners; and, in the latter case, on what principles such scheme may be expected to be framed?

MR. GRANT LAWSON: In the events which have happened the sum in question appears to have been severed from the General Fund, and there appears to be no provision in the Montgomeryshire County Scheme which can operate to bring the sum back to that fund in the event mentioned. In that event it will become impossible to apply the sum in question in accordance with the County Scheme, and it will be proper that a cy-pres scheme for its future administration should be made by the Charity Commissioners. If the Charity Commissioners shall receive a sufficient application for such a scheme they will provide in framing the scheme that the interest of the Berriew District constituted by the County Scheme shall be regarded.

FERMANAGH SCHOOL ESTATE.

MR. P. C. DOOGAN (Tyrone, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland what decision, if any, the Commissioners of Education have arrived at with reference to the sale of their Fermanagh School Estate, in separate farms, to the existing tenants?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No definite decision has yet been arrived at by the Commissioners, who are in communication with the tenants as to the terms upon which they are prepared to purchase their holdings.

LLANBEDR SCHOOL BOARD.

LORD HUGH CECIL (Greenwich): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education whether the Committee of Council have decided to make the parish of Llanfair, in North Wales, contributory to the Llanbedr School Board; whether he is aware that there is an efficient Voluntary School in Llanfair; and whether there is any reason why Llanfair should be made contributory to Llanbedr School Board; if so, what that reason is?

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): The Committee of Council have issued an Order making Llanfair contributory to the Llanbedr School Board in respect of certain Llanfair children, who are obliged to attend the Board School owing to the distance of the Llanfair National School from their homes. The contribution will be for maintenance only; and the Order fixing the amount payable by Llanfair will be so drafted as to relate only to such Llanfair children as may, from time to time, be on the books of the Board School.

LORD HUGH CECIL: Can the right hon. Gentleman state how many children will go from the parish of Llanfair?

SIR J. GORST: I cannot state without notice.

LABOURER'S COTTAGE (STRABANE).

MR. ARTHUR O'CONNOR (Donegal, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether an application under the Labourers' Acts has been made in the case of Robert Matthewson, of Coolaghy, Feddyglass, in the union of Strabane; and, if so, when; whether Matthewson's house was condemned by the medical officer as unfit for human habitation; whether orders for the building of cottages within the union of Strabane were given under the authority of the Local Government Board; and, if so, at what date; and if Matthewson's case was included, what is the reason of the delay in building?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: An application was made by the person named to the Board of Guardians in 1894. The Medical officer condemned his house as unfit for the accommodation of his family, and as otherwise being in a bad condition of repair. Orders for the erection of, altogether, 30 cottages were made by the Local Government Board on the 19th January, 1895; 25th February, 1896; and 11th May, 1897. The Order made on the 11th inst. contemplated the erection of a cottage for the labourer referred to, but as petitions may be lodged against the Order up to the 11th of June, the inspector, who is carrying out the Acts in the union, is not yet in a position to proceed with the scheme.

LONDON, TILBURY AND SOUTHEND RAILWAY COMPANY.

MAJOR RASCH (Essex, S.E.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is able to state if the Great Eastern and London, Tilbury and Southend Railway Companies are prepared to remove the increases of 12 to 45 per cent. upon manures, which form the subject of a complaint which has been pending before the Board of Trade since 19th May 1896?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. C. T. RITCHIE, Croydon): At the instance of the Board of Trade the Companies will revert to the old rates; the Department has also represented to the Companies the desirability of removing the increase as from the 1st January 1893, and anticipate that this will be done.

RAILWAY DRAWINGS AND RELICS.

MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his attention has been called to the fact that old designs, drawings, prints, and relics illustrative of the stages of railway development in the United Kingdom are being bought up by American and French engineering agents for the proposed Museum at Chicago and the French Exhibition of 1900; and whether he will recommend to the Treasury the purchase of the more important of these objects, with the view of supplementing and completing the collection at South Kensington, and forming a National Railway Museum?

MR. RITCHIE: I am afraid I cannot make any such general recommendation to the Treasury as that desired by the hon. Member. No doubt my right hon. Friend will carefully consider any suggestion put before him.

PNEUMATIC MESSAGES.

SIR LEWIS McIVER (Edinburgh, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he will consider the feasibility of introducing into London the system of pneumatic messages which works so satisfactorily in Paris and Berlin?

MR. HANBURY: The question of the establishment of a pneumatic post in London has been more than once under consideration, but the Postmaster General and his predecessors have not seen their way to recommend the very large expenditure which would be necessary to the construction of an efficient system.

Sir LEWIS McIVER asked whether there were not now in the east and west central districts of London a sufficient number of pneumatic tubes to enable an experiment to be tried?

Mr. HANBURY said he was aware there were several tubes, and he would inquire whether an experiment could be made.

IRISH MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, what additional payment has been asked by the London and North Western Railway Company for the desired acceleration of the day mail trains from Euston to Holyhead, and vice versa; what amount is the Post Office paying for the four Irish mail trains between Euston and Holyhead; and what additional sum was charged for the acceleration of the night mail trains?

Mr. HANBURY: The London and North Western Railway Company at first asked £11,000 a year for the acceleration of the night and day trains. There was no separate offer in respect of the day trains. It is impossible to state the payment to the Company for the four Irish Mail Trains, as they were provided for under contracts covering other services, and no apportionment of the total sum was made between the various services. After negotiation the sum actually charged for the acceleration of the night mail trains was £5,150 a year.

ARMY FOOD AND FORAGE SUPPLIES.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: On behalf of the hon. Member for the St. Patrick Division of Dublin (Mr. W. Field), I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office (1) whether the War Office has as yet concluded inquiries regarding the supply of foreign meat, hay, and oats to the troops stationed in Ireland; and (2) whether it is intended to give native supplies in future?

Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS: The officers who have the matter in hand hope to submit a Report very shortly. The Inquiry is complete as far as Ireland is concerned. The answer to the second Question must depend to a large extent on the nature of the Report made to the Secretary of State.

Captain DONELAN: Can the hon. Gentleman say whether the new meat contracts, which I understand will be in shortly, contain any new condition with reference to the supply of foreign meat to troops in Ireland?

Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS: I hope the Report will be in the hands of the Secretary of State in time to enable him to receive any recommendation that may be made before the new tenders are given out.

MASHONALAND.

Mr. H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER (Belfast, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, in view of the disturbances in Mashonaland, he will now lay upon the Table, and cause to be circulated, Sir Richard Martin's Report on the Administration of the Chartered Company; and, if not, whether he will state in furtherance of what public interest the Report is withheld?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: The Question of the administration of the British South Africa Company is, in fact, sub judice. The Report in question has been laid before the Select Committee, and there are obvious objections to making public disconnected portions of the evidence laid before the Committee on matters of a controversial character.

Mr. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs): May I remind my right hon. Friend that some weeks ago he was good enough to say that if I requested him to produce this Report he would produce it as soon as the Chartered Company had had an opportunity of making their comments upon it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: My recollection does not go as far as a promise, but I certainly did undertake to consider the matter. The reply of the Chartered Company has not yet come to hand, but I am informed it will be handed in some time after the Whitsuntide holidays. I have, however, reconsidered the subject, and I really think there would be the greatest inconvenience in a matter of this kind in publishing portions of the evidence before the Committee which they themselves have not yet considered. We have the Report of Sir Richard Martin, but he himself admits that the character of the evidence on which he has to rely is most unsatisfactory, and his conclusions are disputed by the Chartered Company. So altogether it is a matter of an extremely controversial character on which the Committee will have to give their judgment. Under these circumstances I think it would be quite unusual to produce the Report before the Committee Reports.

Mr. J. MORLEY: I think my right hon. Friend contended on the previous occasion that it would be contrary to precedent, but I submit this deals with an isolated aspect of the question. I wish he would reconsider the matter.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN: I will be glad to speak to my right hon. Friend.

INDIAN POLICE.

Sir WILLIAM WEDDERBURN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India on what ground natives of India are excluded from competing in the examinations held in London and Calcutta for the higher offices in the Indian police; and on what grounds the house allowances, amounting in the aggregate to Rs.90,000 per annum, granted to European and Eurasian telegraph masters and signallers in India, are withheld from natives of India holding the same appointments?

Lord GEORGE HAMILTON: As regards the Indian police officers recruited in this country, it is thought, in view of the nature of their duties, to be essential that the conditions for admission to compete should be identical with those for commissions in the British Army. As regards those who are selected in India, a discretion is allowed to each separate Government, and, as at present advised, I see no reason to call in question the manner in which they have exercised it. I have no knowledge of the distinction which the hon. Gentleman alleges to be drawn between Europeans and Eurasians on the one hand and natives of India on the other, but I will make inquiry on the subject.

WESTMEATH (APPOINTMENT OF SHERIFF).

Mr. JASPER TULLY (Leitrim, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether the Executive Government have sanctioned the appointment of the present sub-sheriff of Westmeath; (2) whether he is aware of the circumstances under which this gentleman ceased to be an official of the Bank of Ireland, a previous high sheriff having refused to re-appoint him to his present position; and (3) whether the Irish Executive are satisfied of his fitness to discharge the responsible duties of levying and collecting the sums granted under decrees of Irish courts of justice?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The sub-sheriff is appointed by the high sheriff, who is responsible for his conduct in his office. The sanction of the Executive is not required to the appointment of this office, nor does the Executive inquire into his fitness for the office. I have no knowledge of the matters referred to in the second paragraph.

GRANARD UNION.

Mr. TULLY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the grounds on which the Local Government Board have annulled the appointment of Miss Walker as night nurse in Granard Union, and whether ladies with similar qualifications have been sanctioned in the neighbouring unions of Longford, and also in unions in the north of Ireland?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: Miss Walker, aged 22 years, and without previous experience in nursing, was elected by the Guardians at a salary of £10 a year. The Local Government Board have now informed the Guardians that they cannot sanction her appointment until they receive a report from the Workhouse Medical Officer stating that, in his opinion, she is qualified to discharge the duties of night nurse. The Board have added that if the Guardians persist in their refusal to secure the services of a trained nurse, the Medical Officer may requisition such additional nursing assistance as he may require. The night nursing in Longford Workhouse is in charge of the Sisters of Mercy who are nurses in the Workhouse, the duty being undertaken in rotation by these Sisters. The Board have repeatedly addressed Boards of Guardians relative to the necessity of appointing only trained and experienced persons to take charge of the Workhouse Infirmaries and Fever Hospitals, and whenever vacancies occur the Local Government Board urge upon the Guardians the desirability of offering such salaries as will induce qualified applicants to present themselves as candidates for the Office of Nurse.

SNEEM PIER (CO. KERRY.)

Mr. DILLON: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that it is now more than four years since the Congested Districts Board took the preliminary steps towards erecting a much needed pier at Sneem, county Kerry, and that in consequence of this action on the part of the Board the barony and private individuals contributed about £300 to make the approaching road: whether he is also aware that the road has been completed for nearly two years and that the pier has not yet been commenced: and whether he will urge the Board to erect the pier as soon as possible?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The delay has been caused by a series of occurrences beyond the control of the Board, whose wish and intention are that the quay at Sneem shall be constructed with as little delay as possible.

Mr. DILLON asked whether the right hon. Gentleman could give any particulars of the occurrence?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR said he was not in a position to do so.

PETTY SESSIONS FEES (CO. LIMERICK).

Captain DONELAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for North Galway (Mr. D. Kilbride), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Petty Sessions Clerk for Newcastle West, county Limerick, takes a fee of 2s. 6d. from each publican in the Petty Sessions district of Drumcollogher and Newcastle West for the magistrates' certificate which is issued at the annual licensing sessions; whether the clerk has shown the receipts of these fees in any accounts furnished by him to Dublin Castle, as required by the Statute 41 and 42 Vic., c. 69; and, what is the date of the last Return so made with the number and amount of fees received?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: Publicans are required to supply, and to properly fill up the forms of certificate granted at the annual licensing Petty Sessions. This is not a duty imposed on the Clerk of Petty Sessions, and where, as in the present case, the clerk provides and completes these forms, it is customary, I understand, for publicans to pay a fee to the clerk. The matter is one of private arrangement between the parties, and no return is made, or required to be made to the Department of the Registrar of Petty Sessions clerks of sums so received by these officials.

GUN AND GAME LICENCES (IRELAND).

Captain DONELAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for North Galway, I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether it is necessary that the names of persons holding a gun or game licence should be publicly posted at the post office in the district in which they reside?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The Commissioners of Inland Revenue require their officers throughout the United Kingdom to send to the local postmasters lists to be exhibited at the post offices, shewing the names of the persons resident in each parish or township who have taken out game or gun licences.

POST OFFICE OVERTIME.

Mr. LOUGH: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that the distribution of extra duty is confined solely to officers junior in the service, and on a low scale of wages; and, whether he will see that officers of experience, although on a higher scale, are also employed on overtime?

Mr. HANBURY: The Postmaster General is not aware of such an arrangement. The rule of the department is that extra duty should under ordinary circumstances be allotted according to its quality to officers of the rank to which such duty falls in the proper course of business.

CATTLE FOOD (IMPORTED).

MR. C. T. GILES (Cambridge, Wisbech): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he is aware that imported wheat flour is largely adulterated with maize flour, an inferior and cheaper article; and, whether he can take any steps to prevent purchasers being thus prejudiced?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. HENRY CHAPLIN, Lincolnshire, Sleaford): I have no information as to the extent to which imported wheat flour is mixed with maize flour, as it is not a matter in which I have any jurisdiction. If there is an offence under the Sale of Food and Drug Acts, proceedings can be taken under those Acts, but I have no authority under which I can take any steps as suggested in the Question.

BRITISH ZUKON CHARTERED COMPANY.

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he is in a position to impart any information as to the character, constitution, and objects of the British Zukon Chartered Company, whose enabling Bill is now passing through the Canadian House of Commons; and, whether it is usual for a Bill creating a Chartered Company to be originated in any other body than the Imperial Parliament?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: I have no information on the subject. Colonial Legislatures frequently pass private Acts incorporating Companies.

FINANCE BILL.

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to take the Committee on the Finance Bill?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: I hope to be able to make some further progress in Committee on this Bill on Thursday: but I do not expect to be able to give the hon. Member the opportunity which I promised him of moving the clause which he has placed on the Paper until after Whitsuntide.

CRIMEAN VETERAN (JOHN BRENNAN).

MR. TULLY: I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office whether he is aware that the medical officers in Boyle have forwarded certificates that John Brennan, a Crimean veteran, formerly of the 41st Regiment, still bears the traces of the wounds received in the attack of Sebastopol; and whether in view of this man's very destitute condition, he will recommend that a grant, the same as last year, be made to him from the fund for the relief of Crimean veterans?

MR. POWELL-WILLIAMS: No such certificates have been received nor was any award made to Brennan last year from Army funds.

FISHERY CRUISER (SCOTLAND).

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate, as representing the Secretary for Scotland, if he will state whether tenders for the new fishery cruiser for the Scottish Fishery Board were made on the specification dated 20th March 1897, or on an altered specification; if on an altered specification, will he explain the nature of the alterations, and what difficulties have arisen to cause so serious a delay in proceeding with the construction of this cruiser?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE: The Fishery Board are of opinion that it is not in the interests of the public service that negotiations not yet completed should be made public. No time has been unnecessarily occupied in these negotiations.

LLANGOLLEN SCHOOL BOARD.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education (1) if he could state what was the nature of the Inspector's report who was sent in June 1896 to interview the Llangollen School Board as to the acquisition of land for a playground scheduled in an Act passed the previous year; and (2) whether the change which took place in the views of the Education Department between September 1896 and March 1897, as to the quantity of land required in the interests of educational efficiency, was brought about by any new evidence being submitted as to the requirements of the school in question?

Sir J. GORST: The Inspector reported that more playground was required, and advised that the Board should be pressed to acquire the whole of the land scheduled. The answer to second Question is in the negative.

FISHERY INQUIRY (LISTOWEL).

Captain DONELAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for North Kerry (Mr. M. J. Flavin), I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland (1) if he can state when the fishery Inquiry was held in Listowel at which the close season was extended from 17th March to 1st May, and when did the byelaw so made come into effect and when does it expire; and (2) whether he is aware that at the recent prosecutions in Listowel the local licence agent swore that he issued licences to fish in March, and also requested the Fishery Board to send printed notices stating that the season would not open until 1st May, and that the notices so asked for were refused by the Fishery Board; (3) also that the prosecutor at Listowel Petty Sessions wrote a letter to the late Mr. Hewson, stating that the fishing season opened on 17th March; (4) if so, on what grounds are the licensed anglers on the River Feale prosecuted?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND: The Inquiry referred to in the first paragraph was held on the 14th December 1892. The result of that inquiry was, a Close Season Order was made (not a byelaw), which came into operation six weeks after its publication —on the 20th January 1893,—and will remain in force until it is altered by a further Order, made in pursuance of the 5 and 6 Vic., cap. 106, sec. 33. I am not aware whether the local licensing agent, on the occasion of the recent prosecutions at Listowel, swore that he issued licences in March; but, whether he did or did not, I may point out that such a licence does not confer permission to fish during the close season, which extends from the 1st November to the 30th April. I cannot say whether application was made to the Fishery Board for notices stating that the season would not open until the 1st May, or whether the application was refused. No such application was made to or refused by the Inspectors of Fisheries. It is true that last year a letter was written to the effect stated at the conclusion of the Question, but that letter was written in error; and this year the fishermen were warned by the water bailiffs not to fish before the open season on the 1st May, or they would be prosecuted. The fishermen who persisted in fishing, notwithstanding this warning, have been prosecuted by the local Fishery Board, and the Executive have no power to interfere.

POWELL v. KEMPTON PARK COMPANY.

Sir JOHN KENNAWAY (Devon, Honiton): I beg to ask the Attorney General whether the betting case recently alluded to by him as likely to come before the courts is the case of Powell v. Kempton Park Company, which is set down for hearing; whether he is aware that the plaintiff and defendants are fellow shareholders in the company in question; and whether he will give instructions to have the case watched on behalf of the Crown?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL: When I made the observation to which the hon. Baronet refers I was not aware of the name of the case; I only knew that further proceedings were pending. I am not acquainted with the facts suggested as to the parties to the action. The Crown has no locus standi, but the hon. Baronet need not be afraid that any collusive Judgment will be obtained.

TITHE REDEMPTION (FEES).

Mr. ARTHUR JEFFREYS (Hants, Basingstoke): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether any alteration has lately been made in regulating the fees or costs which fall upon tithe payers in cases of tithe redemption in England and Wales; how much these fees or costs amount to annually; and whether in future the Government will undertake to pay the costs incurred by tithe payers in carrying out cases of tithe redemption?

*The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: No alteration has lately been made in regulating the fees or costs which fall upon tithe payers in cases of tithe redemption. The fees average £1,250 per annum, and amounted to £1,405 in the last complete year. It is not possible at present to give the precise figures of the costs. I understand that the Royal Commission on Agriculture has received much evidence on the question of Tithe Rent Charge, and I think it would be premature to deal with this point until their final Report has been received and considered.

JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. H. D. GREENE (Shrewsbury): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether any and what arrangements have been or will be made upon the retirement of Mr. O'Dowd, C.B., to provide for the discharge of the duties of the offices of Judge Advocate General and Deputy Judge Advocate General?

Mr. MELLOR (York, W.R., Sowerby): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, in case of a vacancy in the office of Judge Advocate General, the Government will appoint a Minister to discharge the duties of the office who is responsible to this House, and so put an end to the arrangement whereby they are discharged by the Judge of the Probate Court?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.): A Question of the same kind has been placed on the Paper by my hon. Friend opposite. I have to state that Mr. O'Dowd has been continued in his office for two years more. Under the circumstances it would be premature to consider now how the office is to be dealt with after that.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND).

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, in view of the declared intention of the Government to introduce a Local Government Bill for Ireland next Session, and the consequent financial relief to landlords, the Government will proceed with the appointment of the proposed Commission to inquire into the fixing of rents by the Land Commission?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I do not think that the two subjects alluded to by the hon. Gentleman in this Question are germane the one to the other; or that the policy of the Government in connection with one would be modified by their policy in connection with the other.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I should like to ask, seeing the desire to relieve the irritation the landlords feel because their rents are reduced, whether, as they are getting money under the proposed Bill, the right hon. Gentleman thinks it necessary to hold a blunderbuss, in the shape of a Committee, in the face of the Land Commissioners? ["Order!"]

CONGESTED DISTRICTS (SCOTLAND).

Mr. WEIR: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he can state on what day before Whitsuntide he proposes to bring in the promised Bill dealing with the grant in aid of congested districts in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I understand that the Bill to which the hon. Gentleman refers is one that must be introduced in Committee of the House. If I am right in that supposition, it cannot be introduced before Whitsuntide. If so, I hope it will be introduced soon after. If, on the other hand, it could be introduced under the Standing Orders I should be very glad to bring it forward before Whitsuntide.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

Mr. HOGAN: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Committee of Inquiry in connection with the British Museum is empowered to investigate the grievances of the attendants, and more particularly that they are the only class in the Museum who have not had an increase of salary since 1857?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: Yes, Sir. The powers of the Committee are amply sufficient to deal with the question to which the hon. Gentleman refers.

CRETE.

Mr. DILLON asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether his attention had been directed to the extraordinary character of the Cretan papers issued that day, in which the period—the most interesting period—from December 5 to February 24 was entirely skipped over without any Dispatches; and he wished to ask whether the Government proposed to issue further Papers filling up that period, or to leave the House entirely without information?

*Mr. CURZON: I think the Question asked by the hon. Member is a very reasonable one. But it suggests a possible misapprehension of the action of the Government in presenting these Papers, and I am, therefore, glad to have the opportunity of explaining that it is the intention of the Government to lay the Papers for the period referred to before the House. They are at present engaged in preparing a Blue-book with regard to Crete carrying the history of events, whether by telegrams or Dispatches, from the date of the last published Blue-book up to the present time. But that Blue-book is a large one, and will require some time to prepare; and pending its completion, in the desire to put the House in possession of information which I am sure everybody is anxious to have, they have presented in a Blue-book this morning the Reports of the Admiral and of Colonel Chermside.

Mr. DILLON: May I ask when we may expect the other Blue-book?

*Mr. CURZON: It is dangerous to make promises. We have no anxiety to keep back the book. Several persons at the Foreign Office are engaged daily in pressing it forward to as early a completion as possible.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Captain SINCLAIR (Forfar): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he can now state on what dates he proposes to take further Scottish Estimates; and whether the Scottish Estimates or other Scottish Votes will be taken on or before Friday 2nd July?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I do not think the present state of business is such that I can give an absolute pledge as to the allocation of the days of Supply; but I hope Scotch Supply will be taken soon after Whitsuntide.

Sir W. HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.): Can the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury state what will be the business on Friday?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: It is rather difficult to state what the business on Friday will be, because it will partly depend on the progress we make with the Bill under discussion tonight. I should hope that arrangements might be made at all events possibly for getting away after the morning sitting. But I must leave that question open for the moment.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

WORKMEN (COMPENSATION FOR ACCIDENTS) BILL.

Considered in Committee [Progress, 27th May.]

[The Chairman of Ways and Means, Mr. J. W. Lowther, in the Chair.]

Clause 1,—

LIABILITY OF CERTAIN EMPLOYERS TO WORKMEN FOR INJURIES.

(1.) If in any employment to which this Act applies personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation in accordance with the first schedule to this Act.

(2.) Provided that:—

(a) The employer shall not be liable under this Act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed:

(b) When it is decided, as hereafter provided, that the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer or some person for whose act or default the employer is responsible nothing in this Act shall affect any liability, civil or criminal, of the employer or persons for whom he is responsible; but the employer shall not be liable to pay compensation both independently of and also under this Act, and shall not be liable to pay compensation independently of this Act, except in case of such wilful and wrongful act or default.

(3.) If any question arises as to whether the employment is one to which this Act applies, or whether the injury was caused by the wilful and wrongful act or default of the employer, or of any person for whose act or default the employer is responsible, or whether the injury was caused by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment of the workman injured, or as to the amount or duration of compensation under this Act, or otherwise as to the liability for compensation under this Act, the question, if not settled by agreement, shall, subject to the provisions of the first schedule to this Act, be settled by arbitration, in accordance with the second schedule to this Act.

(4.) If the Registrar of Friendly Societies certifies that any scheme of compensation or insurance for the workmen in any employment is on the whole not less favourable to the workmen than the provisions of this Act, the employer may, until the certificate is revoked, contract with any of those workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this Act, and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with the scheme, but, save as aforesaid, this Act shall apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after the commencement of this Act.

MR. ROBERT ASCROFT (Oldham) had given notice of his intention to move to add the following new sub-section to the clause:—

"(5) If any workmen or their representatives shall submit to the said Registrar primâ facie evidence that the provisions of any scheme are no longer so favourable to the workman as the provisions of this Act, or that the provisions of such scheme are being violated, or that the same is not being fairly administered by the employers, or that satisfactory reasons exist for cancelling the same, then he shall have power to appoint an inspector to examine into and report upon the complaint, and, if satisfied that good cause exists for such complaint, shall cancel the scheme.

"(6) Whenever a scheme has been certified as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the employer to answer all inquiries and to furnish all such accounts as may from time to time be required by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and within seven days of the receipt of any complaint made by a workman or his representative against the scheme or the administration thereof the employer shall send copies of same to such Registrar."

The HON. MEMBER said that he had been in consultation with the Attorney General as to alterations of certain of its terms, and he now proposed it in the following form:—

(5.) "If any workmen or their representatives shall submit to the said Registrar primâ facie evidence that the provisions of any scheme are no longer so favourable to the workman as the provisions of this Act, or that the provisions of such scheme are being violated, or that the same is not being fairly administered by the employers, or that satisfactory reasons exist for revoking the certificate, then he shall have power to appoint an inspector to examine into and report upon the complaint, and, if satisfied that good cause exists for such complaint, shall revoke the certificate. Whenever a scheme has been certified as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the employer to answer all inquiries and to furnish all such accounts as may from time to time be required by the Registrar of Friendly Societies."

New sub-section as thus amended, agreed to; clause, as amended, ordered to stand part of the clause.

Clause 2,—

APPLICATION OF ACT AND DEFINITIONS.

(1.) This Act shall apply only to employment on, in, or about a railway, factory, mine, quarry, or engineering work.

(2.) In this Act—

"Railway" means the railway of any railway company to which the Regulation of Railways Act 1871 applies, and "railway" and "railway company" have the same meaning as in that Act.

"Factory" has the same meaning as in the Factory and Workshop Acts 1878 to 1891, and also includes any dock, wharf, quay, or warehouse, to which any provision of the Factory Acts is applied by the Factory and Workshop Act 1895.

"Mine" means a mine to which the Coal Mines Regulation Act 1887, or the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act 1872 applies.

"Quarry" means a quarry under the Quarries Act 1894.

"Engineering work" means any work of construction of a railroad, harbour, dock, canal, or sewer, and includes any building or other work on which machinery driven by steam, water, or other mechanical power is used for the purpose of the construction thereof.

"Employer" means any body of persons corporate or unincorporate.

"Workman" includes every person who is engaged in an employment to which this Act applies, whether by way of manual labour or otherwise, and whether his agreement is one of service or apprenticeship or otherwise, and is expressed or implied, is oral or in writing.

MR. CHARLES HARRISON (Plymouth had given notice of an Amendment to omit Sub-section (1) and to insert:

"This Act shall apply only to employment on, in, or about a railway, tramway, factory, mine, quarry, or engineering work, and any employment or work to which the expression 'workman' in the Employer and Workman's Act 1875 extends."

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said the Amendment seemed to be an ingenious way of getting the word "tramway" in at an early stage of the clause. He thought the hon. Member had put it in the wrong place, and that it ought to come after the word "quarry." All the Amendments ought, in fact, to come after the word "quarry," as the Government, whose Bill it was, were entitled to have their proposals laid before the Committee before those of private Members.

Mr. J. M. MACLEAN (Cardiff) moved, in Sub-section (1), to leave out the word "mine." His object, he explained, in moving this Amendment, was to draw attention to the very serious consequences which the passing of this Bill would have if it was made applicable to the coal trade generally. He spoke on the authority of figures which had been supplied to him when he said that this Bill, if carried as it was now, and applied to the coal trades, would impose a special tax on the trade of Cardiff alone of about £150,000 a year. The Government had made several attempts to minimise the amount of the burden which would be cast upon the trade by their Bill, but, so far as he had seen, they had not been able to bring forward any exact figures showing how their calculations were made up. In fact, their statements amounted to nothing more than the expression of a pious hope that the Bill would not bear so hardly upon the coal trade as the coalowners themselves seemed to imagine. Of what good was a statement of that kind to contradict exact calculations, made by men who were conversant with the trade generally, and who knew exactly how the Bill would bear upon them? There was a letter in The Times of that day from Sir William Thomas Lewis, who certainly knew what he was talking about, and who pointed out that, whereas now the burden of providing compensation for accidents was only 1d. per ton, of which ¾d. was borne by the workman, in future the whole burden would be transferred to the employer, and would be raised to 3d. per ton. This was a very remarkable transference for the Government to attempt to make, and he should like to know upon what principle they proposed to single out the coal trade for this burden? He imagined that they were not acting upon any principle whatever, because the Home Secretary had already been told that there was no logic in this Bill, and no justice, but that it was a Bill which rested upon expediency. The principles of political economy had been long ago flung to the winds, and now it was said the Government were justified in laying a tax upon a particular trade, and transferring a large portion of property from one class to another in this trade without being actuated by any considerations of justice whatever—considerations of expediency being apparently all that they cared about. He did not know whether these were considerations of political expediency, or any other kind of expediency, but he would tell the Government that in the long run what was right and just would be found to be also expedient, and the Government, in doing an injustice because it was expedient, would bring calamitous results upon themselves. This was a matter which seriously affected the coal trade, and especially in that part of the country where he had the honour of representing a great coal shipping port. He knew it was of no use to press this Amendment to exclude mines from the Bill. The Government had chosen their course of action, and would, no doubt, persevere with it. But he protested against what he believed to be an injustice upon one particular trade, and this without adequate consideration of the burden which the Government were imposing. It was quite clear the whole course of legislation proposed by this Bill must ultimately be reviewed at much greater length than had been possible lately. The principles must be thoroughly discussed, and although this Amendment might not be pressed now, the Government would in a short time find it necessary to extend this Bill so as to take in the general industries of the country, and not levy a special tax upon a few specially selected industries. He begged to move the Amendment.

*The SECRETARY of STATE for the HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir Matthew White Ridley, Lancashire, Blackpool) could quite understand the object of his hon. Friend in calling attention to the special way in which the mining industry of the country was affected by the Bill, but he protested against the hon. Gentleman's assumption that the Government, in framing the Measure, had had no regard to justice, but merely to expediency. He was perfectly prepared to defend the Bill upon the ground of its justice. ["Hear, hear!"] So far from being unjust or unsound in principle, the only industry in the country which was raising much protest against this legislation was the coal industry, and especially that of South Wales.

MR. REGINALD McKENNA (Monmouth, N.): No, no! South Wales has no objection to it.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said that, at all events, he was perfectly well aware that there was a feeling on the part of the coalowners of the country that the Bill did put upon them a more serious burden than was put upon other industries, and he was perfectly ready to express more than a pious hope that they were quite mistaken in the view they had taken of the matter. While admitting that there was a considerable burden laid upon all employers by the Bill, still, he said, it was not an unfair burden, and it was a burden with a limit much different from that which was suggested by Sir William Thomas Lewis in his letter to The Times, or by the actuary whom that gentleman had consulted. In introducing the Bill he mentioned that he had calculated the cost of carrying out the Measure as it stood, with all its provisions, in the coal trade in two different ways—namely, from the German experience, allowing for all the differences, and from the actual facts as known from the records of accidents that had occurred in Great Britain, and on the estimates formed from figures derived from the excellent permanent relief societies such as the Lancashire and Cheshire. Applying this calculation over the whole districts, and not in any particular mine, he found that the percentage of compensation paid would amount to little more than 1 per cent. of the wages. He had since applied the calculation to the district of his hon. Friend, and, taking the year 1894—when the frightful Albion accident occurred, which caused a loss of 290 lives—and 1895, which was an ordinary year, he found that on the same basis the proportion of compensation paid under this Bill would not exceed 1 per cent. of the wages paid. He was borne out in that calculation by certain testimony he had received from South Wales itself, but which he was not at liberty at present to quote. He did not desire to minimise the importance of the Bill as regarded the coal trade of this country. He was quite conscious that many interested in that trade believed the Bill laid upon them a heavier burden than upon other trades. All he could say was that the Government had not proposed this Bill without calculating what they thought would be the burden, and without regard to the present liability of the coal owners, what was done in the countries they competed with and the necessities of the situation. The Government had not done what was unfair, unjust, or merely politically expedient in the case of the coalowners. The Government believed that the Bill would not have the effect on the coal trade that the hon. Member for Cardiff and others associated with him contemplated, and that the burden, if one considered all the present liabilities, moral, customary, and legal, would certainly not mean more than a difference of between 5s. and 15s. in the pound. When the Government contemplated such a big object as they had in this Bill they did not think they were asking the House to accept too much, and he believed this Bill would be accepted by the House and the country as imposing no unjust burdens and conferring great advantages. [Cheers.]

*SIR JOSEPH PEASE (Durham, Barnard Castle) said those who, like himself, were interested in the working of coal mines, for the moment felt grateful to his hon. Friend (Mr. Maclean), but he was afraid his Amendment came rather late in the day. The House had passed the principle of the Bill, and the question now seemed to be more what industries could be brought into the Bill than what industries could be taken out. At the same time, he wished to reserve to himself, and he believed many others in the House wished to do the same, the position they would take towards the Bill if those other industries were not included. If the principle of this Bill was correct—a doctrine he did not admit, because he believed it a retrograde manner of dealing with workmen and employer—he should be prepared when they came to the Third Reading to give his reasons for thinking that the Bill was unfair, because it had been unfairly carried out, even according to the principle professed in the Bill. He thanked the Home Secretary for the way in which he had spoken of the coal industry, but he did not look upon the right hon. Gentleman's calculations as any more valuable than his own. It was very difficult indeed in the very short time they had had, by the way in which the Bill had been hurried on step by step, to know where they were, or to know where the incidence of the Bill would be. He was anxious that if they proceeded with the Bill they should have a little more time to discuss these very important matters which were on the Paper that day, and which would come in the course of the consideration of the schedules, because, after all, they came back in a great Bill like this to that which had been well said—whatever was best administered was best. If the detail of the working of the Bill was considered in Committee, because it had not been worked out in the Bill itself, he believed that those industries which ought to have been in and those which were already in the Bill, would feel the benefit of that additional attention. They had to look to the different positions which coal owners occupied in considering this question. In Northumberland, about 90 per cent. of the coal was in direct competition with foreign coal; in the district he represented they had a smaller proportion of such competition, while the east side of Durham had rather more than one half of its coal dependent upon foreign export. On the other hand, many of the Yorkshire and Welsh collieries had a home market at their back, and their position was very different to that of those dependent on foreign competition. He did not believe his hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff would be able to proceed with his Amendment, because they had to look to the industries which should be included in the Bill rather than to those which should be left out.

MR. HENRY SETON-KARR (St. Helens) said he could not support the Amendment of the hon. Member for Cardiff. If the benefits of the Bill were to be extended, the miners should be included in its scope. The House should appreciate the burden the Bill would impose on the mining industry before it passed this Bill, particularly when they remembered that it was allied to so many others. If the burden became too great, how would they shift it? Sooner or later some of the burden would have to be thrown on the State. The Home Secretary had kindly shown him privately the way in which he arrived at his calculations, and he was perfectly convinced that the right hon. Gentleman had gone very carefully into the matter. But Mr. Neison and other eminent actuarial authorities said the Government figures were not accurate. The latter put the cost of the Bill to the coal mining industry at 1 per cent. on the wages, while Mr. Neison and others said it would vary from 2½ to 4¼ per cent. Where high authorities differed so largely, great care should be taken to ascertain the extent of the burden proposed to be placed on one of the most important industries of this country. The trades unions, for the last seven years, had been trying to raise the price of coal. Arbitration and a great strike had been tried. Nothing that could have been adopted had not been tried. But the price of coal and also wages had gone down. Would this Bill produce better results than the efforts of the trades unions? Many were voting for the Bill on the assumption that the consumer would pay the cost of the Bill. Under present conditions, he could not pay, and if the shoulders on which they put the burden could not bear it, disaster to the working classes of this country might result. He was in favour of universal compensation, but he would not undertake the responsibility of convincing a Lancashire collier of the benefits of the Bill when he found himself walking the streets because his colliery was closed owing to foreign competition. The financial aspects of the Bill were so important and involved such large considerations, that time should be given to ascertain the exact nature of the burden to be imposed on one of our most important industries, and nothing should be done to rush the Bill through the House.

*MR. EMERSON BAINBRIDGE (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough) said he would not support the Amendment, but he was indebted to the hon. Member for Cardiff for having elicited from the Home Secretary that he still adhered to the statement that the cost of the Bill would be 1 per cent. on the wages in the coal mines. But there was a marked difference between that view and the view taken by the coal owners. If the Home Secretary considered that 1 per cent. indicated the amount of extra cost which it was just that the mineowner should bear, what would be his view if on further investigation the 1 per cent. was increased to 4 per cent., which was much nearer the mark? If the coal trade came forward and said they would accept the Home Secretary's figure, and would agree to a tax equivalent to 1 per cent., would the Government in that case undertake that the State should pay the rest? He thought that a charge of 1 per cent. was quite enough for the mineowner to bear. He was able to say from an extensive experience of coal-mining that the actual average profits on coal were now not more than 3d. per ton, and in a large number of cases, especially in Lancashire, 1½d. per ton would be nearer the mark. It was very important to make the burdens imposed by this Bill as slight as possible. The Government must have been struck with the contemptuous satisfaction with which the Bill had been received by the labour section of the House, and he hoped they would have ample time to discuss at length some of the chief burdens imposed by the Bill.

Mr. LEES KNOWLES (Salford, W.) thought that to strike out mines from the Bill would not be in the interests of those who worked in collieries. All his sympathies were with the miners, and it was through the colliery interest that he had the honour to sit in that House. He thought it was a pity that there should be exceptional treatment for certain trades. They must hope that in the future other such Bills might be introduced in order that all trades might get the same advantages. If the Bill passed in its present form it would be extremely difficult for mine owners to make arrangements with the insurance companies for insurance, and if other trades were also included, they would be able to spread the risk, and bring down the terms of insurance. A representative of the miners in his own district had told him the other day that what the masters had got to do was to put on 2d. a ton. But who was going to pay that? He very much doubted if the masters would be able to charge it. A representative of the glass trade with whom he had spoken was in great anxiety because he imagined he would have to pay this extra 2d. a ton for the coal which was required in his trade. That particular trade, in consequence of constant hampering by legislation, was being driven out of the country, and this man of whom he spoke had been obliged to erect glass works abroad and to import his own glass into England. He cited the case of an explosion which occurred in 1895, with which the name of his family was associated. The colliery was supposed to be absolutely free from gas, but there happened to be a sort of underground lake of gas, which was tapped, and nearly 200 men lost their lives. If this Bill had at that time been law it would have meant a payment of £60,000 in hard cash, and £30,000 or £40,000 for putting the mine in order. It was easy to understand that in such a case as that an employer might be ruined, and that would not be to the interest of the men whom he employed. If all trades had been brought into the Bill it would not be so objectionable, but they must make the best of a bad job. They could not do that, however, by supporting the Amendment.

Mr T. W. LEGH (Lancashire, Newton) said he did not see his way to vote for the Amendment. He pointed out, however, that there had been a serious conflict of opinion as to the exact cost which would be imposed on the coal industry, and the comforting expressions which had fallen from the Home Secretary had been somewhat vague in character. He thought some more definite statement should be made, and he appealed to his right hon. Friend to produce his figures. There was no need for desperate hurry in finishing the Committee stage of this Bill, and they might even adjourn over the holidays for the purpose. If the figures were produced before the Committee stage was concluded it would enable the public to judge between the two parties.

Captain BETHELL (York, E.R., Holderness) said that in regard to this Bill, which introduced an almost novel principle into our legislation, statistics were the only means which men in his own position could have to enable them to form an opinion. So far as he could gather there was no very strong objection taken to the Bill by the employers except by those engaged in mining. Although he was inclined to think that the principle embodied in the Bill was a sound one, if there had been serious objections taken by those mainly interested, he would not have been willing to force the adoption of the principle upon them until the question had for some considerable time been before the country.

*MR. J. W. LOGAN (Leicestershire, Harborough) said he recognised the difficulty there was in discussing this question without any figures before them, but still they did know that every year 1,000 miners lost their lives while pursuing their employment. If the families of each of those men received the maximum amount of compensation allowed by the Bill, the total amount of liability cast upon the coal trade would be £300,000. If they estimated that for permanent or temporary disablement another £300,000 was cast upon the coal owners, he thought they would be well within the mark. Personally he did not think the total liability would reach £600,000 per annum. He thought the estimate of ½d. per ton which was made by the Colonial Secretary was more likely to represent the liability than the 2d. per ton which was the estimate of the coal owners. But the more he found hon. Gentlemen like the hon. Member for Cardiff pleading for the exclusion of miners from the Bill, the more convinced he was that he ought to vote in favour of including miners. If it was right that this enormous sum of money should be paid in compensation for the death or injury of those engaged in the mining industry, it was high time that some Bill of this sort were passed.

*COLONEL BLUNDELL (Lancashire, Ince) pointed out that the German system had not been followed in respect to the payment for small injuries. That would have an immense effect financially upon the Bill. In his opinion that was the greatest blot on the Bill, because the workman was no longer able to be a party to his own insurance.

MR. CHARLES SEELY (Lincoln) rose, as a colliery owner, to oppose the Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"] He had always thought it was not very reasonable or just that a workman should suffer, and that the employer should suffer nothing whatever, and therefore he was glad this Bill had been introduced in order to amend that state of things. ["Hear, hear!"] It was proper, too, that the provisions of the Bill should be extended to mines. At the same time he would like the Government to realise that there was a difference of opinion between them and the colliery owners as to the burden laid on the trade. It was much more likely that the coal owners who had personal knowledge of all the accidents—and there were many resulting in sprained ankles and sprained backs and the like which were not serious enough to be returned to the Government inspector—were better judges of the amount of the burden which would be laid on the trade than those who had brought in the Bill. There was no doubt that the burden to be met by those who had to sell coal in competition with foreign countries would be very heavy, and the Government would act wisely if they considered whether anything could be done to lighten it. It must be borne in mind that an employer who had taken every precaution at very great expense to insure the safety of his workmen might have a burden of £60,000, £70,000, £100,000 or even £200,000 or £300,000 suddenly thrown upon his shoulders. He hoped he would not be considered as speaking in any way hostilely to the Bill. He most cordially supported the Measure and was most grateful to the Government for having introduced it.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.) said he was sure the Committee would recognise the very liberal spirit in which his hon. Friend had dealt with the Bill. The Government made no complaint of the criticisms made by the coal owners, indeed they sympathised with the fears expressed. They still maintained that on the average the cost to the coal owners would certainly not be likely to exceed ¾d. per ton, though it had been put on behalf of the coal owners, as high as 2d. and even 3d. per ton. Some hon. Gentlemen suggested that they should delay the progress of the Bill in order that they might contrast the two sets of figures. He really did not see that any practical advantage would be gained. ["Hear, hear!"] It had been well said that statistics could prove anything, and without wishing to impugn the good faith of those who had put what he thought an extravagant estimate before the House he could not believe that under the present system they could arrive at any agreement upon the figures. Of course there was a great deal in the Bill which was uncertain and which was open to either side to interpret as they pleased. For instance, they dealt with the question of the lengthened period of incapacity during which payment might be made. No doubt that allowed an opening for a great variety of opinion. The mine owners, on the one hand, accepted in almost all these cases what he might call the maximum average, while the Government's maximum might be too low. The main thing he would press upon the Committee was that they did not think the charge, whatever it was, whether it was ¾d. or 3d. per ton, would really in the long run fall, at all events as regarded the major portion of it, upon the employer personally. They were dealing with all accidents, and not accidents by negligence. They did not want to treat this as a punitive Bill or to impose everything on the employers. On the contrary, they desired to see the charge imposed by the Bill spread over the trade, and in that way they thought it would not be an amount which would in any way interfere with the prosperity of the trade. His hon. Friend said a charge of this kind would place a trade at a disadvantage with foreign countries. He thought that the hon. Member forgot that the charge at present under the law in foreign countries was larger than the average stated by the mine owners themselves as the probable cost of this Bill. For instance, in Germany the cost upon the mine owners was something like 2 per cent., while in the opinion of the Government the cost under this Bill would not be much above 1 per cent. Another hon. Gentleman attached importance to the fact that under the German system the first 13 weeks were excluded from the accident fund. That was quite true, but the men were put upon the provident fund, but that included a great number of things with which the Government did not deal at all, and to the provident fund, which included sickness, superannuation, and other matters, the employer was compelled to contribute 25 per cent., in addition to paying the whole of the cost of the accident fund, and accordingly if the two were put together it would be found that the incidence of German taxation was even higher than anything stated, except, perhaps, the most excessive estimate of all, in regard to Britsh trade. Reference had been made to the question of uncertainty. In regard to that, the Government were fully alive to the difficulty, and were anxious to make the liability as definite as possible, because it was only by making it definite that insurance could be properly arranged to meet it. The Government would endeavour to meet the views of those who represented both the employers and the workmen in the desire that some greater definiteness should be given to this clause, and when that was done he believed a great deal of the objection would be removed.

Mr. COURTENAY WARNER (Stafford, Lichfield) thought that if the Amendment were passed most of the supporters of the Bill would cease to take any interest in it, for to take mines out of the Bill would be to make the Measure a sham. And when it was said that the mine-owners would be ruined, he reminded the Committee that they said the same thing when the Mines Regulations Act was passed, and they were not ruined yet.

Mr. FRANCIS NEWDIGATE (Warwickshire, Nuneaton), although a mine-owner, had not sufficient knowledge of himself to be able to form an opinion what the taxation on this particular industry would be. But if there was one class who ought to be protected by any Workmen's Compensation Bill, it was the miners. That being so, he should be very sorry indeed if the Amendment were carried, and he should most decidedly vote against it.

Mr. MACLEAN explained that his Amendment was put down before the general discussion on the principle of the Bill, and if he had persevered in moving the Amendment it was only for the purpose of drawing some definite statement from the Government as to what they understood to be the bearing of the Bill. He did not know that they had got any definite statement yet. However, he was obliged to the Home Secretary for the spirit in which he had met the Amendment. Would his right hon. Friend produce the figures he had cited, and have them placed before the country, because the country had not yet been afforded the means to understand the bearing of the Bill? He should be satisfied with the result of the discussion if the Government would promise that their figures should be placed before the country before the Report stage. He begged leave to withdraw his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. EDWARD GOULDING (Wilts, Devizes) moved, in Sub-section (1), after the word "quarry," to insert the word "agriculture," the object being to extend the Bill to agriculture. He submitted that it was impossible for an agricultural labourer, with the wage he earned, to insure against accidents; while, with reference to the objection that agriculture was not a dangerous trade, and the risks few, he urged that, with the growing use of machinery, those risks must increase, while even now the number of accidents was considerable. In his own Division no less than 21 accidents of a serious kind had taken place during the last two years. They included accidents from steam ploughs, threshing machines, chaff-cutting machines, carting and loading, and also two cases of blood-poisoning resulting from shearing. He found that only two of those people—and he had made careful inquiry—had got any compensation whatever; they got the small compensation of 2s. 6d. a week from their individual employer. If that sum had been spent in insuring against accidents, it would have given each of the men an adequate sum in case of accident. There were some localities where there were rich residents, but that class was decreasing all over the country. The Death Duties had relieved that class of a great deal of their surplus cash. They could not be expected to contribute to funds raised in relief of those people as they had done in the past. Among other objections, it was said that if this Amendment were introduced, old men would be driven out of employment, but that could not possibly be the case, because the insurance companies informed him that it would not pay them to send down their inspectors to inquire into the details of such cases. Taking a farm of 1,000 acres, and a man paying £1,000 in wages per annum, the whole liability placed upon his shoulders by making him insure would be a sum of £3 or £4 a year. He suggested that the Government might include agriculture in this clause, and then, in the definition clause, limit the word to farms over 200 acres, on which machinery worked by steam was used. He recognised the statesmanlike courage of the Government in bringing forward this Measure, and he had no wish to embarrass them; but representing, as he did, an agricultural constituency, composed almost entirely of working men, he felt that he should not be doing his duty if he did not do his best to secure the inclusion of agricultural labourers in the Bill. [Opposition cheers.]

*MR. LOGAN said he hoped the Government would accept the Amendment, which was in the interests of the worst paid and most deserving class of the community. He personally would like to see all the toilers brought within the scope of the Bill, but as the Government could not see their way to do that, he implored them to include the most pathetic figure in our whole social system, condemned by apparently inexorable conditions to a life of unremitting toil, with the prospect of the poor-house as its only and probable termination. Of this he was positive—that this mighty Government was impotent to refuse the claims of the agricultural labourer if the representatives of agriculture in that House would be faithful to the trust which had been reposed in them. ["Hear, hear!"] As representing a large number of agricultural labourers, he implored those who had been returned to the House by the vote of agricultural labourers to be true to themselves, true to their constituents, and refuse to betray the men who sent them there. ["Hear, hear!"] The agricultural labourer was the last man in England who ought to be excluded from the provisions of the Bill, for, with the exception of those unfortunate outcasts of our industrial system who were compelled to work in sweated industries, the agricultural labourer was the worst paid white man in the world. ["Hear, hear!"] The nine or ten shillings a week which were paid to him in some counties was a disgraceful remuneration to be paid to any man in a Christian country. ["Hear, hear!"] But even the 14 or 15 shillings a week which might be taken on the average throughout England was, in his judgment, a miserable pittance to be paid to any able-bodied man, and more especially to the men who had to labour faithfully upon the spot where their forefathers for succeeding generations had laboured before them, and to whose patient toil and homely skill they were indebted for the most fertile fields in the world. He need not labour the case, for it was well known that the wages of the agricultural labourer did not permit of his putting anything by, and when sickness or accident overtook him he was a miserable dependant upon the charity of others. ["Hear, hear!"] He appealed to all men in the House who secured the vote of the agricultural labourer at the last General Election by promising, either directly or indirectly, to better the lot of the unfortunate men —he appealed to all Members who fought under the title of the toiler's true friend to assist him in bringing before the Government this claim of the labourers to compensation when maimed by doing their duty. In his judgment it was not a farmer's question, but a landowner's question, for the farmer, after all, was only the landowner's bailiff, working at piecework. He also appealed to the owners of agricultural land. He would, if they liked, grant that they were badly off as compared with 1879-80, when rents were at their highest, but would ask them to remember that their land to-day was worth in the market at least 600 millions sterling more than at the commencement of the century, and the plea of poverty would not exonerate them from doing their duty by the men who had given their possessions that additional value. As a rough calculation he assumed that the inclusion of agricultural labourers would not cost one penny per acre per year for insurance against liability. One penny per acre on the 48 million acres of cultivated area would produce £200,000, or ten shillings per year on each £100 paid in wages, the annual wage bill being estimated at forty millions sterling. Thus, on a farm of 400 acres, the approximate cost of insuring compensation to all the men employed would be £1. 13s. 4d. per year, and if that proved too great a burden the Government might provide that the farmer should deduct the cost as he did the tax under Schedule A from the rent. But, on whomsoever the cost might fall, he was there to claim as a right compensation for the agricultural labourer, for he could not imagine that any attempt would be made to deduct the paltry amount from the wages of the labourers. The first charge upon the land was the maintenance of the people reared and cradled on its bosom, and if that were true, as it certainly was, when the men were in health, the claim was doubly great when they were incapacitated by accident from earning their daily bread. He appealed to the Colonial Secretary, who in days gone by had so eloquently represented the case of the agricultural labourer. ["Hear, hear!"] He appealed to the Government to add to the popularity which they would win by the introduction of this Bill by including within its provsions the most pathetic figure in their social system. He would tell them how to win Petersfield. [Laughter.] Let them include the agricultural labourer within the scope of the Bill. He appealed to the elected representatives of the agricultural labourer to do their duty by the men who sent them there, remembering that what they thought or knew or believed in the end was of little consequence as compared with the consequence of what they did. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said that there were many Members who would naturally feel great sympathy with the Amendment. But in introducing the Bill he had explained the reasons why the Government did not see their way clear to include in it agricultural labourers; and he was bound to say that, if the agricultural labourers were introduced into the Bill now, it would be practically making the Bill inclusive of all labour in the country. [Opposition cheers.] He would not say that what was good for one class of labour was not good for another; but he submitted, as a practical argument, that in introducing a new principle like that of the Bill it was necessary to proceed in the first instance on the safest and soundest ground, and to leave further extensions of the principle to be made in the future. The Government hoped and believed that the time was not far distant when they would be able to apply the principles which underlay the Bill to all the industries of the country—[Opposition cheers]—as was the case in other countries. But what they said now was that if they were to seek to give to those principles a general application at the present time they would overload the Bill before the House. [Opposition cries of "No!"] That, at least, was the opinion of the country; and he thought that unless there was a very strong assurance from Members representing the agricultural interest, that the farmers of the country were willing to accept the principle of the Amendment any Government would shrink from making such a proposal. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not want to quote the case of Germany too much; but it was four or five years after the initiation of legislation of this character in Germany that the agricultural labourer was included in it. His position was this, that to apply the principle to the very small farmers of the country, who were themselves very little different from the labourers they employed, would be to frighten them—would be to deal unjustly with them; and, besides, they were not men who were most ready to insure themselves. ["Hear, hear!"] It had been said that the cost of insuring agricultural labour from the small risk involved would be trifling. He granted that. He thought it would not be even a half-crown. But he asked those who had any experience of the agricultural interest, who knew, not the large farmers represented by his hon. Friend the Mover of the Amendment, but the small men who farmed 50 or 60 acres by means of family labour, with the occasional assistance of a "hind"—as the agricultural labourer was called in his part of the country—whether they could induce farmers of that class generally to insure the casual labourer whom they employed on their farms? ["Hear, hear!"] The Government had admitted within the scope of the Bill all dangerous trades and industries. [Opposition cries of "No!"] Agriculture was not a dangerous trade or industry. With the exception of shipping, the Government had certainly introduced all dangerous trades about which they had specific information in regard to accidents. They had no such information in regard to agriculture. ["Hear, hear!"] His hon. Friend who moved the Amendment spoke about limiting the principle to farms of over 200 acres. But he thought his hon. Friend would find a difficulty in working out that suggestion logically. What about the difference between a farm of 200 acres in the moorlands of Scotland and a farm of 200 acres in the neighbourhood of London? His hon. Friend also spoke about drawing a distinction in favour of agricultural labourers who might be employed in charge of steam machinery. That, again, would introduce a principle very difficult of application. Those who were familiar with the agricultural industry would know how often it happened that intermediary and casual labour was employed in charge of machinery; how often a travelling threshing machine, the property of a small farmer, went the round of the various districts for the purposes of threshing after the harvest, and how casual labour was frequently used in looking after those machines. ["Hear, hear!"] They should not go beyond that which appeared to be practical. Let them confine themselves within the limits of the Bill as it stood. Even hon. Members who sympathised with the agricultural labourers must see that it would be dangerous to overload the Bill—that it would be far safer to be content with the present experiment, with a view to seeing later on how far it might be possible to extend the principles of the Bill to other industries. ["Hear, hear!"]

*MR. PERKS (Lincolnshire, Louth) said that, as the representative of a division half of whose electors consisted of agricultural labourers, he joined in the appeal that had been addressed to the Government, especially as there must be sitting on the Benches opposite many hon. Gentlemen who had pledged themselves at the last General Election to do something for the social improvement of the labourer on the land. If this were a just proposal for the protection of the agricultural labourer, it ought to be included in the Bill; and it was no answer whatever to it to say that it would overweight the Bill. Was it just to the agricultural labourer to say that because he was not represented by a powerful trades union organisation, and therefore was not able to present his case with that authority and solidarity which such organisations commanded, he was to be excluded from the benefits of the Bill? There were, he regretted to say, a large number of women employed in agriculture, and it was necessary that women in the agricultural industry should be protected as well as women in the textile industries. He would present to the Committee a few instances of the injustice which would be done by the rejection of this Amendment.

There were a number of small towns in agricultural districts with paper mills, cloth mills, and various other small factories. A man is injured in the course of his work in one of those factories, and under the provisions of the Bill he comes to his employer for compensation. An agricultural labourer is also injured in the course of his employment in the same village; but instead of coming upon his employer he comes upon the rates. The result was that the manufacturers who owned the mill had not only to pay under the Bill for the man injured in the mill, but he had also to pay, through the poor rate, for the labourer injured upon the farm. That manifestly was a great injustice. Then take the case of a railway company. There were many parishes in which 60, 70, or 80 per cent. of the rates fell upon the railway passing through the parish. If a man in the employment of the Company was injured he had to be compensated by the railway company. If an agricultural labourer was injured the railway company had also to pay for him through the rates. It was the same with manufacturers in such towns as Lincoln. They would have to pay compensation not only for their own accidents, but compensation also for accidents to injured agricultural labourers and to other workers outside the scope of this Bill. He trusted that even at this last moment the Government would accept this very reasonable extension of the Bill, and would not refuse to do an act of justice to a very large section of the industrial community of this country.

Mr. ARTHUR JEFFREYS (Hants, Basingstoke) said it was a matter of very grave doubt to him whether the granting of compensation under this Bill to the agricultural labourer would tend to improve his condition in life. If he were perfectly certain it would, he would have the greatest pleasure in voting for the Amendment. But he believed that, in the end, it would be found that it would cause the labourer to lose his employment under small employers. There was no compensation paid under the present law to agricultural labourers who were injured, but his experience of the country was that, when a labourer did meet with an accident, the landowners invariably made a subscription for him, and he got quite as much money in that way as he would by compensation. [Opposition cries of "No!"] Well, he could only speak of the county in which he lived, and he knew that what he had just stated was the fact. If compensation was to be paid, then, to begin with, they ought to have some fund from which to draw the compensation money. If they proposed to have a State fund from which they could draw the compensation money, well and good; but from whom would this compensation come now? The labourers in the country looked forward to some day having a small holding of their own. When they became small holders they employed labour—perhaps one or two men. How could they afford to employ labour if they had such a liability as this Bill would place upon them hanging over their heads? The small holder was, after all, very little removed from the agricultural labourer. If he met with an accident he would receive no compensation whatever, whereas if the man whom he employed, and who was as well off as the small holder himself, met with an accident, he would receive under the Bill a compensation which would be quite sufficient to ruin his employer. It was asked, why should they not insure? He would reply that the small employer of labour—the man who employed one or two labourers—would have great difficulty in insuring on the same terms as the man who employed 50 or 60 men. As a matter of fact, the small farmer did not insure his ricks and other property now, and the same thing would happen if this Amendment were carried. Then, when an accident happened, and this liability fell upon him, he would be reduced to absolute ruin. He would like to point out, too, that one effect of the Amendment would be that no farmers would employ old and decrepit labourers. They would be in exactly the same category under the Bill as the strong labourers, and as they were more liable to meet with accidents than the younger and stronger men, no farmer would care to run the risk of increasing his liability by employing them. The result would be that these old men, who were still able to earn a little money during the long harvesting days, would be deprived of their employment. His hon. Friend had also alluded to the extension of the Bill to steam machinery. The Home Secretary, he thought, had given a sufficient reply to that point, and had shown how difficult it would be to limit the liability to the one or two men who were in charge of the engines. Everyone acquainted with farming operations knew that, in addition to the men in charge of the engines, there were half-a-dozen other men engaged either on the rick or in taking away the corn from the engine. Those men were brought in for the day, and were paid by the day, but if this Amendment were carried, he took it that in case of an accident they would receive the same compensation as the men in charge of the engine. His opinion on the whole subject was that if the Amendment were carried, it would do more harm than good to the agricultural labourer.

Mr. ROBINSON SOUTTAR (Dumfriesshire) said he had also a similar Amendment on the Paper, but after the very strong way in which the Home Secretary had put his foot down, it was not, perhaps, wise that he should spend more than a minute in discussing the question, but he should like to spend that minute in grumbling on behalf of his constituents. He represented farm labourers, and he was not at all afraid, as the previous speaker had prophesied, that his constituents would find themselves without employment if the farmers were included in this Measure. He should like to thank the Government for what they had included in the Bill. He had miners and quarriers in his constituency, and he was thankful that they were included, but he should have been glad if he could have gone down to his constituency and told the farm servants what the Government had done for them. As far as he could make out, the only objection to the inclusion of farm servants was the fear that it might, perhaps, ruin small farmers. He had plenty of small farmers in his constituency, and he should be very sorry to ruin any of them, but he did not believe for a single moment that they would be ruined any more than the small builders would be ruined by this Measure. He believed that in the end the landlord would have to pay the money. As to the number of accidents, it was said that they would be small, but although the gross percentage might be a small one it would not be a great consolation to a man who was injured to be told that he was one of a small number. The smaller the number the more easy it would be to include agriculture. Another point which might be urged was that the farmer's labourer was so poorly paid in Scotland and England that it was impossible to lay by for a rainy day. He was exceedingly glad to hear what the Home Secretary said with regard to the future, that he hoped the time would come, and come perhaps in the life of the present Government, when the farm labourers would be included. He did trust that the time of their exclusion would be exceedingly brief.

Major RASCH (Essex, S.E.) said they who represented agricultural labourers and were their champions, were bound to stand up for them. From his own experience, he did not think it would be to the interest of the agricultural labourer to include him in this Bill. [A laugh from the Opposition.] He thought he could explain to hon. Gentlemen opposite why not, and if an Amendment was put down as to machinery he should vote for it; but that was a totally different thing. It would be totally inapplicable to the farmers and labourers in the east of England, whom he represented. It was all very well for a farmer of 1,000 acres to become liable under this Bill, but those were not the men with whom he had to deal. How could they make a farmer of 150 acres, who sometimes could not make both ends meet, liable to the extent of £150? He ventured to say if such men were brought under the purview of this Bill the labourers would not be employed by the small farmer. For eleven years, since he entered that House, he had advocated the cause of the labourer, but he could assure the Committee that it was simply and solely from his own personal experience that he declared that if they brought the agricultural labourer under the Bill, it would deprive him of work. He could not, he regretted to say, vote for the Amendment.

Mr. H. H. ASQUITH (Fife, E.): I have already expressed an opinion that the more logical course would have been to include all the trades of the country. [" Hear, hear!"] That, however, has been decided in the contrary sense, and we are therefore driven, by Amendments on this clause, to consider the special claims of particular trades now excluded. I have listened to this discussion, and I observe a marked divergence as between the opinion of Her Majesty's Government and the opinion of the Members who sit behind them as to the ground on which this Amendment is to be resisted. ["Hear, hear!"] On one side the justice of the claim of the men who may have been injured, to be admitted, was acknowledged, but then we are told we must proceed by steps; they must proceed in a tentative fashion, and then the right hon. Gentleman held out the hope that the agricultural labourers may be at last admitted. But the hon. Members for Aldershot and Essex hold a totally different opinion. They in the interest of the agricultural labourer deprecate his inclusion. More extraordinary reasons than they have given I never heard. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member for Aldershot says that the labourer would get less money under this Bill than he gets at present. The landowners and farmers are so liberal and philanthropic that they give the labourer a larger sum than anything he could expect under this Bill. A great many of the large employers of labour throughout the country might say the same, they are so beneficent as employers; but as I understand, the object of this Bill is that the labourer shall not be dependent on eleemosynary assistance given of charity, but that he should have it as a right to which each self-respecting citizen is entitled from the law without sending the hat round. [Cheers.] Then we are told that if the labourer is included in this Bill he will cease to be employed. [A laugh.] Who then would till the soil? I believe that is an illusory apprehension. In what different position is the farmer from the small employers of labour in the towns? ["Hear, hear!"] I believe nearly half the factories are places in which not more than ten persons are employed, and they are all brought within the purview of this Bill. It is impossible that any ground more illogical can be taken up by hon. Gentlemen opposite. In other cases the burden is thrown upon the employer, and it is said he should protect himself by insurance. It is quite true that the accidents, owing to the increasing use of machinery in agriculture, are increasing, but the burden is almost insignificant. It is upon these grounds that I think a case has been made out and I trust the hon. Member who moved the Amendment will press it to a Division. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: I cannot help thinking that the Debate is a réchauffé of the Second Reading Debate on this Bill. Nothing new has been said, and I quite understand that there must necessarily remain a difference of opinion which can only be decided by a Division of the Committee. My right hon. Friend tells us that it would have been more loyal and more practical if the Government had included all trades in the Bill. Well, Sir, logic we have long ago given up in connection with this Bill. [Opposition cheers.] Indeed, I do think that it is the great advantage of English legislation that it does not pretend to be logical. And if the English Legislature ever did pretend to be logical, it would immediately find itself in the position of some foreign countries which have tried to be logical, and make the same mistakes those foreign countries have made. Our legislation would never be at all satisfying, it would never meet the varied conditions of English life, if it pretended to be logical. I am not at all, therefore, ashamed to plead guilty to the charge that the Bill is not logical. But when my right hon. Friends say that it would be more practical to include all these trades I confess that is a point upon which I entirely differ from them. It has been made a complaint against those who are opposing this Amendment that our arguments have been divergent; that while my right hon. Friend and myself have admitted that the claim of the agricultural labourer is a just one, and that it cannot be in itself distinguished from some other trades, my hon. Friends behind me have used altogether different arguments. They have used different arguments, but not arguments that are in any way inconsistent with ours. What my hon. Friends have said is this. They have not denied the justice of the claim made for the agricultural labourer, and I do not doubt that they would be willing to adopt the words of the Home Secretary on that point. But they say, be it just or unjust, in their opinion—and I think they are entitled to speak with authority—it would be inexpedient to apply it at the present moment. Why would it be inexpedient? It would be inexpedient in their opinion because it would undoubtedly lead to a lesser demand for labour and to the exclusion of many labourers who are now at work on the land, especially the older labourers. My right hon. Friend dismisses that argument in an airy way, and asks who will till the land. I might say that there is a great deal of land at the present moment that is not being tilled at all. ["Hear, hear!"] It has always been our desire, and I believe the desire of all who wish well to the agricultural labourer, to introduce a larger amount of labour on the land, and to secure that the land now untilled shall be brought into cultivation and that as much manual labour as possible shall be employed upon it. ["Hear, hear!"] Another point put forward by my hon. Friend is that in the case of an accident happening to an agricultural labourer employed by a small farmer, the compensation would ruin and destroy that farmer. "Oh," says my right hon. Friend, "he should insure." I quite agree. But does he think, from his own experience as a matter of fact, that if we were at once, while this principle is still new, and has hardly penetrated into the minds of employers of labour throughout the country—["hear, hear!"]—does he think that as a class the farmers will immediately rush off to the insurance offices? We are told that the offices themselves are not yet prepared, that they have not even made their scale of charges. Would it not be well—is it not reasonable to urge, in the interests of the labourers as well as of the farmers, that some time should be given to see what the effect of the Bill is to be, and gain experience of these same trades and employers to which my hon. Friend referred? Is it not wise to wait for that experience before we impose the burden on such a trade as that of agriculture? It has been admitted, and hon. Gentlemen opposite cheered it, that if we were to admit the agricultural labourers we should no longer have cause or reason for refusing to include workshops and the whole of the rest of the trades of the country. They cheered that enthusiastically. ["Hear, hear!" from the Opposition.] Well, I don't want to throw in their teeth their past action; but surely this is absolutely inconsistent with their past action. Take, for instance, the case of the agricultural labourer. What did they propose to do for the agricultural labourer? They proposed to give the agricultural labourer the advantages of the abolition of common employment. How many wounded labourers would have been helped in the course of a year by that? And, remember, that great boon—if boon it be—was to have been given to the agricultural labourer subject to litigation. The agricultural labourer who earns 8s. to 9s. a week was supposed to be able to prosecute his claim at an expense of perhaps £300 to £400 in law. I say that, as a matter of fact, in 1893 nothing was done for the agricultural labourer. In name something was done; in reality absolutely nothing. And at that time, as hon. Members recollect, I was urging upon the then Government that they should introduce this new principle which we are now recommending to the community. What was the answer? I am not complaining, but the answer at that time was that public opinion was not ripe. And now, when we do introduce it, when we are introducing what is admitted to be a very large Measure indeed, I find that all those hon. Gentlemen opposite who gave me no assistance then are all urging on the Government to include this and to include that. Is that a course really in the interest of the Bill? I address myself to hon. Gentlemen who are in favour of the Bill, and I ask them to deal with the Bill in a practical spirit. Do not they see—are not the signs of the times evident to them as they must be to everybody else—that to introduce a new principle of this kind is a great Parliamentary effort? We think we have carried that principle as far as we ought to be asked to do. But we do believe in our principle, and we shall continue to do so. We hope that as the result of experience a larger extension will be given to it after that experience has been fully before the country. But anybody who now presses us to introduce large additional classes, and at the same time involve ourselves in additional contests with those classes, can certainly not be called a true Friend of the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean) agreed with his right hon. Friend who had just sat down that it was extremely difficult to introduce the agricultural labourer into the Bill. But the difficulty of introducing many of the small trades affected was exactly as great. The right hon. Gentleman objected that those who attacked the Bill asked for logic. But the very ground on which he defeated the Bill of the late Home Secretary was that a logical proposal ought to be made to include all trades in its operation. It seemed to him that the Government had gone too far, or not far enough —["hear, hear!"]—and that it was impossible to justify the line which had been drawn in the present Bill. He could not resist the argument of the right hon. Gentleman, and he should not support the Amendment. But he was bound to say that the agricultural industry was affected by the Bill as it stood; for a casual dairy hand working at a churn moved by water-power would come under the Bill as he worked in a "factory," and that there were many such places worked by only two or three poeple which would come under the Bill, and where all the difficulties referred to by hon. Members on the other side would present themselves. He could not resist the conclusion that the more they looked at the Bill the more they felt that Government were bound to come to some principle as to the responsibility for compensation generally, for the small employer could not bear the strain the Bill would thrust upon him. He was certain they would have to come to that presently; and the value of these discussions was that they would more and more educate the country to feel that it was impossible to justify the arbitrary lines of distinction that must be drawn in a Bill of this kind, and that they must ultimately come to the responsibility of the public or the State for the damages to be incurred. ["Hear, hear!"] The exclusion of the excluded trades would be much easier to justify if the Government had been prepared to introduce a Bill to improve the law as regarded the excluded trades. The right hon. Gentleman said he did not think the doctrine of common employment would affect the agricultural labourer. For his part, he believed that in all the serious accidents which befell the agricultural labourer he would find that it was common employment and contributory negligence which excluded them from compensation already. And when it was said that the agricultural labourer had no unions and would be unable to set the law in operation—was it not notorious that the law was set in operation at the present time on behalf of very poor labourers indeed, who had no unions, their cases being taken up as a speculation on the chance of getting damages. No, it was common employment and contributory negligence which did already exclude the agricultural labourer. Therefore, he held that the Government would be driven either to some form of recognition of public responsibility for loss in the case of a bankrupt employer, or else, if they continued to exclude certain trades, to improve the law with regard to the excluded trades.

*SIR MARK STEWART (Kirkcudbright) said it had been suggested that as the Amendment would throw a burden on the land, the landlord would have to bear it. He did not object to it on that ground, but he did object to such legislation for Scotland at the present time, as many of the farms in Scotland—the greater part of the farms in the South of Scotland—were small farms held on a nineteen years' lease; and that being so, he held that the time had not arrived for the Bill to apply to Scotland. He could perfectly reconcile the different views which the right hon. Member for East Fife had referred to. But he contended that the Bill was not wanted, and there was no demand for it in the country. If there was a demand for it, he should be the last man to stand up against it, but there was none. There might be bad accidents in agricultural districts at times, but the sufferers were generally treated with great sympathy and liberality by employers and proprietors of the soil. Accidents, however, were extremely rare, and there was no reason for bringing the industry under the Act. The calculation of the number of accidents requirng hospital treatment was only one in three thousand in country districts. In the moorland districts of Ireland and in the Highlands of Scotland there were practically no accidents; and he was quite sure that very few Scotch Members would rise in the House and say that it would promote the general good to include agriculture in the scope of the Bill. He was sure that the effect would be that many small farmers would employ no labour whatever. They would endeavour themselves to do all the labour that was required on their own land, many old hands would be put off, and the labourers would be far worse off in many cases under this Bill than they already were.

Mr. J. W. CROMBIE (Kincardineshire), in supporting the Amendment, observed that the Colonial Secretary had once more warned them against logic. He would suggest that before the right hon. Gentleman asked them to remove the logic mote from their eyes he might remove the logic beam from the eye of the Home Secretary. The whole argument of the Home Secretary came to this that they could not include agriculture, because if they did so they would be obliged to include other trades. He submitted, therefore, that the right hon. Gentleman was simply defending his position on purely logical grounds. The right hon. Gentleman had also said that there was no difference of opinion between the Front Bench and the hon. Gentlemen who sat behind. He submitted that there was. The Home Secretary said that he approved of the principle of including the agricultural labourer, but what he wanted them to do was to postpone that inclusion. He appealed to the hon. Gentleman the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Jeffreys) who had used certain arguments against the inclusion of the agricultural labourer, and would ask him whether he did not think that his arguments would be just as effective two years hence as they were at present. If they would be then there was a difference of opinion between hon. and right hon. Gentlemen. The Colonial Secretary did, he admitted, give them one argument in his attempt to reconcile those two things. He said in effect, "Wait a little; if you wait a little the farmers will learn to insure; at the present moment they do not insure, but bye-and-bye if you give them a little more time they will learn the principle of insurance." He submitted that at present the farmers had learned the principle of insurance. He had many small farmers in his constituency and he found that they insured against the burning of a hay stack which would be as great a calamity as that of a man falling off a hay rick. If they could insure against the one risk, they would quickly learn to insure against the other. This Bill applied to steam. In Scotland they had an enormous number of traction threshing machines. The workmen employed at those machines were employed at a travelling factory which was as much a factory as the factories included in the Measure. It was said that if they included the agricultural labourer in the Act they would do harm to agriculture itself. But at the present moment the greatest problem they had to face was that they could not get the agricultural labourers to remain on the land. They were tempted to the large towns by the much greater inducements that they got there. The Government were now going to add to that difficulty. They were going to give a fresh attraction to employment in the towns, and the farmer would have a worse difficulty in getting labourers. ["Hear, hear!"] The President of the Board of Agriculture was doing—and rightly doing—all he could to encourage cattle breeding. Kincardineshire at one time was a great cattle-breeding district but it had ceased to be so, and one reason for that was that no farmer could breed cattle because he could not get a sufficient supply of female labour. He submitted that if this Measure was passed and the agricultural interest left out the farmer would find greater difficulty in getting labourers. ["Hear, hear!"]

*Lord WILLOUGHBY de ERESBY (Lincolnshire, Horncastle) regretted that on this occasion he found himself not in line with the Government, but must support the Amendment of his hon. Friend. He was quite prepared to admit that a few of the oldest labourers, being more likely to suffer injury, might lose their employment, but he did not think that this should stand in the way of admitting the vast majority of agricultural labourers to the benefits of this Bill. His own feeling on this question was very strong. He believed the cost of insurance would be extremely small in the case of farm labourers, for almost all insurance companies would see perfectly well that there were very few risks which could occur to a farm labourer that were not brought about by his own fault and wilful negligence. There was the question of the small farmer, and as far as he was concerned he could not help thinking the landlords would have to look to themselves. A small farmer would be liable under this Bill, and if one of his labourers was killed or injured, he would suffer a very heavy loss unless he had insured. But it seemed to him that when he came with a farm agreement the landlord ought to see that such small farmer should insure his men. Personally, as far as he was concerned, in any estates he had to manage, he should make it a condition before such small farmers took a farm that they should produce the insurance policies for the one or two men they had to employ. He should be perfectly willing to deduct such cost from the rent, and he believed himself it would be a good thing for the landlords to act in this way, and for this reason. As the Bill stood if a man had to be called upon to pay a large sum it would mean practically ruin to the small farmer and the landlord would have a bankrupt tenant. But he considered the landlord was well able to look after his interest in that respect by making his small tenants insure the men he was likely to employ on his farm. He should support the Amendment of his hon. Friend in pursuance of a distinct pledge he had given to his constituents.

*SIR JOSEPH PEASE remarked that it was a curious fact that those great industries whose employés had by their thrift obtained as good a position as they would have under the Bill were already included in the Measure. He spoke specially with regard to the industry he was connected with in Northumberland and Durham. He defied any man to show that the men who might meet with an accident or the widows of men who might be killed would not by the exertions of the men themselves and the help of their employers, be in as good a position as they would be under this Bill. Yet the Government had chose that industry and left out one which was worse off. Then with regard to the railways, they were included in the Bill, when it was well known that in connection with one or two of the larger companies the men would, by their own savings and care and by the help of the shareholders, be in a good position in the event of accidents happening, perhaps not so good as they would be in if the Bill were to pass into law. Under these circumstances it was a monstrous thing that those poor men in the agricultural industry, who earned worse wages than the railway men or the men engaged in the mines were to be left out in the cold. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham said that the day of logic had gone by. The day of equity, however, and of care, and of honesty of purpose had not gone by. He thought the views of a great many hon. Gentlemen on the Opposition side would change towards this Bill by the time the Third Reading stage was reached unless equity and public morality were carried to their full extent.

*MR. HENRY HOBHOUSE (Somerset, E.) had always been of opinion that if once the House accepted the broad principle upon which this Bill was based, before many years were over it would be absolutely necessary in logic and in justice to give to every labourer in the country the right of compensation. At the same time he was quite convinced that the Government had taken the wisest and most prudent course in not applying the Bill —which was professedly experimental— at present to such industries as that of agriculture. The Bill had been discussed on the basis of large employments, to which the system of insurance could be more easily and cheaply applied. But in extending the Bill to such industries as agriculture they would have to do with a class of small employers. They knew by experience that the farmers were very slow to adopt new habits and he thought it was most desirable, both in their interests and in the interest of agriculture as a whole, that they should have time to see those new principles of insurance applied before they were called upon to apply them themselves. The question had been raised whether the application of this Bill would or would not be beneficial to the agricultural labourer. He thought that entirely depended upon whether the employers of the agricultural labourer insured generally or did not. He felt quite confident that if they did not insure—and in the first instance, at all events, the great majority of them, he believed, would prefer to run the risks of accidents rather than insure—that state of things would not be beneficial to the agricultural labourer as a whole. A farmer might be called upon to pay, perhaps, £300 down. Having no ready money, he would be unable to pay, and that would bring his creditors down upon him, and he would become insolvent, so that, not only would the injured man not get any compensation, but the other labourers in the employ of the farmer would lose their work. He thought that the principle introduced in this Bill ought not to be applied in a hurry to small employments. The statesmanlike course was first of all to apply this principle to the larger industries to see how it worked, and then gradually to bring within its scope the labourers in the other industries. It might be found necessary to introduce some form of State aid before it was applied to small employers, but he felt sure that the Bill as it stood could not be applied in the way it was now sought to apply it, and he should have no hesitation in voting against the Amendment.

Mr. BRYN ROBERTS (Carnarvonshire, Eifion) said he intended to support the Amendment, not only because he was an agricultural Member, but also because he was an admirer of the logic displayed by the Government. He could not but admire the serpentine wisdom of the Government in the framing of this Bill. The Debate had shown that if the Government had included agricultural labourers, there were a large number of friends of the agricultural labourers on the Government side of the House who would prevent the passing of the Bill.

Mr. HARRY FOSTER (Suffolk, Lowestoft) said that, as representing an agricultural constituency, he was deeply disappointed at the decision of the Government. He was sure that every agricultural Member on the Government side would endorse every word which fell from the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife. ["No, no!"] The Government admitted the justice of the claim, and the right hon. Gentleman merely enforced it by pointing out that the agricultural labourers, above all classes, were least able to provide against accident. It was said on the Second Reading that there was no demand on the part of agricultural labourers for inclusion in the Bill. There was, on the contrary, a very strong demand for it on their part, and he confessed that he would find the greatest difficulty in explaining to his constituents why they were excluded. He would venture to ask one question of the Government. They were told that the Bill was an experiment, and when it had worked a certain time agriculture was to be included. He had not yet heard what was to be considered a reasonable time. ["Divide, divide!"] Hon. Members might shout "Divide!" but he had risen to discharge a duty, and he asked the Government what they considered a reasonable time in which to reconsider the question of the inclusion of agriculture? This was the third Session of this Parliament. What chance was there that during its continuance this question would be considered? The agricultural industry was one of the greatest industries of the country, and he would like to know on what ground they were to tell their constituents they were not to be included in the Bill? He felt bound to support the Amendment.

Sir W. HART DYKE (Kent, Dartford) did not agree that this was a great question of justice. It was a question of common sense. ["Hear, hear!"] It was perfectly obvious that a Measure of this magnitude should first be tried in connection with those industries in which the workers incurred the greatest amount of hazard. Looking to the great crisis through which agriculture was passing, he believed the House could not take a more hazardous step than to include agricultural labourers in the Bill. It was clear that, if agriculture was to keep its head above water, it could only do so by the multiplication of small holdings. If that were so, by the application of this Bill to agriculture, the difficulties of the situation would be greatly aggravated. He thought that was a substantial reason why the House should pause before they applied the principle of the Measure to the agricultural system. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. HENRY BROADHURST (Leicester) said his colleagues representing labour in the House would agree with him when he said that the artisans asked for no benefit or protection which was not given to their colleagues the farm labourers. His first criticism on the Bill was that it did not include that class. They did not ask for logic. They knew they would not get that, but what they did ask for was that the poorest class of labourers in the country, those who had the least means of protecting themselves, should be included in this great Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] Small farmers understood insurance as well as large farmers or manufacturers. They had insured under the Act of 1880. There would be no ruination, no men would be discharged on account of this Bill. Old men were now employed, not on account of philanthropy, but because younger men could not be found. He hoped the Committee might have a definite assurance as to the time when the amending Bill would be introduced.

*Mr. C. T. GILES (Cambridge, Wisbech) said he found it very difficult indeed to discuss this Bill and to come to a conclusion as to the inclusion of agricultural labourers from lack of information as to the way it would affect farmers, small owners, and occupiers, and even labourers themselves. This question having been raised by Amendment, there had been no opportunity to ascertain the views of those interested in the matter. Agricultural labourers incurred greater dangers than persons employed in many factories, and on that and other grounds were certainly entitled to a Compensation for Accidents Bill. But if agricultural labourers were included in the Bill, they could not well exclude seamen, persons employed in workshops, and the building trade. [Opposition cheers.] He was decidedly in favour of the principle of workers in all these industries being compensated for accidents, but this Bill did not seem applicable to them. Some form of State insurance would be necessary. He trusted the Government would bring in a Bill which would include the industries excluded from the present Bill, and he would do all he could to urge them to do so.

*Mr. J. G. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty), speaking amidst cries of "Divide!" said he was disappointed that agricultural labourers were excluded from the Bill. The hon. Baronet the Member for Kirkcudbright said there was no call for the Bill in Scotland. That may be his opinion, but there could, he thought, be no question that the use of machinery was increasing amongst the large farmers, of whom there were many in the eastern part of Ross-shire. The Royal Commission on Deer Forests had shown that there were two million acres of uncultivated land in the Highlands. [Cries of "Question!"] There was no question about it. [Laughter and cheers.] Let there be more small farms in the Highlands, and let the landlords pay the insurance premium for the protection of the farmers against any liability for compensation arising through accidents to farm servants. He hoped the Government would afford compensation for accidents to agricultural labourers not only in Scotland, but in England. ["Hear, hear!"]

Question put, "That the word 'agriculture' be inserted."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 123; Noes, 175.—(Division List, No. 226.)

Mr. S. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow) moved, after the word "quarry," to insert the word "shop." He said that the Amendment would bring within the scope of the Bill a very large body of working men and women. In the City of London alone there were 100,000 persons engaged in work in shops. They were exposed to certain risks—for example, risks of lift accidents—and he held that they ought to be included in the Bill.

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY hoped the hon. Member would not press his Amendment. The Committee had rejected the proposal to include agricultural labourers, and a fortiori, unless this Bill was to be made absolutely comprehensive, it would not be reasonable to include shop assistants. The Committee, of course, sympathised with all classes of workers who were liable to injuries from accidents, but if the question were regarded from a practical point of view, he thought it would be admitted that this Bill ought not to be extended in the direction desired by the hon. Member.

Mr. S. WOODS said that after the statement of the right hon. Gentleman he realised that it would be useless for him to press his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Sir F. EVANS (Southampton) moved, in Sub-section (1), after the word "quarry," to insert the word "ship." Considerable complaints, he said, had been heard as to the supposed oppressiveness of the Measure upon particular trades. Wishing to find out how it would affect the industry with which he was connected, he had caused calculations to be made showing how his company would have been affected if the Bill had been in operation since 1891, and had extended to seamen, firemen, and ships' servants. Those calculations showed that for the last six years the annual charge necessary to meet all risks under the Bill would not have exceeded £400. In his opinion the Bill, by fixing the compensation payable for injuries, would be advantageous to employers. The difficulty of employers at present was to gauge the amount that they ought to pay in cases of accidents. Under this Bill, if seamen and firemen were included, shipowners would know exactly what they would have to pay. The company with which he was connected had 90,000 tons of shipping, and on the average about 130 men per ship, yet, as he had said, the gross charge for accidents would not exceed £400 a year. Experience with "tramp" vessels, as distinguished from "liners," showed that the cost would have been not more than double, and he pointed out that the risk could easily be insured against. There were so few cases of permanent incapacity that he was of opinion that they might almost be left out of consideration. Forty years ago the company with which he was connected lost one ship and a portion of her crew off the coast of Africa, but since then there had been no case of total loss. If seamen and firemen were included, he felt it would be an additional inducement to them to come into the service. He entirely disagreed with the argument that a special Act was necessary to deal with seamen. The Merchant Shipping Acts of this country which applied to seamen applied only to questions of detail which had nothing at all to do with the principle at stake in this Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] He asked for the inclusion of these men as an employer of these men —[cheers]—and surely the Government could not but aid him. He was willing to accept their Bill just as it stood; and there was no shipowner in the country who, if he would make the calculations which he himself had made, would not be glad to accept the principle. He begged to move his Amendment. [Cheers.]

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: I feel that the hon. Gentleman is a friend of this Bill, and I would add that his desire to include his own trade in the Bill is much more defensible than the attitude of some other employers who desire to exclude their trades. ["Hear, hear!"] At the same time, I think he has minimised the difficulties in our way, which would not apply, I doubt not, to such businesses as he is himself connected with. We all know that the state of things in the great lines is altogether different from that in the average shipping of the country, and that passenger ships are remarkably free from accidents of any kind. We cannot say the same thing, unfortunately, of the mass of the merchant trade. There are other matters, which suggest themselves to anyone, which point to a very considerable difference between trades on land and trades on sea. I will give one single case, for I do not intend to labour the question. A man engages for a long voyage, he is away, perhaps, for six months; in the course of the voyage he meets with an accident, and he is laid up for three months. If he were a workman on land he would have to provide for himself, to get his own medical attendance, his own food, and lodging. But the man who is rendered absolutely useless, say, for a term of three months, on board ship is kept and paid his wages, and has such medical attendance as the ship can afford for the whole of that period. Any one who thinks the matter out will see that there are very marked differences between the shipping trade and trades on land. The Government considered that to put this vast industry into a Bill of this kind would be to overload it. What we have said about the agricultural labourers we say with infinitely greater force with regard to shipping. We cannot undertake the responsibility of admitting into a Bill of this kind, which introduces this principle for the first time, such a trade as the shipping trade, which would enormously complicate the issues and greatly increase the opposition and friction with which we have to deal. Therefore our position is that, while we do not include it in the Bill, we recognise that the condition of things with regard to the shipping trade will not be satisfactory, and that, therefore, sooner or later—we hope sooner rather than later—it will be the duty of the Government to deal with it.

SIR ARTHUR FORWOOD (Lancashire, Ormskirk) said he must express disappointment at the tone of his right hon. Friend and at the reception he had given to this proposal. ["Hear, hear!"] He, for one, as a shipowner, was not prepared to throw the onus of responsibility as regards compensation for accidents on other employers which he was not prepared to accept himself. [Opposition cheers.] If there was one industry in the country which could have been brought without difficulty into the Bill it was the shipping industry. He took it that this Bill did not provide that a man should receive relief when incapacitated and full wages as well. He thought that if his right hon. Friend had realised the great dangers and suffering attendant on this industry he would have given the Committee a more definite assurance that, at any rate, at an early date—say, next Session—a Measure dealing with shipping would be brought in. There was nothing to be found out in regard to shipping—they had plenty of statistics. ["Hear, hear!"] At present the burden of the accidents which happened fell on those who were least able to bear it—the employés. He thought the capitalists ought to be called on to share the burden. ["Hear, hear!"] He had gone very carefully through the Blue-books to ascertain what the cost would be to owners, and he found that less than 6d. per man per week would amply provide a fund which would meet the loss of life through casualties and the inevitable accidents which happened at sea. Moreover, the shipping interest was exceedingly well organised, and all the systems of insurance were available to protect the small shipowner, who was not prepared to take these responsibilities. If there was one industry which was more thoroughly equipped to undertake this liability than another it was the shipping industry. He was bound to accept the decision of the Government, but he protested against its omission, and urged the Government, not later than next Session, to introduce a Bill dealing with merchant shipping on at least as liberal lines as were proposed in this Bill.

Mr. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) said it was very remarkable that the desire which had been expressed by two shipowners who were well known and respected in that House should be neglected. He felt certain that there would be no dissent from those views by other shipowners present. ["Hear, hear!"] The inclusion of shipping would not necessitate the extension of the Bill to other trades. If by its inclusion certain Amendments would be necessary in the schedule and elsewhere, he felt sure no appreciable time would be lost, as the Committee generally would be ready to accept them. It was true that shipowners of the class represented by his hon. Friend behind him included the élite of the shipping trade, and it was because they had brought the shipping trade to this state of perfection that they would not be involved in any large expenditure for compensation; but what the Committee had to look to was the other portion of the shipping trade, where the same care was not taken, and in connection with which the real advantage of the Bill would be felt.

Sir EDWARD HILL (Bristol, S.) said that in former years he had been a supporter of a universal system of compensation to all workmen for all accidents, and he was so still. He had drafted Amendments to the Bill of the late Home Secretary, and he was now surprised to find that right hon. and hon. Gentlemen who then gave him no assistance were now anxious to see all classes of labour included. Whatever the cost of accidents at sea might be, he thought that the cost should be borne by the shipowner, and he was prepared to vote in this direction. If, moreover, it were a question now whether or not sailors should be included in the benefits of the Bill he would be prepared to vote for it; but that was not the question. The question was whether it was desirable sailors should be brought under this Bill or under the Bill suggested by the Colonial Secretary next year, which would be more suited to the peculiarities of employment at sea. It must be manifest that there was a considerable difference in the employment at sea as compared with the employment on land. Shipowners had already adopted the principle he had indicated by forming themselves into a federation which comprised three-fourths of the tonnage owned in the country, and these shipowners had given of their own accord compensation to the sailors serving in their ships in all accidents. He wanted the Bill to pass because he believed it would be of enormous benefit to the working classes, while the burden on the employer would not be so heavy as some anticipated. Though in favour, therefore, of universal compensation, he believed that the Government had done wisely in introducing this Measure tentatively. There would be little difficulty hereafter in extending the principle of the Bill further, and especially after it had been in operation for some time. He could not support the Amendment.

Mr. J. SAMUEL (Stockton) thought that the argument of the hon. Member was very inconsistent. If the Government were to include the shipping trade it was clear from the speeches which had been made that there would be no opposition from the shipowners themselves. The Colonial Secretary urged that the Bill should be applied to the dangerous trades of the country, but statistics showed that the shipping trade was the most dangerous of any calling. Under the Factory and Workshops Act during the last ten years the loss of life had been 4,000; in mines 11,000; and at sea 22,000. The Bill might tend to reduce the loss of life and the number of accidents by causing employers to be more careful in guarding machinery, and the same observation would equally apply to the care which would be imposed upon shipowners in looking after the welfare of the seamen in their ships. He protested against the decision of the Government in excluding seamen from the provisions of the Bill.

[After the usual interval, Mr. Grant Lawson (York, N.R., Thirsk) took the Chair.]

Sir H. S. KING (Hull, Central) said he was in favour of the extension of the Bill to all seamen without exception; but, assuming that the Government persevered in their hostility to the Amendment, he hoped they would so far listen to the sweet charms of logic as to include within the operation of the Bill all persons employed on ships in port or harbour. By the next clause of the Bill protection was extended to men employed at wharves, docks, and quays; and, that being so, surely it was illogical to exclude men working on ships in port or harbour.

Mr. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.) said that as he understood the Bill it would have the effect of protecting persons who were engaged in loading or unloading a ship if that ship was drawn up by the side of a dock or quay; but, if that ship was in the centre of a dock or anchored in mid-stream and was being unloaded by a lighter, there was no such protection. That was a distinction that must arouse the opposition of London Members especially. ["Hear, hear!"] It was grossly inconsistent to protect a docker when he was loading or unloading a ship drawn up by the side of a dock or quay and to give him no protection when he was engaged in the far more dangerous occupation of unloading a vessel into a lighter.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL did not think that as the Bill now stood a ship in mid-stream would be included, but he understood his right hon. Friend the Home Secretary proposed to introduce words later on which would include a ship lying at a quay.

Mr. JOHN BURNS (Battersea) asked what would happen in the case of a vessel which was loading corn, say, by means of an elevator within 9 feet of the dock side?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said that the words to be introduced would cover the case of vessels being unloaded at the quay by machinery.

Captain NORTON (Newington, W.) asked what would happen in the case of a vessel partially unloaded in mid-stream and partially in dock?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said that it was perfectly obvious from what he had previously said that the operation in mid-stream would not be covered by the Act, but that alongside the quay would be included.

Sir H. S. KING stated that there were a hundred and one operations performed when a ship came in which, being under the supervision of the employer, ought to be covered by the Bill. If in order, he would move to amend the Amendment by adding after the word "ship" the words "while in any port or harbour of the United Kingdom."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Grant Lawson) remarked that such a proposal would be perfectly in order.

*Mr. HARRISON said the Attorney General had reminded the Committee that in the selection of trades or occupations the promoters had proceeded on the lines of including those trades or occupations in respect of which protection and insurance were the most accessible. The shipping trade, therefore, was most suitable for inclusion in the Bill, for it was a matter of almost common knowledge that ship owners had agreed upon a system of universal insurance. Why should the shipping industry be excluded? There could be no reason why the Bill should not be extended to an industry which all those interested in it were perfectly willing it should be extended to. He trusted that under the circumstances the Government would assent to the Amendment of the hon. Member for Southampton, and would not limit it, as proposed by the Amendment of the hon. Member for the Central Division of Hull.

*Mr. W. F. LAWRENCE (Liverpool, Abercromby) said that although there seemed a consensus of opinion that it would be well if they could extend the Bill to ships actually lying next to a quay, it was evident that the present Amendment could not be adopted by the House. Its terms were wide enough to include the channels of the Mersey, where collisions were not infrequent. The Government had done well in restricting the Bill to a limited number of classes of employment. It would have been very easy to earn a certain amount of popularity by enlarging the Bill, but he was glad that the Government were very carefully scrutinising every Amendment. He was perfectly prepared to approach the question of the insurance of seamen with an open mind, for he felt certain that the principle must be extended to all classes of workers systematically. For years past, however, seamen had been treated in a different category to other workmen. Why should they now be included in this experimental Measure? It must be remembered that seamen were not all of one nationality, and that of itself was a reason why they should be treated differently from other classes of workmen. He thought the Government were right in taking a firm stand. If they did think fit to include seamen strict words should be inserted providing that when a ship had started on her voyage she should not come under the purview of the Bill. During the Debate important and successful ship owners had spoken in favour of a universal system of insurance for sailors, but he did not think the House ought to consider that their evidence covered the whole shipping interest. The hon. Member for Southampton spoke of 40 years' experience free from accident. The hon. Member was a very happy man, and the Chairman of a very happy company, but there were a crowd of companies managed with as much care as the hon. Member's who had not had equal happiness and success. He did not think the gay manner in which the hon. Member proposed that this Bill should be extended as a result of his own happy experience justified the Committee in thinking that all ship owners were of the same opinion. A few years ago the hon. Member for Ormskirk told the House there was no analogy between the management of a coal mine and the navigation of a ship, and asserted that the two ought not to be dealt with in the same Bill. He thought there were sufficient grounds why they should move slowly in a measure of this kind. He believed there was so much truth in the principle that assuredly the longer it worked the more effective it would be, and that there would be no permanent objection on the part of the shipowners to be subject, in a future Act, to the principle of this Bill.

Mr. HAVELOCK WILSON (Middlesbrough) was somewhat surprised to hear the hon. Gentleman opposite, who said he represented the seamen, venturing to advise the House to reject the claim which had emanated from two shipowners of great prominence in that House. He was there to fight for the seamen having this Bill. Since 1880 they had been excluded from the protection of the Employers' Liability Act, and he felt sure, from what he knew of the sea, that, had they had that protection, hundreds, perhaps thousands of men who had met their death at sea would have been alive to-day. The hon. Gentleman opposite said there was a great difference between employment on shore and employment at sea—that the shipowner could not exercise control when the ship was at sea. That was an argument, he ventured to say, which would not hold good for a moment. The shipowner, he held, was in exactly the same position as the mine owner. So long as the captain was on board the ship representing the owner, the owner's interests were well represented equally as much as the interests of the mine owner. Perhaps more so, because of late years a system had sprung up in the shipping trade whereby no captain could get employment on a tramp steamer unless he was prepared to introduce £500 or £1,000 for the purpose. Consequently one of the part owners were on board the ship, and he knew as a matter of fact that on the bulk of the tramp steamers to-day, the engineers, captain, and officers were compelled to be shareholders before they got their command. Would any one say then, that the owners were not well represented on board these ships? The Colonial Secretary used an argument which very much surprised him. The right hon. Gentleman said that when a seaman was injured on board ship he was in an altogether different position from the man on shore, because the seaman might be injured at the commencement of a long voyage and would continue on board for three or four months, and his wages would be paid for the whole time. Where did the hardship come upon the shipowner in that case? He did not take on any fresh men. The men who were left on the ship had to do the work of that man, and consequently no hardship fell upon the shipowner through the man being laid aside. But he would point out to the Colonial Secretary that the bulk of the work was carried on in steamers, and it was seldom that more than 15 days elapsed between a steamer leaving one port and reaching another. The moment that ship arrived in port the injured seaman was put ashore and his wages ceased at once. All the shipowner was responsible for after that man was landed was the hospital expenses and his conveyance home to the United Kingdom at the rate of 3s. a day. They had been told from both sides of the House that a special protection was given to the seaman that was not given to the working man. He ventured to say that there was more protection afforded to the miner under the Coal Mines' Regulation Act and to the operative under the Factory Act than was given to the seaman under the Shipping Act. The Colonial Secretary had stated that "we have applied the principle in the first place where there are the most accidents," and that "every trade which may fairly be called dangerous is included." He found from the Board of Trade Returns for May that for one month the number of men killed on the railroads was 27; in mines, 64; in quarries, 10; and seamen, 191. These figures, taking the test of the Secretary for the Colonies, constituted the highest claim for the extension of the protection of the Bill to seamen. But if they compared these figures with the number of men employed in these several industries the result was even more startling. There were 370,000 men employed on the railroads; in mines, over 700,000; in factories and workshops, close upon 5,000,000 people were engaged, while the number engaged at sea varied from 180,000 to 200,000. If a monthly death-roll of 191 out of a total employment of 200,000 was not a strong argument in favour of this Bill being extended to seamen, he should like to know what was. Would it be a hardship to apply this Bill to shipowners? He did not think it would. An ordinary tramp steamer that was not worth more than £12,000, ac-according to present value, would be insured for £16,000 or £17,000. Therefore, if the shipowner lost that vessel he made a clear profit of £5,000. Would it be any hardship in that case to pay out of that £5,000 a little to the widows and orphans of the men who had been drowned with that vessel, whether the owner was responsible or not? Another point which ought to carry weight with the Committee was the fact that shipowners paid no poor rates. No matter if a ship was worth £100,000, he did not pay a penny of poor rate, although if they had a mine worth £100,000, the owner would probably pay from £5,000 to £10,000 a year in poor rate. There was no poorhouse in which they would not find a large number of seamen—young men, injured for life—kept there at the expense of the ratepayers, while the ships from which these men came and on which they were injured, did not pay a single farthing of poor rate. He found that every day large numbers of seamen were injured on board ship through carelessness on the part of officers. Were those officers dismissed? No, they were kept on, and no notice was taken. Why, if sailors were killed on board ship, there was no inquiry whatever. Hundreds of men were killed on board ship; the vessel arrived home, and unless one of the crew made a special report to the superintendent no notice whatever was taken. True, it was entered in the official log, which went to the Registrar General; but they had no special right to make inquiries into these accidents, and no notice was taken of them. If ever there was a body of men deserving the protection of this Bill, it was the seamen. The special protection of the Shipping Act! One hon. Member ventured to tell the House that seamen should not have the Bill, because the owners were compelled to provide medical and surgical attendance on board ship. On hearing that, one would suppose that every ship carried a doctor. As a matter of fact, the only ships which carried doctors were those carrying over 100 persons. Where did the medical attendance come in? Not one captain out of a hundred could set a limb; and if a man got a limb broken on board a sailing vessel, on a passage, he had to lie in agony two or three months, and when he was landed, probably through the neglect he had suffered, he was obliged to have it cut off. He had found a large number of unfortunate men injured on board sailing ships while on long passages, who were cripples to this day—young men many of them. Then for the medical part of the business. A lot of knowledge the captains and officers had about medicine! Why, they had only one remedy for every injury a seaman was liable to, and that was a dose of salts [Laughter.] That was absolutely safe. [Laughter.] Why he had known them give a man with a broken leg a dose of salts. [Much laughter.] And then they were told that because seamen got medical attendance they should not be included in this Bill! Then as to the funeral expenses. Well, he had not yet found the ship that carried a full-rigged undertaker on board. They did not carry mourning coaches, nor did they carry coffins to fit every man. If a sailor had the misfortune to die at sea, they stitched him up in a few yards of canvas—old canvas preferred—and they threw him overboard before his body was cold. [Cries of "Order!"] Yes, but he was answering the arguments of hon. Gentlemen who had made use of these statements about medical assistance and so on, as a reason why seamen should not have the Bill. It might not be palatable, but it was true; and when these arguments were brought up to induce the House to deny seamen the right to the protection of this Bill he was entitled to answer them. A ship owner said, "I fit my vessel out and send her away thousands of miles, and I have no control over her." He maintained that he had as much control over his ship when she was at sea as a mine owner who might be in Egypt had over his mine in this country. ["Hear, hear!"] It had been said that the Bill might be applied to seamen when in English ports. That would be simply a farce; because as soon as the ship arrived in a British port the crew were discharged within 24 hours. In fact they ceased to work as soon as the vessel was made fast alongside the dock; they were paid off at once, and all claim on the owner ceased. It would be simply a farce, therefore, to apply the Bill to the men when they were no longer connected with the ship in any way. He should be sorry if the question of the dockers and that of seamen were mixed up in this Debate. The question of the dockers was already apart from the question of seamen and ships. This Bill would apply undoubtedly to all ships lying alongside the quay or wharf in docks, but not to ships in mid-stream or to ships discharging in the centre of a dock. Now in the port of Hull, a large part of the work connected with ships was done in the centre of the dock, when the vessels were being discharged into lighters; and as the Bill stood at present it would not apply to the men so engaged. And then on the Thames there was a large amount of work carried on in mid-stream, and in that case, the work was far more dangerous than when the vessels were lying at quay, because at quay they had the use of cranes, whereas in mid-stream they used the gear of the vessel, and there was not the same supervision over a ship's gear as over the cranes on the quays. But, as he had said, he hoped they would keep the cases of the seamen and dockers apart, because the seamen had a special claim to come under the Bill. And after it had been asked for by two of the leading ship owners in the country, he could not understand the Government at all. If the ship owners had come down in a body, and opposed the Bill the same as the mine owners had done, he could have understood the position of the Government. They had the ship owners saying "Give us this Bill," but the Government said, "No, we can't; we must experiment on the mine owners, because they don't want it." That was a funny position for the Government to take—a very clear one no doubt. In the past ten days he had seen large deputations of mine owners lobbying Members of the House of Commons and asking them to oppose the Bill. They had seen nothing of the kind on the part of the ship owners. In fact, all the respectable ship owners were desirous—[laughter]—there was no mistake about it, it was perfectly true, all the respectable shipowners were in favour of the Bill being applied to seamen. It was only the managing owners who had ventured to pass a resolution or two and send up a petition—a very badly drawn petition it was—[laughter]—using arguments that would not hold water for a moment, about funeral expenses and medical expenses on board ship. He intended to press this thing to a Division and to fight it every inch of the way. He had been asking for 16 years that the seamen should be given justice by extending the Employers' Liability Act to them; and now in Her Majesty's great Jubilee year they were still to be left out. Was it because seamen had no votes? The miners could vote in a solid body and make their Members sit up. [Laughter.] But if seamen had no votes, they knew the men who had got them; and one thing was certain—they would take particular care of the Division List and would know how to talk to those gentlemen who refused them justice. [Cries of "Order, order!"]

*Colonel DENNY (Kilmarnock Burghs) said the final remark of the hon. Member for Middlesbrough reminded him of a similar remark he made to himself in private about two years ago.

Mr. HAVELOCK WILSON: That was a private conversation.

*Colonel DENNY: Let it be private, then. He would only say that, representing a constituency which included a seaport town, he would challenge the hon. Member to go down there and say what he had just said in the House.

Mr. HAVELOCK WILSON: I will go down with you next week, if you will.

*Colonel DENNY said no Member of that House would be moved by threats. There were very grave reasons why sailors should not be included in the Bill; and if the ship owners had not agitated it was because the Government had given a solemn pledge that the Bill should not be extended to shipping. [Cries of "Oh, oh!"]

Mr. HAVELOCK WILSON: Have they given a pledge? [Hon. Members: "Yes!"]

*Colonel DENNY said a pledge was given on the Second Reading; otherwise very distinct representations would have been made on behalf of the ship owners.

Sir F. EVANS: I deny that there is such a feeling. If there is such a feeling it ought to be given expression to on the floor of the House of Commons, so that we may all know it. It is no argument that the hon. Member should state that the Government have given a pledge which is entirely unknown to me or any of my friends.

*Colonel DENNY: I think I am entirely justified. The Attorney General will correct me if I am wrong in saying that the Secretary for the Colonies stated that it was not the Government's intention to apply this Bill to seamen. ["Hear, hear!"]

Sir F. EVANS: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Member. I would not do so if I had not particular reasons. [Cries of "Order, order!"]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Grant Lawson): The hon. Member ought not to make the interruption. This is the second time he has done so.

Sir F. EVANS: Solely on the question of the pledge, nothing else. [Cries of "Order, order!"]

*Colonel DENNY: The statement was made on the floor of this House by the Secretary for the Colonies—I believe I am correct—and the Home Secretary repeated it. That was a very strong reason why ship owners should not be included; but even if that were not the case, the objection to it was very strong. The ship owners' organisation was greatly opposed to this Measure. If the Government fulfilled their promise and brought in a Bill to meet the wants of the seamen, then this could be done. Let them take his own case. In their own works they were entirely responsible for the overseers whom they appointed. They were in easy reach of their places of business. But on board ship everything was provided, and every care taken that the sailor should have a safe voyage. None of these precautions prevailed ashore; they were obliged to carry out their business without any assistance from the Government. Suppose a ship went to sea and was absent for six months, it might return in an entirely different condition from that in which it started. The hon. Member for Southampton told them that £400 would cover his expenses under this Bill. He knew the hon. Member's fleet, and confirmed every word he said about it. A man who went down to the sea in such ships did not run more, perhaps not so much, risk as a man walking about the streets. ["Hear, hear!"] He hoped the hon. Member did not say that at no time could there be a loss through accident. Take the case of a railway manager stating that they had never had an accident, and the reply to that was, "Your time has not come yet." And that was true, for according to the doctrine of chance, certain accidents must happen regardless of all care. They would find two ships equally well provided, and one would come back free and the other with a very serious accident. He admitted that as to these great lines they had everything to be proud of; but the bulk of the shipping was in other and smaller hands. It was in the hands often of owners who had one or two ships only, and their responsibilities would not be met by £1, but by scores of pounds, and even hundreds. No owner outside of the House had yet made his voice heard, and when they were considering legislation of that scope they should look farther than mere individuals. After the statement made by the Colonial Secretary and repeated by the Home Secretary, that the ship owners would not be called within the scope of the Bill, he did not think it would be fair to insert this Amendment.

Mr. WALTON (Leeds, S.) said as it was almost hopeless to expect to get the Amendment carried in its present form he hoped the Government would accept it when modified. He proposed to move an Amendment to confine the Bill to all men employed upon vessels on inland waters.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Grant Lawson) said it would be inconvenient to propose another Amendment at this stage. It could be prepared later.

*Sir C. DILKE said some hon. Members seemed to think that a definite pledge had been given by the Government not to include sailors. He had listened attentively to the Debate, and he had not heard such a pledge given, and no such pledge had been given. The Government had introduced the Bill without ships in it. They had to give reasons for the form in which they introduced the Bill, and no doubt they gave the best reasons which occurred to them, which were that it had never been the practice to bring seamen under Bills of this kind.

> "there is sufficient reason, I think, for excluding them, but the Government are not indisposed to listen to arguments which may be brought forward for their inclusion."

He thought, therefore, they might dismiss from their minds any idea about a pledge. No doubt if the Committee were to include ships in the Bill, and make a considerable change the ship-owning class would have some reason for asking that there should be time given it to make its voice heard in the matter. But ships to some small and limited extent came within the Bill at the present time, because they were factories. They were included in the Bill when they were discharging or receiving cargo from the dock by means of machinery. They were factories when discharging in a dock, but not when discharging into lighters, and in the latter case the Act did not apply. So that compensation would apply in the case of machinery used on board the ships for discharging in the dock if a man was injured in that process, but if he was injured during a corresponding process by the same machinery when discharging into a lighter lying on the other side he would not receive compensation under the Bill. The Government made a plausible defence on the Second Reading for resisting an Amendment of this kind stating that shipping had never been included in factory legislation with the exception he had indicated, and that ships ought to be dealt with by a separate Bill. He should be perfectly prepared to accept that view so put forward on behalf of the Government, if they had any certain or firm belief that the Government were going to deal with the matter by means of a separate Bill. But when they asked some questions with regard to the introduction of the Bill this year, or next even, they were put off and told that at some very distant date the thing might be done. In other words, he thought that by some future Government it might be done, rather than by the present administration. While he, for one, should be inclined to listen to anything the Government had to say as a reason for dealing with the matter in a separate Bill, he could not accept that as a reason for not supporting this excellent Amendment, when they had nothing approaching a definite pledge as to dealing with the matter. The fact was the Government were afraid of the ship owners. Some of their Members having burned their fingers on former occasions when dealing with the shipping trade they were perhaps a little afraid of including them in this Bill. The Government feared to introduce the shipping trade on the first introduction of the Bill because that might have overweighted the Bill and produced a pressure of opinion against it in that House. Would the Government mind so much if the Committee themselves were to take the bull by the horns and introduce shipping into the Bill? He doubted it. He did not believe that the Government would object to having this Amendment forced upon them by the feeling of the House itself. Shipping was one of those industries which ought to come into this Bill, considered as an experimental Measure. Those reasons which had been advanced for the exclusion of the agricultural labourers from the Bill were the very reasons which called for the inclusion of seamen. The shipping industry was a great and wealthy industry where, in the main, the employers were persons or companies more substantial than the average employers in other trades, and above all they had the practice of insurance always present to them. Every company engaged in the shipping industry was constantly in the habit of insuring. They were including in the Bill all sorts of industries which were not dangerous. They were told that the object of the Government was to include those industries in which the most accidents occurred. Here was one in which most accidents occurred, yet in the case of this great industry which came so thoroughly within the provisions of a tentative Bill, the matter was excluded. The only reason could be that the Government must have shrank originally from including this great industry in the Bill for fear of the opposition which the Measure might be exposed to on that account. But the Government could not mind if the Committee were to force this view upon them, and the Government having given no sort of pledge to deal with the matter themselves in the course of the next year or two by a separate Bill, hon. Members, in the absence of such a pledge, were bound to support the proposal which had been made.

Sir DONALD CURRIE (Perthshire,W.) was in favour of the Amendment to the Amendment which would apply the Bill to vessels in a port whether in mid-stream or otherwise. He must not be supposed for one moment to be objecting to the inclusion of sailors in the benefits of compensation — ["hear, hear!"] — but he thought they should not be included in this Bill. A special Bill was really required, and that Bill should be brought in as speedily as possible, and he should be glad to support it with all his power. The Government had the responsibility for this Bill, and they suggested that it would be endangered if other trades were included. Upon them must be the responsibility. He wished to do nothing to hinder the passage of this Bill, and he thought there was sufficient danger before it to make hon. Members careful not to hamper its progress in any way with additional complications. His hon. Friend the Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. J. H. Wilson) spoke of a case in which a hatch was left off by the fault of the officers, and said that if a man was injured in consequence he would be all right if he came within the scope of this Bill. But he submitted that if it was the fault of the officers, the owner was already liable. He ventured to hope the House would adopt the Amendment to the Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) said that if the House was really desirous of carrying out this Amendment, it appeared to him that this and not next year was the most suitable time. ["Hear, hear!"] He quite admitted that if the shipping trade was included certain Amendments would have to be carried out, but on his side of the House no undue delay would arise on those Amendments, and if the Government were prepared to accept this proposal he could assure right hon. Gentlemen opposite that those on his side of the House would accept the necessary Amendments with the greatest possible alacrity. He would suggest to his hon. Friend the Member for Hull that he should allow the Committee to have a clear issue and a clear vote on this matter. ["Hear, hear!"] His hon. Friend proposed that this proposal should only apply to ships in any port or harbour in the United Kingdm. He understood that his hon. Friend himself was in favour of the application of the Bill to sailors generally, and he would appeal to him not to press his Amendment so that the Committee might have a clean vote with regard to the inclusion of sailors. They could afterwards discuss how far the Factory Act of 1895 or this Bill ought to apply to ships in dock or in mid-stream. He could only express his regret that the Government had not seen their way to accept an Amendment which had been pressed on them by the most representative of the employers as well as by those who represented the men themselves. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR THOMAS SUTHERLAND (Greenock) wished to say a few words from the ship owners' point of view. With regard to the application of the existing law to accidents which happened on ships in port, whether discharging on to the quay or into lighters alongside, he believed that if an accident arose from some blunder committed on board the ship, the injured man could bring an action against the owner; and such actions had often been successful. But that was, perhaps, a not very material point with regard to the question now before the Committee. In this matter he stood simply on the evidence given before the Select Committee of 1886 on the Employers' Liability Act of which he had the honour to be a member. The whole of this question was thoroughly investigated, and as far as he recollected the members of the Committee agreed to a recommendation, without a dissentient voice, that shipping should not be included in the operation of the new Act except to the extent of making owners responsible when their ships are in port and under their control. That was a recomendation he was sure every ship owner would readily endorse. The hon. Member for Hull was under a slight misapprehension as to the accidents occurring to seamen as seamen. There were comparatively few seamen on board ship in port, and the accidents which occurred there were to stevedores, dockers, and labourers, who had full opportunity of bringing an action. Conditions applicable to great steamship companies were not, and ought not to be, any criterion of the conditions which would apply to owners of sailing vessels, and especially coasting vessels. Although in magnitude of tonnage and the distances they travelled steam vessels outnumbered sailing vessels by 50 to 1, the loss of life in sailing vessels was fully half the total loss of life in the mercantile marine. So if the Amendment were brought into operation and ships of all kinds were put under it, it would be one more nail in the coffin of the sailing ship and coasting vessel interest, and our supply of British seamen would be hindered by the loss of coasting vessels more than by anything else. Therefore this was not a question for rich companies such as the hon. Member for Southampton represented, or for poor companies such as he himself represented. [Laughter.] We had better follow the example of the Germans one step further and leave alone what they had left alone—compulsory insurance on the part of German shipping. There was no one behind the scenes in connection with this subject who was not fully aware that one of the dangers of the future would be German competition. He did not pretend to be a philanthropist like the hon. Member for Southampton and others beside him. He stood on the evidence given before a Committee of the House, which evidence had never been superseded, to which the hon. Member for Middlesbrough contributed in a marked degree and in the fairest manner by absolving ship owners from any responsibility in cases where it was impossible for them to exercise any practical control.

SIR H. S. KING said he recognised the extreme difficulties of bringing this matter to a practical issue, but after the discussion that had taken place he asked leave to withdraw the Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

SIR FRANCIS EVANS commented on the careless manner in which the opponents of the Bill had arrayed their forces against it. His hon. Friend the Member for Greenock, relying upon some calculations made 11 years ago in connection with a Bill which, of course, was not before the House, said that he was not prepared to change his opinion now. The hon. Member, in fact, said, "I won't play." That was a nice way of disposing of a question which concerned the interests of the seamen of our mercantile marine. The right hon. Member for the Ormskirk Division had spoken in favour of his Amendment, but said that a special Bill was to be brought in and that, therefore, the Amendment need not be pressed. The right hon. Gentleman "would not play." Next came the hon. and gallant Member for South Bristol, who said that the Amendment was reasonable, but who also, like the right hon. Member for Ormskirk, "would not play." The same attitude had been taken up by other Members. Where then was he to look for support on behalf of men who, hon. Members knew in their hearts, ought to have the benefit of the Bill? Hon. Members expressed themselves in favour of his proposal, and yet would not vote for it. The way in which his Amendment had been met did not reflect great credit upon the ship owners and their representatives. [Sir A. Forwood: "I never said I would not vote for the Amendment!"] He hoped that he might understand from that that the right hon. Baronet was going to vote for the Amendment. As he had previously said, the difference as regards insurance between liners and other vessels was the difference between 6d. and 1s. That was proved by their 20 years' experience of insurance in Protection clubs.

*Mr. WARR (Liverpool, East Toxteth) said nothing had shown the rapid advance of public opinion in England more than the reception, he might say the welcome, which the proposals involved in this Measure, rightly called a revolutionary Measure, had received at the hands of employers of labour. That this should be so was to the infinite credit of employers. When one set of employers—ship owners—were definitely opposed to the Measure so far as their trade was concerned, it was not unreasonable to suppose that there were at all events some reasonable grounds upon which their views were based. In Liverpool the Steam Ship Owners' Association had expressed total disapproval of the inclusion of the shipping industry within the scope of the Bill, and so had the Sailing Ship Owners' Association. So also had the Shipowners' Parliamentary Committee, representing nine-tenths of the ship owning interest of this country. He believed that the hon. Member for Southampton and the right hon. Member for the Ormskirk Division of Lancashire were probably the only two ship owners who would support the inclusion of ships in this particular Bill. He pointed out the fundamental difference which existed between the risk in land and sea employment. In truth, there was very little in common between the two employments. In the one the trade was regulated by a code of shipping involving no less than 748 sections, to which two more sections had been added this Session. This code provided for the health and accommodation of seamen, and for their expenses during illness. But wholly apart from considerations of this kind, the conditions of the employment of seamen were totally distinct from the conditions of the employment of men ashore. It was impossible for a ship owner to select the men he employed in the same way as an employer on land; when once the men were shipped, and the ship gone to sea, the ship was beyond the control of the ship owner until she arrived at the next port. Then the risks and the consequences of accident were different. The two things could not be compared; there was no analogy between them. The law, not only in England, but abroad, recognised the difference which existed. On these and many other grounds he held that there was no ground for the inclusion of shipping in this Bill. He did not wish to say that there was not room for the improvement of the law as far as seamen were concerned, but they ought to be dealt with separately. He pointed out that the burden of insurance was especially heavy on ship owners, and if the proposed liability were added to their other liabilities, the burden on this industry would be out of all proportion to that on trades ashore.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) said he was very unwilling to press the Committee in regard to this Bill, but he had abstained from moving the abolition of the Twelve o'clock Rule because he was told that it would force Debate and be rather inconvenient to the majority of Members. He did not desire to curtail the Debate, and he recognised the great importance of the subject they were discussing, but he thought it would be to the general convenience if, when an argument had been thoroughly developed on both sides of the House, a decision were come to. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON said the seamen's case was a very hard one, and he must ask the indulgence of Members on that occasion. He would point out, in answer to the hon. Member for Greenock, with reference to the Committee of Inquiry, that at the time it was held the seamen were practically unorganised; they had no unions, while the ship owners had a very strong organisation, and were strongly represented on the Committee. He believed that he was the only seaman who gave evidence before that Committee; the other witnesses were shipowners; and naturally the weight of evidence was on the ship owners' side. The hon. Member for Kilmarnock Burghs had argued that it was a hardship on the ship owner if a captain died, and another captain was appointed abroad, but it would be equally hard on the seamen, who would have no voice whatever in regard to the second captain. They had not had one solid argument against seamen being included in this Bill, and the arguments which had been brought forward might be applied with equal force to the case of the mine owners. He appealed to hon. Members on behalf of the widows and orphans left in our seaport towns to include seamen in this Bill.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB (Great Yarmouth) said he would like to say a few words on behalf of the small owners. If the Amendment were included, he understood that every fishing smack all round the coast would be included. He pointed out that in his constituency men of energy and endurance who saved money invested their savings in buying a smack. They thus became owners, and as the vessel represented all the property they possessed, not only was the best possible care taken of the vessels, but there was the strongest inducement on their part to prevent the loss of life as well as the occurrence of accident. If the Amendment was adopted, however, the Committee would extinguish the small owners of fishing and coasting vessels, while prospects of compensation would be fictitious in case of loss, for all the owners' property might be at the bottom of the sea.

MR. BURNS desired to appeal to the First Lord of the Treasury to release his supporters from Party allegiance in recording their votes on the inclusion or exclusion of seamen. If the right hon. Gentleman gave this permission, he was convinced, after the arguments which had been brought forward, that seamen would be included in the Bill. The Colonial Secretary and the Home Secretary had resisted the extension of the Bill on the ground that, if it were extended, the Measure might be defeated and ultimately abandoned. There was no fear of this result as to the inclusion of seamen, because eloquent and powerful speeches had been delivered in favour of the seamen being included from the largest and best ship owners on both sides of the House. He trusted that the Committee would not be influenced by the speech and the unintentional misstatements of the hon. Member for Greenock, who was apprehensive as to the effect of the Bill on English ships competing with foreign ships. The Government had supplied hon. Members with a return as to the liability of ship owners in foreign countries, and our chief competitors, Sweden and Norway, France, Denmark, and Germany, already incurred the cost of employers' liability. He therefore appealed to the right hon. Gentleman to allow the lion and the lamb to associate together in dealing with this Amendment in the Division Lobby. [Laughter.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I do not know which is the lion and which is the lamb—[laughter]—nor have I any power to dictate into which Lobby either the lion or the lamb shall go. But I cannot recede, even in response to the sympathetic appeal of the hon. Gentleman, from the attitude taken up by my colleagues on this Bench—that in the opinion of the Government it would be in the highest degree inexpedient to overload this Bill at this time, or possibly this Bill at any time, with clauses which would introduce seamen within its purview. That the case of seamen has to be dealt with we all admit—[Opposition cheers]—whether it shall be by a simple extension of this Bill or by a separate Bill remains for future consideration. But at this moment, and in the Committee stage of this Bill, I must emphatically repeat that we do not think it would be desirable in the interests of this Bill that the Amendment should be accepted. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON asked if the right hon. Gentleman would give a pledge to bring in a Bill this year to extend the Employers' Liability Act of 1880 to seamen, or, failing that, next year?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I am very reluctant to mortgage a property over which I have no control —that is, the time of the House—in regard to future legislation. We are already rather deeply pledged in regard to that.

MR. HAVELOCK WILSON suggested that a very short Bill of two or three words was all that would be required.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I think I must ask hon. Gentlemen to be content with the emphatic assurances given them by my right hon. Friends the Home Secretary and the Colonial Secretary and by myself. [Cheers.]

Question put, "That the word 'ship' be there inserted."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 117; Noes, 209.—(Division List, No. 227.)

*SIR CHARLES DILKE moved in Sub-section (1) after the word "quarry," to insert the word "lift," in order to extend the benefits of the Bill to persons in charge of lifts.

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said that as lifts in private houses were worked by domestic servants, the adoption of the Amendment would lead to complications; and as, besides, it only affected a very small class, he hoped the right hon. Gentleman would not press it.

MR. McKENNA said there were very few lifts even in private houes worked by domestic servants. The lifts to which the Amendment would mainly apply were lifts in hotels and other large buildings.

Amendment negatived.

*MR. CHARLES HARRISON (Plymouth) moved, in Sub-section (1), after the word "quarry," to insert the word "tramway," in order to include tramways within the operation of the Bill. As it was probable that in a short time all tramways would be worked by mechanical power, there was no reason why they should be excluded while railways were included in the Bill.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said it was clear this Amendment could not be inserted here, but possibly it might save discussion if he said that the Government proposed to take the definition in the Regulation of Railways Act 1873, not that in the Act of 1871. Certainly they would take care that the words of the Bill were sufficiently wide to include tramways connected with mines and light railways. They did not, however, intend to include the ordinary street tramways.

CAPTAIN NORTON pointed out that the difference between a tramway and a light railway was not so great as the Attorney General supposed, and that if tramway men were included in the Bill the inclusion would be very small—according to the last census about 7,000. As compared with railway workers, who numbered 200,000, the responsibility cast upon tramway men was very great. The tramways carried something like 600,000,000 passengers per year, while the railways did not carry more than 900,000,000, excluding season-ticket holders. Therefore, each tramway employé was responsible for a much larger number of passengers in proportion—for 15 times as many, in fact—as the railway man. He frequently used the tramways in his constituency—[ironical cheers]—and he really believed that the driver of a tramcar had a much greater responsibility cast upon him than the driver of a mail train. [Cries of "Oh!"] He appealed to the Government to extend the benefits of the Bill to the 7,000 tramway men.

Question put, "That the word 'tramway' be there inserted."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 99; Noes, 195.—(Division List, No. 228.)

MR. BROADHURST moved in Sub-section (1), after the word "employment," to insert the words:—

> "in any place where material is being prepared for building work, or where any building is in course of construction."

It would be seen that his object in moving this Amendment had special reference to the building trade. His intention was to meet the case of stone-yards mostly. All up the Thames riverside there were large wharves where stone was landed from ships, and prepared by masons, to be carted to all parts of London for use in the erection of buildings. Scarcely any of these wharves had any machinery except hand jennies and hand travellers. There were a great number of men employed, but there was no machinery to include them in the Bill, and he thought it would harmonise with the intention of the Government if these works were included. The same argument would apply in a large measure to the joinery and carpentry trades, in which large timber roofs were often prepared at a considerable distance from the site where they were to be used in building. They had had considerable discussion at several stages with regard to the inclusion of the building trade, and he did not propose to continue his argument any further that night than to ask the Government whether they had considered the case of these stone wharves, and places connected with the joinery trade? If not, there could be no doubt that a large number of men whom it was intended to benefit would be excluded under the definition of the Bill unless some such words as he had moved were accepted.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said he was afraid the words moved by the hon. Gentleman opposite were rather too wide. The Government had been considering the question of extending the operation of the Bill further in regard to the building trade, and he proposed to accept the words of the Amendment placed on the Paper by the right hon. Member for the Forest of Dean with any addition that might be required. The right hon. Gentleman then read the terms of his Amendment as follows: After the words "engineering work," to insert the words:—

"and to employment on, in, or about any building exceeding thirty feet in height which is being constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding, or on which machinery driven by steam, water, or other mechanical power is being used for the purpose of the construction or repair thereof."

MR. BROADHURST thought that this was a very considerable concession, and though it did not give him all he wanted, he should accept it.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I will put it on the Paper to-morrow.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

*MR. J. A. PEASE moved, in Subsection (1), after the words "about a," to insert the word "shipyard." He understood it was the intention of the Government that shipyards should be included within the provisions of the Bill; and he, therefore, in moving the Amendment, moved it in order to point out how the intention would not be carried into effect, unless some additional words were inserted. The 93rd Clause of the Act of 1878 indicated that those industries named in the second part of Schedule 4 of the Bill were "workshops," but he was advised that a shipyard would be included in the word "factory" so long as the work was done within the precincts of a yard where steam, water, or mechanical power was used to drive machinery. But a good deal of rivetting might be done outside a factory or workshop, such, as for instance, in the erection of a gasometer, or repairing ships outside a shipyard. He thought the Government ought to let them understand what was intended to be included in the Bill. He would give one or two cases. If a ship was in mid-stream, would the men at work upon her be included in the provisions of the Bill? He thought not, and he contended that there should be provisions introduced to meet that case.

THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS called attention to the fact that the Amendment was "shipyards," not ships in mid-stream.

*MR. J. A. PEASE submitted that as the word "shipbuilding yard" in the Act of 1878 included other work, he was in order in raising this question. It was perfectly absurd that any distinction should be made between men, all in the same employ, at work in the yard or in the dock, and those at work on repairs on a ship in mid-stream—the one to be compensated and the other not. They should all be included, for all the conditions of labour were very dangerous, and shipyard accidents were 16 times more numerous than those on railways.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said this matter was already dealt with in the Bill, and he could not accept the Amendment, which was not necessary.

MR. ABEL THOMAS rose and proceeded to speak on the Amendment, when,

It being midnight, the Chairman left the Chair to make his Report to the House.

Committee report Progress; to sit again To-morrow.

PUBLIC OFFICES (WHITEHALL) SITE (RECOMMITTED) BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

PATENT OFFICE EXTENSION (RECOMMITTED) BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

MERCHANT SHIPPING (UNDERMANNING) BILL.

Read the Third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE (SITES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

SUPPLY [28TH MAY].

Resolutions reported.

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES, 1897-8.

CLASS I.

1. "That a sum, not exceeding £132,291, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for the Survey of the United Kingdom, and for minor services connected therewith."

2. "That a sum, not exceeding £24,037 (including an additional sum of £11,950), be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for the maintaining certain Harbours, Lighthouses, &c., under the Board of Trade."

3. "That a sum, not exceeding £18,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for constructing a new Harbour of Refuge at Peterhead."

4. "That a sum, not exceeding £189,367, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for rates and contributions in lieu of rates, &c., in respect of Government property, and for rates on houses occupied by representatives of Foreign Powers, and for the salaries and expenses of the rating of Government property Department, and for a contribution towards the expenses of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade."

CLASS II.

5. "That a sum, not exceeding £19,576, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for the salaries and expenses in the Offices of the House of Commons."

6. "That a sum, not exceeding £132,859, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for the salaries and expenses of the Office of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Subordinate Departments."

7. "That a sum, not exceeding £29,215, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for a grant in aid of the Mercantile Marine Fund."

8. "That a sum, not exceeding £8, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for meeting the deficiency of income from fees, &c., for the requirements of the Board of Trade, under the Bankruptcy Acts 1883 and 1890, and the 'Companies (Winding-up) Act 1890.'"

9. "That a sum, not exceeding £34,291, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898, for the salaries and expenses of the Board of Agriculture, and to defray the repayable expenses to be incurred in matters of Inclosure and Land Improvements, and to pay certain grants in aid."

Resolutions Read a Second time.

First five Resolutions agreed to.

Sixth Resolution postponed.

Subsequent Resolutions agreed to.

Postponed Resolution to be considered upon Monday 21st June.

METROPOLITAN WATER COMPANIES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

DANGEROUS PERFORMANCES BILL.

Read a Second time, and committed for Thursday.

LAW OF EVIDENCE (CRIMINAL CASES) BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

LAND TRANSFER BILL [H.L.].

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (METRIC SYSTEM) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

EXTRAORDINARY TITHE BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

BERRIEW SCHOOOL BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Third Reading [24th May] further adjourned till Thursday.

PRISONS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

POLICE (PROPERTY) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

POST OFFICE CONSOLIDATION BILL [H.L.].

Committee deferred till Monday 28th June.

POOR LAW BILL.

Second Reading deferred till to-morrow.

FINANCE BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

FOREIGN PRISON-MADE GOODS BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, etc., [17th May] further adjourned till Thursday.

SCHOOL BOARDS' EXPENSES BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

BICYCLES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (ALDERSHOT AND FARNBOROUGH) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [1st April] further adjourned till Thursday.

BURIAL GROUNDS LOANS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [11th May] further adjourned till Thursday.

ISLE OF MAN (CHURCH BUILDING ACTS) BILL [H.L.].

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES' JURISDICTION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

SUPPLY.

Committee deferred till Wednesday.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till Wednesday.

SALMON FISHERIES (IRELAND) ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 28th June.

SALMON FISHERIES (IRELAND) ACTS AMENDMENT (No. 2) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 28th June.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS (IRELAND) BILL.

Committee deferred till To-morrow.

FISHERIES (IRELAND) ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 28th June.

RESTRAINT OF EVICTIONS (LONDON) BILL.

Considered in Committee.

Clause 1. Committee report progress; to sit again upon Thursday.

CONGESTED DISTRICTS BOARD (IRELAND) (COMPULSORY PURCHASE POWERS) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (IRELAND) ACT (1877) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

LICENSING (SCOTLAND) ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Select Committee [24th March] further adjourned till Wednesday.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT (1880) AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday 17th June.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for committal to Standing Committee on Trade, Etc. [17th February] further adjourned till To-morrow.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1888) AMENDMENT (No. 2) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1888) AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

VEHICLES (LIGHTS) BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

ARCHDEACONRY OF LONDON (ADDITIONAL ENDOWMENTS) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [24th February] further adjourned till To-morrow.

COTTON CLOTH AND OTHER FACTORIES BILL.

Read a Second time and committed for Friday 20th August.

POLICE APPOINTMENT AND PROMOTION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday.

LABOUR BUREAUX BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LONDON WATER COMPANIES AMALGAMATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 28th June.

VERMINOUS PERSONS BILL.

As amended, considered; to be read the Third time To-morrow.

House adjourned at a Quarter after Twelve o'Clock.

INDEX

TO

THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

(AUTHORISED EDITION).

VOLUME XLIX. FOURTH SERIES.

FIFTH VOLUME OF SESSION 1897.

EXPLANATION OF ABBREVIATIONS.

Bills Read 1ª, 1°, 2ª, 2°, 3ª, 3°. Read the First, Second, or Third Time.
1R., 2R., 3R. Speech delivered on First, Second, or Third Reading.
Adj. Adjourned.
A. Answer.
c. Commons.
Com. Committee.
com. Committed.
Intro. Introduction.
l. Lords.
Obj. Objections.
Obs. Observations.
Pres. Presented.
Q. Question.
Rep. Reported.
R.P. Report Progress.
Reso. Resolutions.

The Subjects of Debate, as far as possible, are classified under General Headings, e.g. :—

AFRICA
AGRICULTURE, BOARD OF
ARMY
CIVIL SERVICE
COLONIES
CUSTOMS, EXCISE, AND INLAND REVENUE
EDUCATION DEPARTMENT
FOREIGN OFFICE
HOME DEPARTMENT
INDIA
IRELAND
LABOUR QUESTIONS
LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE
LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD
MERCHANT SHIPPING
MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS
METROPOLIS
NAVY
PARLIAMENT
POST OFFICE
RAILWAYS
SCOTLAND
SUPPLY
TRADE, BOARD OF WALES
WAYS AND MEANS

ABRAHAM, MR. WILLIAM, Glamorgan, Rhondda
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1285

Accidents
Colliery, Polesworth, Q. Sir B. W. Foster ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1255
Lead Poisoning, Q. Mr. R. McKenna ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 24, 1134
Mining, Durham, Q. Mr. C. Fenwick : A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 7, 18
Romford Railway Station, Fatal, Q. Mr. L. Sinclair ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 10, 113
Seamen, Mercantile Marine, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 731
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill (see that Title)

ACLAND, Right Hon. A. H. DYKE, Yorkshire, W.R., Rotherham
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 123, 126, 151, 152 ; 3R. May 20, 950
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 27, 1463

ACLAND-HOOD, Captain Sir A. F., Bart., Somerset, Wellington
Army, Small Arms Ammunition May 13, 360
Brigade of Guards May 13, 362, 363
Supply : War Office Vote May 14, 512

ADMIRALTY
First Lord—Mr. G. J. GOSCHEN
Secretary—Mr. W. G. E. MACARTNEY
Civil Lord—Mr. J. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN
(See NAVY)

AFRICA

British East Africa Protectorate, Fugitive Slaves, Qs. Sir J. H. Kennaway, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Curzon May 28, 1516
Cape Garrison, Q. Mr. Swift MacNeill; A. Mr. Brodrick May 11, 200. Qs. Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. Arnold-Forster, Mr. Swift MacNeill; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Brodrick May 14, 492. Q. Major Rasch; A. Mr. Brodrick May 25, 1260
Congo State, Qs. Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Curzon May 11, 193; May 18, 720
Delagoa Bay, Arbitration Award, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Mr. Curzon May 28, 1520
Fugitive Slaves
  British East Africa Protectorate, Qs. Sir J. H. Kennaway, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Curzon May 28, 1516
  Zanzibar, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1025
Jameson Raid, Transvaal, Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 8
Kassala, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Curzon May 20, 915
Liquor Traffic, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Curzon May 31, 1608
Mashonaland, Qs. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Mr. J. Morley; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 31, 1626
Matabeleland and Mashonaland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 385
Red Sea, Lighting, Q. Sir E. S. Hill; A. Mr. Ritchie May 10, 99
Royal Niger Company, Q. Lord Stanmore; [Obs. Earl of Kimberley;] A. Marquess of Salisbury May 24, 1109
Slavery in Zanzibar, Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Curzon May 14, 506
Transvaal
  Immigration Law, Q. Mr. Sydney Buxton; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 17
  Jameson Raid, Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 8
Uganda Railway, Q. Mr. R. W. Perks; A. Mr. Curzon May 27, 1430
Zanzibar
  British Officers, Appointment of, Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Curzon May 28, 1516
  Fugitive Slaves, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1025
  Slavery in, Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Curzon May 14, 506

Agriculture and Industries (Ireland) Bill

c. Withdrawn May 24, 1213

AGRICULTURE, BOARD OF

President—Mr. Walter H. Long

Agricultural Holdings Act, Qs. Mr. G. Lambert; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 24, 1148
Agricultural Rating Act (Ireland), Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1024. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1142

[cont

AGRICULTURE, BOARD OF—cont.

Agriculture and Industries (Ireland) Bill, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 501
Cattle
  American, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese, Mr. G. W. Wolff; As. Mr. W. Long May 28, 1511
  Food, Imported, Q. Mr. C. T. Giles; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 31, 1631
  Trade, Argentine, Q. Sir J. Kinloch; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1131
  Weighing, Scotland, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. W. Long May 13, 367
Dog Muzzling, Q. Mr. J. W. Logan; A. Mr. W. Long May 20, 931
Estates
  Annaly, Longford, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1507
  Kerry, Receivers, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1024
  Littledale (Wicklow), Eviction, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 192. Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1613
  Return, Ireland, Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 13, 384
  Shirley and Tennison (Monaghan), Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1147
Glebe Act (Ireland), Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1146
Land
  Commission, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 12. Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 192. Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 620. Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 925. Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Captain Donelan, Mr. J. Gilhooly; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1603
  Commissioners, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 13, 364
  Legislation, Ireland (see that Title)
  Rating, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. T. Lough, Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 20, 936
  Sub-Commissions, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. S. Young; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 363. Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 509. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1265
  Valuation, Ireland, Qs. Viscount Clifden, Earl Spencer; As. Earl of Denbigh May 13, 338
Land Law (Ireland) Act 1887, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1265
Land Law (Ireland) Acts, Q. Viscount Templetown; [Obs. Earl of Mayo;] A. Earl of Denbigh May 20, 896
Land Law (Ireland) Acts, Royal Commission, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 24, 1148
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill (see that Title)
Ordnance Survey, Mayo, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 389. Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. W. Long May 17, 626

[cont.

AGRICULTURE, BOARD OF—cont.
  Potato Crops
    Ireland, Qs. Mr. P. McDermott, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 504
    Listowel, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1512
  Seed Potatoes Supply (Ireland) Act 1895, Qs. Mr. J. Hammond; As. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 503
  Shorthorn Bulls, Ireland, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1146
  Veterinary College, Dublin, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 386
  Weighing of Cattle, Scotland, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. W. Long May 13, 367

AIRD, Mr. JOHN, Paddington, N.
  Paris Fire, Safety of Public Buildings May 10, 95, 96
  Queen's Reign
    Jubilee Procession May 28, 1507
    Metropolitan Police May 21, 1029
    Naval Review May 28, 1508
    Public Statues May 21, 1029

AKERS-DOUGLAS, RIGHT HON. A. (First Commissioner of Works, Parks, and Public Buildings), Kent, St. Augustine
  Government Offices, Site May 14, 495
  Hyde Park
    Cycling in May 10, 94
    Footpaths May 24, 1131
  Magnetic Observatory, Greenwich May 28, 1520
  Queen's Reign
    Cycle Demonstration May 20, 914
    Illuminations May 18, 725
    Jubilee Procession May 7, 9; May 10, 94; May 14, 495; May 20, 913, 914; May 24, 1127; May 25, 1262; May 28, 1507; May 31, 1615
    Public Statues May 21, 1029
    Route of Procession May 13, 376
  South Kensington Museum May 31, 1614
  Westminster Hall May 14, 506

ALLAN, Mr. W., Gateshead
  Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 443
  War Risks, British Ships May 11, 199

AMBROSE, Dr. R., Mayo, W.
  Addergoole and Ballynagoraher District, Castlebar Union May 24, 1146
  Supply: £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1089

AMBROSE, MR. W. (Attorney General for the Duchy of Lancaster), Middlesex, Harrow
  Incorporated Law Society, Judicial Duties, Expense May 11, 246
  Post Office Consolidation Bill, 2R. May 11, 227

America
  Argentine Cattle Trade, Q. Sir J. Kinloch; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1131
  British Zukon Chartered Company, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 31, 1631
  Canadian
    Fast Atlantic Service, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 25, 1267
    Mail Service, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 31, 1619.
  Cattle, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese, Mr. G. W. Wolff; As. Mr. W. Long May 28, 1511
  Dingley Tariff Bill (United States), Q. Major Jameson; A. Mr. Curzon May 25, 1268
  Manitoba
    Colonisation Board, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 25, 1261
    Crofters' Settlements, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 18, 730

ANCASTER, EARL OF (Lord Great Chamberlain)
  Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 7, 2

ANSTRUTHER, MR. H. T. (Lord of the Treasury), St. Andrews District
  Manitoba
    Colonisation Board May 25, 1261
    Crofters' Settlement May 18, 730
  Port Ness Harbour, Lewis May 11, 197
  Queen's Reign, Poor Laws May 28, 1509

Appeal in Certain Civil Matters (Ireland) Bill
  c. In Com., Mr. M. Healy, (Amendt.) 235, 236; Mr. J. Atkinson, 235, 236; (Amendt. Agreed to, 235); [Chairman, 236, 237] May 11
    Rep. as Amended May 11, 237
    Considered as Amended May 13, 449
    Read 3^{o} and Passed May 17, 713
  l. Read 1^{a} May 18, 718
    Read 2^{a} and com. to Com. of Whole House May 21, 1017
    In Com., Rep. without Amendt.; Standing Com. negatived May 24, 1114
    Read 3^{a} and Passed May 25, 1241

Archdeaconry of Cornwall Bill
  l. Read 2^{a} and com. to Com. of Whole House May 7, 1
    In Com., Rep. without Amendt.; Standing Com. negatived May 13, 327
    Read 3^{a} and Passed May 14, 466

Armenia
  Massacre, Tokat, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1036; May 25, 1257

ARMY

Secretary of State—Marquess of LANSDOWNE
Under Secretary of State—Mr. BRODRICK
Financial Secretary—Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS

- Aldershot Camp, Sewage Farm, Q. Sir B. W. Foster; A. Mr. Brodrick May 11, 196
- Ammunition, Small Arms, Q. Sir A. F. Acland-Hood; A. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 360
- Artillery
  - Practice, Solent, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Brodrick May 10, 110
  - Royal Horse, Q. Mr. A. M. Brookfield; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 31, 1607
- Battalions Abroad, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Brodrick May 25, 1254
- Black Watch Regiment, Subathu, Q. Colonel Wyndham Murray; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 25, 1251
- Brigade of Guards
  - Medical Department, Q. Dr. Farquharson; A. Mr. Brodrick May 17, 617
  - Recruits, Qs. Sir A. F. Acland-Hood, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 362
- Cape Garrison, Q. Mr. Swift MacNeill; A. Mr. Brodrick May 11, 200. Qs. Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. Arnold-Forster, Mr. Swift MacNeill; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Brodrick May 14, 492. Q. Major Rasch; A. Mr. Brodrick May 25, 1260
- Cavalry
  - Recruiting Standard, Q. General Russell; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 27, 1417
  - Recruits, Q. Mr. J. H. C. Hozier; A. Mr. Brodrick May 24, 1132
- Chitral Medal, Q. Mr. T. R. Buchanan; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 17, 629
- Crimean Veterans
  - Brennan (John), Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 31, 1632
  - Indian and, Queen's Reign, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 27, 1413
  - Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 28, 1510
- Food and Forage Supplies, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Powell-Williams May 31, 1625
- Garrison, Cape, Q. Mr. Swift MacNeill; A. Mr. Brodrick May 11, 200. Qs. Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. Arnold-Forster, Mr. Swift MacNeill; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Brodrick May 14, 492. Q. Major Rasch; A. Mr. Brodrick May 25, 1260
- Guards, Brigade of
  - Medical Department, Q. Dr. Farquharson; A. Mr. Brodrick May 17, 617
  - Recruits, Qs. Sir A. F. Acland-Hood, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 362
- Horses, Qs. Mr. J. F. Hogan, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Brodrick May 10, 104. Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Sir H. Vincent; As. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 364
- Hospitals, Lock, Qs. Mr. A. F. Jeffreys; As. Mr. Brodrick May 18, 719
- Indian Staff
  - Appointments, Q. Captain Pirie; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 27, 1428
  - Corps, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 27, 1421

[cont.

ARMY—cont.

- Indian Staff—cont.
  - Officers, Qs. Colonel Wyndham Murray, Captain Pirie; As. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1619
- Judge Advocate General's Department, Qs. Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. J. W. Mellor; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 31, 1635
- Linked Battalion System, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Brodrick May 10, 96
- Lock Hospitals, Qs. Mr. A. F. Jeffreys; As. Mr. Brodrick May 18, 719
- Matabeleland and Mashonaland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 385
- Military Manœuvres Bill, Q. General Russell; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 20, 937
- Military Prisons, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. J. A. Pease, Mr. L. R. Holland; As. Mr. Brodrick May 31, 1620
- Militia Officers
  - Field, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Brodrick May 24, 1132
  - Vacancies, Q. Mr. G. Lambert; A. Mr. Brodrick May 25, 1259
- Officers
  - Army, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. H. S. Foster; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 7, 9
  - Militia
    - Field, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Brodrick May 24, 1132
    - Vacancies, Q. Mr. G. Lambert; A. Mr. Brodrick May 25, 1259
  - Staff, India, Qs. Colonel Wyndham Murray, Captain Pirie; As. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1619
- Prisons, Military, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. J. A. Pease, Mr. L. R. Holland; As. Mr. Brodrick May 31, 1620
- Queen's Reign
  - East End Procession, Q. Mr. Wootton-Isaacson; A. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 375. Q. Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; A. Mr. Brodrick May 31, 1616
  - Crimean and Indian Veterans, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 27, 1413
  - Crimean Veterans, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 28, 1510
  - Officers of Army, Q. Mr. H. S. Foster; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 7, 9
  - Seats for Indian Services, Q. Captain Norton; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1615
  - Volunteers, Review of, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Brodrick May 24, 1126
- Recruiting Standard, Cavalry, Q. General Russell; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 27, 1417
- Recruits
  - Brigade of Guards, Qs. Sir A. F. Acland-Hood, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 362
  - Cavalry, Q. Mr. J. H. C. Hozier; A. Mr. Brodrick May 24, 1132
- Regulations, St. Patrick's Day, Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill, Captain Donelan; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Brodrick May 10, 100. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 28, 1521
- Remounts, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Brodrick May 18, 729. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 25, 1270

[cont.

ARMY—cont.
- Reserve, Q. Captain Grice-Hutchinson; A. Mr. Brodrick May 25, 1258
- Royal
  - Corps of Army Surgeons, Q. Dr. Farquharson; A. Mr. Brodrick May 18, 722
  - Horse Artillery, Q. Mr. A. M. Brookfield; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 31, 1607
  - Patriotic Fund
    - Compassionate Allowance, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Brodrick May 11, 195
    - Officers' Widows, Q. Mr. A. M. Brookfield; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 14, 511
    - Supplemental Commission, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 376
- Scots Greys, Qs. Mr. J. H. C. Hozier; As. Mr. Brodrick May 7, 5
- Service Record: Deniston (Joseph), Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 27, 1408
- Small Arms Ammunition, Q. Sir A. F. Acland-Hood; A. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 360
- Staff
  - Appointments, India, Q. Captain Pirie; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 27, 1428
  - Officers, India, Qs. Colonel Wyndham Murray, Captain Pirie; As. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1619
- Surgeons, Royal Corps, Q. Dr. Farquharson; A. Mr. Brodrick May 18, 722
- Troops, Colonial and Indian, at East End, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. Wootton-Isaacson; A. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 375
- Victoria Cross: Baxter (Trooper), Q. General Laurie; A. Mr. Brodrick May 21, 1021
- Volunteers Bill (see that Title)
- Volunteers, Review of, Queen's Reign, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Brodrick May 24, 1126
- War Office Vote, Q. Sir A. F. Acland-Hood; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 14, 512
- Wormwood Scrubbs, Q. Mr. W. E. T. Sharpe; A. Mr. Brodrick May 14, 504

Arnold-Forster, Mr. H. O., Belfast, W.
- Cape Garrison May 14, 493, 494
- Mashonaland May 31, 1626
- Supply: £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 575, 577
- War Risks, National Insurance May 10, 118

Arran, Earl of
- Industries (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 25, 1235

Ascroft, Mr. R., Oldham
- Queen's Reign, Decorations May 18, 725
- Telegrams, Oldham May 18, 727
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 259
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 676, 680, 681; In Com. May 25, 1299; May 26, 1392; May 27, 1442, 1443, 1444, 1462, 1467; May 31, 1639

ASHBOURNE, Lord (Lord Chancellor of Ireland)
- Juries Detention Bill May 28, 1503

Ashton, Mr. T. Gair, Beds, Luton
- Voluntary Schools Act May 10, 92
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 786

Asquith, Right Hon. H. H., Fife, E.
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 747, 762, 813; May 24, 1164, 1167, 1170, In Com. 1199; May 25, 1289, 1299, 1305, 1309, 1341, 1342; May 26, 1351, 1363, 1382, 1386, 1389; May 27, 1438, 1454, 1458, 1480; May 31, 1662

Atherley-Jones, Mr. Llewellyn A., Durham, N.W.
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 673; In Com. May 25, 1335, 1341; May 27, 1439, 1470

ATKINSON, Right Hon. JOHN (Attorney General for Ireland), Londonderry, N.
- Appeal in Certain Civil Matters (Ireland) Bill, In Com. May 11, 235, 236
- Brookeborough Petty Sessions May 10, 110; May 14, 497
- Canals and Navigable Rivers (Ireland) Bill May 10, 106
- Charges
  - Murder
    - Omagh May 20, 922
    - Tyrone May 18, 728
  - Robbery, Tyrone May 24, 1144
- Estates Return, Ireland May 13, 384
- Fishery Inquiry, Listowel May 31, 1633
- Irish Acts, Codification May 13, 385
- Jurors Challenged, Tyrone May 31, 1617
- Land Commissioners May 13, 364
- Larceny, Alleged, Tyrone May 21, 1032; May 25, 1269; May 27, 1422, 1423
- Letterbreen Petty Sessions May 20, 932
- Longford Canal Harbour May 18, 726; May 28, 1514
- River Feale Fishing May 24, 1130
- Rooskey Bridge, Roscommon May 24, 1140
- Supply: £40,229 for Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions, Ireland May 21, 1103
- Tyrone
  - Charges
    - Murder May 18, 728; May 20, 922
    - Robbery May 24, 1144
  - Jurors Challenged May 31, 1617
  - Larceny, Alleged May 21, 1032; May 25, 1269; May 27, 1422, 1423
- Voters' List, Westmeath May 25, 1271; May 27, 1424

Austin, Mr. M., Limerick, W.
- Supply: £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1565

Australasia
- Mails, India and, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Hanbury May 18, 730
- New South Wales, Finance Act, Q. Mr. R. Cox; Sir M. Hicks Beach May 27, 1429
- Queensland, Qs. Mr. J. F. Hogan; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 10, 112; May 25, 1256

BADEN-POWELL, Sir GEORGE S., Liverpool, Kirkdale
- Artillery Practice, Solent May 10, 110
- Discharge of British Seamen Abroad May 27, 1406
- War Risks, National Insurance May 10, 118
- Wreck, S.S. Memphis May 7, 13

BAILEY, Mr. J., Newington, Walworth
- Newington Vestry Election May 27, 1419

BAILLIE, Mr. JAMES E. B., Inverness
- Congested Districts, Scotland May 7, 10

BAINBRIDGE, Mr. EMERSON, Lincolnshire, Gainsborough
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 644, 703; May 18, 793; In Com. May 25, 1312, 1326; May 27, 1437, 1442; May 31, 1646

BALFOUR, LORD (Secretary for Scotland)
- Provisional Order (Scotland) Bill, 1R. May 13, 328, 337; 2R. May 20, 878, 887

BALFOUR, RIGHT HON. ARTHUR J. (First Lord of the Treasury), Manchester, E.
- Agricultural Holdings Act May 24, 1148
- Benefices Bill May 21, 1038, 1039
- British Museum May 31, 1636
- Business of the House
  - General May 10, 116, 117, 119, 120, 184; May 11, 203; May 13, 393, 394, 449; May 14, 580; May 17, 633, 634; May 24, 1148; May 25, 1272; May 28, 1523, 1524; May 31, 1637
  - Morning Sittings on Tuesday May 10, 120
  - Supply
    - Colonial Office Vote May 18, 733
    - War Office Vote May 14, 512
- Committees, Ascension Day May 26, 1345
- Congested Districts (Scotland) Bill May 20, 908; May 31, 1636
- Crewe, Representation May 17, 634, 635
- Drainage Works, Ireland May 27, 1431
- Duration of Speeches, House of Commons May 17, 632
- Education, Half-time Scholars May 10, 93
- Elementary
  - Education Act, Age Clause May 17, 632
  - Teachers' Pensions Fund May 10, 118
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 152
- Greece and the Powers May 11, 201
- Indian Budget May 25, 1271

[cont.

BALFOUR, Right Hon. ARTHUR J.—cont.
- Inebriates, Reformatories May 14, 510
- Judge Advocate General's Department May 31, 1635
- Judiciary, Ireland May 21, 1038
- Land
  - Law (Ireland) Acts, Royal Commission May 24, 1149
  - Rating, Ireland May 20, 936
- Lewis May 25, 1271
- Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1040, 1044, 1059; May 31, 1635
- Midwives Registration Act May 13, 390
- Military Manœuvres Bill May 20, 937
- Ordnance Survey, Mayo May 13, 390
- Poor Law Relief Ireland Bill May 14, 511
- Post Office Establishments May 11, 200
- Private Bill Legislation, Scotland May 13, 391
- Queen's Reign
  - Thanksgiving Service May 13, 375; May 25, 1263
  - Visit of Sultan's Son May 13, 376; May 14, 495
- Royal Patriotic Fund May 14, 511
- Sale of Foods and Drugs Act Amendment Bill May 13, 390; May 27, 1431
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 289, 292
- South Kensington Museum May 13, 392; May 28, 1522
- Supply
  - £61,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 537, 540, 553
  - £40,229 for Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions, Ireland May 21, 1105
- Teachers' Superannuation Bill May 27, 1431
- Turco-Greek War May 10, 119; May 13, 393
- University of London Bill May 17, 632
- Wallace Bequest, Manchester House May 13, 391, 392
- War Risks
  - British Ships May 11, 199
  - National Insurance May 10, 118
- Whitsuntide Holidays May 20, 937, 938; May 28, 1592
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 17, 624; May 20, 932, 933; In Com. May 26, 1372; May 31, 1698, 1700, 1701

BALFOUR, RIGHT HON. GERALD W. (Chief Secretary for Ireland), Leeds, Central
- Addergoole and Ballynagoraher District, Castlebar Union May 24, 1146
- Agriculture and Industries (Ireland) Bill May 14, 502
- Agricultural Rating Act, Ireland May 21, 1024
- Annaly Estate, Longford May 28, 1507
- Ardagh Burial Ground May 11, 198
- Ard West Pier, Carna, Connemara May 10, 99
- Balbriggan Harbour May 13, 388
- Ballybunion (Kerry)
  - Bonâ-fide Travellers May 11, 197
  - Cashen River
    - Overflowing May 13, 377
    - Salmon Fishing May 25, 1257

[cont.

BALFOUR, Right Hon. GERALD W.—cont.

- Bankruptcy Court, Ireland May 21, 1034
- Bonâ-fide Travellers, Ballybunion (Kerry) May 11, 197
- Canals, Ireland May 18, 723
- Carrickfergus, High Sheriff May 14, 504
- Cashen River, Ballybunion
  - Overflowing May 13, 377
  - Salmon Fishing May 25, 1257
- Castleblaney
  - Land Commission, Sligo and May 7, 12
  - Petty Sessions May 27, 1427
- Cavan
  - Distress Relief Works May 28, 1518
  - Royal Irish Constabulary, Tullyvin May 11, 195
- Collection of Rates, Dublin May 10, 114
- Cork and Tralee Prisons May 14, 498
- Deportation of Paupers May 13, 374
- Distress Relief Works, Cavan May 28, 1518
- Dublin
  - Collection of Rates May 10, 114
  - Royal College of Science May 21, 1023; May 24, 1146
  - Veterinary College May 13, 386
- Education
  - Centre Superintendents, Ireland May 20, 913
  - Technical May 21, 1023
- Estates
  - Annaly, Longford May 28, 1507
  - Fermanagh School May 31, 1622
  - Kerry, Receivers May 21, 1025
  - Littledale, Wicklow May 11, 193; May 31, 1614
  - Shirley and Tennison, Monaghan May 24, 1147
- Evictions
  - Durnascallon (Derry) May 20, 915
  - Littledale Estate, Wicklow May 11, 193
  - Longford May 7, 4
- Fermanagh School Estate May 31, 1622
- Franchise Acts 1885 May 25, 1261
- Granard
  - Police Arrangements May 10, 98
  - Union May 31, 1628
- Grand Jury
  - Accounts, Monaghan May 24, 1147
  - Kerry May 21, 1027
  - System May 18, 723
- Gun and Game Licences, Ireland May 31, 1630
- High Sheriff, Carrickfergus May 14, 504
- Industrial Schools May 25, 1259
- Irish
  - Fisheries May 27, 1413, 1414
  - Schools, Epidemic Disease May 24, 1135
- Kerry
  - Ballybunion (see above)
  - Estates, Receivers May 21, 1025
  - Grand Jury May 21, 1027
  - Police Force May 27, 1414
  - Piers.
    - Salleen May 27, 1426
    - Sneem May 31, 1629
- Labourers' Cottages
  - Ireland May 17, 623; May 20, 918, 919
  - Meath May 10, 114
  - Strabane May 31, 1623
- Labourers (Ireland) Acts May 27, 1408

[cont.

BALFOUR, Right Hon. GERALD W.—cont.

- Land
  - Commission
    - Carrickmacross and Ballybay May 11, 192
    - Castleblaney and Sligo May 7, 12
    - Ireland May 17, 620, 621, 622; May 20, 926; May 31, 1603, 1604
  - Sub-Commissions May 13, 363, 364; May 14, 510; May 17, 620; May 25, 1265
- Land Law (Ireland) Act 1887 May 25, 1265
- Letterbreen Petty Sessions May 17, 618; May 18, 733
- Licences
  - Gun and Game, Ireland May 31, 1630
  - Publicans', Ireland May 20, 924
- Light Railways, Ireland May 24, 1136; May 25, 1264
- Limerick, Petty Sessions Fees May 31, 1630
- Listowel
  - Ormathwaite Property May 14, 499
  - Potato Crop May 28, 1512
- Littledale Estate, Wicklow May 11, 193; May 31, 1614
- Loan Fund
  - Board, Ireland May 28, 1518
  - Societies, Ireland May 10, 108, 109
- Local Government
  - Board Auditors, Ireland May 27, 1416
  - Ireland May 21, 1049
- Londonderry Lunatic Asylum May 24, 1138
- Longford
  - Annaly Estate May 28, 1507
  - Ardagh Burial Ground May 11, 198
  - Eviction May 7, 4
  - Union Workhouse May 27, 1409
- Lough Mask and Ballinrobe Canal May 14 494
- Macroom Guardians, Removal of Sick Paupers May 20, 917
- Maryborough Gaol: Prisoner Thomas Collins May 10, 109; May 21, 1025; May 27, 1413
- Mersey Docks Bill May 27, 1423
- Model Schools, Ireland
  - Inquiry May 7, 3
  - Queen's Birthday May 20, 915
- Mohill Burial Ground, Leitrim May 20, 929
- Monaghan
  - Grand Jury Accounts May 24, 1147
  - Newbliss Petty Sessions Courthouse May 24, 1136
  - Shirley and Tennison Estates May 24, 1147
- Mullingar Union May 21, 1031; May 27, 1425; May 28, 1518
- National School
  - Monitors, Ireland May 27, 1405
  - Teachers' Fund, Ireland May 17, 619
  - Workmistresses May 24, 1137
- Newbliss Petty Sessions Courthouse, Monaghan May 24, 1136
- Ormathwaite Property, Listowel May 14, 499
- Paupers
  - Deportation of May 13, 374
  - Removal of Sick, Macroom Guardians May 20, 917
- Petty Sessions
  - Castleblaney May 27, 1427
  - Courthouse, Newbliss (Monaghan) May 24, 1136
  - Fees, Limerick May 31, 1630
  - Letterbreen May 17, 618; May 18, 733
  - Magisterial Jurisdiction May 21, 1037

[cont.

BALFOUR, Right Hon. GERALD W.—cont.
- Piers
  - Ard West, Carna, Connemara May 10, 99
  - Kerry
    - Salleen May 27, 1426
    - Sneem May 31, 1629
- Police
  - Arrangements, Granard May 10, 98
  - Force, Kerry May 27, 1414
  - Pensioners May 25, 1269
- Pollen Act, Lough Neagh May 20, 921
- Poor Law Relief (Ireland) Bill May 7, 17; May 21, 1028
- Portumna Railway May 27, 1415
- Potato Crops
  - Ireland May 14, 505
  - Listowel May 28, 1512
- Prisons
  - Cork and Tralee May 14, 498
  - Maryborough May 10, 109; May 21, 1025; May 27, 1413
- Private Bill Legislation May 10, 93
- Publican's Licence, Ireland May 20, 924
- Queen's
  - Birthday, Model Schools, Ireland May 20, 915
  - Colleges, Ireland May 20, 923
  - Reign
    - Royal Irish Constabulary May 21, 1030
    - Treason-felony Prisoners May 28, 1510
- Railways
  - Light, Ireland May 24, 1136; May 25, 1264
  - Portumna May 27, 1415
- Rathkeale Union, Election of Guardian May 21, 1031
- Religious Orders, Ireland May 25, 1267
- Royal
  - College of Science, Dublin May 21, 1023; May 24, 1146
  - Irish Constabulary
    - Queen's Reign May 21, 1030
    - Tullyvin (Cavan) May 11, 195
- Salleen Pier, Kerry May 27, 1426
- Salmon Fishing, Cashen River May 25, 1257
- School Attendances, Ireland May 27, 1415
- Science Teachers May 25, 1260
- Sea Fisheries, Ireland May 20, 930
- Shirley and Tennison Estates, Monaghan May 24, 1147
- Shorthorn Bulls, Ireland May 24, 1146
- Sneem Pier, Kerry May 31, 1629
- Strabane
  - Equity Sessions May 7, 10
  - Labourers' Cottages May 31, 1623
- Supply
  - £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 528, 530, 531, 533, 544, 547, 557, 562
  - £40,229 for Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions, Ireland May 21, 1103
  - £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1077, 1078, 1080, 1081, 1083, 1086, 1091, 1099, 1101
  - £3,880 for Public Record Offices, Ireland May 21, 1107
- Technical Education, Ireland May 21, 1023
- Unions
  - Castlebar, Addergoole and Ballynagoraher District May 24, 1146
  - Granard May 31, 1628

[cont.

BALFOUR, Right Hon. GERALD W.—cont.
- Unions—cont.
  - Mullingar May 21, 1031; May 27, 1425; May 28, 1518
  - Rathkeale, Election of Guardian May 21, 1031
  - Workhouse, Longford May 27, 1409
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill May 18, 730
- Veterinary College, Dublin May 13, 386
- Westmeath, Appointment of Sheriff May 31, 1628
- Workmistresses, Irish National Schools May 24, 1137

BALFOUR, Right Hon. JOHN BLAIR, Clackmannan and Kinross
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1380; May 27, 1438, 1466

BANBURY, Mr. FREDERICK G., Camberwell, Peckham
- East London Water Bill May 13, 358
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 260

BARNES, Mr. F. G., Kent, Faversham
- Civil Uncovenanted Service, India May 14, 507

BARRY, Mr. EDWARD, Cork County, S.
- Macroom Guardians, Removal of Sick Paupers May 20, 916

BARTLEY, Mr. G. C. T., Islington, N.
- Budget Resolutions May 10, 161
- Elementary Education Act (Amendment) Bill, 3R. May 20, 954
- Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 965
- Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1054
- Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 212
- Post Office Consolidation Bill, 2R. May 11, 224
- Queen's Reign
  - East End Procession May 31, 1616
  - Jubilee Day May 31, 1615, 1616
- South Kensington Museum May 13, 392
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1163, In Com. 1195

BAYLEY, Mr. T., Derbyshire, Chesterfield
- Supply: £7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 82
- Transvaal, Jameson Raid May 7, 8

BEACH, RIGHT HON. SIR M. HICKS, BART. (Chancellor of the Exchequer), Bristol, W.
- Alcoholic Beverages May 27, 1407
- Budget Resolutions May 10, 152, 164, 167, 169, 170, 171, 172, 177
- Business of the House, Morning Sittings May 7, 17
- Equivalent Grant, Scotland May 27, 1406
- Excise Prosecution, Marylebone May 10, 112

[cont.

BEACH, Right Hon. Sir M. HICKS—cont.
  Finance Act, New South Wales May 27, 1429
  Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 983, 984, 986, 987, 993, 1007, 1011; May 31, 1631
  Incorporated Law Society, Judicial Duties Expense May 11, 254
  Metropolitan Police Courts Bill May 7, 15
  Pensions Commutation Board May 10, 91
  Post Office
    Annuities May 10, 104
    Savings Bank May 31, 1604
  Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 7, 9
  Revenue, Great Britain and Ireland May 13, 382
  Supply: £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 63
  Tithe Redemption, Fees May 31, 1634
  University Colleges, Grant May 13, 389

BEGG, Mr. F. FAITHFULL, Glasgow, St. Rollox
  Business of the House, General May 24, 1148
  Telephone Service, Glasgow May 20, 928

BELMORE, Earl of
  Dublin Corporation Bill May 14, 460

BELPER, LORD (Captain of the Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms)
  Infant Life Protection Bill, In Com. May 13, 315, 323
  Metropolitan Police Courts (Holidays) Bill 2R. May 14, 466

Berriew School Bill
c. 3R., Debate Adj. May 24, 1212

BETHELL, Captain G. R., Yorkshire, E.R., Holderness
  Business of the House, Morning Sittings May 7, 17
  Supply
    £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 28, 29, 32
    £29,215 for Mercantile Marine Fund May 28, 1576
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1648

BHOWNAGGREE, Mr. M. M., Bethnal Green, N.E.
  India, Expenditure May 20, 936
  Postal Deliveries, Circulars May 27, 1430

BIGWOOD, Mr. J., Middlesex, Brentford
  Local Government Act (1888) Amendment Bill, Intro. May 12, 312
  Uxbridge Union May 24, 1130

BIRRELL, Mr. AUGUSTINE, Fife, W.
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill 2R. May 17, 690

BLUNDELL, Colonel H. B. H., Lancashire, S.W., Ince
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 812; May 24, 1159; In Com. May 25, 1324; May 31, 1649

BOND, Mr. EDWARD, Nottingham, E.
  Polling Arrangements (London) Bill, Intro. May 10, 184

BOSCAWEN, Mr. A. S. T. GRIFFITH- (see GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN)

BOULNOIS, Mr. E., Marylebone, E.
  Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 10, 94

BOUSFIELD, Mr. W. R., Hackney, N.
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1327, 1328, 1340; May 27, 1480

BOWLES, Mr. T. GIBSON, Lynn Regis
  Incorporated Law Society, Judicial Duties, Expense May 11, 247, 250
  Letters for H.M.'s Ships May 17, 614
  Llandudno Urban District Council Bill, 3R. May 20, 906
  Post Office Consolidation Bill, 2R. May 11, 221, 222, 231
  South Kensington Museum May 28, 1522
  Statute Law Revision and Consolidation Bills May 20, 935
  Sunken Wrecks, Plymouth Fishing Ground May 17, 617
  Supply
    £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 26, 61
    £18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead May 28, 1552
    £8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 66, 73, 74, 77
    £29,215 for Mercantile Marine Fund May 28, 1576, 1577
    £7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 79, 80
    £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1562
    £189,367 for Rates on Government Property May 28, 1558
  Whitsuntide Holidays May 20, 938
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1151, 1172; In Com. May 25, 1307; May 26, 1361, 1393

BRIGG, Mr. JOHN, Yorks, W.R., Keighley
  Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 262

British Troops in India (Health)
- Earl of Dunraven, (Motion) 467; Lord Roberts of Kandahar, 476; Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, 483; Earl of Onslow, 486; Lord Reay, 491; Marquess of Lansdowne, 491; Adj. May 14
- Debate Resumed: Lord Reay, 581; Lord Lister, 583; Lord Playfair, 589; Duke of Cambridge, 593; Lord Bishop of Southwell, 597; Marquess of Lansdowne, 599; Earl of Kimberley, 606; Lord Clarina, 610; Earl of Dunraven, 611; (Motion withdrawn, 612) May 17
  - (For Questions see INDIA)

BROADHURST, Mr. HENRY, Leicester
- Local Government Act (1888) Amendment (No. 2) Bill, Intro. May 18, 734
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 17, 623, 2R. 667; May 18, 794, 795; In Com. May 24, 1183; May 27, 1441, 1445; May 31, 1674, 1702, 1703

BRODRICK, RIGHT HON. WILLIAM ST. JOHN F. (Under Secretary of State for War), Surrey, Guildford
- Aldershot Camp, Sewage Farm May 11, 196
- Army
  - Horses May 10, 104; May 13, 365
  - Regulations, Wearing the Shamrock May 10, 101, 102, 103
  - Remounts May 18, 729
  - Reserve May 25, 1258
  - Small Arms Ammunition May 13, 360
  - Surgeons, Royal Corps May 18, 722
- Artillery Practice, Solent May 10, 110
- Battalions Abroad May 25, 1254
- Brigade of Guards
  - Medical Department May 17, 617
  - Recruits May 13, 362, 363
- Cape Garrison May 11, 200; May 14, 492, 493, 494; May 25, 1260
- Cavalry Recruits May 24, 1132
- Linked Battalion System May 10, 96
- Llandudno Urban District Council Bill, 3R. May 20, 903, 905
- Lock Hospitals May 18, 719, 720
- Matabeleland and Mashonaland May 13, 385
- Military Prisons May 31, 1621
- Militia Field Officers May 24, 1133; May 25, 1259
- Queen's Reign
  - East End Procession May 13, 375; May 31, 1616
  - Review of Volunteers May 24, 1126
- Royal
  - Corps of Army Surgeons, May 18, 722
  - Patriotic Fund
    - Compassionate Allowance May 11, 196
    - Supplemental Commission May 13, 377
- Scots Greys May 7, 5
- Victoria Cross: Trooper Baxter May 21, 1022
- Volunteers Bill, 3R. May 20, 1012
- Wormwood Scrubbs May 14, 504

BROOKFIELD, Mr. A. M., Sussex, Rye
- Royal
  - Horse Artillery May 31, 1607
  - Patriotic Fund May 14, 511

BRUNNER, Sir JOHN T., Bart., Cheshire, Northwich
- Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 1011
- Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 445
- Notification of Infectious Diseases Act May 13, 377
- Queen's Reign, Thanksgiving Service May 13, 375
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 763, 766

BRYCE, Right Hon. JAMES, Aberdeen, S.
- Cycles, Carriage by Rail May 27, 1409
- Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 429, 430, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439
- Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railways Bill May 13, 340, 347, 350, 352
- Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1402

BUCHANAN, Mr. T. R., Aberdeenshire, E.
- Chitral Medal May 17, 629

BUCKNILL, Mr. T. T., Surrey, Epsom
- Incorporated Law Society, Judicial Duties Expense May 11, 246
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1335; May 27, 1472

Burial Grounds Loans (Scotland) Bill
- c. 2R., Debate Adj. May 11, 237

BURNS, Mr. JOHN, Battersea
- Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 413, 415, 431
- Supply: £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1564, 1575
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 680; May 24, 1159, 1171, In Com. 1192, 1193, 1202; May 26, 1365; May 27, 1441, 1442, 1449, 1472; May 31, 1682, 1700

BURT, Mr. THOMAS, Morpeth
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 704; In Com. May 26, 1370; May 27, 1439

Business of the House (see PARLIAMENT: LORDS; COMMONS)

BUTCHER, Mr. JOHN G., York City
- Employers' Liability Act (1880) Amendment Bill, Intro. May 26, 1396
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, (Instr. to Com.) 1153

Buxton, Mr. Sydney, Tower Hamlets, Poplar
- Budget Resolutions May 10, 171, 172
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 141, 142
- Factory and Workshops Act (1895), Dock and Wharf Machinery May 25, 1266
- Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 218
- Transvaal, Immigration Law May 7, 17
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1679, 1694

Caldwell, Mr. J., Lanark, Mid
- Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 213
- Pensions Commutation Board May 10, 90
- Postal Facilities, Island of Lewis May 10, 91
- Water Supply, River Nethy May 10, 90

Cambridge, His Royal Highness the Duke of
- British Troops in India, Health May 17, 593

Cameron, Sir Charles, Bart., Glasgow, Bridgeton
- Education Department, England May 7, 11
- Herrings, Imported May 17, 614
- Post Office Consolidation Bill, 2R. May 11, 227

Campbell-Bannerman, Right Hon. Sir Henry, Stirling Burghs
- Business of the House, General May 25, 1272
- Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1053
- Supply: £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 47, 53
- Whitsuntide Holidays May 20, 938

Camperdown, Earl of
- Light Railways Act May 28, 1502
- Provisional Order (Scotland) Bill, 1R. May 13, 337; 2R. May 20, 885

Canals and Navigable Rivers (Ireland) Bill
- c. Withdrawn May 10, 183
- (For Questions see Ireland)

Canals Protection (London) Bill
- c. Withdrawn May 27, 1487

Canterbury, Lord Archbishop of (Dr. Frederick Temple)
- British Troops in India, Health May 14, 483

Carew, Mr. J. L., Dublin, College Green
- Collection of Rates, Dublin May 10, 113
- College of Science, Dublin May 24, 1145
- Gambling in Futures and Options May 10, 92
- Irish Schools, Epidemic Disease May 24, 1134
- Private Bill Legislation, Ireland May 10, 93
- Queen's Reign, Adverse Records May 17, 630

Carson, Right Hon. Edward H., Dublin University
- Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1046, 1061
- Supply: £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 517, 523, 524, 531, 534, 548

Causton, Mr. R. K., Southwark, W.
- Queen's Reign, Evictions in Southwark May 25, 1262

Cawley, Mr. Frederick, Lancashire, S.E., Prestwich
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 258
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 24, 1189

Cecil, Lord Hugh, Greenwich
- Business of the House, Supply: Ordnance Factory Vote May 20, 924
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 145
- Llanbedr School Board May 31, 1622, 1623
- Magnetic Observatory, Greenwich May 28, 1520
- Supply: £189,367 for Rates on Government Property May 28, 1557, 1561

Chaff-cutting Machines Accidents Bill
- c. Order for Com. Read and Discharged; com. to Standing Com. on Trade, etc. May 12, 311

Chaloner, Captain R. G. W., Wilts, Westbury
- Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 20, 913

CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. J. AUSTEN (Civil Lord of the Admiralty), Worcestershire, E.
- Plymouth Harbour Works May 13, 360
- Queen's Reign, Naval Review May 18, 725
- Supply: £18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead May 28, 1550, 1552, 1556

CHAMBERLAIN, Right Hon. JOSEPH (Secretary of State for the Colonies), Birmingham, W.
- British Zukon Chartered Company May 31, 1631
- Canadian
  - Fast Atlantic Service May 25, 1268
  - Mail Service May 31, 1619
- Compensation Allowances, European and Indian Officials May 20, 934
- Falkland Islands May 7, 16
- Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 419, 423, 426, 429, 430, 431, 433, 439
- Mashonaland May 31, 1626, 1627
- Queensland May 10, 112; May 25, 1256
- Queen's Reign, Jubilee Invitations May 28, 1509

cont

CHAMBERLAIN, Right Hon. JOSEPH—cont.
Transvaal
Immigration Law May 7, 17
Jameson Raid May 7, 8
Treason-felony Prisoners, Ireland May 7, 16
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 789, 793, 794, 795, 805, 811; May 24, 1168, 1170, 1171; In Com. 1197, 1198, 1199, 1201, 1202, 1203, 1204, 1211; May 25, 1281, 1297, 1305, 1308, 1309, 1313, 1316, 1327, 1331, 1341; May 26, 1352, 1358, 1363, 1370, 1379, 1380, 1387, 1389, 1390, 1392, 1393; May 27, 1443, 1445, 1446, 1458, 1471, 1472, 1474, 1476, 1477, 1479, 1484, 1485; May 31, 1650, 1664, 1677

CHANNING, Mr. F. A., Northampton, E.
Business of the House, General May 28, 1523
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 123, 125
Ground Game Act (Extension to Copyholders) Bill, Intro. May 18, 734
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 849
Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 351
Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1399
Railway Drawings and Relics May 31, 1624
Supply: £34,291 for Board of Agriculture May 28, 1577, 1590

CHAPLIN, RIGHT HON. HENRY (President of the Local Government Board), Lincolnshire, Sleaford
Board of Guardians, Public Bills May 17, 628
Cattle Food, Imported May 31, 1631
County Council, Accounts May 13, 378
Death of Pauper, City of London May 21, 1035
East London Water Bill May 13, 359
Housing of the Working Classes Act May 18, 722
Metropolitan Water Companies Bill, 1R. May 24, 1149
Newington Vestry Election May 27, 1419
Notification of Infectious Diseases Act May 13, 377
Rating Assessment May 13, 371
Uxbridge Union May 24, 1131
Vaccination
Lymph Supply May 27, 1426
Royal Commission May 13, 361
Water Supply, London May 17, 615, 616

CHARITY COMMISSION
Parliamentary Charity Commissioner – Mr. J. GRANT LAWSON
Berriew School Scheme, Q. Mr. Humphreys-Owen; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1621
Charity Scheme, Thornton-in-Craven, Qs. Mr. P. J. Stanhope; As. Mr. Grant Lawson May 20, 927
Covent Garden Theatre Fund, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 18, 729. Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Sir R. Webster May 31, 1603
Swansea Grammar School, Q. Sir J. T. D. Llewelyn; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1611
Upper Division Clerks, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Hanbury May 11, 190

Church Patronage Transfer Bill
l. 2R., Lord Archbishop of York, 465, 466; Lord Halsbury, 465; Lord Herschell, 465 May 14
Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House May 14, 466
In Com., Rep. without Amendt. and re-com. to Standing Com. May 28, 1501

CIVIL SERVICE
Charity Commission, Upper Division Clerks, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Hanbury May 11, 190
Clerks, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 31, 1605
Education Department Examiners, Q. Captain Norton; A. Sir J. Gorst May 11, 191
Indian Uncovenanted, Q. Mr. F. G. Barnes; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 14, 507
Judge Advocate General's Department, Qs. Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. J. W. Mellor; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 31, 1635
Queen's Reign, Diamond Jubilee (see that Title)
Second Division Clerks, Q. Mr. T. P. O'Connor; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 622
Temporary Men Copyists, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell, A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1513

CLANCY, Mr. J. J., Dublin, N.
Balbriggan Harbour May 13, 388
Business of the House, General May 28, 1524
Labourers' Cottages, Meath May 10, 114
Loughshinny Pier, Dublin May 13, 387
Private Bill Legislation, Ireland May 10, 93
Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 303, 304
Supply
£24,037 for Harbours, Lighthouses, etc. May 28, 1537, 1538, 1539, 1541, 1542
£8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 63, 64, 65
£7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 78, 79
£132,291 for Survey of United Kingdom May 28, 1529, 1530, 1537

CLARINA, Lord
British Troops in India, Health May 17, 610

CLARK, Dr. G. B., Caithness
Supply
£18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead May 28, 1557
£189,367 for Rates on Government Property May 28, 1561

CLARKE, Sir EDWARD, Plymouth
Incorporated Law Society, Judicial Duties, Expense May 11, 251
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1359, 1369

CLIFDEN, Viscount
Finance Acts, Works of Art May 28, 1501
Griffith's Valuation May 24, 1116
Land
Legislation, Ireland May 28, 1505
Valuation, Ireland May 13, 338, 339
Personal Explanation May 31, 1593

CLONBROCK, Lord
Land Legislation, Ireland May 25, 1251; May 28, 1505
Personal Explanation May 31, 1593

CLOUGH, Mr. W. O., Portsmouth
Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 260

COCHRANE, Hon. THOMAS H., Ayrshire, N.
Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 421
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 27, 1466

COGHILL, Mr. D. H., Stoke-on-Trent
Elementary Teachers, Pensions Fund May 10, 118

COHEN, Mr. B. L., Islington, E.
Business of the House, General May 10, 116
Supply: £189,367 for Rates on Government Property May 28, 1558

COLERIDGE, Lord
Juries Detention Bill, 2R. May 10, 86; May 28, 1503

COLLINGS, RIGHT HON. JESSE (Under Secretary of State for the Home Department), Birmingham, Bordesley
Discharge of Weavers, Burnley May 14, 500
Italian Ice-cream Vendors May 21, 1029
Laundry Workers May 14, 507
Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 207, 216, 217
Metropolitan Police Courts Bill May 7, 14
Mining Accident, Durham May 7, 18
Performing Bears, Streets May 14, 506
Probation of First Offenders Act May 21, 1034
Queen's Reign
  Jubilee Procession May 21, 1029
  Metropolitan Police May 21, 1029

COLOMB, Sir JOHN, Great Yarmouth
Supply: £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1071
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1699

Colonial Solicitors Bill
c. Intro., Sir A. K. Rollit; Read 1° May 12, 312

COLONIES
Secretary of State—Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN
Under Secretary of State—Earl of SELBORNE
British Zukon Chartered Company, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 31, 1631
Canadian
  Fast Atlantic Service, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 25, 1267
  Mail Service, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 31, 1619

COLONIES—cont.
Cape Garrison, Qs. Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. Arnold-Forster, Mr. Swift MacNeill; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Brodrick May 14, 492. Q. Major Rasch; A. Mr. Brodrick May 25, 1260
Compensation Allowance, European and Indian Officials, Qs. Sir W. Wedderburn; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Lord G. Hamilton May 20, 934
Crown Colonies, Representatives of, Queen's Reign, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 28, 1509
Falkland Islands, Q. Mr. Swift MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 16
Finance Act, New South Wales, Q. Mr. R. Cox; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 27, 1429
Jameson Raid, Transvaal, Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 8
Mail Service, Canadian, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 31, 1619
Manitoba
  Colonisation Board, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 25, 1261
  Crofters' Settlement, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 18, 730
Mashonaland, Qs. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Mr. J. Morley; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 31, 1626
Matabeleland and Mashonaland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 385
Queensland, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 10, 112. Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 25, 1256
Queen's Reign, Diamond Jubilee (see that Title)
Transvaal
  Immigration Law, Q. Mr. Sydney Buxton; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 17
  Jameson Raid, Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 8
Treason-felony Prisoners, Ireland, Q. Mr. Swift MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 15

Commons (Regulation) Bill
c. Intro., Mr. H. C. F. Luttrell; Read 1° May 11, 204

Conveyancing Bill
l. 2R., Lord Davey, 325, 327; Lord Halsbury, 327 May 13
Read 2ª and Referred to Select Com. May 13, 327

COOKE, Mr. C. W. RADCLIFFE, Hereford
Speeches in Parliament May 11, 241
Supply: £34,291 for Board of Agriculture May 28, 1578

Copyright (Amendment) Bill
l. Pres., Lord Monkswell; Read 1ª May 13, 313
2R., Lord Monkswell, 1594; Earl of Dudley, 1598; Lord Thring, 1599; Lord Herschell, 1599; Lord Halsbury, 1601 May 31
Read 2ª and Referred to Select Com. May 31, 1602

[cont.

Cotton Cloth and Other Factories Bill
- c. Read 2° May 31, 1711

Cotton-Jodrell, Colonel Edward T. D., Cheshire, Wirral
- District Councils (Water Supply Facilities) Bill, Intro. May 18, 734

Courtney, Right Hon. L. H., Cornwall, Bodmin
- Business of the House, General May 17, 633

Cox, Mr. R., Edinburgh, S.
- Finance Act, New South Wales May 27, 1429
- St. Andrews University May 14, 500

Cox, Mr. T. Skewes- (see Skewes-Cox)

Cranborne, Viscount, Rochester
- Benefices Bill May 21, 1038, 1039
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill May 10, 121, In Com. 134, 141, 150

Cranbrook, Earl of
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 2R. May 25, 1225

Crawford and Balcarres, Earl of
- Finance Acts, Works of Art May 28, 1496

Crete (see Foreign Office)

Crilly, Mr. D., Mayo, N.
- Death of Pauper, City of London May 21, 1035
- Mersey Channels Bill, 3R. May 10, 183
- Metropolitan Police Courts (Holidays) Bill, 2R. May 10, 178
- Pier and Harbour Provisional Orders (No. 1) Bill, 2R. May 14, 491, 492; May 17, 613, 614
- Supply: £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1101, 1102

Cripps, Mr. C. A., Gloucester, Stroud
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 708; In Com. May 25, 1277; May 26, 1349, 1357, 1383; May 27, 1470, 1479

Crombie, Mr. John W., Kincardineshire
- Divisions, House of Commons May 18, 721
- Dog Licence, Drumlithie, Kincardineshire May 14, 501
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1311; May 31, 1669

Cross, Mr. A., Glasgow, Camlachie
- Flax, Foreign Bounties May 18, 721, 722
- Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 348
- Queen's Reign, Naval Review May 18, 725
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1164

CROSS, Viscount (Lord Privy Seal)
- Finance Acts, Works of Art May 28, 1499, 1501
- Light Railways Act May 28, 1502

Currie, Sir Donald, Perthshire, W.
- Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 342, 346
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1694

CURZON, Right Hon. GEORGE N. (Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs), Lancashire; S.W., Southport
- Armistice May 21, 1039; May 24, 1143
- Brussels Act May 21, 1035
- Congo State May 11, 193; May 18, 720
- Crete May 13, 380, 381; May 14, 508; May 17, 626; May 20, 931; May 24, 1143; May 25, 1270; May 31, 1637
- Delagoa Bay, Arbitration Award May 28, 1520
- Dingley Tariff Bill, United States May 25, 1268
- Duty on Herrings May 24, 1136
- Expulsion of Mr. Macpherson from Paris May 11, 194
- Fugitive Slaves, Zanzibar Coast May 21, 1025; May 28, 1517
- Herrings
  - Duty on May 24, 1136
  - Scotch, St. Petersburg May 13, 380
- Kassala May 20, 915
- Liquor Traffic in Africa May 31, 1608
- Murder of Yusaf Yunan May 31, 1617, 1618
- Queen's Reign, Foreign Consular Corps May 24, 1127
- Raiatea, Disturbances May 10, 104
- Scotch Herrings, St. Petersburg May 13, 380
- Slavery in Zanzibar May 14, 506
- Supply: £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 25, 31, 33, 38, 46, 53
- Tokat Massacre May 21, 1036; May 25, 1258
- Trawling, Moray Firth May 25, 1256
- Turco-Greek War May 10, 100; May 20, 927; May 24, 1143
- Uganda Railway May 27, 1430
- Zanzibar May 28, 1516

CUSTOMS, EXCISE, AND INLAND REVENUE
- Alcoholic Beverages, Qs. Mr. T. Lough; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 27, 1407
- Custom House, London, Q. Mr. C. H. Wilson; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1135
- Dog Licences
  - Drumlithie, Kincardineshire, Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 501
  - Govan, Q. Mr. J. Wilson (Lanark); A. Mr. Hanbury May 21, 1026

[cont.

CUSTOMS, EXCISE, AND INLAND REVENUE—cont.
  Excise Prosecution, Marylebone, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 10, 111
  Gun and Game Licences, Ireland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1630
  Inhabited House Duty, Scotland, Q. Sir T. Sutherland; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 27, 1404
  Licences
    Dog (see subhead Dog above)
    Gun and Game, Ireland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1630
    Publican's, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 923
  Publican's Licence, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 923
  Queen's Reign, Income Tax, Q. Mr. J. W. Maclure; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 7, 9
  Stamp Duty, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 625
  Tithe Redemption Fees, Q. Mr. A. F. Jeffreys; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 31, 1634

DALBIAC, Colonel P. H., Camberwell, N.
  Performing Bears, Streets May 14, 506
  Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 14, 495

DALRYMPLE, Sir C., Bart., Ipswich
  Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 344
  Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 24, 1127

DALY, Mr. JAMES, Monaghan, S.
  Charge of Larceny, Tyrone May 21, 1032; May 25, 1269; May 27, 1422, 1423
  Deportation of Paupers May 13, 374; May 14, 509; May 17, 631
  Grand Jury Accounts, Monaghan May 24, 1147
  Great Northern Railway Company of Ireland May 7, 12
  Irish Mail Service May 10, 97; May 11, 195
  Jurors Challenged, Tyrone May 31, 1616
  Labourers' Cottages, Ireland May 20, 919
  Land Commission
    Carrickmacross and Ballybay May 11, 192
    Castleblaney May 7, 12
  Longford Union Workhouse May 27, 1409
  Mersey Docks Bill May 27, 1423
  National School Monitors, Ireland May 27, 1405
  Police Pensioners May 25, 1269
  Postal Facilities, Cavan May 27, 1404
  Post Office Establishment May 11, 200
  Queen's Reign, Treason-felony Prisoners May 28, 1510
  Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 273, 280, 281
  Shirley and Tennison Estates Monaghan May 24, 1147
[cont.

DALY, Mr. JAMES—cont.
  Supply
    £8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 75
    £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 578, 579
    £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1067, 1071, 1080
  Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 261; May 12, 265; May 18, 730
  Volunteers' Bill, 3R. May 20, 1012

DALZIEL, Mr. J. H., Kirkcaldy Burghs
  Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 399, 401, 426

DANE, Mr. R. M., Fermanagh, N.
  High Sheriff, Carrickfergus May 14, 504
  Irish Mail Service May 17, 625
  Loan Fund Societies, Ireland May 10, 108
  Supply: £40,229 for Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions, Ireland May 21, 1104, 1105

Dangerous Performances Bill
c. Read 2° May 31, 1707

DAVEY, Lord
  Conveyancing Bill, 2R, May 13, 325, 327

DAVIES, Mr. M. VAUGHAN, Cardigan
  Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 817

DAVITT, Mr. MICHAEL, Mayo, S.
  Reading Prison, Discharge of Warder May 25, 1266; May 27, 1420

DENBIGH, Earl of
  Dublin Corporation Bill May 14, 461
  Industries (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 25, 1235
  Infant Life Protection Bill, In Com. May 13, 316, 318, 321, 324; May 21, 1020
  Land Law (Ireland) Acts May 20, 902
  Land Valuation, Ireland May 13, 339
  Municipal Franchise, Ireland May 20, 896
  Quarter Sessions Jurors (Ireland) Bill, In Com. May 11, 186, 187, 188

DENNY, Colonel J. McA., Kilmarnock Burghs
  Supply: £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1574
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1173; In Com. 1210; May 25, 1303, 1306, 1314; May 26, 1392; May 27, 1464, 1480; May 31, 1689, 1690

DEVONSHIRE, DUKE OF (Lord President of the Council)
  Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 2R. May 25, 1217; In Com May 28, 1503
  Secondary Education May 21, 1019

DILKE, Right Hon. Sir CHARLES W., Bart., Gloucester, Forest of Dean
- Battalions Abroad May 25, 1254
- Brigade of Guards May 13, 363
- Brussels Act May 21, 1035
- Business of the House, General May 28 1524
- Cleaning Machinery in Motion May 28, 1506
- Congo State May 11, 193 ; May 18, 720
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 124, 129, 149
- Fugitive Slaves, Zanzibar Coast May 21, 1025 ; May 28, 1516
- Government Offices, Sites May 14, 495
- Kassala May 20, 915
- Linked Battalion System May 10, 96
- Liquor Traffic in Africa May 31, 1608
- Supply
  - £34,291 for Board of Agriculture May 28, 1585
  - £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 62
  - £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1561
- Truck Act, 1896 May 24, 1128, 1129
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 10, 107 ; May 17, 624, 2R. 658, 663 ; May 24, 1162 ; In Com. May 25, 1274, 1275, 1277, 1296, 1300 ; May 27, 1433, 1464, 1465, 1471, 1482 ; May 31, 1666, 1691, 1701
- Workmen (Compensation Insurance) Bill, Belgium May 18, 729

DILLON, Mr. JOHN, Mayo, E.
- Ballinamore Canal May 20, 909
- Budget Resolutions May 10, 166
- Business of the House, General May 11, 203 ; May 25, 1272
- Certificated Teachers, Scotland May 24, 1142
- Charge of Larceny, Tyrone May 27, 1423
- Commissioners of Public Works, Ireland May 13, 366
- Crete May 13, 380, 381 ; May 14, 508 ; May 25, 1270 ; May 31, 1636, 1637
- Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 1011 ; May 31, 1631
- Indian Midland, and Bengal-Nagpur Railways May 20, 924
- Labourers' Cottages, Ireland May 20, 918
- Land Commission, Ireland May 20, 925, 926 ; May 31, 1603
- Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1044, 1048, 1049, 1059
- Ordnance Survey, Mayo May 13, 389 ; May 17, 626
- Pollen Act, Lough Neagh May 20, 921
- Sale of Food and Drugs Act Amendment Bill May 27, 1431
- Sneem Pier, Kerry May 31, 1629
- Supply
  - £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 29
  - £18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead May 28, 1547, 1548, 1549, 1553, 1554, 1555, 1557
  - £8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 67, 68, 74
  - £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 533, 541, 544, 547, 548, 562, 577

DILLON, Mr. JOHN—cont.
- Supply—cont.
  - £40,229 for Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions, Ireland May 21, 1103, 1104
  - £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1095
  - £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1566, 1569, 1572
  - £132,291 for Survey of the United Kingdom May 28, 1525, 1531, 1532, 1533
- Turco-Greek War May 20, 926

District Councils (Water Supply Facilities) Bill
- c. Intro., Colonel Cotton-Jodrell ; Read 1° May 18, 734

DONELAN, Captain A. J. C., Cork, E.
- Antiquities, Ireland May 27, 1410
- Army
  - Food and Forage Supplies May 31, 1626
  - Horses May 10, 104
  - Regulations, Wearing the Shamrock May 10, 102, 103
- Cruelty to Animals, London May 27, 1410, 1411
- Fishing Inquiry, Listowel May 31, 1633
- Gun and Game Licences, Ireland May 31, 1630
- Industrial Schools May 25, 1258
- Irish Mail Service May 25, 1265
- Judiciary, Ireland May 21, 1038
- Labourers' Cottages, Ireland May 17, 623
- Land Commission, Ireland May 31, 1603
- Land Law (Ireland) Act 1887 May 25, 1265
- Light Railways, Ireland May 25, 1264
- Matabeleland and Mashonaland May 13, 385
- Petty Sessions Fees, Limerick May 31, 1629
- Potato Crop, Ireland May 14, 505
- Supply : £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1061

DOOGAN, Mr. P. C., Tyrone, E.
- Drainage Works, Ireland May 27, 1431
- Fermanagh School Estate May 31, 1622
- Pollen Act, Lough Neagh May 20, 920

DOUGLAS, Right Hon. A. AKERS- (see AKERS-DOUGLAS)

DRAGE, Mr. GEOFFREY, Derby
- Tuskar Light, Telephonic Communication May 10, 93 ; May 27, 1405
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 636 ; May 18, 813

Dublin Corporation Bill
- l. Read 2^{a} May 14, 453
- Marquess of Londonderry, (Instr. to Com.) 453, 462, 464 ; Earl of Morley, 457 ; Earl of Mayo, 459 ; Earl of Belmore, 460 ; Earl of Denbigh, 461 ; Lord Halsbury 461, 464 ; Earl of Kimberley, 462 ; Duke of Rutland, 162 ; (Division, 463) May 14

[cont.

DUDLEY, EARL OF (Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade)
• Copyright Amendment Bill, 2R. May 31, 1598

DUNCOMBE, Hon. H. V., Cumberland, Egremont
Supply: £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 579

DUNRAVEN, Earl of
British Troops in India, Health May 14, 467; May 17, 611

DYKE, Right Hon. Sir W. HART., Bart., Kent, Dartford
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 130, 149
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 847
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1674

East India Company's Officers' Superannuation Bill
l. 2R., Earl of Onslow May 13, 313
Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House May 13, 313
In Com., Rep. without Amendt.; Standing Com. negatived May 14, 466
Read 3ª and Passed May 17, 612

East London Water Bill
c. Mr. E. Gray, (Instr. to Com.), 353, 360; Colonel Lockwood, 356; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 358; Mr. T. G. Banbury, 358; Mr. H. Chaplin, 359; (Motion withdrawn, 360) May 13

Edinburgh University (Transfer of Patronage) Bill
l. Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House May 14, 491
In Com., Rep. without Amendt.; Standing Com. negatived May 17, 613
Read 3ª and Passed May 18, 718

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT
Lord President—Duke of DEVONSHIRE
Vice President—Sir JOHN E. GORST
Antiquities, Ireland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Sir J. Gorst May 27, 1410. Q. Mr. W. E. H. Lecky; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1519
Berriew School Scheme, Q. Mr. Humphreys-Owen; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1621
British Museum, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 31, 1636
Centre Superintendents, Ireland, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 912
Certificated Teachers, Scotland, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 24, 1142

[cont.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT—cont.
Colleges
Queen's, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. Pinkerton, Mr. W. Johnston; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 922
Royal, of Science, Dublin, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1022. Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1145. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1520
University Grant, Q. Mr. A. J. Mundella; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 13, 389
Dublin
Education Office, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 21, 1027
Royal College of Science, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1022. Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1145. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1520
Education
Department
England, Female Sub-Inspectors, Q. Sir C. Cameron; A. Sir J. Gorst May 7, 11
Junior Examiners, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1612
Half-time Scholars, Q. Mr. E. Gray; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 92
Office, Dublin, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 21, 1027
Elementary
Education Act, Age Clause, Q. Mr. A. Spicer; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 17, 631
Schools (see subhead Schools below)
Teachers' Pension Fund, Q. Mr. D. H. Coghill; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 118
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, Q. Mr. E. Gray; A. Sir J. Gorst May 7, 6
(For Debates see Title of Bill)
Epidemic, Irish Schools, Q. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1134
Examiners (Education Department)
Appointments of, Q. Captain Norton; A. Sir J. Gorst May 11, 191
Junior, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1612
Fermanagh School Estate, Q. Mr. P. C. Doogan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1622
Half-time Scholars, Q. Mr. E. Gray; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 92
Honiton
Elementary School, Holy Week, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 14, 498
National Schools, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 916
Industrial Schools, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1258
Intermediate Education (see EDUCATION: INTERMEDIATE AND TECHNICAL)
Irish
Antiquities, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Sir J. Gorst May 27, 1410. Q. Mr. W. E. H. Lecky; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1519
Schools, Epidemic, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1134
Llanbedr School Board, Qs. Lord H. Cecil; As. Sir J. Gorst May 31, 1622
Llangollen School Board, Qs. Mr. J. H. Roberts; As. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 920; May 31, 1632

[cont.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT— cont.
- Model Schools
  - Ireland, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 3
  - Queen's Birthday, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915
- Monitors, National Schools, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1405
- Museums
  - British, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 31, 1636
  - South Kensington, Qs. Mr. Massey-Mainwaring, Mr. A. J. Mundella, Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 392. Qs. Lord Warkworth, Mr. T. Skewes-Cox, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 28, 1522. Qs. Sir F. S. Powell, Mr. C. A. Whitmore; As. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 31, 1614
- National
  - Schools (see subhead Schools below)
  - Schools, Irish (see under Title Ireland)
  - School Teachers, Irish (see under Title Ireland)
- North Mundham School Board, Qs. Mr. J. C. Williams; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir J. Gorst May 24, 1129
- Queen's
  - Birthday, Model Schools, Ireland, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915
  - Colleges, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. Pinkerton, Mr. W. Johnston; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 922
- Queen's Reign
  - Holiday for Schools, Q. Major Rasch; A. Sir J. Gorst May 14, 494. Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 914
  - Science and Art Department Examinations, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst May 21, 1030
- Royal
  - College of Science, Dublin, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1022. Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1145. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1520
  - Irish Academy, Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill; As. Sir J. Gorst May 10, 105
- St. Andrews University, Q. Mr. R. Cox; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 14, 500
- School Boards
  - Divisions, London, Q. Mr. T. G. Fardell; A. Sir J. Gorst May 24, 1128
  - Llanbedr, Qs. Lord H. Cecil; As. Sir J. Gorst May 31, 1622
  - Llangollen, Qs. Mr. J. H. Roberts; As. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 920; May 31, 1632
  - Loans, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 916
  - North Mundham, Qs. Mr. J. C. Williams; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir J. Gorst May 24, 1129
- Schools
  - Attendance, Ireland, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1415
  - Berriew Scheme, Q. Mr. Humphreys-Owen; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1621
  - Elementary, Honiton, Holy Week, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 14, 498

[cont.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT—cont.
- Schools—cont.
  - Estate, Fermanagh, Q. Mr. P. C. Doogan A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1622
  - Grammar, Swansea, Q. Sir J. T. D. Llewelyn; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1611
  - Industrial, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1258 .
  - Irish
    - Epidemic, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1134
    - National (see under Title Ireland)
  - Jubilee Holiday, Q. Major Rasch; A. Sir J. Gorst May 14, 494. Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 914
  - Model
    - Ireland, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 3
    - Queen's Birthday, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915
  - National
    - Honiton, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 916
    - Monitors, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1405
    - Teachers' Fund, Ireland, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 619
  - Science and Art, Grants, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall: A. Sir J. Gorst May 13, 367
  - Swansea Grammar, Q. Sir J. T. D. Llewelyn; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1611
- Science and Art
  - Classes, Ireland, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Sir J. Gorst May 21, 1036
  - Schools, Grants, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst May 13, 367
- Science Teachers, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1260
- Secondary Education, Q. Lord Norton; A. Duke of Devonshire May 21, 1017. Q. Mr. A. J. Mundella; A. Sir J. Gorst May 24, 1133
- South Kensington Museum, Qs. Mr. Massey-Mainwaring, Mr. A. J. Mundella, Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 392. Qs. Lord Warkworth, Mr. T. Skewes-Cox, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 28, 1522. Qs. Sir F. S. Powell, Mr. C. A. Whitmore; As. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 31, 1614
- Swansea Grammar School, Q. Sir J. T. D. Llewelyn; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1611
- Teachers
  - Certificated, Scotland, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 24, 1142
  - Elementary Pension Fund, Q. Mr. D. H. Coghill; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 118
  - Science, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1260
- Teachers' (Superannuation) Bill, Q. Mr. W. Younger; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 27, 1430
- Technical Education (see Education: Intermediate and Technical)
- University
  - Colleges, Grant, Q. Mr. A. J. Mundella; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 13, 389
  - Edinburgh, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Hanbury May 25, 1263

[cont

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT—cont.
- University of London Bill, Q. Mr. Brynmor Jones; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 17, 632
- Voluntary Schools Act, Q. Mr. E. Gray; A. Sir J. Gorst May 7, 5. Q. Mr. T. G. Ashton; A. Sir J. Gorst May 10, 92. Qs. Mr. E. Gray, Mr. J. W. Mellor; As. Sir J. Gorst May 13, 373. Q. Mr. J. W. Sidebotham; A. Sir R. Webster May 20, 935
- Workmistresses, Irish National Schools, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1137

Education (Intermediate and Technical)
- Swansea Grammar School, Q. Sir J. T. D. Llewelyn; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1611
- Technical
  - Committee, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst May 14, 502
  - Education, Ireland, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1023

Elections Petitions Bill
c. Withdrawn May 24, 1215

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill
c. On the Order to go into Com.: Instructions stood in the names of Viscount Cranborne and Mr. S. T. Evans; [Mr. Speaker ruled both these Instructions out of Order, 122;] Sir H. Fowler, 122 May 10
In Com., Mr. J. H. Yoxall, (Amendt.) 123; Sir J. Gorst, (Amendt.) 123, 124, 125, 132, 138, 151; (Amendt. withdrawn, 123); Mr. A. H. D. Acland, 123, 126, 151; Mr. F. A. Channing, 123, 125; Mr. E. Gray, 123, 124, 128, 150; Mr. A. J. Mundella, 124; Sir C. Dilke, 124, 129, 149; Sir J. Lubbock, 125, 144; (Amendt. Agreed to, 126); Mr. S. T. Evans, 128; Mr. J. Stuart, 130, 147; Sir W. Hart Dyke, 130, 149; Sir H. Fowler, 131; Viscount Cranborne, [New Clause] 134, 141, 150; Mr. Griffith-Boscawen, 140; Mr. Sydney Buxton, 141, 142; Mr. J. G. Talbot, 142; Mr. J. C. Williams, 143; Mr. J. H. Yoxall, 145; Lord H. Cecil, 145; Sir F. S. Powell, 148; (Division, 151); Mr. J. Samuel, 151. Preamble Agreed to, 151 May 10
Rep. with an Amendt., Mr. A. H. D. Acland, 152; Mr. A. J. Balfour 152 May 10
Considered as Amended May 11, 204
3R., Mr. J. Hutton, 941; Mr. R. W. Perks, 942; Colonel Milward, 944; Mr. G. Lambert, 945; Sir U. Kay-Shuttleworth, 947; Sir J. Gorst, 948; Mr. A. H. D. Acland, 950; Mr. E. Gray, 951; Mr. J. C. Williams, 952; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 954 May 20
Read 3° and Passed May 20, 954
l. Read 1ª May 21, 1017
2R., Duke of Devonshire, 1217; Lord Playfair, 1223; Earl of Cranbrook, 1225; Lord Reay, 1226; Lord Norton, 1229; Earl of Kimberley, 1231 May 25
Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House May 25, 1234

[cont.

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill—cont.
In Com., Duke of Devonshire, 1503; Earl of Kimberley, 1504 May 28
Rep. without Amendt., Standing Com. negatived May 28, 1504
Read 3ª and Passed May 31, 1602
(For Questions see EDUCATION DEPARTMENT)

Elementary Education (Permissive Rates Aid) Bill
c. Withdrawn May 18, 814

ELLIS, Mr. J. E., Notts, Rushcliffe
Supply: £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 24, 25, 26
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 20, 933

Employers' Liability Act (1880) Amendment Bill
c. Mr. J. G. Butcher, (Application for leave to Intro.) May 26, 1396
Intro., Mr. J. G. Butcher; Read 1° May 26, 1396

Employers' Liability Act (1880) Amendment (No. 2) Bill
c. Intro., Mr. A. D. Provand; Read 1° May 27, 1488

EVANS, Mr. S. T., Glamorgan, Mid
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill May 10, 121, In. Com. 128
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, (Instrs. to Com.) 1152; In Com. May 25, 1339, 1342

EVANS, Sir FRANCIS H., Southampton
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 24, 1196, 1197, 1201, 1203, 1204; May 31, 1676, 1690, 1696

Excise Licences Bill
l. Pres., Viscount Peel; Read 1ª May 25, 1217

Extraordinary Tithe Bill
c. 2R., Mr. W. H. Long May 11, 231
Read 2° May 11, 232

FARDELL, Mr. T. G., Paddington, S.
Paris Fire, Safety of Public Buildings May 10, 95
School Board Divisions, London May 24, 1128

FARQUHARSON, Dr. R., Aberdeenshire, W.
Army Surgeons, Royal Corps May 18, 722
Brigade of Guards, Medical Department May 17, 617
Inebriates, Reformatories May 14, 510
Wallace Bequest, Manchester House May 13, 392
Whitsuntide Holidays May 20, 937

FARRELL, Mr. J. P., Cavan, W.
- Agriculture and Industries (Ireland) Bill May 14, 501
- Annaly Estate, Longford May 28, 1507
- Ardagh (Longford) Burial Ground May 11, 198
- Army
  - Horses May 13, 364, 365
  - Service Record: Deniston (Joseph) May 27, 1408
- Ballinamore Canal May 20, 908; May 27, 1407
- Budget Resolutions May 10, 165
- Business of the House, General May 10, 119; May 13, 394; May 28, 1524
- Canals and Navigable Rivers (Ireland) Bill May 10, 106
- Canals, Ireland May 18, 723
- Cavan
  - Distress Relief Works May 28, 1517
  - Royal Irish Constabulary, Tullyvin May 11, 195
- Civil Service, Temporary Men Copyists May 28, 1513
- Distress Relief Works, Cavan May 28, 1517
- Education Office, Dublin May 21, 1027
- Eviction, Longford May 7, 3
- Granard, Police Arrangements May 10, 98
- Grand Jury System, Ireland May 18, 723
- Irish Mail Service May 11, 194, 195; May 14, 496
- Italian Ice-cream Vendors May 21, 1028
- Labourers (Ireland) Acts May 27, 1408
- Land
  - Law (Ireland) Acts, Royal Commission May 24, 1148, 1149
  - Rating, Ireland May 20, 936
  - Sub-Commissions May 13, 363; May 17, 620
- Letterbreen Petty Sessions May 17, 617; May 18, 732; May 20, 931
- Loan Fund Societies, Ireland May 10, 108
- Longford
  - Annaly Estate May 28, 1507
  - Ardagh Burial Ground May 11, 198
  - Canal Harbour May 7, 4; May 18, 726; May 28, 1514
  - Eviction May 7, 3
- National School Teachers' Fund, Ireland May 17, 619
- Parliamentary Correspondence, Postage May 13, 365
- Pier and Harbour Provisional Orders (No. 1) Bill, 2R. May 14, 492
- Poor Law Relief (Ireland) Bill May 7, 17; May 21, 1028
- Post Office Establishments May 11, 200
- Railway Rates, Ireland May 11, 189
- Rooskey Bridge, Roscommon May 24, 1139
- Royal
  - Irish Constabulary, Tullyvin, Cavan May 11, 195
  - Patriotic Fund May 11, 195
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill 2R. May 12, 301
- Stationery Office May 28, 1510
- Supply
  - £8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 73
  - £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 561

FARRELL, Mr. J. P.—cont.
- Supply—cont.
  - £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1062
  - £7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 82
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 259
- Workmistresses, Irish National Schools May 24, 1137

FENWICK, Mr. CHARLES, Northumberland, Wansbeck
- Mining Accident, Durham May 7, 18
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 775; In Com. May 25, 1284, 1318; May 26, 1367; May 27, 1442, 1460, 1471

FERGUSSON, Right Hon. Sir J., Bart., Manchester, N.E.
- Business of the House, General May 13, 393; May 28, 1523
- Speeches in Parliament May 11, 242

FIELD, Admiral, Sussex, Eastbourne
- Royal Marines, Reserve May 14, 507

FIELD, Mr. W., Dublin, St. Patrick
- Agricultural Rating Act, Ireland May 24, 1142
- Army Remounts May 25, 1270
- College of Science, Dublin May 28, 1520
- Gambling in Produce Futures May 28, 1519
- Irish Fisheries May 27, 1414
- Portumna Railway May 27, 1415
- Queen's Reign, Treason-felony Prisoners May 27, 1412
- School Attendances, Ireland May 27, 1415
- Science Teachers May 25, 1260
- Supply: £24,037 for Harbours, Lighthouses, etc. May 28, 1546

Finance Acts (Works of Art)
- Earl Stanhope, (Motion) 1489, 1501; Earl of Leven and Melville, 1493; Lord Leconfield, 1494; Lord Kelvin, 1495; Earl of Crawford, 1496; Lord Stanley of Alderley, 1498; Viscount Cross, 1499, 1501; Viscount Clifden, 1501; (Motion negatived, 1501) May 28

Finance Bill
- c. Read 1° May 11, 205
  - 2R., Mr. J. Lowther, (Amendt.) 954, 963, 987, 993, 995, 1010; Mr. G. Harwood, 963, 979; Mr. Vesey Knox, 964, 965; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 965; Captain Pretyman, 968, 973, 974, 975, 996, 1002; Sir W. Harcourt, 973, 994, 995, 996, 998, 1002, 1008; Sir H. Fowler, 973, 974, 975, 1010; Mr. T. Lough, 981, 983; Sir M. Hicks Beach, 983, 984, 986, 987, 993, 1007, 1011; Sir H. Maxwell, 984; Major Rasch, 1009; Mr. J. Dillon, 1011; Sir J. T. Brunner, 1011; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1012) May 20
  - Read 2° May 20, 1012
  - In Com., R.P. May 24, 1213
  - (For Questions see WAYS AND MEANS)

[cont.

FINCH-HATTON, Hon. HAROLD H., Notts, Newark
Post Office, Gratuities to Postmen May 13, 372
Rating Assessment May 13, 371

FINLAY, SIR ROBERT B. (Solicitor General), Inverness Burghs
Post Office Consolidation Bill, 2R. May 11, 229

Fisheries Acts Amendment Bill
l. Pres., Earl of Dudley ; Read 1ª May 14, 464

FITZGERALD, Sir R. U. PENROSE, Bart., Cambridge
Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1056

FLANNERY, Mr. J. FORTESCUE, Yorkshire, W.R., Shipley
Mercantile Marine, Foreign Officers and Engineers May 18, 724

FLAVIN, Mr. M. J., Kerry, N.
Army Regulations, St. Patrick's Day May 28, 1521
Ballybunion (Kerry)
Bonâ-fide Travellers May 11, 196
Cashen River
Overflowing May 13, 377
Salmon Fishing May 25, 1256
Castleblaney Petty Sessions May 27, 1427
Cork and Tralee Prisons May 14, 498
Education Centre Superintendents, Ireland May 20, 912
Irish
Fisheries May 27, 1413
Mail Service May 28, 1513
Kerry
Ballybunion (see above)
Estates, Receivers May 21, 1024
Grand Jury May 21, 1026, 1027
Police Force May 27, 1414, 1415
Salleen Pier May 27, 1426
Land Commission, Ireland May 25, 1265
Light Railways, Ireland May 24, 1136
Listowel
Ormathwaite Property May 14, 498, 499
Potato Crop May 28, 1512
Maryborough Prison : Prisoner Thomas Collins May 10, 109 ; May 21, 1025, 1026 ; May 27, 1413
Naval Manœuvres May 28, 1521
Ormathwaite Property, Listowel May 14, 498, 499
Police Force, Kerry May 27, 1414, 1415
Post Office Establishments May 28, 1512
Potato Crop, Listowel May 28, 1512
Queen's Reign
Auxiliary Postmen May 28, 1508
Treason-felony Prisoners May 18, 725, 726 ; May 27, 1412
Veterans' Pensions May 28, 1510
River Feale Fishing May 24, 1130

[cont.

FLAVIN, Mr. M. J.—cont.
Salleen Pier, Kerry May 27, 1426
Salmon Fishing, Cashen River May 25, 1256
Supply : £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1083, 1084, 1085, 1086, 1087
Voters' Lists, Westmeath May 27, 1424

Floods Prevention Bill
l. Pres., Lord Thring ; Read 1ª May 31, 1594

FLOWER, Mr. E., Bradford, W.
Navy, Personnel May 31, 1613

FLYNN, Mr. J. C., Cork, N.
Judiciary, Ireland May 21, 1038
Land Commission, Ireland May 17, 620
Supply
£68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 558
£40,229 for Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions, Ireland May 21, 1104
£3,880 for Public Record Office, Ireland May 21, 1105, 1107
£189,367 for Rates on Government Property May 28, 1557
Tokat Massacre May 21, 1036 ; May 25, 1257, 1258

FOREIGN OFFICE

Secretary of State—Marquess of SALISBURY
Under Secretary of State—Mr. G. N. CURZON

Armistice Turco-Greek War, Qs. Mr. C. P. Scott ; As. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1039 ; May 24, 1143
Brussels Act, Qs. Sir J. H. Kennaway, Sir C. Dilke ; As. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1034
Congo State, Qs. Sir C. Dilke ; As. Mr. Curzon May 11, 193 ; May 18, 720
Crete, General, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon ; As. Mr. Curzon May 13, 380 ; May 14, 508. Q. Mr. F. S. Stevenson ; A. Mr. Curzon May 17, 626. Q. Mr. J. H. Roberts ; A. Mr. Curzon May 20, 931. Qs. Mr. G. Lambert ; As. Mr. Curzon May 24, 1142. Qs. Mr. J. Dillon ; As. Mr. Curzon May 25, 1270 ; May 31, 1636
Delagoa Bay, Arbitration Award, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton ; A. Mr. Curzon May 28, 1520
Dingley Tariff Bill (United States), Q. Major Jameson ; A. Mr. Curzon May 25, 1268
Duty on Herrings, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir ; As. Mr. Curzon May 24, 1136
Expulsion of Mr. Macpherson from Paris, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall ; A. Mr. Curzon May 11, 193
Foreign Consular Corps, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. H. S. Foster ; A. Mr. Curzon May 24, 1127
Fugitive Slaves, Zanzibar, Q. Sir C. Dilke ; A. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1025. Qs. Sir J. H. Kennaway, Sir C. Dilke ; As. Mr. Curzon May 28, 1516

[cont.

FOREIGN OFFICE—cont.
- Greece and the Powers, Q. Earl of Kimberley; A. Marquess of Salisbury May 10, 85. Qs. Mr. J. Morley; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 11, 201
- Kassala, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Curzon May 20, 915
- Liquor Traffic in Africa, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Curzon May 31, 1608
- Massacre, Tokat, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1036; May 25, 1257
- Murder of Yusaf Yunan, Qs. Mr. F. S. Stevenson; As. Mr. Curzon May 31, 1617
- Queen's Reign, Foreign Consular Corps, Q. Mr. H. S. Foster; A. Mr. Curzon May 24, 1127
- Raiatea, Disturbances, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Curzon May 10, 103
- Royal Niger Company, Q. Lord Stanmore; [Obs. Earl of Kimberley;] A. Marquess of Salisbury May 24, 1109
- Scotch Herrings at St. Petersburg, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Curzon May 13, 380
- Slavery in Zanzibar, Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Curzon May 14, 506
- Tokat Massacre, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1036; May 25, 1257
- Trawling, Moray Firth, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Curzon May 25, 1256
- Turco-Greek War
  - Armistice, Qs. Mr. C. P. Scott; As. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1039; May 24, 1143
  - Miscellaneous, Q. General McCalmont; A. Mr. Curzon May 10, 100. Qs. Mr. J. Morley; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 119; May 13, 393. Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Curzon May 20, 926
- Uganda Railway, Q. Mr. R. W. Perks; A. Mr. Curzon May 27, 1430
- Yusaf Yunan, Murder of, Qs. Mr. F. S. Stevenson; As. Mr. Curzon May 31, 1617
- Zanzibar
  - British Officers, Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Curzon May 28, 1516
  - Fugitive Slaves, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Curzon May 21, 1025. Qs. Sir J. H. Kennaway, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Curzon May 28, 1516
  - Slavery in, Q. Mr. J. A. Pease; A. Mr. Curzon May 14, 506

Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill
- c. 2R., Mr. Ritchie, 395, 399, 401, 412, 419; Mr. E. Robertson, 399, 418, 419, 429; Mr. J. H. Dalziel, (Amendt.) 399, 401, 426; Mr. T. P. Whittaker, 404, 432, 433; Sir H. Vincent, 407, 415, 436, 439; Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, 411, 412; Mr. J. Burns, 413, 415, 431; Mr. W. C. Quilter, 416, 417; [Mr. Speaker, 417:] Mr. J. Chamberlain, 419, 423, 426, 429, 430, 431, 433, 439; Mr. T. H. Cochrane, 421; Mr. J. Samuel, 422; Mr. J. Bryce, 429, 430, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439; Mr. J. Lowther, 437, 438; Mr. S. Hoare, 442; Mr. W. Allan, 443; Mr. J. Lowles, 444; Sir J. T. Brunner, 445; (Division, 446) May 13
- Read 2° May 13, 447
- On Motion, That Bill be com. to Standing Com. on Trade, etc., Mr. J. Samuel, 712 May 17

FORWOOD, Right Hon. Sir A. B., Bart., Lancashire, S.W., Ormskirk
- Mercantile Marine, Foreign Officers and Engineers May 18, 724
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1162, 1172, In Com. 1189, 1193; May 25, 1289; May 31, 1678

FOSTER, Mr. H. S., Suffolk, Lowestoft
- Queen's Reign
  - Foreign Consular Corps May 24, 1127
  - Jubilee Procession May 7, 9
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1673

FOSTER, Sir B. WALTER, Derby, Ilkeston
- Administration of Oaths, Courts of Justice May 21, 1037
- Aldershot Camp Sewage Farm May 11, 196
- Colliery Accident, Polesworth May 25, 1255
- Housing of the Working Classes Act May 18, 722
- Water Supply, Urswick May 7, 8

FOWLER, Right Hon. Sir HENRY H., Wolverhampton, E.
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill May 10, 122, In Com. 131
- Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 973, 974, 975, 1010
- Incorporated Law Society, Judicial Duties, Expenses May 11, 250, 252
- Local Government Electors May 25, 1267
- Post Office Establishments May 7, 7, 8
- Supply: £18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead May 28, 1551

GALLOWAY, Mr. W. J., Manchester, S.W.
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 24, 1186, 1209; May 25, 1311, 1325; May 26, 1385; May 27, 1435, 1447, 1466, 1467, 1468

GEDGE, Mr. SYDNEY, Walsall
- Business of the House
  - General May 10, 115
  - Morning Sittings on Tuesday May 10, 120
- Llandudno Urban District Council Bill, 3R. May 20, 906
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1362

GEORGE, Mr. D. LLOYD- (see LLOYD-GEORGE)

GILES, Mr. C. T., Cambridge, Wisbech
- Cattle Food, Imported May 31, 1631
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1675

GILHOOLY, Mr. JAMES, Cork, W.
- Land Commission, Ireland May 31, 1604

GODDARD, Mr. D. F., Ipswich
- Juvenile Offenders May 18, 720

GORST, RIGHT HON. SIR JOHN E. (Vice President of the Council), Cambridge University
- Antiquities, Ireland May 27, 1410; May 28, 1519
- College of Science, Dublin May 28, 1520
- Education
  - Department
    - England May 7, 11
    - Examiners May 11, 191
  - Secondary May 24, 1133
  - Technical May 14, 502
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill May 7, 6; In Com. May 10, 123, 124, 125, 132, 138, 151; 3R. May 20, 948
- Honiton
  - Elementary School, Holy Week May 14, 498
  - National Schools May 20, 916
- Irish Antiquities May 27, 1410; May 28, 1519
- Llanbedr School Board May 31, 1623
- Llangollen School Board May 20, 920; May 31, 1633
- North Mundham School Board May 24, 1129
- Queen's Reign
  - School
    - Attendances May 20, 914
    - Examinations May 21, 1030
    - Holidays May 14, 495
- Royal Irish Academy May 10, 105, 106
- School Boards
  - Divisions, London May 24, 1128
  - Llanbedr May 31 1623
  - Llangollen May 20, 920; May 31, 1633
  - Loans May 20, 916
  - North Mundham May 24, 1129
- School Boards Expenses Bill, Intro. May 17, 635
- Science and Art
  - Classes, Ireland May 21, 1036
  - Schools, Grants May 13, 367
- Secondary Education May 24, 1133
- Technical Education May 14, 502
- Voluntary Schools Act May 7, 6; May 10, 92; May 13, 373

GOSCHEN, RIGHT HON. GEORGE J. (First Lord of the Admiralty), St. George's, Hanover Square
- Artillery Practice, Plymouth Sound May 27, 1419
- Naval Manœuvres May 28, 1521
- Navy
  - Personnel May 31, 1613
  - Pulmonary Diseases May 7, 14
- Queen's Reign
  - Jubilee Procession May 7, 9
  - Naval Review May 28, 1508; May 31, 1615
  - Royal Naval Reserve May 28, 1510
- Royal
  - Marines, Reserve May 14, 507
  - Naval Reserve
    - Queen's Reign May 28, 1510
    - Stornoway May 31, 1609

GOULDING, MR. E. A., Wilts, Devizes
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 766; In Com. May 31, 1653

GRAY, MR. ERNEST, West Ham, N.
- East London Water Bill May 13, 353, 360
- Education, Half-time Scholars May 10, 92
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill May 7, 6; In Com. May 10, 123, 124, 128, 150; 3R. May 20, 951
- Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 215
- Voluntary Schools Act May 7, 5; May 13, 373

GREENE, MR. H. D., Shrewsbury
- Judge Advocate General's Department May 31 1635

GRICE-HUTCHINSON, CAPTAIN G. W., Aston Manor
- Army Reserve May 25, 1258

GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN, MR. A. S. T., Kent, Tunbridge
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 140

Griffith's Valuation (Ireland)
- Viscount Clifden, (Personal Statement) May 24 1116

Ground Game Act (Extension to Copyholders) Bill
- c. Intro., Mr. F. A. Channing; Read 1° May 18, 734

HALDANE, MR. R. B., Haddington
- Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 347
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1158, In Com. 1205; May 25, 1306, 1329, 1342; May 26, 1368; May 27, 1436 1469

HALSBURY, LORD (Lord Chancellor)
- Church Patronage Transfers Bill, 2R. May 14, 465
- Conveyancing Bill, 2R. May 13, 327
- Copyright Amendment Bill, 2R. May 31, 1601
- Dublin Corporation Bill May 14, 461, 464
- Juries Detention Bill, 2R. May 10, 87

HAMILTON, RIGHT HON. LORD GEORGE F. (Secretary of State for India), Middlesex, Ealing
- Black Watch Regiment, Subathu May 25 1252
- Board of Revenue, Madras May 31, 1607
- British Troops in India, Health May 14, 503
- Chitral Medal May 17, 629
- Compensation Allowances, European and Indian Officials May 20, 935
- India
  - Ancient Monuments May 13, 383
  - Army Staff Appointments May 27, 1429; May 31, 1619, 1620
  - Civil Uncovenanted Service May 14, 508

HAMILTON, Right Hon. Lord GEORGE F.—cont.
- India—cont.
  - Exchange Compensation May 13, 361, 362
  - Expenditure May 20, 936
  - Salt Duty May 13, 384
- Indian
  - Midland and Bengal-Nagpur Railways May 20, 925
  - Police May 31, 1627
  - Staff Corps May 27, 1422
- Jhalawar May 27, 1428
- Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 31, 1615
- Radhanpur, State Property May 10, 111

HAMMOND, Mr. JOHN, Carlow
- Seed Potatoes Supply (Ireland) Act 1895 May 14, 503

HANBURY, RIGHT HON. R. W. (Financial Secretary to the Treasury), Preston
- Agricultural Rating Act, Ireland May 24, 1142
- Argentine Cattle Trade May 24, 1132
- Artisans' Dwellings, London May 31, 1610
- Ballinamore Canal May 20, 908, 909; May 27, 1408
- Blackrock Township Commissioners May 10, 115; May 13, 387
- Business of the House
  - General May 13, 449
  - Supply: Civil Service Votes May 20, 939
- Carna Postal Deliveries May 10, 100
- Cavan Postal Facilities May 27, 1405
- Civil Service
  - Second Division Clerks May 17, 622
  - Temporary Men Copyists May 28, 1513
- Commissioners of Public Works, Ireland May 13, 366
- Cork Postmen May 13, 389
- Custom House, London May 24, 1135
- Delivery of Letters
  - Ireland May 17, 629
  - United Kingdom May 13, 370
- Dog Licences
  - Drumlithie (Kincardineshire) May 14, 501
  - Govan May 21, 1026
- Dundalk Post Office May 20, 929
- Dungeness Telegraph Office May 13, 378
- Edinburgh University May 25, 1263
- Education
  - Department, Junior Examiners May 31, 1612
  - Offices, Dublin May 21, 1027
- Female Post Office Clerks May 10, 98
- Glasgow Telephone Service May 20, 928
- Glebe Act, Ireland May 24, 1147; May 27, 1424
- Indian and Australian Mails May 18, 731
- Irish
  - Chronicles and Memorials May 28, 1515
  - Mail Service May 10, 97; May 11, 194, 195; May 14, 496, 497; May 17, 625; May 24, 1144, 1145; May 25, 1265; May 28, 1513; May 31, 1625

[cont.

HANBURY, Right Hon. R. W.—cont.
- Letters
  - Delivery of
    - Ireland May 17, 629
    - United Kingdom May 13, 370
  - H.M.'s Ships, for May 17, 615
  - Official Postmarks May 17, 627
- Lewis
  - Postal Facilities May 10, 91
  - Post Office May 11, 190; May 20, 909
- Local Loan Fund May 21, 1023
- Londonderry Lunatic Asylum May 24, 1137
- Loughshinny Pier, Dublin May 13, 387
- Mails
  - Indian and Australian May 18, 731
  - Irish May 10, 97; May 11, 194, 195; May 14, 496, 497; May 17, 625; May 24, 1144, 1145; May 25, 1265; May 28, 1513; May 31, 1625
- Official Postmarks on Letters May 17, 627
- Oldham Telegrams May 18, 727
- Parcel Post May 21, 1032
- Parish Councils, Scotland May 13, 368
- Parliamentary
  - Correspondence, Postage May 13, 365
  - Voters' Lists, Revision May 14, 509
- Piers, Loughshinny (Dublin) May 13, 387
- Pneumatic Messages May 31, 1624, 1625
- Postal
  - Deliveries
    - Carna May 10, 100
    - Circulars May 27, 1430
    - Ireland May 14, 499
  - Facilities
    - Cavan May 27, 1405
    - Lewis May 10, 91
  - Orders May 28, 1515
  - Telegraph Offices May 25, 1264
- Post Cards May 17, 627
- Postmen
  - Auxiliary, Queen's Reign May 28, 1508
  - Cork May 13, 389
  - Gratuities to May 13, 372
  - Rural
    - Dismissal May 28, 1522
    - Ireland May 24, 1141
- Post Offices
  - Adult Messengers May 31, 1609
  - Delivery of Letters
    - Ireland May 17, 629
    - United Kingdom May 13, 370
  - Dundalk May 20, 929
  - Establishments May 7, 7; May 17, 631; May 18, 731; May 20, 912; May 28, 1512
  - Female Clerks May 10, 98
  - Gratuities to Postmen May 13, 372
  - Guide May 25, 1253
  - Lewis May 11, 190; May 20, 909
  - Overtime May 31, 1630
  - Prosecution May 25, 1259
  - Savings Bank May 13, 368; May 20, 923; May 25, 1253
- Post Office (Sites) Bill, Intro. May 13, 395
- Queen's Reign
  - Adverse Records May 17, 630
  - Auxiliary Postmen May 28, 1508
  - Closing Telegraph Offices May 13, 374
  - Jubilee Day May 27, 1412
- Rural Postmen
  - Dismissal May 28, 1522
  - Ireland May 24, 1141

[cont.

Hanbury, Right Hon. R. W.—cont.
- Seed Potatoes Supply (Ireland) Act, 1895 May 14, 503, 504
- Stamp
  - Duty, Ireland May 17, 525
  - Illustrations May 20, 910
- Stationery Office May 28, 1511
- Supply
  - £8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 71, 74, 77
  - £7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 80, 82, 83
  - £189,367 for Rates on Government Property May 28, 1559
  - £132,291 for Survey of the United Kingdom May 28, 1525, 1530, 1531, 1533
- Telegrams
  - Non-delivery May 17, 618
  - Oldham May 18, 727
- Telegraph
  - Addresses May 13, 370
  - Charges May 13, 371 ; May 21, 1033
  - Offices
    - Balcarra (Mayo) May 20, 919
    - Closing, Queen's Reign May 13, 374
    - Dungeness May 13, 378
    - Number of May 25, 1264
    - Public Guarantee May 10, 107 ; May 13, 370
  - Posts, Yeovil May 13, 379
- Telephone
  - Service, Glasgow May 20, 928
  - System, Peterborough May 31, 1605
- Tuskar Light, Telephonic Communication May 10, 93
- Upper Division Clerks, Charity Commission May 11, 191
- Waterford Dungarvan and Lismore Railway May 7, 11 ; May 13, 378 ; May 20, 939
- Yeovil Telegraph Posts May 13, 379

Harcourt, Right Hon. Sir W. Vernon, Monmouthshire, W.
- Business of the House
  - General May 17, 632 ; May 31, 1637
  - Supply : Colonial Office Vote May 18, 733
- Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 973, 994, 995, 996, 998, 1002, 1008

Hardy, Mr. Laurence, Kent, Ashford
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1318, 1327

Harrington, Mr. T., Dublin, Harbour
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 283

Harrison, Mr. Charles, Plymouth
- Incorporated Law Society, Judicial Duties, Expense May 11, 245
- Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 207
- Sunken Wrecks, Plymouth Fishing Ground May 17, 616
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1302, 1305 ; May 31 1640, 1682, 1701

Hart Dyke, Right Hon. Sir W., Bart. (see Dyke)

Harwood, Mr. George, Bolton
- Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 963, 979

Haslett, Sir James H., Belfast, N.
- Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1057
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 297

Hazell, Mr. Walter, Leicester
- Midwives Registration Act May 13, 390
- Supply : £7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 80, 81

Healy, Mr. Maurice, Cork City
- Appeal in Certain Civil Matters (Ireland) Bill, In Com. May 11, 235, 236
- Business of the House, General May 13, 449
- Estates Return, Ireland May 13, 384
- Irish
  - Acts, Codification May 13, 384, 385
  - Mail Service May 14, 497
- Land Commission, Ireland May 17, 621 ; May 20, 926
- Married Women (Ireland) Bill, Intro. May 19, 872
- Parliamentary Voters' Lists, Revision May 14, 508
- Postmen, Cork May 13, 388
- Post Office Consolidation Bill, 2R. May 11, 228
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 286, 294
- Supply : £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 549, 562, 569
- Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland) Act (1877) Amendment Bill, Intro. May 14, 512

Healy, Mr. Timothy M., Louth, N.
- Cape Garrison May 14, 492, 493, 494
- Land Commission, Ireland May 17, 621
- Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1050
- Lough Mask and Ballinrobe Canal May 14, 494
- Model Schools, Ireland May 7, 3
- Poor Law Relief (Ireland) Bill May 7, 17
- Post Office, Dundalk May 20, 929
- Supply
  - £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 513, 514, 515, 523, 524, 530, 531, 533, 540, 550, 551, 553, 557
  - £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1061

Heaton, Mr. J. Henniker, Canterbury
- Business of the House, General May 25, 1272
- Delagoa Bay Arbitration Award May 28, 1520
- Letters, Official Postmarks May 17, 627
- Parcel Post May 21, 1032
- Post Cards May 17, 627
- Post Office Consolidation Bill, 2R. May 11, 225
- Stamp Illustrations May 20, 910
- Telegraph
  - Addresses May 13, 370
  - Charges May 13, 371 ; May 21, 1033

HEDDERWICK, Mr. T. C. H., Wick Burghs
- Prison System, Scotland May 10, 106 ; May 24, 1127
- Private Bill Legislation, Scotland May 13, 391

HELDER, Mr. AUGUSTUS, Whitehaven
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 676

HEMPHILL, Right Hon. Serjeant C. H., Tyrone, N.
- Irish Chronicles and Memorials May 28, 1514
- Supply: £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1082, 1083

HERMON-HODGE, Mr. R. T., Oxon, Henley
- Parish Councils Association May 25, 1253, 1254

HERSCHELL, Lord
- Church Patronage Transfers Bill, 2R. May 14, 465
- Copyright Amendment Bill, 2R. May 31, 1599
- Juries Detention Bill, 2R. May 10, 88
- Municipal Franchise, Ireland May 20, 893
- Provisional Order (Scotland) Bill, 2R. May 20, 892

HICKMAN, Sir A., Wolverhampton, W.
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 777 ; In Com. May 25, 1325 ; May 26, 1355

HICKS-BEACH, Sir MICHAEL E., Bart. (see BEACH)

Highgate Woods Preservation Bill
- c. Intro., Mr. H. C. Stephens ; Read 1° May 18, 718

HILL, Colonel Sir E. S., Bristol, S.
- Red Sea, Lighting May 10, 99
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 665 ; May 24, 1162 ; In Com. May 31, 1680

HOARE, Mr. SAMUEL, Norwich
- Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 442

HOBHOUSE, Mr. H., Somerset, E.
- Speeches in Parliament May 11, 243
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 258
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1672

HOGAN, Mr. J. F., Tipperary, Mid
- Army
  - Horses May 10, 104
  - Remounts May 18, 729

[cont.

HOGAN, Mr. J. F.—cont.
- British
  - Museum May 31, 1636
  - Zukon Chartered Company May 31, 1631
- Canadian
  - Fast Atlantic Service May 25, 1267
  - Mail Service May 31, 1619
- Covent Garden Theatre Fund May 18, 729 ; May 31, 1603
- Manitoba
  - Colonisation Board May 25, 1261
  - Crofters' Settlements May 18, 730
- Queensland May 10, 112 ; May 25, 1256
- Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 10, 95 ; May 25, 1261
- Raiatea, Disturbances May 10, 103

HOLBURN, Mr. J. G., Lanark, N.W.
- Queen's Reign, Poor Laws May 28, 1508

HOLLAND, Hon. L. R., Tower Hamlets, Bow and Bromley
- Military Prisons May 31, 1621
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 737 ; In Com. May 27, 1476 1477

HOME DEPARTMENT

Secretary of State—Sir M. W. RIDLEY
Under Secretary of State—Mr. JESSE COLLINGS

- Amnesty to Irish Prisoners, Queen's Reign, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin ; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 725. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. W. Field ; [Mr. Speaker ;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1412. Q. Mr. J. Daly ; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1510
- Boiler Explosions Acts, Q. Sir W. H. Houldsworth ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 17, 623
- Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum : Hewson (Isabella), Q. Sir H. S. King ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1421
- Burial, Premature, Qs. Mr. J. C. Macdona ; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 24, 1139
- Burnley, Discharge of Weavers, Q. Mr. P. J. Stanhope ; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 14, 500
- Cleaning Machinery in Motion, Q. Sir C. Dilke ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 28, 1506
- Colliery Accident, Polesworth, Q. Sir B. W. Foster ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1255
- Cruelty to Animals, London, Qs. Captain Donelan ; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1410
- Discharge of Weavers, Burnley, Q. Mr. P. J. Stanhope ; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 14, 500
- Factory and Workshops Act 1895, Dock and Wharf Machinery, Q. Mr. Sydney Buxton ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1266

[cont.

HOME DEPARTMENT—cont.

Gambling Raid, Hull, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 13, 381

Gipsies, Qs. Mr. T. Skewes-Cox, Mr. Swift MacNeill; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 732

Hull, Gambling Raid, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 13, 381

Italian Ice-cream Vendors, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 21, 1028

Juvenile Offenders, Q. Mr. D. F. Goddard; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 720

Laundry Workers, Q. Mr. D. Lloyd-George; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 14, 507

Lead Poisoning, Q. Mr. R. McKenna; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 24, 1134

Local Government Electors, Q. Sir H. Fowler; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1267

Metropolitan Police

Adverse Records, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. J. Lowles; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 17, 629

Extra Allowance to, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 21, 1029. Q. Captain Norton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1412

Metropolitan Police Courts Bill, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Mr. Jesse Collings, Sir M. Hicks Beach, Sir Matthew White Ridley May 7, 14

Mines and Quarries, Statistics, Q. Mr. D. A. Thomas; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 11, 197

Mining Accident, Durham, Q. Mr. C. Fenwick; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 7, 18

Paris Fire, Safety of Public Buildings, Qs. Mr. J. Aird, Mr. T. G. Fardell; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 10, 95

Performing Bears, Streets, Q. Colonel Dalbiac; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 14, 506

Prison

Clerks, Q. Mr. H. C. F. Luttrell; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 718

Reading, Discharge of Warder, Qs. Mr. M. Davitt; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1266; May 27, 1420

Probation of First Offenders Act, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 21, 1033

Queen's Reign, Diamond Jubilee (see that Title)

Reading Prison, Discharge of Warder, Qs. Mr. M. Davitt; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1266; May 27, 1420

Sale of Food and Drugs Act Amendment Bill, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 27, 1431

Treason-felony Prisoners, Queen's Reign, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 725. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. W. Field; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1412. Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1510

Truck Act 1896, Qs. Sir C. Dilke; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 24, 1128

Warder, Reading Prison, Discharge of, Qs. Mr. M. Davitt; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1266; May 27, 1420

Weavers, Burnley, Discharge of, Q. Mr. P. J. Stanhope; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 14, 500

[cont.

HOME DEPARTMENT—cont.

Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 10, 107. Qs. Mr. H. Broadhurst, Sir C. Dilke, Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley, Mr. A. J. Balfour May 17, 623. Qs. Mr. H. Seton-Karr, Mr. J. Ellis; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 20, 932. Qs. Mr. H. Seton-Karr; As. Sir R. Webster May 27, 1432
(For Debates see Title of Bill)

Workmen (Compensation Insurance) Bill, Belgium, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 729

HOPETOUN, Earl of

Navy and Marines (Wills) Act (1865) Amendment Bill May 10, 88

HOPKINSON, Mr. A., Wilts, Cricklade

Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill In Com. May 25, 1295; May 26, 1380

HOULDSWORTH, Sir W. H., Bart., Manchester, N.W.

Boards of Guardians, Public Bills May 17, 628

Boiler Explosions Acts May 17, 623

Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 680

HOWELL, Mr. W. T., Denbigh Boroughs

Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 851, 854

Telegraph Offices, Public Guarantee May 10 107

HOZIER, Mr. J. H. C., Lanarkshire, S.

Cavalry Recruits May 24, 1132

Scots Greys May 7, 5

HUDSON, Mr. G. B., Herts, Hitchin

Postal Orders May 28, 1515

HUMPHREYS-OWEN, Mr. ARTHUR C., Montgomery

Berriew School Scheme May 31, 1621

Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 857, 862

Supply: £18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead May 28, 1555

HUTTON, Mr. JOHN, Yorkshire, N.R., Richmond

Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 3R. May 20, 941

INCHIQUIN, LORD

Land Legislation, Ireland May 25, 1241

Incorporated Law Society (Judicial Duties, Expense)

Mr. C. Harrison, (Motion) 245; Mr. W. Ambrose 246; Mr. T. Bucknill, 246; Mr. J. W. Mellor, 247; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 247, 250; Sir H. Fowler, 250, 252; Sir E. Clarke, 251; Sir M. Hicks Beach, 254; (Division, 256) May 11

INDIA

Secretary of State—Lord G. HAMILTON
Under Secretary of State—Earl of ONSLOW

Ancient Monuments, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 13, 383
Army Staff
- Appointments, Q. Captain Pirie; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 27, 1428
- Officers, Qs. Colonel Wyndham Murray, Captain Pirie; As. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1619

Black Watch Regiment, Subathu, Q. Colonel Wyndham Murray; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 25, 1251
Board of Revenue, Madras, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1606
British Troops in India (Health), Q. Mr. Stuart-Wortley; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 14, 502
(For Debates see that Title)
Chitral Medal, Q. Mr. T. R. Buchanan; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 17, 629
Civil (Uncovenanted) Service, Q. Mr. F. G. Barnes; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 14, 507
Compensation Allowance, European and Indian Officials, Qs. Sir W. Wedderburn; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Lord G. Hamilton May 20, 934
Crimean and Indian Veterans, Queen's Reign, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 27, 1413
East India Company's Officers' Superannuation Bill (see that Title)
Exchange Compensation, Qs. Sir H. S. King, Sir W. Wedderburn; As. Lord G. Hamilton May 13, 361
Expenditure, India, Q. Mr. M. M. Bhownaggree; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 20, 936
Indian
- Midland and Bengal-Nagpur Railways, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 20, 924
- Police, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 31 1627
- Services, Seats, Queen's Reign, Q. Sir H. S. King; A Mr. Akers-Douglas May 20, 914. Q. Captain Norton; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1615
- Staff Corps, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Lord G. Hamilton; May 27, 1421

Jhalawar, Qs. Mr. W. Jones, Mr. J. P. Smith; As. Lord G. Hamilton May 27, 1427
Madras, Board of Revenue, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1606
Mails, Indian and Australian, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Hanbury May 18, 730
Officers, Army Staff, Qs. Colonel Wyndham Murray, Captain Pirie; As. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1619
Police, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1627
Queen's Reign
- Crimean and Indian Veterans, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 27, 1413

INDIA—cont.
Queen's Reign—cont.
- Indian Services, Seats, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 20, 914. Q. Captain Norton; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1615
  (See also Title QUEEN'S REIGN, DIAMOND JUBILEE)

Radhanpur, State Property, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 10, 110
Salt Duty, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 13, 384

Industries (Ireland) Bill

c. In Com., Rep. May 13, 451
Considered as Amended May 14, 580
Read 3° and Passed May 14, 580
l. Read 1ª May 17, 581
2R., Earl of Mayo, 1234, 1240; Earl of Arran, 1235; Earl of Denbigh, 1235; Earl of Morley, 1236; Earl of Wemyss, 1239; Marquess of Salisbury, 1239 May 25
Withdrawn May 25, 1240

Infant Life Protection Bill

l. In Com., Lord Belper, (Amendts.) 315, (Amendt.) 323; (Amendts. Agreed to, 317); Earl of Denbigh, 316, 318, [New Clause] 321, 324; [Clause ordered to stand part of Bill, 321]; (Amendt. Agreed to, 324) May 13
Re-committed to Standing Com. May 13, 325
Rep. with further Amendts. May 18, 717
Amendts. Rep.; Earl of Denbigh, [New Clause] 1020; [Clause Added, 1021] May 21
Read 3ª; Amendts. made and Passed May 24, 1114

Insanity (see LUNACY)

IRELAND

Lord Lieutenant—Earl CADOGAN
Chief Secretary—Mr. G. W. BALFOUR
Lord Chancellor—Lord ASHBOURNE
Attorney General—Mr. J. ATKINSON
Solicitor General—Mr. W. KENNY

Addergoole and Ballynagoraher District, Castlebar Union, Q. Dr. Ambrose; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1146
Agricultural Rating Act (Ireland), Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1024. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1142
Agriculture and Industries (Ireland) Bill, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 501
Amnesty to Treason-felony Prisoners, Queen's Reign, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 725. Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1510
Annaly Estate, Longford, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1507
Antiquities, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Sir J. Gorst May 27, 1410. Q. Mr. W. E. H. Lecky; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1519
Appeal in Certain Civil Matters (Ireland) Bill (see that Title)

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Ardagh (Longford) Burial Ground, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 198
- Ard West Pier, Carna, Connemara, Q. Mr. W. O'Malley; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 99
- Army
  - Food and Forage Supplies, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Powell-Williams May 31, 1625
  - Regulations, St. Patrick's Day, Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill, Captain Donelan; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Brodrick May 10, 100
- Balbriggan Harbour, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 388
- Ballinamore Canal, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 908. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1407
- Ballybunion (Kerry)
  - Bonâ-fide Travellers, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 196
  - Cashen River
    - Overflowing, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 377
    - Salmon Fishing, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1256
- Bankruptcy Court, Q. Major Jameson; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1034
- Blackrock Township Commissioners, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 114. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 386
- Bonâ-fide Travellers, Ballybunion (Kerry), Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 196
- Brookeborough Petty Sessions, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 10, 109; May 14, 497
- Canals
  - Ballinamore, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 908. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1407
  - Inquiry, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 18, 723
  - Longford Harbour, Q Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 4. Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 726; May 28, 1514
  - Lough Mask and Ballinrobe, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 494
- Canals and Navigable Rivers (Ireland) Bill, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 10, 106
- Carna, Connemara
  - Ard West Pier, Q. Mr. W. O'Malley; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 99
  - Postal Delivery, Sunday, Q. Mr. W. O'Malley; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 100
- Carrickfergus, High Sheriff, Q. Mr. R. M Dane; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 504
- Cashen River
  - Overflowing, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 377
  - Salmon Fishing, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1256
- Castlebar Union, Addergoole and Ballynagoraher District, Q. Dr. R. Ambrose; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1146

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Castleblaney
  - Land Commission, Sligo and, Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 12
  - Petty Sessions, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1427
- Cavan
  - Distress Relief Works, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1517
  - Postal Facilities, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1404
  - Royal Irish Constabulary, Tullyvin, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 195
- Charges
  - Larceny, Tyrone, Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 21, 1032; May 25, 1269. Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 27, 1422
  - Murder
    - Omagh, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 921
    - Tyrone, Q. Mr. G. Murnaghan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 728
  - Robbery, Tyrone, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1143
- Collection of Rates, Dublin, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 113
- College of Science, Dublin, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1022. Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1145. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1520
- Commissioners of Public Works, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 366
- Constabulary, Royal Irish (see Royal Irish Constabulary below)
- Cork
  - Labourers' Cottages, Midleton Guardians, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 623
  - Postmen, Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 388
  - Tralee, and, Prisons, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 498
  - Wreck of S.S. Memphis, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 13
- Deportation of Paupers, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 374. Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 14, 509; May 17, 631
- Derry, Eviction, Durnascallon, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915
- Dingley Tariff Bill (United States), Q. Major Jameson; A. Mr. Curzon May 25, 1268
- Distress Relief Works, Cavan, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1517
- Drainage Works, Qs. Mr. J. Tully, Mr. P. C. Doogan; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 27, 1431
- Dublin
  - Collection of Rates, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 113
  - College of Science, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1022. Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1145. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1520
  - Education Office, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 21, 1027

[cont.

- IRELAND—cont.
  - Dublin—cont.
    - Loughshinny Pier, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 387
    - Veterinary College, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 386
  - Dublin Corporation Bill (see that Title)
  - Dundalk Post Office, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 929
  - Dungarvan and Lismore Railway, Q. Mr. P. J. Power; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 939
  - Education
    - Centre Superintendents, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 912
    - Office, Dublin, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 21, 1027
    - Technical, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1023
  - Epidemic, Irish Schools, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1134
  - Equity Sessions, Strabane, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 10
  - Estates
    - Annaly, Longford, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1507
    - Fermanagh School, Q. Mr. P. C. Doogan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1622
    - Kerry, Receivers, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1024
    - Littledale, Wicklow, Eviction, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 192. Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1613
    - Return, Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 13, 384
    - Shirley and Tennison, Monaghan, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1147
  - Evictions
    - Durnascallon (Derry), Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915
    - Littledale Estate, Wicklow, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 192. Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1613
    - Longford, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 3
  - Fermanagh
    - Petty Sessions, Letterbreen, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 617; May 18, 732. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 931
    - School Estate, Q. Mr. P. C. Doogan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1622
  - Fisheries
    - Irish, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. W. Field; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1413
    - Sea, Q. Mr. G. Murnaghan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 930
  - Fishery Inquiry, Listowel, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 31, 1633
  - Fishing
    - River Feale, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1130
    - Salmon, River Cashen, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1256
  - Franchise Acts 1885, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1261
  - Glebe Act (Ireland), Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1146; May 27, 1423

[cont.

- IRELAND—cont.
  - Granard
    - Police Arrangements, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 98
    - Union, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G Balfour May 31, 1628
  - Grand Jury
    - Accounts, Monaghan, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1147
    - Kerry, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1026
    - System, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 18, 723
  - Great Northern Railway Company of, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 12
  - Griffith's Valuation (see that Title)
  - Gun and Game Licences, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1630
  - Harbours
    - Balbriggan, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 388
    - Longford Canal, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 4. Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 726; May 28, 1514
  - High Sheriff, Carrickfergus, Q. Mr. R. M. Dane; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 504
  - Industrial Schools, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1258
  - Irish
    - Acts, Codification, Qs. Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 13, 384
    - Antiquities, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Sir J. Gorst May 27, 1410. Q. Mr. W. E. H. Lecky; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1519
    - Chronicles and Memorials, Q. Mr. Serjeant Hemphill; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1514
    - Schools, Epidemic Disease, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1134
  - Judiciary, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 21, 1038
  - Jurors Challenged, Tyrone, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 31, 1616
  - Kerry
    - Ballybunion
      - Bonâ-fide Travellers, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 196
      - Cashen River
        - Overflowing, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 377
        - Salmon Fishing, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1256
    - Estates, Receivers, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1024
    - Grand Jury, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1026
    - Police Force, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. D. Kilbride; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1414
    - Salleen Pier, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1426
    - Sneem Pier, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1629
  - Labourers' Cottages
    - Ireland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 623. Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 917
    - Meath, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 114

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.
- Labourers' Cottages—cont.
  - Midleton (Cork) Guardians, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 623
  - Strabane, Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1623
- Labourers (Ireland) Acts, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1408
- Land
  - Commission
    - Carrickmacross and Ballybay, Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 192
    - Castleblaney and Sligo, Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 12
    - Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 620. Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 925. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1265. Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Captain Donelan, Mr. J. Gilhooly; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1603
  - Commissioners, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 13, 364
  - Rating, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. T. Lough, Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 20, 936
  - Sub-Commissions, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. S. Young; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 363. Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 509
  - Valuation, Ireland, Qs. Viscount Clifden, Earl Spencer; As. Earl of Denbigh May 13, 338
- Land Law (Ireland) Act 1887, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1265
- Land Law (Ireland) Acts, Royal Commission, Q. Viscount Templetown; [Obs. Earl of Mayo;] A. Earl of Denbigh May 20, 896. Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 24, 1148
- Land Legislation (Ireland) (see that Title)
- Larceny, Charge of, Tyrone, Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 21, 1032; May 25, 1269. Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 27, 1422
- Leitrim, Burial Ground, Mohill, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 928
- Letterbreen Petty Sessions, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 617; May 18, 732. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 931
- Licences
  - Gun and Game, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1630
  - Publican's, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 923
- Light Railways (see Title RAILWAYS)
- Limerick, Petty Sessions Fees, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1629
- Listowel
  - Fishery Inquiry, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 31, 1633
  - Ormathwaite Property, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 498
  - Potato Crop, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1512

IRELAND—cont.
- Littledale Estate, Wicklow Eviction, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 192. Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1613
- Loan Fund
  - Board, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1518
  - Societies, Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill, Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. R. M. Dane; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 107
- Local Government
  - Board Auditors, Ireland, Q. Mr. J. H. Parnell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1416
  - Ireland, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 31, 1635
- Local Government (Ireland) Ministerial Proposals, (see that Title)
- Londonderry Lunatic Asylum, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. Hanbury, Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1137
- Longford
  - Annaly Estate, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1507
  - Ardagh Burial Ground, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 198
  - Canal Harbour, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 4. Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 726; May 28, 1514
  - Eviction, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 3
  - Union Workhouse, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1409
- Lough
  - Mask and Ballinrobe Canal, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 494
  - Neagh, Pollen Act, Qs. Mr. P. C. Doogan, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 920
- Loughshinny Pier, Dublin, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 387
- Lunatic Asylum, Londonderry, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. Hanbury, Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1137
- Macroom Guardians, Removal of Sick Paupers, Q. Mr. E. Barry; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 916.
- Mail Service, Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. D. Macaleese; As. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 97. Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. Hanbury May 11, 194. Qs. Mr. W. O'Malley, Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 496. Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill, Mr. R. M. Dane; As. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 624. Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. P. J. O'Brien; As. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1144. Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Hanbury May 25, 1265. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1513. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1625
- Maryborough Prison, Thomas Collins, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 109. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1025. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1413

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Mayo
  - Ordnance Survey, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 389. Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. W. Long May 17, 626
  - Telegraph Office, Balcarra, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 919
- Meath, Labourers' Cottages, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 114
- Mersey Docks Bill, Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1423
- Model Schools
  - Inquiry, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 3
  - Queen's Birthday, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915
- Mohill Burial Ground, Leitrim, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 928
- Monaghan
  - Grand Jury Accounts, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1147
  - Petty Sessions Courthouse, Newbliss, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1135
  - Shirley and Tennison Estates, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1147
- Monitors, National Schools, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1405
- Mullingar Union, Qs. Mr. J. Tully; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1031; May 27, 1424; May 28, 1518
- Municipal Franchise, Ireland, Q. Lord Herschell; [Obs. Lord Monteagle, Earl of Mayo;] A. Earl of Denbigh May 20, 893
- Murder, Charge of
  - Omagh, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 921
  - Tyrone, Q. Mr. G. Murnaghan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 728
- National Schools
  - Monitors, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1405
  - Teachers' Fund, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 619
  - Workmistresses, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1137
- Newbliss Petty Sessions Courthouse, Monaghan, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1135
- Omagh, Charge of Murder, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 921
- Ordnance Survey, Mayo, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 389. Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. W. Long May 17, 626
- Ormathwaite Property, Listowel, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 498
- Paupers
  - Deportation of, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 374. Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 14, 509; May 17, 631
  - Removal of Sick, Macroom Guardians, Q. Mr. E. Barry; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 916
- Petty Sessions
  - Brookeborough, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 10, 109; May 14, 497
  - Castleblaney, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1427

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Petty Sessions—cont.
  - Courthouse, Newbliss, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1135
  - Fees, Limerick, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1629
  - Letterbreen, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 617; May 18, 732. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 931
  - Magisterial Jurisdiction, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1037
- Piers
  - Ard West, Carna, Connemara, Q. Mr. W. O'Malley; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 99
  - Dublin, Loughshinny, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 387
  - Kerry
    - Salleen, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1426
    - Sneem, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1629
- Police
  - Arrangements, Granard, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 98
  - Force, Kerry, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. D. Kilbride; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1414
  - Pensioners, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1269
- Pollen Act, Lough Neagh, Qs. Mr. P. C. Doogan, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 920
- Poor Law Relief (Ireland) Bill, Qs. Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 17. Qs. Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 14, 511. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1028
- Portumna Railway, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. D. Kilbride; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1415
- Postal
  - Delivery
    - Carna, Sunday, Q. Mr. W. O'Malley; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 100
    - House to House, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 499
  - Facilities, Cavan, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1404
- Postmen
  - Cork, Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 388
  - Rural, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1141
- Post Office, Dundalk, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 929
- Potato Crops
  - Ireland, Qs. Mr. P. McDermott, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 504
  - Listowel District, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1512
- Prisons
  - Cork and Tralee, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 498
  - Maryborough, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 109. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1025. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1413

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

Private Bill Legislation, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. J. J. Clancy; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 93
Publican's Licence, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 923
Public Works Commissioners, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 366
Quarter Sessions Jurors (Ireland) Bill (see that Title)
Queen's
Birthday, Model Schools in, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915
Colleges, Qs. Mr. J. Pinkerton, Mr. W. Johnston; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 922
Queen's Reign
Royal Irish Constabulary, Q. Mr. J. C. Macdona; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1030
Treason-felony Prisoners, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 725. Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1510
Railways
Great Northern of, Company, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 12
Light (see under Title RAILWAYS)
Portumna, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. D. Kilbride; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1415
Waterford Dungarvan and Lismore, Qs. Mr. P. J. Power; As. Mr. Hanbury May 7, 11; May 13, 378; May 20, 939
Rathkeale Union, Election of Guardian, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1030
Religious Orders, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1267
Revenue, Great Britain and Ireland, Q. Mr. J. Morley; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 13, 382
River Feale Fishing, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1130
Rivers
Cashen
Overflowing, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 377
Salmon Fishing, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1256
Feale, Fishing, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1130
Robbery, Charge of, Tyrone, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1143
Rooskey Bridge, Roscommon, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1139
Roscommon, Rooskey Bridge, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1139
Royal
College of Science, Dublin, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1022. Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1145. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1520
Irish
Academy, Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill; As. Sir J. Gorst May 10, 105
Constabulary
Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. J. C. Macdona; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1030
Tullyvin (Cavan), Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 195

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

Rural Postmen, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1141
Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill (see that Title)
Salleen Pier, Kerry, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1426
Salmon Fishing, Cashen River, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1256
Schools
Attendances, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1415
Estate, Fermanagh, Q. Mr. P. C. Doogan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1622
Industrial, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1258
Irish, Epidemic, Q. Mr. J. L, Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1134
Model
Inquiry, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 3
Queen's Birthday, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915
National
Monitors, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1405
Teachers' Fund, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 619
Workmistresses, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1137
Science
Classes, Art, and, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Sir J. Gorst May 21, 1036
Royal College of, Dublin, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1022. Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1145. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Sir J. Gorst May 28, 1520
Teachers, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1260
Sea Fisheries, Q. Mr. G. Murnaghan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 930
Seed Potatoes Supply (Ireland) Act 1895, Qs. Mr. J. Hammond; As. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 503
Sheriffs
High, Carrickfergus, Q. Mr. R. M Dane; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 504
Westmeath, Appointment of, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1628
Shirley and Tennison Estates, Monaghan, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1147
Shorthorn Bulls, Ireland, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1146
Sligo and Castleblaney, Land Commission, Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 12
Sneem Pier, Kerry, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1629
Stamp Duty, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 625
Strabane
Equity Sessions, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 10
Labourer's Cottage, Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1623
Teachers
Fund, National School, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 619
Science, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1260

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Technical Education, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1023
- Telegraph Office, Balcarra (Mayo), Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 919
- Telephonic Communication, Tuskar Light, Q. Mr. G. Drage; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 93. Q. Mr. G. Drage; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1405
- Treason-felony Prisoners, Q. Mr. Swift MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 15. (See also Queen's Reign above)
- Tuskar Light, Telephonic Communication, Q. Mr. G. Drage; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 93. Q. Mr. G. Drage; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1405
- Tyrone
  - Charge of
    - Larceny, Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 21, 1032; May 25, 1269. Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 27, 1422
    - Murder, Q. Mr. G. Murnaghan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 728
    - Robbery, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1143
  - Jurors Challenged, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 31, 1616
- Unions
  - Castlebar, Addergoole and Ballynagoraher District, Q. Dr. R. Ambrose; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1146
  - Granard, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1628
  - Mullingar, Qs. Mr. J. Tully; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1031; May 27, 1424; May 28, 1518
  - Rathkeale, Election of Guardian, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1030
  - Workhouse, Longford, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1409
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 18, 730 (For Debate see Title of Bill)
- Veterinary College, Dublin, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 386
- Voters' List, Westmeath, Q. Mr. D. Sullivan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 25, 1270. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 27, 1424
- Waterford Dungarvan and Lismore Railway, Q. Mr. P. J. Power; A. Mr. Hanbury May 7, 11; May 13, 378; May 20, 939
- Westmeath
  - Sheriff, Appointment of, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1628
  - Voters' Lists, Q. Mr. D. Sullivan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 25, 1270. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 27, 1424
- Wicklow, Eviction, Littledale Estate, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 192. Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1613
- Workhouse, Longford Union, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1409
- Workmistresses, Irish National Schools, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1137
- Wreck of S.S. Memphis, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 13

ISAACSON, Mr. F. WOOTTON, Tower Hamlets, Stepney

- Queen's Reign, East End Procession May 13, 375

Isle of Man (Church Building Acts) Bill

- c. Read 1° May 17, 635

JAMESON, Major J. EUSTACE, Clare, W.

- Bankruptcy Court, Ireland May 21, 1034
- Dingley Tariff Bill, United States May 25, 1268
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 275

JEFFREYS, Mr. A. F., Hants, Basingstoke

- Lock Hospitals May 18, 719, 720
- Post Office, Delivery of Letters May 13, 370
- Sale of Food and Drugs Act May 13, 390
- Tithe Redemption Fees May 31, 1634
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 257
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1659

JENKINS, Sir J. J., Carmarthen Boroughs

- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, (Instr. to Com.) 1152

JOHNSTON, Mr. WILLIAM, Belfast, S.

- Business of the House, General May 10, 115
- Charge of Larceny, Tyrone May 27, 1422
- Committees, Ascension Day May 26, 1345, 1346
- Queen's
  - Birthday, Model Schools, Ireland May 20, 915
  - Colleges, Ireland May 20, 923
  - Reign, Thanksgiving Service May 13, 375; May 25, 1263
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 303

JOHNSTONE, Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Sussex, Horsham

- Joint Burial Committees May 14, 505

JOICEY, Sir JAMES, Bart., Durham, Chester-le-Street

- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 702; May 18, 767, 793, 794, 805; May 24, 1160, In Com. 1206; May 25, 1279, 1303, 1307; May 26, 1353, 1391; May 27, 1439, 1483, 1485

JONES, Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR, Swansea District

- Business of the House, General May 17, 634
- Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 821, 854
- University of London Bill May 17, 632

JONES, Mr. L. ATHERLEY-(see ATHERLEY-JONES)

JONES, Mr. W., Carnarvon, Arfon
Jhalawar May 27, 1427
Llandudno Urban District Council Bill, 3R. May 20, 906

JORDAN, Mr. J., Fermanagh, S.
Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 272

Juries Detention Bill
l. 2R., Lord Coleridge, 86; Lord Russell of Killowen, 86; Lord Halsbury, 87; Lord Herschell, 88 May 10
Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House May 10, 88
In Com., Rep. without Amendt. and re-com. to Standing Com. May 20, 893
Amendts. Rep., 1503; Lord Coleridge, 1503; Lord Ashbourne, 1503 May 28
Read 3ª with Amendts.; Passed and Returned to Commons May 31, 1602

KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH, Right Hon. Sir UGHTRED, Bart., Lancashire, N.E., Clitheroe
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 3R. May 20, 947

KEARLEY, Mr. H. E., Devonport
Budget Resolutions May 10, 165
Queen's Reign, Closing Telegraph Offices May 13, 374
Royal Patriotic Fund May 13, 376
Volunteers Bill, 3R. May 20, 1012
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 793; May 24, 1172

KELVIN, Lord
Finance Acts, Works of Art May 28, 1495

KENNAWAY, Right Hon. Sir JOHN H., Bart., Devonshire, Honiton
Brussels Act May 21, 1034
Fugitive Slaves, Zanzibar Coast May 28, 1516
Powell v. Kempton Park Company May 31, 1634

KENYON-SLANEY, Colonel W., Shropshire, Newport
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 846

KILBRIDE, Mr. D., Galway, N.
Business of the House, General May 10, 184
Police Force, Kerry May 27, 1415
Portumna Railway May 27, 1415
Supply
  £34,291 for Board of Agriculture May 28, 1584
  £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 571, 572
  £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1090, 1091
  £3,880 for Public Record Office, Ireland May 21, 1107

KIMBERLEY, Earl of
British Troops in India, Health May 17, 606
Dublin Corporation Bill May 14, 462
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 2R. May 25, 1231; In Com. May 28, 1504
Greece and the Powers May 10, 85
Royal Niger Company May 24, 1113
Whitsuntide Recess May 31, 1602

KING, Sir H. SEYMOUR, Hull, Central
Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum May 27, 1421
Exchange Compensation, India May 13, 361
Gambling Raid, Hull May 13, 381
Indian Staff Corps May 27, 1421
Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 20, 914
Vaccination, Royal Commission May 13, 361
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1681, 1682, 1696

KINLOCH, Sir J. G. S., Bart., Perth, E.
Argentine Cattle Trade May 24, 1131
Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 345

KNOWLES, Mr. LEES, Salford, W.
Supply: £34,291 for Board of Agriculture May 28, 1578
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1368, 1386; May 31, 1647

KNOX, Mr. E. F. VESEY, Londonderry City
Business of the House: Supply, Civil Service Votes May 20, 938
Charge of Murder, Omagh May 20, 921
Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 964, 965
Land Rating, Ireland May 20, 936
Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1057
Londonderry Lunatic Asylum May 24, 1137, 1138

LABOUCHERE, Mr. HENRY, Northampton
Whitsuntide Holidays May 20, 937

LABOUR QUESTIONS, ETC.
Artisans' Dwellings, London, Q. Mr. T. H. Robertson; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1610
Cleaning Machinery in Motion, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 28, 1506
Colliery Accident, Polesworth, Q. Sir B. W. Foster; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1255
Factory and Workshops Act 1895, Dock and Wharf Machinery, Q. Mr. Sydney Buxton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1266
Housing of the Working Classes Act, Q. Sir B. W. Foster; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 18, 722
Labourers' Cottages
  Ireland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 623. Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 917

[cont.

LABOUR QUESTIONS, ETC.—cont.

Labourers' Cottages—cont.

Meath, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 114

Strabane, Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1623

Labourers (Ireland) Acts, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell: A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1408

Laundry Workers, Q. Mr. D. Lloyd-George; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 14, 507

Lead Poisoning, Q. Mr. R. McKenna; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 24, 1134

Mines and Quarries, Statistics, Q. Mr. D. A. Thomas; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 11, 197

Mining Accident, Durham, Q. Mr. C. Fenwick; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 7, 18

Truck Act 1896, Qs. Sir C. Dilke; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 24, 1128

Weavers, Burnley, Discharge of, Q. Mr. P. J. Stanhope; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 14, 500

Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 10, 107. Qs. Mr. H. Broadhurst, Sir C. Dilke, Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley, Mr. A. J. Balfour May 17, 623. Qs. Mr. H. Seton-Karr, Mr. J. Ellis; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 20, 932. Qs. Mr. H. Seton-Karr: As. Sir R. Webster May 27, 1432 (For Debates see Title of Bill)

Workmen (Compensation Insurance) Bill, Belgium, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 729

LAMBERT, Mr. G., Devon, South Molton
Agricultural Holdings Act May 24, 1148
Business of the House, General May 13, 449
Crete May 24, 1142, 1143
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 3R. May 20, 945
Militia Officers May 25, 1259
Post Office Prosecution May 25, 1259

Land Legislation (Ireland)
Lord Inchiquin, (Motion) 1241; Lord Clonbrock, 1251; Adj. May 25
On Order for Resuming Adjourned Debate; Lord Clonbrock, (Motion for further Adj.) 1505; Viscount Clifden, 1505; (Motion Agreed to, 1505) May 28
Lord Clonbrock, (Personal Explanation) 1593; Viscount Clifden, 1593 May 31

Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill
c. 2R., Mr. Vaughan Davies, 817; Mr. Brynmor Jones, 821, 854; Mr. Powlett Milbank (Amendt.) 828; Sir J. T. D. Llewelyn, 831; Mr. S. Smith, 834; Mr. Stanley Leighton, 836, 846; Mr. J. H. Roberts, 841; Colonel Lockwood, 843; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 845, 846, 847; Colonel Kenyon-Slaney, 846; Sir W. Hart Dyke, 847; Mr. F. A. Channing, 849; Mr. W. T. Howell, 851, 854; Mr. Humphreys-Owen, 857, 862; Mr. W. Long, 861, 862; (Division, 866) May 19
2R. negatived May 19, 869

Land Transfer Bill
l. Amendments Rep. May 10, 89
Read 3ª; Amendts. made and Passed May 11, 189
c. Read 1° May 13, 360

LANSDOWNE, MARQUESS OF (Secretary of State for War)
British Troops in India, Health May 14, 491; May 17, 599
Volunteers Bill, 2R. May 24, 1114, 1115

LAURIE, General J. W., Pembroke and Haverfordwest
Victoria Cross: Trooper Baxter May 21, 1021

LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE

Administration of Oath, Court of Justice, Q. Sir B. W. Foster; A. Sir R. Webster May 21, 1037

Amnesty to Treason-felony Prisoners, Queen's Reign, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 725. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. W. Field; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1412. Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1510

Bankruptcy Court, Ireland, Q. Major Jameson; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1034

Bonâ-fide Travellers, Ballybunion (Kerry), Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 196

Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum: Hewson (Isabella), Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1421

Brookeborough Petty Sessions, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 10, 109; May 14, 497

Castleblaney Petty Sessions, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1427

Charges

Larceny, Tyrone, Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 21, 1032; May 25, 1269. Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 27, 1422

Murder

Omagh, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 921

Tyrone, Q. Mr. G. Murnaghan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 728

Robbery, Tyrone, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1143

Constabulary, Royal Irish (see Royal Irish Constabulary below)

Cork and Tralee Prisons, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 498

Equity Sessions, Strabane, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 10

Evictions

Durnascallon (Derry), Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915

Littledale Estate, Wicklow, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 192. Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1613

Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. R. K. Causton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1262

[cont.

LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE—cont.

Gambling Raid, Hull, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 13, 381
Gaol, Maryborough: Prisoner Thomas Collins, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 109. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1025. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1413
Grand Jury
  Accounts, Monaghan, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1147
  Kerry, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1026
  System, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 18, 723
High Sheriff, Carrickfergus, Q. Mr. R. M. Dane; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 504
Incorporated Law Society (Judicial Duties Expense) (see that Title)
Irish Acts, Codification, Qs. Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 13, 384
Italian Ice-cream Vendors, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 21, 1028
Judge Advocate General's Department, Qs. Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. J. W. Mellor; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 31, 1635
Judiciary, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 21, 1038
Juries Detention Bill (see that Title)
Jurors Challenged, Tyrone, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 31, 1616
Juvenile Offenders, Q. Mr. D. F. Goddard; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 720
Land
  Commission, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 12. Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 192. Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 509. Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 620. Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 925. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1265. Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Captain Donelan, Mr. J. Gilhooly; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1603
  Commissioners, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 13, 364
  Sub-Commissions, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. S. Young; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 363
Larceny, Charge of, Tyrone, Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 21, 1032; May 25, 1269. Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 27, 1422
Letterbreen Petty Sessions, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 617; May 18, 732. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 931
Magisterial Jurisdiction, Petty Sessions, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1037
Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill (see that Title)
Metropolitan Police Courts Bill, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Mr. Jesse Collings, Sir M. Hicks Beach, Sir Matthew White Ridley May 7, 14
Metropolitan Police Courts (Holidays) Bill (see that Title)
Metropolitan Police Offenders, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. J. Lowles; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 17, 629
Military Prisons, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. J. A. Pease, Mr. L. R. Holland; As. Mr. Brodrick May 31, 1620
Murder, Charge of
  Omagh, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 921
  Tyrone, Q. Mr. G. Murnaghan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 728
Newbliss Petty Sessions Courthouse, Monaghan, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1135
Oath, Administration of, Court of Justice, Q. Sir B. W. Foster; A. Sir R. Webster May 21, 1037
Petty Sessions
  Brookeborough, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 10, 109; May 14, 497
  Castleblaney, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1427
  Fees, Limerick, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1629
  Letterbreen, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 617; May 18, 732. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 931
  Magisterial Jurisdiction, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1037
  Newbliss, Courthouse, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1135
Police
  Arrangements, Granard, Qs. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 98
  Extra Allowance to, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 21, 1029. Q. Captain Norton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1412
  Force, Kerry, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. D. Kilbride; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1414
  Indian, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1627
  Pensioners, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1269
Police and Stolen Property Bill (see that Title)
Post Office Prosecution, Q. Mr. G. Lambert; A. Mr. Hanbury May 25, 1259
Powell v. Kempton Park Company, Q. Sir J. H. Kennaway; A. Sir R. Webster May 31, 1634
Prisons
  Cork and Tralee, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 498
  Maryborough: Prisoner Thomas Collins, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 109. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1025. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1413
  Military, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. J. A. Pease, Mr. L. R. Holland; As. Mr. Brodrick May 31, 1620

[cont.

LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE—cont.
- Prisons—cont.
  - Reading, Discharge of Warder, Qs. Mr. M. Davitt; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1266; May 27, 1420
  - System, Scotland, Qs. Mr. Hedderwick; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 10, 106; May 24, 1127
- Prisons Bill (see that Title)
- Probation of First Offenders Act, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 21, 1033
- Quarter Sessions Jurors (Ireland) Bill (see that Title)
- Queen's Reign, Diamond Jubilee (see that Title)
- Robbery, Charge of, Tyrone, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1143
- Royal Irish Constabulary
  - Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. J. C. Macdona; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1030
  - Tullyvin (Cavan), Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 11, 195
- Sessions
  - Equity, Strabane, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 10
  - Petty
    - Brookeborough, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 10, 109; May 14, 497
    - Castleblaney, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1427
    - Fees, Limerick, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1629
    - Letterbreen, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 617; May 18, 732. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 20, 931
    - Magisterial Jurisdiction, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1037
    - Newbliss, Courthouse, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1135
- Sheriff
  - High, Carrickfergus, Q. Mr. R. M. Dane; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 504
  - Westmeath, Appointment of, Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1628
- Statute Law Revision and Consolidation Bills, Q. Mr. Gibson Bowles; A. Sir R. Webster May 20, 935
- Treason-felony Prisoners
  - Amnesty to, Queen's Reign, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 725. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. W. Field; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1412. Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1510
  - Cape Colony Resolution, Q. Mr. Swift MacNeill; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 7, 15
- Warder, Reading Prison, Discharge of, Qs. Mr. M. Davitt; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1266; May 27, 1420

LAWRENCE, Mr. WILLIAM F., Liverpool, Abercrombie
- Liverpool City Churches Bill, 2R. May 24, 1121, 1126
- Mersey Channels Bill, 3R. May 10, 183
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1683

LAWSON, MR. J. GRANT (Parliamentary Charity Commissioner), York, N.R., Thirsk and Malton
- Berriew School Scheme May 31, 1622
- Charity Scheme, Thornton-in-Craven May 20, 927, 928
- Covent Garden Theatre Fund May 18, 729
- Queen's Reign, Thanksgiving Service May 13, 375
- Swansea Grammar School May 31, 1611
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 258
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1381

(Rulings as Chairman of Committee)
- Miscellaneous—May 14, 561; May 31, 1682, 1690, 1691

LEA, Sir THOMAS, Bart., Londonderry, S.
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 300
- Supply: £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 562

LECKY, Mr. W. E. HARTPOLE, Dublin University
- Irish Antiquities May 28, 1519
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 266, 283, 304

LECONFIELD, Lord
- Finance Acts, Works of Art May 28, 1494

LEES, Sir ELLIOTT, Bart., Birkenhead
- Queen's Reign, Route of Procession May 13, 376
- Speeches in Parliament May 11, 243

LEGH, Hon. T. WODEHOUSE, Lancashire, S. W., Newton
- Supply: £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 55
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1648

LEIGHTON, Mr. STANLEY, Shropshire, Oswestry
- Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 836, 846

LENG, Sir JOHN, Dundee
- Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 342
- Queen's Reign, Jubilee Day May 27, 1411; May 28, 1509

LEUTY, Mr. T. R., Leeds, E.
- Llandudno Urban District Council Bill, 3R. May 20, 906
- Post Office Establishments May 20, 912
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill In Com. May 25, 1313

LEVEN AND MELVILLE, Earl of
- Finance Acts, Works of Art May 28, 1493

Licensing (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill
c. Intro., Mr. A. D. Provand ; Read 1° May 24, 1216

LISTER, Lord
British Troops in India, Health May 17, 583

Liverpool City Churches Bill
c. 2R., Mr. J. H. Roberts, (Amendt.) 1117 ; Mr. J. C. Williams, 1120 ; Mr. W. F. Lawrence, 1121 ; Mr. J. W. Mellor, 1123 ; Mr. W. Long 1124 ; (Division, 1125) May 24
Read 2° May 24, 1125
Mr. J. H. Roberts, (Motion) 1125 ; Mr. W. F. Lawrence, 1126 ; (Division, 1126) May 24

Llandudno Urban District Council Bill
c. Considered as Amended : Mr. Brodrick, (Amendt.) 903, 905 ; Mr. R. McKenna, 903 ; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 906 ; Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, 906 ; Mr. T. R. Leuty, 906 ; Mr. W. Jones, 906 ; Mr. Sydney Gedge, 906 ; (Division, 907) May 20
Read 3° May 20, 907

LLEWELYN, Sir J. T. DILLWYN, Bart., Swansea Town
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 831
Swansea Grammar School May 31, 1611

LLOYD-GEORGE Mr. DAVID, Carnarvon Boroughs
Committees, Ascension Day May 26, 1345
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 845, 846, 847
Laundry Workers May 14, 507
Supply : £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1573

Local Authorities (Scotland) Loans Bill
c. Withdrawn May 24, 1214

Local Government Act (1888) Amendment Bill
c. Intro., Mr. J. Bigwood ; Read 1° May 12, 312

Local Government Act (1888) Amendment (No. 2) Bill
c. Intro., Mr. H. Broadhurst ; Read 1° May 18, 734

Local Government Act 1894 (Parochial Charities)
Mr. E. Strachey, (Notice of Motion) May 25, 1251

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD
President—Mr. H. CHAPLIN
Secretary—Mr. T. W. RUSSELL

Boards of Guardians, Public Bills, Q. Sir W. H. Houldsworth ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 17, 628
Cattle Food, Imported, Q. Mr. C. T. Giles ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 31, 1631
County Council Accounts, Q. Mr. E. Strachey ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 13, 378
Death of a Pauper, City of London, Q. Mr. D. Crilly ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 21, 1035
Housing of the Working Classes Act, Q. Sir B. W. Foster ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 18, 722
Joint Burial Committees, Q. Mr. J. H. Johnstone ; A. Mr. T. W. Russell May 14, 505
Local Government Electors, Q. Sir H. Fowler ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1267
Newington Vestry Election, Q. Mr. J. Bailey ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 27, 1419
Notification of Infectious Diseases Act, Q. Sir J. T. Brunner ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 13, 377
Parish Councils Association, Qs. Mr. R. T. Hermon-Hodge ; As. Mr. T. W. Russell May 25, 1253
Pauper, Death of, City of London, Q. Mr. D. Crilly ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 21, 1035
Queen's Reign, Cycle Demonstration, Q. Colonel Lockwood ; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 20, 913
Rating Assessment, Q. Mr. H. Finch-Hatton ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 13, 371
Uxbridge Union, Q. Mr. J. Bigwood ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 24, 1130
Vaccination, Lymph Supply, Q. Sir W. O. Priestley ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 27, 1426
Vestry Election, Newington, Q. Mr. J. Bailey ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 27, 1419
Water Supply
  London
    Bill, Q. Mr. H. S. Samuel ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 17, 616
    Commission, Qs. Mr. H. S. Samuel, Mr. T. Lough ; [Mr. Speaker ;] As. Mr. H. Chaplin May 17, 615
  Urswick, Q. Sir B. W. Foster ; A. Mr. T. W. Russell May 7, 8

Local Government, Ireland : Ministerial Proposals
Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1040, 1044, 1059 ; Mr. J. Dillon, 1044, 1048, 1049, 1059 ; Mr. E. H. Carson, (Motion for Adj.) 1046, 1061 ; Mr. G. Balfour, 1049 ; Colonel Saunderson, 1049 ; Mr. T. M. Healy, 1050 ; Sir J. Lubbock, 1051 ; Mr. J. A. Rentoul, 1051 ; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 1053 ; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 1054 ; Mr. J. Redmond, 1055 ; Sir R. U. Penrose FitzGerald, 1056 ; Mr. Vesey Knox, 1057 ; Sir J. Haslett, 1057 ; Mr. T. Lough, 1058 ; (Motion withdrawn, 1061) May 21
(For Questions see IRELAND)

Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill
c. Considered as Amended: Mr. J. Bryce, (Amendt.) 340, 347, 350, (Instr. to Com.) 352; Sir Donald Currie, 342, 346; Sir J. Leng, 342; Mr. C. B. Renshaw, 344; Sir C. Dalrymple, 344; Mr. J. W. Mellor, 344; Sir J. G. S. Kinloch, 345; Mr. J. W. Lowther, 346, 351, (Amendt.) 352; Mr. R. B. Haldane, 347; Mr. A. Cross, 348; Mr. Graham Murray, 349, 350; Mr. J. G. Weir, 350; Mr. F. A. Channing, 351; Sir J. Stirling-Maxwell, 351; (Division 352); (Words Added, 352). Main Question as Amended Agreed to, 352 May 13
Re-committed to Select Com. May 13, 352

Lockwood, Colonel A., Essex, Epping
East London Water Bill May 13, 356
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 843
Queen's Reign, Cycle Demonstration May 20, 913

Lockwood, Sir Frank, York City
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1292

Locomotives on Highways Bill
c. Read 2° and com. to Standing Com. on Trade, etc. May 28, 1592

Logan, Mr. J. W., Leicester, Harborough
Budget Resolutions May 10, 174
Dog Muzzling May 20, 931
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 779; In Com. May 27, 1485; May 31, 1649, 1654

Londonderry, Marquess of
Dublin Corporation Bill May 14, 453, 462, 464

LONG, Right Hon. WALTER H. (President of the Board of Agriculture), Liverpool, West Derby
American Cattle May 28, 1511, 1512
Dog Muzzling May 20, 931
Extraordinary Tithe Bill, 2R. May 11, 231
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 861, 862
Liverpool City Churches Bill, 2R. May 24, 1124
Ordnance Survey, Mayo May 17, 626
Supply
  £34, 291 for Board of Agriculture May 28, 1586, 1590
  £132,291 for Survey of the United Kingdom May 28, 1535
Weighing of Cattle, Scotland May 13, 368

Lough, Mr. Thomas, Islington, W.
Agricultural Rating Act, Ireland May 21, 1024
Alcoholic Beverages May 27, 1407
Budget Resolutions May 10, 175

[cont.

Lough, Mr. T.—cont.
Business of the House, General May 10, 119, 120; May 13, 394
Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 981, 983
Land Rating, Ireland May 20, 936
Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1058
Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 215, 216
Metropolitan Police Courts (Holidays) Bill, 2R. May 10, 178
Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill May 14, 511
Post Office
  Establishment May 20, 911
  Overtime May 31, 1630
  Savings Bank May 31, 1604
Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1403
Supply
  £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1563, 1566
  £132,221 for Survey of the United Kingdom May 28, 1534
Water Supply, London May 17, 616
Whitsuntide Holidays May 20, 938

Lowles, Mr. J., Shoreditch, Haggerston
Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 444
Queen's Reign, Adverse Records May 17, 629, 630

LOWTHER, Mr. J. W. (Chairman of Committees of Ways and Means and Deputy Speaker), Cumberland, Penrith
Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 346, 351, 352

(Rulings as Chairman of Committees)
Appeal in Certain Civil Matters (Ireland) Bill
The Chairman said, he had considered the matter very carefully. If the Amendment of the right hon. Member for Dublin University had been confined to the cases dealt with in the Bill, it would have been in order. But it went very much beyond that, and therefore it went beyond the scope of the Bill. The title was not the only guide to what was in the Bill, but the Amendment of the right hon. Member for Dublin University went beyond the subject-matter of the Bill, and therefore it was not in order May 11, 236
Budget Resolutions
The Chairman said: "I must remind the hon. Member that the general financial relations between Great Britain and Ireland cannot be discussed on this Resolution. The only question now before the Committee is in regard to the imposition of the duty on tea." May 10, 157
The Chairman said, the hon. Member was not entitled to take a general survey of the taxation of this Country on the Resolution before the Committee. That Resolution related only to the tea duty, and the hon. Gentleman must confine himself to that question May 10, 159

[cont.

LOWTHER, Mr. J. W.—cont.

(Rulings as Chairman of Committees)—cont.

Budget Resolutions—cont.

The Chairman said: "The general custom which has been followed this year is that the general discussion is taken until a Resolution is passed. The first Resolution, the Income Tax Resolution, has been passed by the House." May 10, 160

Supply: £24,037 for Harbours, Lighthouses, etc.

The Chairman said: "Order, order! To discuss that would be out of order. The point the hon. Member is anxious to raise should be raised in Committee of Ways and Means. There is here no question of taxation, it is only a question of granting the money." May 28, 1538

The Chairman said, it must be obvious to the hon. Member that they could not discuss on the Vote for Harbours and Lighthouses whether or not Ireland paid her fair share of the general taxation. The hon. Member would be perfectly entitled to discuss whether too much money under this Vote was spent on English and Scottish harbours May 28, 1539

The Chairman said: "I must name the hon. Member, Mr. REDMOND, for disregarding the authority of the Chair." May 28, 1539

[The CHAIRMAN left the Chair to make his Report to the House. Mr. SPEAKER having resumed the Chair,]

The Chairman said: "Mr. Speaker, I have to report to you that, during the discussion of a Resolution in Supply, it became my duty to call to order the hon. Member for Waterford City, and, in consequence of persistent irrelevance, I requested him to resume his seat under the Standing Orders of the House. He stated that he would decline to comply with my order, and it then became necessary for me to name the hon. Member. In consequence of that, a Motion was made that the hon. Member should be suspended from the service of the House; and I have to report to you, Sir, that that Motion was put, and was carried in Committee." May 28, 1540

The Chairman said: "I have already ruled more than once on that point, that that question cannot be raised upon Votes in Supply. It must be raised in Committee of Ways and Means. This is not the proper time to raise it. I hope the hon. Member will therefore not persist in continued irrelevancy." May 28, 1541

The Chairman said: "I have already ruled that that is not a sufficient ground, and that the matter cannot be discussed in Supply. If the hon. Member persist in discussing it in Supply I must regard his conduct as grossly disorderly, and, under these circumstances, I must request him to withdraw from the House." May 28, 1541

[cont.

LOWTHER, Mr. J. W.—cont.

(Rulings as Chairman of Committees)—cont.

Supply: £24,037 for Harbours, Lighthouses, etc.—cont.

The Chairman said: "I do not know whether it is really necessary for me to repeat what I have already ruled—that that question cannot be raised in Committee of Supply. There are other and proper opportunities for raising that question. All I have ruled this afternoon is, that this is not a proper occasion for raising that question, and if the hon. Member persist in disregarding my ruling I am afraid I shall have to put the Standing Order in force." May 28, 1543

The Chairman said: "The hon. Member is perfectly entitled to object to this Vote on the ground that it is too large, and that too much money is spent on English and Scottish harbours and not enough on Irish harbours; but the question of the financial relations between Great Britain and Ireland cannot be discussed on this Vote. I think the hon. Member will see—on reflection it will be obvious to him—that it must be so, because otherwise the same question can be raised on every Vote, and that would clearly be against the ordinary rules and practice of the House. Therefore that seems to me to be sufficient ground, amongst others, for saying that the question cannot be discussed now, and therefore I must ask the hon. Member to confine himself to the Vote." May 28, 1544

The Chairman said: "If that be so, the hon. Member will be disorderly, for he will be violating the ruling I have laid down. If the hon. Member persist in that course I shall have to put the Standing Order in force." May 28, 1544

The Chairman said: "The hon. Member is grossly disorderly in his last remark. My ruling is not to the effect quoted by the hon. Member. My ruling is, that the hon. Member is not entitled on the present occasion to discuss the question of the financial relations of Great Britain and Ireland. If he cannot state his objections to this Vote without discussing that question, there is no necessity for him to state them, and he can remain silent. If, however, he persist in stating them, and bringing that question in, I shall have to take some steps." May 28, 1545

The Chairman said: "Order, order! The hon. Member is evidently anxious to disregard the ruling I have recently given. I hope he will not force me to put the Standing Order in force. I have had to do it in the case of some of his colleagues, and I warn him that if he persist in the course he is pursuing I shall have to do so in his case." May 28, 1546

[cont.

LOWTHER, Mr. J. W.—cont.

(Rulings as Chairman of Committees)—cont.

Supply: £8,485 for House of Lords, Salaries and Expenses

The Chairman said, it would not be possible for the hon. Member to discuss the position of the House of Lords upon the question of the salaries of the House of Lords officers. To get rid of the House of Lords, legislation would be necessary; and, as the hon. Member was well aware, they could not discuss legislation on dealing with Votes in Supply May 7, 64

The Chairman said: "The hon. Member is justified in protesting and dividing against this Vote or any other, but I do not think discussion can take place in Supply on the over-taxation of Ireland. That is a separate matter, which would arise in Committee of Ways and Means or on other occasions, but not in Committee of Supply." May 7, 65

The Chairman said, he had already pointed out that, in order to get rid of the House of Lords, legislation would be required, and in accordance with a well-known rule they could not discuss what was a subject for legislation in the course of Debates in Supply May 7, 75

Supply: £40,229 for Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions, Ireland

The Chairman said, it was unusual to discuss a case pending before the Courts. Still he could not hold that it was out of order. On the other hand, as far as he had been able to discover, the Chairman of Committees or the Speaker on former occasions had always laid down that it was unusual and undesirable, in the interest of the prisoners, to discuss a case which was pending May 21, 1103

Supply: £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland

The Chairman said, the hon. Member could not discuss English and Scotch matters on this Vote. That was not the proper time to discuss this grievance May 21, 1070

The Chairman said: "The hon. Gentleman is now discussing an alleged grievance that could only be remedied by legislation, and, as I have repeatedly reminded the Committee, subjects for legislation cannot be discussed in Supply." May 21, 1073

The Chairman said, that the only way of meeting it suggested by the hon. Member was by a grant of money, which would require legislation, and could not, therefore, be discussed in Committee of Supply May 21, 1087

Supply: £3,880 for Public Record Office, etc., Ireland

The Chairman said, that this was a matter which should be dealt with on the Vote of the Historical Manuscripts Commission. They were responsible for the issue of documents May 21, 1105

[cont.

LOWTHER, Mr. J. W.—cont.

(Rulings as Chairman of Committees)—cont.

Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill

The Chairman said, it had been the custom lately when one Amendment raised a principle which was also raised by several other Amendments, although the principle was not stated in exactly the same terms, to discuss the principle generally on the first Amendment, and then, if the House accepted the principle of the Amendment, to consider the actual wording of the Amendment to be inserted. That would, he thought, be a convenient practice to follow on the present occasion May 25, 1275

The Chairman said: "The Minister in charge of a Bill is always entitled to make a statement." May 26, 1347

The Chairman said: "It is a very common practice for the Minister in charge of a Bill to make a statement whenever a convenient opportunity arises." May 26, 1347

The Chairman said, the discussion at the present time ought not to go beyond the Amendment now before the Committee. He could not say that a discussion upon the Amendment which the hon. Member had down some 11 pages on would not be relevant. He would be in a better position to decide when they reached the Amendment May 26, 1350

The Chairman said, it was clearly incompetent for him to accept such an Amendment as that which the hon. Member had on the Paper, because that would be amending the common law, the Employers' Liability Act, and Lord Campbell's Act. That was out of order on this Bill May 26, 1354

The Chairman said, the Committee was now engaged in discussing an Amendment not before it, and he thought it would be more convenient that the two Amendments before the House should be withdrawn, and that the hon. Member for Gainsborough should then move his Amendment May 27, 1439

The Chairman said: "I fail to see how the remarks of the hon. Member are relevant to the Amendment. He seems to be going rather far afield from the question he wishes to put before the Committee." May 27, 1444

The Chairman said: "Order, order! The general position of these insurance societies does not arise at all. The only question is, whether the compensation which they propose to give is not as favourable as that given under the Bill. The general position and administration of the societies cannot be discussed here." May 27, 1444

The Chairman said: "I do not think it would be relevant to insert any Amendments, except in so far as they deal with the position of the workman in regard to this Bill—that is to say, whether the compensation is more or less favourable than that which he would get from the Society." May 27, 1444

[cont.

LOWTHER, Mr. J. W.—cont.
(Rulings as Chairman of Committees)—cont.
Workmen (Compensation, etc.) Bill—cont.
The Chairman said, that the hon. Member, although he was addressing his remarks to his Amendment, objected to the whole of the sub-clause under consideration, and it was in order for him to ask the House to reject it May 27, 1446
The Chairman said, the hon. Member was taxing the patience of the Committee. The hon. Member was objecting generally to the fourth sub-section upon the ground that friendly societies might be injured by its operation. That hardly justified his reading long extracts. The hon. Member ought to state his reasons for objecting more generally, and abstain from going into such details May 27, 1447
The Chairman said, that he had not given any such ruling as that. He believed the hon. Member was quite competent to put his case fully before the Committee without reading long and elaborate extracts May 27, 1447
The Chairman said, the Amendment seemed to be an ingenious way of getting the word "tramway" in at an early stage of the clause. He thought the hon. Member had put it in the wrong place, and that it ought to come after the word "quarry." All the Amendments ought, in fact, to come after the word "quarry," as the Government, whose Bill it was, were entitled to have their proposals laid before the Committee before those of private Members May 31, 1640
Miscellaneous Rulings
May 7, 65, 68, 78, 79; May 11, 236, 237; May 14, 513, 526; May 21, 1084, 1085, 1086, 1106; May 25, 1328, 1341; May 26, 1378; May 27, 1464, 1469, 1470, 1471; May 28, 1539, 1540, 1541, 1542, 1545, 1546, 1564; May 31, 1704

LOWTHER, Right Hon. JAMES, Kent, Isle of Thanet
British South Africa Committee, Question of Privilege May 25, 1272
Business of the House, General May 13, 393
Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 954, 963, 987, 993, 995, 1010
Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 437, 438
Supply: £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 513, 515

LOYD, Mr. A. K., Berks, Abingdon
Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 261

LUBBOCK, Right Hon. Sir JOHN, Bart., London University
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 125, 144
Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1051

Lunacy
Asylums
Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic: Hewson (Isabella), Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1421
Londonderry, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. Hanbury, Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1137

Lunacy Bill
l. Pres., Lord Halsbury; Read 1ª May 21, 1017

LUTTRELL, Mr. H. C. FOWNES, Devonshire, Tavistock
Commons (Regulation) Bill, Intro. May 11, 204
Post Office Consolidation Bill, 2R. May 11, 225
Prison Clerks May 18, 718

MACALEESE, Mr. D., Monaghan, S.
American Cattle May 28, 1511
Brookeborough Petty Sessions May 10, 109; May 14, 497
Charge of Robbery, Tyrone May 24, 1143
Delivery of Letters, Ireland May 17, 629
Irish Mail Service May 10, 97
Land Commissioners May 13, 364
Littledale Estate, Wicklow May 31, 1613
Newbliss Petty Sessions Courthouse, Monaghan May 24, 1135
Petty Sessions, Magisterial Jurisdiction May 21, 1037
Postal Deliveries, Ireland May 14, 499
Publican's Licence, Ireland May 20, 923
Rural Postmen
Dismissal May 28, 1521
Ireland May 24, 1141
Stamp Duty, Ireland May 17, 625
Strabane Equity Sessions May 7, 10

MACARTNEY, MR. W. G. ELLISON (Secretary to the Admiralty), Antrim, S.
Fishery Cruisers May 20, 907

McCALMONT, General HUGH, Antrim, N.
Turco-Greek War May 10, 100

McDERMOTT, Mr. PATRICK, Kilkenny, N.
Potato Crop, Ireland May 14, 504

MACDONA, Mr. J. CUMMING, Southwark, Rotherhithe
Burial, Premature May 24, 1139
Queen's Reign, Royal Irish Constabulary May 21, 1030
Supply: £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1562

M'HUGH, Mr. P. A., Leitrim, N.
Land
Commission, Sligo May 7, 12
Sub-Commission May 14, 509
Supply: £3,880 for Public Record Office, Ireland May 21, 1106

McIVER, Sir LEWIS, Bart., Edinburgh, W.
  Equivalent Grant, Scotland May 27, 1406
  Pneumatic Messages May 31, 1624, 1625

McKENNA, Mr. R., Monmouthshire, N.
  Lead Poisoning May 24, 1134
  Llandudno Urban District Council Bill, 3R. May 20, 903
  Post Office, Female Clerks May 10, 98
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 811; May 24, (Instr. to Com.) 1152, 1173, In Com. 1208, 1209; May 25, 1294; May 26, 1382; May 27, 1468, 1470; May 31, 1643, 1701

MACLEAN, Mr. JAMES M., Cardiff
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 24, 1184; May 25, 1293; May 31, 1641, 1652

MACLURE, Mr. J. W., Lancashire, S.E., Stretford
  Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 7, 9
  Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1400

MACNEILL, Mr. J. G. SWIFT, Donegal, S.
  Army Regulations, Wearing the Shamrock May 10, 100, 101, 102, 103
  Cape Garrison May 11, 200; May 14, 494
  Crewe, Representation May 17, 634, 635
  Falkland Islands May 7, 16
  Gipsies May 18, 732
  Irish Mail Service May 17, 624, 625
  Loan Fund Societies, Ireland May 10, 107, 108
  Prime Minister, Dual Offices May 10, 89
  Queen's Reign, Visit of Sultan's Son May 13, 376; May 14, 495
  Royal Irish Academy May 10, 105, 106
  Supply
    £49,705 for Foreign Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 46
    £8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 68, 74, 77
    £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 526
    £7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 79, 80, 81
  Treason-felony Prisoners, Ireland May 7, 15

MAPLE, Sir J. BLUNDELL, Camberwell, Dulwich
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1167

MAPPIN, Sir FREDERICK T., Bart., York, W. R., Hallamshire
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1373

Market Gardeners' Compensation (Scotland) Bill
c. Considered as Amended May 20, 1015
  Read 3° and Passed May 25, 1344
l. Read 1ª May 28, 1505

Married Women (Ireland) Bill
c. Intro., Mr. M. Healy; Read 1° May 19, 872

MASSEY-MAINWARING, Hon. W. F. B., Finsbury, Central
  South Kensington Museum May 13, 392
  Wallace Bequest, Manchester House May 13, 391

MAXWELL, Sir H. E., Bart., Wigtown
  Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 984

MAXWELL, Sir J. M. STIRLING- (see STIRLING-MAXWELL)

MAYO, Earl of
  Dublin Corporation Bill May 14, 459
  Industries (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 25, 1234, 1240
  Land Law (Ireland) Acts May 20, 902
  Municipal Franchise, Ireland May 20, 896

MELLOR, Colonel J. J., Lancashire, S.E., Radcliffe-cum-Farnworth
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 27, 1451

MELLOR, Right Hon. JOHN WILLIAM, York, W. R., Sowerby
  Incorporated Law Society, Judicial Duties, Expense May 11, 247
  Judge Advocate General's Department May 31, 1635
  Liverpool City Churches Bill, 2R. May 24, 1123
  Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 344
  Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1401
  Supply: £34,291 for Board of Agriculture May 28, 1583
  Voluntary Schools Act May 13, 373

MERCHANT SHIPPING
  Ballinamore Canal, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 908. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1407
  British
    Pilots, Foreigners as, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 25, 1257
    Seamen
      Discharge of, Abroad, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1406
      Foreign Ports, in, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 732
  Canadian Fast Atlantic Service, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 25, 1267
  Canals
    Ballinamore, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 908. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1407
    Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 18, 723
    Longford Harbour, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 4. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 726

[cont.

MERCHANT SHIPPING—cont.

- Canals—cont.
  - Lough Mask and Ballinrobe, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 14, 494
  - Canals and Navigable Rivers (Ireland) Bill, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 10, 106
- Discharge of British Seamen Abroad, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1406
- Dock and Wharf Machinery, Factory and Workshops Act 1895, Q. Mr. Sydney Buxton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1266
- Fisheries
  - Irish, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. W. Field; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1413
  - Scottish Board, Qs. Sir W. Wedderburn, Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 31, 1608
  - Sea, Ireland, Q. Mr. G. Murnaghan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 930
- Fishery
  - Cruisers
    - Great Britain and Ireland, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Macartney May 20, 907
    - Scotland, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 24, 1134; May 27, 1418; May 31, 1632
  - Inquiry, Listowel, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 31, 1633
- Fishing
  - Ground, Plymouth, Sunken Wrecks, Qs. Mr. C. Harrison, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Ritchie May 17, 616
  - River Feale, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1130
  - Salmon, Cashen River, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1256
- Foreign
  - Officers and Engineers, Mercantile Marine, Qs. Mr. J. F. Flannery, Sir A. B. Forwood; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 724
  - Ports, British Seamen in, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 732
- Foreigners as British Pilots, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 25, 1257
- Harbour
  - Balbriggan, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 13, 388
  - Longford Canal, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 4. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 726
  - Port Ness, Lewis, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 11, 197. Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 13, 369; May 20, 934; May 24, 1141; May 27, 1418
  - Works, Plymouth, Q. Mr. F. B. Mildmay; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain May 13, 360
- Herrings
  - Brand Fees, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 31, 1606
  - Duty on, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Curzon May 24, 1136
  - Imported, Q. Sir C. Cameron; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 17, 614
  - Scotch, at St. Petersburg, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Curzon May 13, 380
- King's Lynn, Pilot Commissioners, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1417

[cont.

MERCHANT SHIPPING—cont.

- Lewis, Port Ness Harbour, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 11, 197. Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 13, 369; May 20, 934; May 24, 1141; May 27, 1418
- Lighthouses
  - Keepers, Q. Mr. D. N. Nicol; A. Mr. Ritchie May 28, 1510
  - Red Sea, Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1416
- Lighting, Red Sea, Q. Sir E. S. Hill; A. Mr. Ritchie May 10, 99
- Longford Canal Harbour, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 4. Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. J. Atkinson May 18, 726
- Mercantile Marine
  - Accidents to Seamen, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 731
  - Foreign Officers and Engineers, Qs. Mr. J. F. Flannery, Sir A. B. Forwood; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 724
- Merchant Shipping Undermanning Bill (see that Title)
- Mersey Channels Bill (see that Title)
- Mersey Docks Bill, Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1423
- Pier and Harbour Provisional Order (No. 1) Bill (see that Title)
- Piers
  - Ard West, Carna, Connemara, Q. Mr. W. O'Malley; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 99
  - Kerry
    - Salleen, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1426
    - Sneem, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1629
  - Loughshinny, Dublin, Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 387
- Pilot Commissioners, King's Lynn, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1417
- Pilots, Foreigners as British, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 25, 1257
- Plymouth
  - Fishing Ground, Sunken Wrecks, Qs. Mr. C. Harrison, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Ritchie May 17, 616
  - Harbour Works, Q. Mr. F. B. Mildmay; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain May 13, 360
- Pollen Act, Lough Neagh, Qs. Mr. P. C. Doogan; Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 920
- Red Sea
  - Lighthouses, Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1416
  - Lighting, Sir E. S. Hill; A. Mr. Ritchie May 10, 99
- River Feale Fishing, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Mr. J. Atkinson May 24, 1130
- Salleen Pier, Kerry, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1426
- Salmon Fishing, Cashen River, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1256
- Scottish Fisheries Board, Qs. Sir W. Wedderburn, Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 31, 1608
- Sea Fisheries, Ireland, Q. Mr. G. Murnaghan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 930
- Seamen
  - Accidents to, Mercantile Marine, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 731

[cont.

MERCHANT SHIPPING—cont.
Seamen—cont.
British
Discharge of, Abroad, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1406
Foreign Ports, in, Q. Mr. J. Havelock-Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 732
Sneem Pier, Kerry, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1629
Start Bay, Removal of Sand, Q. Mr. F. B. Mildmay; A. Mr. Ritchie May 13, 389
Sunken Wrecks, Plymouth Fishing Ground, Qs. Mr. C. Harrison, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Ritchie May 17, 616
Trawling, Moray Firth, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Curzon May 25, 1256
Tuskar Light Telephonic Communications, Q. Mr. G. Drage; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 93. Q. Mr. G. Drage; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1405

Merchant Shipping (Undermanning) Bill
c. Rep. with Amendts. from Standing Com. on Trade, etc. May 13, 394
Considered as Amended May 17, 713
Read 3^{o} and Passed May 31, 1705

Mersey Channels Bill
c. 3R., Mr. D. Crilly, 183; Mr. W. F. Lawrence, 183 May 10
Read 3^{o} and Passed May 13, 452
l. Read 1^{a} May 14, 464
2R., Lord Pirbright May 25, 1241
Read 2^{a} and com. to Com. of Whole House May 25, 1241
In Com., Rep. without Amendt.; and re-com. to Standing Com. May 28, 1504

METROPOLIS
Artisans' Dwellings, Q. Mr. T. H. Robertson; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1610
British Museum, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 31, 1636
Covent Garden Theatre Fund, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 18, 729. Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Sir R. Webster May 31, 1603
Cruelty to Animals, Qs. Captain Donelan; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1410
Custom House, Q. Mr. C. H. Wilson; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1135
Death of Pauper, Q. Mr. D. Crilly; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 21, 1035
East London Water Bill (see that Title)
House of Commons, Divisions, Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Sir W. Walrond May 18, 721
Hyde Park
Cycling in, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 10, 94
Footpaths, Qs. Captain Norton; As. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 24, 1131
Italian Ice-cream Vendors, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 21, 1028
Magnetic Observatory, Greenwich, Q. Lord H. Cecil; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 28, 1520
Marylebone, Excise Prosecution, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 10, 111

[cont.

METROPOLIS—cont.
Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill (see that Title)
Metropolitan Police Courts (Holidays) Bill, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Mr. Jesse Collings, Sir M. Hicks Beach, Sir Matthew White Ridley May 7, 14
(For Debate see Title of Bill)
Metropolitan Water Companies Bill (see that Title)
Newington Vestry Election, Q. Mr. J. Bailey; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 27, 1419
Performing Bears, Streets, Q. Colonel Dalbiac; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 14, 506
Postal Deliveries, Circulars, Q. Mr. Bhownaggree; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1430
Queen's Reign, Diamond Jubilee (see that Title)
School Board Divisions, Q. Mr. T. G. Fardell; A. Sir J. Gorst May 24, 1128
South Kensington Museum, Qs. Mr. Massey-Mainwaring, Mr. A. J. Mundella, Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 392. Qs. Lord Warkworth, Mr. T. Skewes-Cox, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 28, 1522. Qs. Sir F. S. Powell, Mr. C. A. Whitmore; As. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 31, 1614
Wallace Bequest, Manchester House, Qs. Mr. Massey-Mainwaring, Dr. Farquharson; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 391
Water Supply
Commission, Qs. Mr. H. S. Samuel, Mr. T. Lough; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. H. Chaplin May 17, 615
London Bill, Q. Mr. H. S. Samuel; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 17, 616
Westminster Hall, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 14, 506
Wormwood Scrubbs, Q. Mr. W. E. T. Sharpe; A. Mr. Brodrick May 14, 504

Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill
c. 2R., Debate Resumed: Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, (Amendt.) 205; Mr. C. Harrison, 207; Mr. Jesse Collings, 207, 216, 217; Mr. J. Stuart, 210; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 212; Mr. J. Caldwell, 213; Mr. E Gray, 215; Mr. T. Lough, 215, 216; Mr. Sydney Buxton, 218; Mr. Stuart-Wortley, 219; (Division, 220); May 11
Read 2^{o} and com. to Standing Com. on Law, etc. May 11, 221

Metropolitan Police Courts (Holidays) Bill
c. 2R., Mr. T. Lough, 178; Sir Matthew White Ridley, 178; Mr. D. Crilly, 178 May 10
Read 2° May 10, 178
In Com., Rep. without Amendt. May 11, 232
Read 3° and Passed May 11, 232
l. 2R., Lord Belper May 14, 466
Read 2^{a} and com. to Com. of Whole House May 14, 467
In Com., Rep. without Amendt.; Standing Com. negatived May 17, 613
Read 3^{a} and Passed May 18, 717
(For Questions see METROPOLIS)

Metropolitan Water Companies Bill
- c. Mr. H. Chaplin, (Application for leave to Intro.) 1149 ; Sir J. Pease, 1150 May 24
- Intro., Mr. H. Chaplin ; Read 1° May 24, 1151

MILBANK, Mr. POWLETT C. J., Radnor
- Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 828

MILDMAY, Mr. F. B., Devon, Totnes
- Artillery Practice, Plymouth Sound May 27, 1419
- Plymouth Harbour Works May 13, 360
- Start Bay, Removal of Sand May 13, 389

MILWARD, Colonel VICTOR, Warwickshire, Stratford-on-Avon
- Business of the House, General May 28, 1523
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 3R. May 20, 944
- Queen's Reign, Illuminations May 18, 724
- Supply : £132.859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1574
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 24, 1191

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS
- Alcoholic Beverages, Qs. Mr. T. Lough ; As. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 27, 1407
- Benefices Bill, Qs. Viscount Cranborne ; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 21, 1038
- Burial, Premature, Qs. Mr. J. C. Macdona ; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 24, 1139
- Crewe, Representation of, Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill ; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour ; [Mr. Speaker ;] May 17, 634
- Dog Muzzling, Q. Mr. J. W. Logan ; A. Mr. W. Long May 20, 931
- Flax, Foreign Bounties, Qs. Mr. A. Cross ; As. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 721
- Gambling in Futures and Options, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 10, 92
- Herrings
  - Brand Fees, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn ; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 31, 1306
  - Duty on, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir ; As. Mr. Curzon May 24, 1136
  - Imported, Q. Sir C. Cameron ; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 17, 614
  - Scotch, St. Petersburg, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. Curzon May 13, 380
- Inebriates, Reformatories, Qs. Dr. Farquharson ; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 14, 510
- Lead Poisoning, Q. Mr. R. McKenna ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 24, 1134
- Local Loan Fund, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 21, 1023
- Midwives Registration Act, Q. Mr. W. Hazell ; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 390
- Mines and Quarries Statistics, Q. Mr. D. A. Thomas ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 11, 197
- Notification of Infectious Diseases Act, Q. Sir J. T. Brunner ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 13, 377
- Paris Fire, Safety of Public Buildings, Qs. Mr. J. Aird, Mr. T. G. Fardell ; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 10, 95

[cont.

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS—cont.
- Queen's Reign, Diamond Jubilee (see that Title)
- Rating Assessment, Q. Mr. H. Finch-Hatton ; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 13, 371
- Revenue, Great Britain and Ireland, Q. Mr. J. Morley ; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 13, 382
- Royal Patriotic Fund, Q. Mr. A. M. Brookfield ; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 14, 511
- Sale of Food and Drugs Act, Q. Mr. A. F. Jeffreys ; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 390
- Sale of Food and Drugs Act Amendment Bill, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon ; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 27, 1431
- Stationery Office, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1510
- Tithe Redemption Fees, Q. Mr. A. F. Jeffreys ; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 31, 1634
- Turco-Greek War, Qs. Mr. J. Morley ; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 119
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, Q. Mr. J. Daly ; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 18, 730
  (For Debate see Title of Bill)
- War Risks
  - British Ships, Qs. Mr. J. O'Kelly, Mr. W. Allan ; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 11, 199
  - National Insurance, Qs. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Sir G. Baden-Powell ; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 118

MONK, Mr. C. J., Gloucester
- Supply : £132,291 for Survey of the United Kingdom May 28, 1531

MONKSWELL, Lord
- Copyright Amendment Bill, 2R. May 31, 1594
- Volunteers Bill, 2R. May 24, 1115

MONTEAGLE, Lord
- Municipal Franchise, Ireland May 20, 895

MOON, Mr. E. R. PACY, St. Pancras, N.
- Supply : £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 60, 61

MORGAN, Mr. J. LLOYD, Carmarthen, W.
- Post Office Annuities May 10, 104

MORLEY, EARL OF (Chairman of Committees [H.L.])
- Dublin Corporation Bill May 14, 457
- Industries (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 25, 1236
- Provisional Order (Scotland) Bill, 2R. May 20, 878
- Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 7, 1

MORLEY, Right Hon. JOHN, Montrose Burghs
- Business of the House, General May 10, 119 ; May 11, 203 ; May 13, 393
- Greece and the Powers May 11, 201, 202
- Mashonaland May 31, 1626, 1627
- Revenue, Great Britain and Ireland May 13, 382
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 292
- Supply : £68, 431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 533, 534
- Turco-Greek War May 10, 119 ; May 13, 393

MORRIS, Lord
  Provisional Order (Scotland) Bill, 1R. May 13, 337
  Quarter Sessions Jurors (Ireland) Bill, In Com. May 11, 186, 187

MORRISON, Mr. W., York, W.R., Skipton
  Speeches in Parliament May 11, 244

MORTON, Mr. E. J. C., Devonport
  Business of the House, General May 10, 184
  Supply: £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 58, 60, 61

MUNDELLA, Right Hon. A. J., Sheffield, Brightside
  Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 124
  Secondary Education May 24, 1133
  South Kensington Museum May 13, 392
  University Colleges, Grant May 13, 389

MUNTZ, Mr. P. A., Warwick, Tamworth
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1173

MURDOCH, Mr. C. T., Reading
  Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1402

MURNAGHAN, Mr. G., Tyrone, Mid
  Charge of Murder, Tyrone May 18, 728
  Sea Fisheries, Ireland May 20, 930

MURRAY, Colonel C. WYNDHAM, Bath
  Army Staff Officers, India May 31, 1619
  Black Watch Regiment, Subathu May 25, 1251

MURRAY, RIGHT HON. A. GRAHAM (Lord Advocate), Buteshire
  Certificated Teachers May 24, 1142
  Civil Service Clerks May 31, 1606
  Congested Districts, Scotland May 7, 10
  Congested Districts (Scotland) Bill May 20, 908
  Deportation of Paupers May 14, 509; May 17, 631
  Fishing Cruiser, Scotland May 24, 1134; May 27, 1419; May 31, 1632
  Herring Brand Fees May 31, 1606
  Herrings, Imported May 17, 614
  Inhabited House Duty, Scotland May 27, 1404
  Inspectors of Poor, Scotland May 31, 1618
  Local Taxation Returns, Scotland May 13, 388
  Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 349, 350
  Parish Councillors, Scotland May 31, 1618
  Port Ness Harbour, Lewis May 13, 369; May 20, 934; May 24, 1141; May 27, 1418
  Prison System, Scotland May 10, 107; May 24, 1128
  Public Works, Scotland May 13, 369
  St. Andrews University May 14, 501

MURRAY, Right Hon. A. GRAHAM—cont.
  Scottish Fishery Board May 31, 1608, 1609
  Stornoway and Carloway Road May 24, 1140, 1141
  Telegraph Extensions, Scotland May 27, 1425
  Water Supply, River Nethy May 10, 90; May 27, 1425

NAVY
  First Lord—Mr. G. J. GOSCHEN
  Secretary—Mr. W. G. E. MACARTNEY
  Civil Lord—Mr. J. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN
  Artillery Practice, Plymouth Sound, Q. Mr. F. B. Mildmay; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 27, 1419
  Fishery Cruisers, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Macartney May 20, 907
  Her Majesty's Ships, Letters for, Q. Mr. Gibson Bowles; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 614
  Illumination of Fleet, Members of Parliament, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 28, 1508
  Letters for Her Majesty's Ships, Q. Mr. Gibson Bowles; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 614
  Naval
    Manœuvres, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 28, 1521
    Review, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. A. Cross; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain May 18, 725. Q. Mr. J. P. Smith; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 31, 1615
  Navy and Marines (Wills) Act (1865) Amendment Bill (see that Title)
  Personnel, Q. Mr. E. Flower; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 31, 1613
  Plymouth
    Harbour Works, Q. Mr. F. B. Mildmay; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain May 13, 360
    Sound, Artillery Practice, Q. Mr. F. B. Mildmay; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 27, 1419
  Pulmonary Diseases, Q. Captain Phillpotts; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 7, 13
  Queen's Reign
    Members of Parliament,
      Illumination of Fleet, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 28, 1508
      Naval Review, Q. Mr. A. Cross; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain May 18, 725
    Naval
      Forces, Marine and, Q. Captain Phillpotts; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 7, 9
      Review
        Civil Servants, Q. Mr. J. P. Smith; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 31, 1615
        Members of Parliament, Q. Mr. A. Cross; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain May 18, 725
    Royal Naval Reserve, Medal for, Q. Sir J. S. B. Simeon; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 28, 1509
  Royal
    Marines, Reserve, Q. Admiral Field; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 14, 507
    Naval Reserve,
      Medal, Queen's Reign, Q. Sir J. S. B. Simeon; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 28, 1509
      Stornoway, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 31, 1609
  Stornoway, Royal Naval Reserve, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 31, 1609

Navy and Marines (Wills) Act (1865) Amendment Bill
l. 2R., Earl of Hopetoun May 10, 88
  Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House May 10, 89
  In Com., Rep. without Amendt. and re-com. to Standing Com. May 13, 327
  Rep. without Amendt. May 18, 717
  Read 3ª and Passed May 20, 893

NEWDIGATE, Mr. F. A., Warwickshire, Nuneaton
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1652

NICOL, Mr. DONALD N., Argyllshire
  Lighthouse Keepers May 28, 1510

NORTON, Captain C. W., Newington, W.
  Civil Service Clerks May 31, 1605
  Education Department
    Examiners May 11, 191
    Junior Examiners May 31, 1612
  Hyde Park, Footpaths May 24, 1131
  Militia Field Officers May 24, 1132
  Queen's Reign
    Jubilee Procession May 31, 1615
    Metropolitan Police May 27, 1412
    Veterans' Pensions May 27, 1413
  Supply: £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1567, 1572
  Upper Division Clerks, Charity Commission May 11, 190
  Westminster Hall May 14, 506
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1682, 1702

NORTON, Lord
  Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 2R. May 25, 1229
  Secondary Education May 14, 453; May 18, 717; May 21, 1017

NUSSEY, Mr. T. W., Pontefract
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 24, 1175

O'BRIEN, Mr. PATRICK, Kilkenny City
  Agricultural Rating Act, Ireland May 21, 1024
  Army Food and Forage Supplies May 31, 1625
  Blackrock Township Commissioners May 13, 386
  Eviction, Durnascallon (Derry) May 20, 915
  Irish Mail Service May 24, 1144; May 31, 1625
  Labourers' Cottages, Ireland May 20, 917, 918
  Local
    Government, Ireland May 31, 1635, 1636
    Loan Fund May 21, 1023
  Mersey Docks Bill May 27, 1423
  Military Prisons May 31, 1620, 1621
  Post Office Establishments May 17, 631
[cont.

O'BRIEN, Mr. PATRICK—cont.
  Queen's Reign
    Adverse Records May 17, 630
    Jubilee Procession May 25, 1262
  Rathkeale Union, Election of Guardian May 21, 1030
  Religious Orders, Ireland May 25, 1267
  Royal College of Science, Dublin May 21, 1022
  Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 306
  Science and Art Classes, Ireland May 21, 1036
  Technical Education, Ireland May 21, 1023
  Telegraph Offices
    Balcarra (Mayo) May 20, 919
    Public Guarantees May 13, 370
  Veterinary College, Dublin May 13, 386
  Voters' Lists, Westmeath May 27, 1424

O'BRIEN, Mr. P. J., Tipperary, N.
  Glebe Act, Ireland May 24, 1146; May 27, 1423
  Irish Mail Service May 24, 1145

O'CONNOR, Mr. ARTHUR, Donegal, E.
  Budget Resolutions May 10, 152, 157, 160, 169, 170, 176
  Labourer's Cottage, Strabane May 31, 1623

O'CONNOR, Mr. JAMES, Wicklow, W.
  Blackrock Township Commissioners May 10, 114
  Eviction, Littledale Estate, Wicklow May 11, 192

O'CONNOR, Mr. T. P., Liverpool, Scotland
  Civil Service, Second Division Clerks May 17, 622

O'KELLY, Mr. JAMES, Roscommon, N.
  War Risks, British Ships May 11, 199

OLDROYD, Mr. MARK, Dewsbury
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1371

O'MALLEY, Mr. W., Galway, Connemara
  Ard West Pier, Carna, Connemara May 10, 99
  Irish Mail Service May 14, 496
  Postal Delivery, Carna May 10, 100

ONSLOW, EARL OF (Under Secretary of State for India)
  British Troops in India, Health May 14, 486
  East India Company's Officers' Superannuation Bill, 2R. May 13, 313
  Regular and Elders' Widows' Funds Bill, 2R. May 13, 313

Parliament.

LORDS—

Business of the House and Public Business
- Whitsuntide Recess, Q. Earl of Kimberley; A. Marquess of Salisbury May 31, 1602

Members
- Personal Statement (Griffith's Valuation)—Viscount Clifden May 24, 1116

Miscellaneous
- Queen's Reign, Diamond Jubilee (see that Title)

Sat First
- May 14—Lord Lilford, after the death of his father

COMMONS

Business of the House and Public Business
- Adjournment—Mr. A. J. Balfour, (Statement) May 28, 1592
- Business of the House, Qs. Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. B. L. Cohen, Sir J. S. B. Simeon; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 115. Qs. Mr. J. Morley, Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 119. Qs. Sir J. T. Brunner, Mr. E. J. C. Morton, Mr. D. Kilbride; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 184. Qs. Mr. J. Morley, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 11, 203. Qs. Mr. J. Morley, Mr. J. Lowther, Sir J. Fergusson, Mr. T. Lough, Mr. J. G. Weir, Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 393. Qs. Mr. G. Lambert, Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Mr. Hanbury May 13, 449. Mr. A. J. Balfour, (Statement) May 14, 580. Qs. Sir W. Harcourt, Mr. T. M. Healy, Sir C. Dilke, Mr. J. H. Roberts, Mr. L. Courtney, Mr. Brynmor Jones; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 17, 632. Q. Mr. F. F. Begg; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 24, 1148. Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. Henniker Heaton, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 25, 1272. Qs. Mr. J. C. Williams, Sir J. Fergusson, Mr. F. A. Channing, Colonel Milward, Sir C. Dilke, Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. J. Clancy; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 28, 1523. Qs. Captain Sinclair, Sir W. Harcourt; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 31, 1637
- Indian Budget, Q. Mr. S. Smith; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 25, 1271
- Morning Sittings on Tuesdays—Sir M. Hicks Beach, (Notice of Motion) 17; Captain Bethell, 17 May 7
  Mr. A. J. Balfour, (Motion) 120; Mr. Sydney Gedge, 120; (Motion Agreed to, 121) May 10

[cont.

PARLIAMENT—Commons—cont.

Business of the House and Public Businesss—cont.
- Private Bill Legislation
  - Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. J. J. Clancy; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 10, 93
  - Scotland, Qs. Mr. Hedderwick; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 391
- Supply
  - Civil Service Votes, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 938
  - Colonial Office Vote, Q. Sir W. Harcourt; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 18, 733
  - Ordnance Factory Vote, Q. Lord H. Cecil; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 20, 924
  - War Office Vote, Q. Sir A. F. Acland-Hood; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 14, 512
- Suspension of Twelve o'Clock Rule—Mr. A. J. Balfour, (Motion) 633, 634; Mr. J. H. Roberts, 633; Mr. L. Courtney, 633; Mr. Brynmor Jones, 634; (Motion Agreed to, 634) May 17
- Whitsuntide Holidays—Mr. A. J. Balfour, (Statement) May 28, 1592

Committees
- Ascension Day—Mr. A. J. Balfour, (Motion) 1345; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1345; Mr. W. Johnston, 1345, 1346; [Mr. Speaker, 1346;] (Division, 1346) May 26
- British South Africa, Q. Mr. J. Lowther (Question of Privilege); A. Mr. Speaker May 25, 1272
- Burial Grounds, Select—Nominated May 20, 1016
- Government Offices (Appropriation of Sites), 1896—Ordered, That Report be referred to Select Com. on Government Offices (Appropriation of Sites) May 19, 872
- Money Lending, Select—Nominated May 10, 183
  Mr. D. Lloyd-George and Mr. A. K. Loyd added to Com. May 26, 1396
- Parliamentary Election Petitions—Appointed and Nominated May 14, 580
- Statute Law Revision and Consolidation Bills, Q. Mr. Gibson Bowles; A. Sir R. Webster May 20, 935

Members
- Queen's Reign
  - Illumination of Fleet, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 28, 1508
  - Luncheon, Price of Tickets, Q. Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; A. Lord Stanley May 31, 1615
  - Members' Approaches, Jubilee Day, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 28, 1507
  - Naval Review, Q. Mr. A Cross; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain May 18, 725
  - Passes for, Q. Captain Chaloner; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 20, 913
  - Westminster Hall, Closing of, Q. Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; A. Lord Stanley May 31, 1616
- Suspension of (see under SUPPLY: Harbours, Lighthouses, etc.)

[cont.

PARLIAMENT—Commons—cont.
Miscellaneous
  Crewe, Representation, Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour; [Mr. Speaker] May 17, 634
  House of Commons
    Divisions, Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Sir W. Walrond May 18, 721
    Duration of Speeches, Q. Major Rasch; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 17, 632
    Whitsuntide Holidays, Qs. Dr. Farquharson, Mr. H. Labouchere, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Gibson Bowles, Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 20, 937
  Journals of House—Mr. P. M. Thornton, (Motion to correct) 265; [Mr. Speaker, 265;] Mr. J. Daly, 265; (Motion Agreed to, 265) May 12
  Parliamentary
    Correspondence, Postage, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 365
    Voters' Lists, Revision, Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 508
  Speeches in Parliament (see that Title)
  Westminster Hall, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 14, 506

New Writ Issued
  May 21—For the County of Hants (Eastern or Petersfield Division) v. William Wickham, esquire, deceased

Parliamentary Voters (Ireland) Registration Bill
c. Intro., Mr. J. Tully; Read 1° May 24, 1216

Parnell, Mr. J. H., Meath, S.
  Local Government Board, Auditors, Ireland May 27, 1416

Paulton, Mr. J. M., Durham, Bishop Auckland
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1161; In Com. May 26, 1387; May 27, 1481

Pease, Mr. Joseph A., Northumberland, Tyneside
  Budget Resolutions May 10, 163, 165
  Military Prisons May 31, 1620
  Slavery in Zanzibar May 14, 506
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, (Instr. to Com.) 1153; In Com. May 25, 1303; May 27, 1462, 1463, 1467, 1474, 1476; May 31, 1704
  Zanzibar May 28, 1516

Pease, Sir Joseph W., Bart., Durham, Barnard Castle
  Metropolitan Water Companies Bill, 1R. May 24, 1150
  Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1400, 1403
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1163, In Com. 1188; May 25, 1304, 1308; May 27, 1436; May 31, 1644, 1671

PEMBROKE and MONTGOMERY, Earl of (Lord Steward of the Household)
  Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 7, 2

Pensions
  Annuities, Post Office, Q. Mr. Lloyd Morgan; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 10, 104
  Commutation Board, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 10, 90
  Crimean and Indian Veterans, Queen's Reign, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 27, 1413. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 28, 1510
  Crimean Veteran: Brennan (John), Q. Mr. J. Tully; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 31, 1632
  Police Pensioners, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1269
  Teachers (Elementary) Pension Fund, Q. Mr. D. H. Coghill; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 10, 118
  Teachers' Superannuation Bill, Q. Mr. W. Younger; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 27, 1430

Perks, Mr. R. W., Lincolnshire, Louth
  Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 3R. May 20, 942
  Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1403
  Uganda Railway May 27, 1430
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 27, 1465, 1484; May 31, 1658

Phillpotts, Captain A. S., Devonshire, Torquay
  Navy, Pulmonary Diseases May 7, 13
  Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 7, 9

Pickard, Mr. B., York, W.R., Normanton
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1290, 1328; May 27, 1471, 1474

Pickersgill, Mr. E. H., Bethnal Green, S.W.
  Excise Prosecution, Marylebone May 10, 111
  Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 411, 412,
  Llandudno Urban District Council Bill, 3R. May 20, 906
  Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 205
  Metropolitan Police Courts Bill May 7, 14, 15
  Probation of First Offenders Act May 21, 1033
  Radhanpur State Property May 10, 110
  Volunteers Bill, In Com. May 10, 179, 180; May 11, 233, 234
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 681; May 24, (Instr. to Com.) 1152; In Com. May 26, 1347, 1354, 1355; May 31, 1681

Pier and Harbour Provisional Order (No. 1) Bill
c. 2R., Mr. D. Crilly, 491, 492; [Mr. Speaker, 492;] Mr. J. P. Farrell, 492 May 14
Read 2° May 17, 613
Mr. D. Crilly, (Instr. to Com.) 613, 614; Mr. Ritchie, 614; (Motion Agreed to, 614) May 17

PINKERTON, Mr. J., Galway Borough
Queen's Colleges, Ireland May 20, 922, 923
Supply: £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1087, 1090

PIRBRIGHT, Lord
Mersey Channels Bill, 2R. May 25, 1241

PIRIE, Captain DUNCAN V., Aberdeen, N.
Army Staff Appointments, India May 27, 1428; May 31, 1619, 1620
Supply
£29,215 for Mercantile Marine Fund May 28, 1576, 1577
£189,367 for Rates on Government Property May 28, 1559

PLAYFAIR, Lord
British Troops in India, Health May 17, 589
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 2R. May 25, 1223

Plumbers Registration Bill
c. Rep. with Amendts. from Standing Com. on Trade, etc. May 13, 394

Police and Stolen Property Bill
c. Sir Matthew White Ridley, (Application for leave to Intro.) May 20, 940
Intro., Sir Matthew White Ridley; Read 1° May 20, 940

Polling Arrangements (London) Bill
c. Intro., Mr. E. Bond; Read 1° May 10, 184
Withdrawn May 24, 1215

Poor Law Bill
c. Intro., Mr. T. W. Russell; Read 1° May 17, 635

Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act (1896) Amendment Bill
c. Read 2° May 13, 451
In Com. May 19, 871
In Com. May 20, 1016

Poor Law Relief (Ireland) Bill
c. Withdrawn May 24, 1213
(For Questions see IRELAND)

POST OFFICE
Postmaster General—Duke of NORFOLK
Adult Messengers, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1609
Annuities, Q. Mr. Lloyd-Morgan; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 10, 104
Balcarra Telegraph Office, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 919
Canadian Mail Service, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 31, 1619
Carna Postal Delivery, Q. Mr. W. O'Malley; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 100
Circulars, Postal Deliveries of, Q. Mr. M. M. Bhownaggree; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1430
Cork Postmen, Q. Mr. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 388
Delivery of Letters
  Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 629
  United Kingdom, Q. Mr. A. F. Jeffreys; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 370
Dundalk Post Office, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 929
Dungeness Telegraph Office, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 378
Female Clerks, Q. Mr. R. McKenna; A. Mr. Hanbury, May 10, 98
Glasgow Telephone Service, Q. Mr. F. F. Begg; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 928
Gratuities to Postmen, Q. Mr. H. Finch-Hatton A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 372
Guide, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Hanbury May 25, 1253
H.M.'s Ships, Letters for, Q. Mr. Gibson Bowles; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 614
Indian and Australian Mails, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Hanbury May 18, 730
Letters
  Delivery of
    Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 629
    United Kingdom, Q. Mr. A. F. Jeffreys; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 370
  Her Majesty's Ships, for, Q. Mr. Gibson Bowles; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 614
  Official Postmarks, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 627
Lewis
  Postal Facilities, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 91
  Post Offices, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Hanbury May 11, 189; May 20, 909
Mail Service
  Canadian, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 31, 1619
  India and Australia, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Hanbury May 18, 730
  Irish, Qs. Mr. J. Daly, Mr. D. Macaleese; As. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 97. Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. Hanbury May 11, 194. Qs. Mr. W. O'Malley, Mr. J. P. Farrell, Mr. M. Healy; As. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 496. Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill, Mr. R. M. Dane; As. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 624. Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. P. J. O'Brien; As. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1144. Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Hanbury May 25, 1265. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1513. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1625

[cont.

POST OFFICE—cont.

- Official Postmarks on Letters, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 627
- Oldham Telegrams, Q. Mr. R. Ascroft ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 18, 727
- Overtime, Q. Mr. T. Lough ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1630
- Parcel Post, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 21, 1032
- Parish Councils, Scotland, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 368
- Parliamentary
  - Correspondence, Postage, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 365
  - Voters' List, Revision, Q. Mr. M. Healy ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 508
- Pneumatic Messages, Qs. Sir L. McIver ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1624
- Postage, Parliamentary Correspondence, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 365
- Postal
  - Arrangements, Scotland, Queen's Reign, Q. Sir J. Leng ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1411
  - Deliveries
    - Carna, Q. Mr. W. O'Malley ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 100
    - Circulars, Q. Mr. M. M. Bhownaggree ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1430
    - Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 499
  - Facilities
    - Cavan, Q. Mr. J. Daly ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1404
    - Lewis, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 91
  - Orders, Q. Mr. G. B. Hudson ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1515
- Post Cards, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 627
- Postmen
  - Auxiliary, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1508
  - Cork, Q. Mr. M. Healy ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 388
  - Gratuities to, Q. Mr. H. Finch-Hatton ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 372
  - Rural, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1141
- Post Offices
  - Adult Messengers, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1609
  - Dundalk, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 929
  - Establishments, Qs. Mr. J. Stuart, Sir H. Fowler ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 7, 6. Qs. Sir A. K. Rollit, Mr. J. Daly, Mr. J. P. Farrell : As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 11, 199. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 631. Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 18, 731. Qs. Mr. T. Lough, Mr. T. R. Leuty ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 911. Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1512
  - Guide, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 25, 1253
  - Lewis, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 11, 189 ; May 20, 909
  - Overtime, Q. Mr. T. Lough ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1630

[cont.

POST OFFICE—cont.

- Post Office Consolidation Bill (see that Title)
- Prosecution, Q. Mr. G. Lambert ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 25, 1259
- Queen's Reign
  - Auxiliary Postmen, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1508
  - Closing Telegraph Offices, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 374
  - Offenders, Qs. Mr. J. Lowles, Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. P. O'Brien ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 630
  - Postal Arrangements, Scotland, Q. Sir J. Leng ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1411
- Rural
  - Postmen, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Mecaleese ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1141
  - Post Messenger, Dismissal, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1521
- Savings Bank
  - Investments, Q. Mr. T. Lough ; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 31, 1604
  - Withdrawals by Telegraph, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 368 ; May 20, 923 ; May 25, 1252
- Stamp Illustrations, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 910
- Telegrams
  - Non-delivery, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 618
  - Oldham, Q. Mr. R. Ascroft ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 18, 727
- Telegraph
  - Addresses, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 370
  - Charges, Qs. Mr. Henniker Heaton ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 371 ; May 21, 1033
  - Extensions, Scotland, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 27, 1425
  - Offices
    - Balcarra (Mayo), Q. Mr. P. O'Brien ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 919
    - Closing, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 374
    - Dungeness, Q. Sir H. Vincent ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 378
    - Number of, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 25, 1264
    - Public Guarantee, Q. Mr. W. T. Howell ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 107. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 370
  - Posts, Yeovil, Q. Mr. E. Strachey ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 379
  - Savings Bank, Withdrawals by, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 368 ; May 20, 923 ; May 25, 1252
- Telephone
  - Service, Glasgow, Q. Mr. F. F. Begg ; A. Mr Hanbury May 20, 928
  - System, Peterborough, Q. Mr. R. Purvis ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 31, 1605
- Tuskar Light, Telephonic Communication, Q. Mr. G. Drage ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 93. Q. Mr. G. Drage ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1405
- Yeovil Telegraph Posts, Q. Mr. E. Strachey ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 379

Post Office Consolidation Bill
c. 2R., Mr. Gibson Bowles, (Amendt.) 221, 222, 231; [Mr. Speaker, 222;] Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 224; Mr. H. C. F. Luttrell, 225; Mr. Henniker Heaton, 225; Sir R. T. Reid, 225; Mr. W. Ambrose, 227; Sir C. Cameron, 227; Mr. M. Healy, 228; Sir R. B. Finlay, 229; (Amendt. withdrawn, 231) May 11
Read 2° May 11, 231

Post Office Sites Bill
c. Intro., Mr. Hanbury; Read 1° May 13, 395

POWELL, Sir FRANCIS S., Bart., Wigan
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 148
South Kensington Museum May 31, 1614
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 644; In Com. May 25, 1290

POWELL-WILLIAMS, Mr. J. (see WILLIAMS)

POWER, Mr. P. J., Waterford, E.
Supply
£18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead May 28, 1552, 1556
£114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1071, 1073
Waterford Dungarvan and Lismore Railway May 7, 11: May 13, 378; May 20, 939

Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill
l. Rep. from Standing Com. with Amendts May 11, 185
Amendts. Rep. May 13, 327
Read 3ª with Amendts.; Passed, and Returned to Commons May 17, 612

PRETYMAN, Captain ERNEST GEORGE, Suffolk, Woodbridge
Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 968, 973, 974, 975, 996, 1002

PRIESTLEY, Sir W. O., Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities
Vaccination, Lymph Supply May 27, 1426

Prime Minister (Dual Offices)
Mr. Swift MacNeill, (Notice of Motion) May 10, 89

Prisons Bill
c. Sir Matthew White Ridley, (Application for leave to Intro.) May 20, 939
Intro., Sir Matthew White Ridley; Read 1° May 20, 939

Prisons (see LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE)
(For Scotch and Irish Questions see under Titles SCOTLAND and IRELAND)

PROVAND, Mr. ANDREW D., Glasgow, Blackfriars
Employers' Liability Act (1880) Amendment (No. 2) Bill, Intro. May 27, 1488
Licensing (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill, Intro. May 24, 1216
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 741

Provisional Order (Scotland) Bill
l. Pres., Lord Balfour, 328, 337; Lord Tweedmouth, 336; Earl of Camperdown, 337; Lord Morris, 337 May 13
Read 1ª May 13, 338
2R., Lord Tweedmouth, 873, 878; Lord Balfour, 878, 887; Earl of Morley, 878; Earl of Camperdown, 885; Lord Herschell, 892 May 20
Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House May 20, 893

PURVIS, Mr. ROBERT, Peterborough
Telephone System, Peterborough May 31, 1605

Quarter Sessions Jurors (Ireland) Bill
l. In Com., Lord Morris, (Amendt.) 186, [New Clause] 187; Earl of Denbigh, 186, 187, (Amendt.) 188; [Clause withdrawn, 187]; (Amendt. Agreed to, 188) May 11
Re-committed to Standing Com. May 11, 189
Rep. with further Amendt. May 18, 717
Amendts. Rep. May 20, 893
Read 3ª with Amendts.; Passed, and Returned to Commons May 21, 1017

QUEEN'S REIGN, DIAMOND JUBILEE.
Amnesty to Treason-felony Prisoners, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 725. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. W. Field; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1412. Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1510
Carriages, Regulations for, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 21, 1029
Civil Servants,
Cost of Seats, Q. Mr. J. P. Smith; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 31, 1615
Naval Review, Q. Mr. J. P. Smith; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 31, 1615
Crimean
Indian Veterans, and, Q. Captain Norton; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 27, 1413
Veterans, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. Powell-Williams May 28, 1510
Crown Colonies, Representatives of, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain May 28, 1509
Cycle Demonstration, Q. Colonel Lockwood; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 20, 913
Decorations, Security of, Q. Mr. R. Ascroft; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 725
East End Procession, Q. Mr. Wootton Isaacson; A. Mr. Brodrick May 13, 375. Q. Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; A. Mr. Brodrick May 31, 1616

[cont.

QUEEN'S REIGN, DIAMOND JUBILEE—cont.
Evictions, Q. Mr. R. K. Causton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1262
Foreign Consular Corps, Q. Mr. H. S. Foster; A. Mr. Curzon May 24, 1127
Guardians, Powers of, Q. Mr. J. G. Holburn; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 28, 1508
High Sheriffs, Q. Sir C. Dalrymple; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 24, 1127
Illuminations, Q. Colonel Milward; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 18, 724
Income Tax, Q. Mr. J. W. Maclure; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 7, 9
Members
  Approaches for, Jubilee Day, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 28, 1507
  Illumination of Fleet, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 28, 1508
  Luncheon Tickets, Price of, Qs. Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; As. Lord Stanley May 31, 1615
  Passes for, Q. Captain Chaloner; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 20, 913
Metropolitan Police
  Adverse Records, Q. Mr. J. Lowles; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 17, 629
  Extra Allowance to, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. Jesse Collings May 21, 1029. Q. Captain Norton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1412
Naval
  Marine Forces, and, Q. Captain Phillpotts; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 7, 9
  Reserve. Medal, Q. Sir J. S. B. Simeon; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 28, 1509
  Review
    Civil Servants, Q. Mr. J. P. Smith; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen May 31, 1615
    Members, Q. Mr. A. Cross; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain May 18, 725
Officers of the Army, Q. Mr. H. S. Foster; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 7, 9
Old Buildings, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 25, 1261
Passes for Members, Q. Captain Chaloner; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 20, 913
Peers and Officers of House, Tickets for, Qs. Earl of Morley; As. Earl of Pembroke, Earl of Ancaster May 7, 1
Postal
  Arrangements, Scotland, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1411
  Employees, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Mr. Hanbury 13, 374
Postmen
  Adverse Records, Qs. Mr. J. Lowles, Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 629
  Auxiliary, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin; A. Mr. Hanbury May 28, 1508
Procession, Route of, Q. Sir Elliott Lees; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 13, 376
Royal Irish Constabulary, Q. Mr. J. C. Macdona; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 21, 1030
Schools, Holiday for, Q. Major Rasch; A. Sir J. Gorst May 14, 494. Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 914
Science and Art Department, Examinations, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall: A. Sir J. Gorst May 21, 1030

[cont.

QUEEN'S REIGN, DIAMOND JUBILEE—cont.
Seats
  Civil Servants, Cost of, Q. Mr. J. P. Smith; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 31, 1615
  Indian Services, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 20, 914. Q. Captain Norton; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 31, 1615
  Minor Officials of House, for, Q. Colonel Dalbiac; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 14, 495. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 25, 1262
Stands
  Grants of Sites for, Q. Mr. E. Boulnois; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 10, 94
  Inspection of, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 10, 95
Statues, Cleaning of, Q. Mr. J. Aird; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 21, 1029
Thanksgiving Service, Qs. Mr. Grant Lawson, Sir J. T. Brunner, Mr. W. Johnston; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 375. Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 25, 1263
Treason-felony Prisoners, Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 18, 725. Qs. Mr. M. J. Flavin, Mr. W. Field; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley May 27, 1412. Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 28, 1510
Visit of Sultan's Son, Qs. Mr. Swift MacNeill; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 376; May 14, 495
Volunteers, Review of, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Brodrick May 24, 1126
Westminster Hall, Closing of, Q. Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; A. Lord Stanley May 31, 1616

QUILTER, Mr. W. C., Suffolk, Sudbury
  Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 416, 417

Railway Assessors (Scotland) Superannuation Bill
l. Read 2^a and com. to Com. of Whole House May 14, 491
  In Com., Rep. without Amendt.; Standing Com. negatived May 17, 613
  Read 3^a and Passed May 18, 717

Railway Clearing House Bill
c. Mr. Tomlinson, (Instr. to Com.) 1397, 1403; Mr. F. A. Channing, 1399; Mr. J. W. Maclure, 1400; Sir J. Pease, 1400, 1403; Mr. Ritchie, 1400, 1403; Mr. J. W. Mellor, 1401; Mr. C. T. Murdoch, 1402; Mr. J. Bryce, 1402; Mr. R. W. Perks, 1403; [Mr. Speaker, 1403;] Mr. T. Lough, 1403 Adj. May 27

Railway Rates (Ireland)
  Mr. J. P. Farrell, (Notice of Motion) May 11, 189

RAILWAYS

Cycles, Carriage of, Q. Mr. J. Bryce ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1409
Drawings and Relics, Q. Mr. F. A. Channing ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 31, 1624
Dungarvan and Lismore, Q. Mr. P. J. Power ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 939
Great Northern Company of Ireland, Q. Mr. J. Daly ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 12
Indian Midland and Bengal-Nagpur, Q. Mr. J. Dillon ; A. Lord G. Hamilton May 20, 924
Ireland
  Dungarvan and Lismore, Q. Mr. P. J. Power ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 939
  Great Northern Company, Q. Mr. J. Daly ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 12
  Light Railways (see sub-head Light Railways below)
  Tortumna, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. D. Kilbride ; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1415
  Waterford Dungarvan and Lismore Company, Qs. Mr. P. J. Power ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 7, 11 ; May 13, 378 ; May 20, 939
Light Railways
  Act, Qs. Earl of Camperdown ; As. Viscount Cross May 28, 1502
  Ireland, Q. Mr. M. J. Flavin ; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1136. Q. Captain Donelan ; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1264
Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill (see that Title)
London Tilbury and Southend Company, Q. Major Rasch ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 31, 1624
Tortumna, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. D. Kilbride ; As. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1415
Railway Clearing House Bill (see that Title)
Romford Station, Fatal Accident, Q. Mr. L. Sinclair ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 10, 113
Uganda, Q. Mr. R. W. Perks ; A. Mr. Curzon May 27, 1430
Waterford Dungarvan and Lismore Company. Qs. Mr. P. J. Power ; As. Mr. Hanbury May 7, 11 ; May 13, 378 ; May 20, 939

RASCH, Major F. C., Essex, S.E.

Cape Garrison, May 25, 1260
Finance Bill, 2R. May 20, 1009
London Tilbury and Southend Railway Company May 31, 1624
Queen's Reign, School Holidays May 14, 494
Speeches in Parliament May 11, 238 ; May 17, 632
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1662

REAY, Lord

British Troops in India, Health May 14, 491 ; May 17, 581
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, 2R. May 25, 1226

RECKITT, Mr. H. J., Lincolnshire, Brigg

Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 812 ; May 24, (Instr. to Com.) 1153

REDMOND, Mr. JOHN E., Waterford City
Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1055
Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 293. 294
Supply
  £24,037 for Harbours, Lighthouses, etc. May 28, 1538, 1539
  £8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 76

REDMOND, Mr. W. H. K., Clare, E.
Lighthouses, Red Sea May 27, 1416
Supply ; £24,037 for Harbours, Lighthouses, etc. May 28, 1542, 1543, 1544, 1545

Regular and Elders' Widows' Funds Bill
l. 2R., Earl of Onslow May 13, 313
Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House May 13, 314
In Com., Rep. without Amendt. ; Standing Com. negatived May 14, 466
Read 3ª and Passed May 17, 612

REID, Sir R. T., Dumfries District
Post Office Consolidation Bill, 2R. May 11, 225
Supply : £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 29, 31, 32, 38
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1298, 1307 ; May 26, 1349, 1381, 1383, 1391

RENSHAW, Mr. C. B., Renfrewshire
Local Taxation Returns, Scotland May 13, 388
Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 344
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1161 ; In Com. May 25, 1307, 1327 ; May 26, 1354, 1377, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1381, 1393

RENTOUL, Mr. J. A., Down, E.
Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1051
Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 279, 281
Supply
  £8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 70
  £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 563, 569, 572

Restraint of Evictions (London) Bill
c. Read 2° May 13, 452
In Com., R.P. May 31, 1709

RICHARDSON, Mr. THOMAS, Hartlepool
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 773

RIDLEY, RIGHT HON. SIR MATTHEW WHITE, BART. (Secretary of State for the Home Department), Lancashire, N., Blackpool

Boiler Explosions Acts May 17, 623
Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum May 27, 1421

[cont.

Ridley, Right Hon. Sir M. W.—cont.
  Burial, Premature May 24, 1139
  Cleaning Machinery in Motion May 28, 1506
  Colliery Accident, Polesworth May 25, 1255
  Cruelty to Animals, London May 27, 1411
  Factory and Workshops Act 1895, Dock and Wharf Machinery May 25, 1266
  Gambling Raid, Hull May 13, 382
  Gipsies May 18, 732
  Juvenile Offenders May 18, 721
  Lead Poisoning May 24, 1134
  Local Government Electors May 25, 1267
  Metropolitan Police
    Adverse Records May 17, 629
    Extra Allowance to May 27, 1412
  Metropolitan Police Courts Bill May 7, 15
  Metropolitan Police Courts (Holidays) Bill, 2R. May 10, 178
  Mines and Quarries, Statistics May 11, 197
  Paris Fire, Safety of Public Buildings May 10, 96
  Police and Stolen Property Bill, Intro. May 20, 940
  Prison
    Clerks May 18, 719
    Reading, Discharge of Warder May 25, 1267; May 27, 1420
  Prisons Bill, Intro. May 20, 939
  Queen's Reign
    Adverse Records, Police May 17, 629
    Decorations May 18, 725
    Evictions in Southwark May 25, 1262
    Jubilee Procession May 10, 95; May 25, 1262
    Metropolitan Police, Extra Allowance to May 27, 1412
    Treason-felony Prisoners May 18, 725; May 27, 1412
  Reading Prison, Discharge of Warder May 25, 1267; May 27, 1420
  Truck Act 1896 May 24, 1129
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 10, 107; May 17, 624, 2R. 663, 694, 702, 703; May 18, 813; May 24, 1156, In Com. 1182, 1209, 1210; May 25, 1290, 1299, 1304, 1305, 1307, 1329; May 26, 1347, 1348, 1363, 1378; May 27, 1433, 1437, 1438, 1453, 1462, 1463, 1483; May 31, 1642, 1643, 1656, 1676, 1701, 1703, 1704
  Workmen (Compensation Insurance) Bill, Belgium May 18, 729

RITCHIE, Right Hon. CHARLES T. (President of the Board of Trade), Croydon
  Alien Immigration May 28, 1506
  British
    Pilots, Foreigners as May 25, 1257
    Seamen
      Discharge of, Abroad May 27, 1406
      Foreign Ports, in May 18, 732
  Cycles, Carriage by Rail May 27, 1409
  Discharge of British Seamen Abroad May 27, 1406
  Flax, Foreign Bounties May 18, 721, 722
  Foreigners as British Pilots May 25, 1257
  Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 395, 399, 401, 412, 419
  Gambling in Futures and Options May 10, 92; May 28, 1519

[cont.

Ritchie, Right Hon. Charles T.—cont.
  Great Northern Railway Company of Ireland May 7, 12
  King's Lynn Pilot Commissioners May 27, 1417
  Lighthouses
    Keepers May 28, 1510
    Red Sea May 27, 1417
  London Tilbury and Southend Railway Company May 31, 1624
  Longford Canal Harbour May 7, 4
  Mercantile Marine
    Accidents to Seamen May 18, 731
    Foreign Officers and Engineers May 18, 724
  Pier and Harbour Provisional Orders (No. 1) Bill May 17, 614
  Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1400, 1403
  Railway Drawings and Relics May 31, 1624
  Red Sea
    Lighthouses May 27, 1417
    Lighting May 10, 99
  Romford Railway Station, Fatal Accident May 10, 113
  Seamen
    Accidents to, Mercantile Marine May 18, 731
    British
      Discharge of, Abroad May 27, 1406
      Foreign Ports, in May 18, 732
  Start Bay, Removal of Sand May 13, 389
  Sunken Wrecks, Plymouth Fishing Ground May 17, 616, 617
  Supply
    £24,037 for Harbours, Lighthouses, etc. May 28, 1539
    £29,215 for Mercantile Marine Fund May 28, 1576, 1577
    £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1562, 1568 1569, 1573
  Tuskar Light May 27, 1405
  Weights and Measures (Metric System) Bill, Intro. May 27, 1432
  Wreck, S.S. Memphis May 7, 13

Roberts of Kandahar, Lord
  British Troops in India, Health May 14, 476

Roberts, Mr. J. Bryn, Carnarvonshire, Eifion
  Telegram, Non-delivery May 17, 618
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1673

Roberts, Mr. J. Herbert, Denbigh, W.
  Business of the House, General May 17, 633
  Crete May 20, 931
  Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 841
  Liverpool City Churches Bill, 2R. May 24, 1117, 1125
  Llangollen School Board May 20, 920; May 31, 1632

Robertson, Mr. Edmund, Dundee
  Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 399, 418, 419, 429
  Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1361

Robertson, Mr. T. H., Hackney, S.
- Artisans' Dwellings, London May 31, 1610

Robson, Mr. W. S., South Shields
- Supply: £49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 18

Rollit, Sir Albert K., Islington, S.
- Colonial Solicitors Bill, Intro. May 12, 312
- Post Office Establishments May 11, 199
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 783; In Com. May 25, 1301, 1308

Royal Commissions
- Irish Land (see Ireland)
- Land Law (Ireland) Acts (see Ireland)
- Patriotic (see Army)
- Vaccination (see that Title)

Russell, General F. S., Cheltenham
- Cavalry Recruiting Standard May 27, 1417
- Military Manœuvres Bill May 20, 937
- Supply: £18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead May 28, 1547, 1548, 1549, 1553, 1554, 1555

RUSSELL, Mr. T. W. (Secretary to the Local Government Board), Tyrone, S.
- Joint Burial Committees May 14, 505
- Parish Councils Association May 25, 1254
- Poor Law Bill, Intro. May 17, 635
- Water Supply, Urswick May 7, 8

Russell of Killowen, Lord
- Juries Detention Bill, 2R. May 10, 86

Rutland, Duke of
- Dublin Corporation Bill May 14, 462

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill
- c. 2R., Mr. W. E. H. Lecky, 266, 283, 304; Mr. J. Jordan, 272; Mr. J. Daly, (Amendt.) 273, 280, 281; Major Jameson, 275; Mr. J. A. Rentoul, 279, 281; Mr. T. Harrington, 283; Mr. M. Healy, 286, 294; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 289, 292; Mr. J. Morley, 292; Mr. J. Redmond, 293, 294; Sir J. Haslett, 297; Sir T. Lea, 300; Mr. S. Young, 300; Mr. J. P. Farrell, 301; Mr. W. Johnston, 303; Mr. J. Wilson (Govan), 303; Mr. J. J. Clancy 303, 304; Colonel Saunderson, 304; Mr. P. O'Brien, 306; (Division, 306) May 12
- Read 2° May 12, 309
- In Com., R.P. May 13, 452

SALISBURY, Marquess of (Prime Minister and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs)
- Greece and the Powers May 10, 85
- Industries (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 25, 1239
- Royal Niger Company, May 24, 1111
- Whitsuntide Recess May 31, 1602

Samuel, Mr. Harry S., Tower Hamlets, Limehouse
- Water Supply, London May 17, 615, 616

Samuel, Mr. J., Stockton-on-Tees
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 151
- Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 422; May 17, 712
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 811; In Com. May 31, 1681

Saunderson, Colonel E. J., Armagh, N.
- Local Government, Ireland May 21, 1049
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 304
- Supply: £68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 530, 548, 549, 550

School Boards' Expenses Bill
- c. Intro., Sir J. Gorst; Read 1° May 17, 635

Schools
- Attendance, Ireland, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1415
- Berriew School Scheme, Q. Mr. Humphreys-Owen; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1621
- Boards
  - Divisions, London, Q. Mr. T. G. Fardell; A. Sir J. Gorst May 24, 1128
  - Llanbedr, Qs. Lord H. Cecil; As. Sir J. Gorst May 31, 1622
  - Llangollen, Qs. Mr. J. H. Roberts; As. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 920; May 31, 1632
  - Loans, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 916
  - North Mundham, Qs. Mr. J. C. Williams; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir J. Gorst May 24, 1129
- Elementary, Honiton, Holy Week, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 14, 498
- Estate, Fermanagh, Q. Mr. P. C. Doogan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 31, 1622
- Grammar, Swansea, Q. Sir J. T. D. Llewelyn; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1611
- Honiton
  - Elementary, Holy Week, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 14, 498
  - National, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 916
- Industrial, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1258
- Irish
  - Epidemic, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew, A. Mr. G. Balfour May 24, 1134
  - National (see under Title Ireland)

[cont.

Schools—cont.

- Jubilee Holiday for, Q. Major Rasch; A. Sir J. Gorst May 14, 494. Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 914
- Model
  - Ireland, Q. Mr. T. M. Healy; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 7, 3
  - Queen's Birthday, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 20, 915
- National
  - Honiton, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 916
  - Monitors, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 27, 1405
  - Teachers' Fund, Ireland, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 17, 619
- Science and Art
  - Classes, Ireland, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Sir J. Gorst May 21, 1036
  - Grants, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst May 13, 367
  - Teachers, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour May 25, 1260
- Voluntary Schools Act, Q. Mr. E. Gray; A. Sir J. Gorst May 7, 5. Q. Mr. T. G. Ashton; A. Sir J. Gorst May 10, 92. Qs. Mr. E. Gray, Mr. J. W. Mellor; As. Sir J. Gorst May 13, 373. Q. Mr. J. W. Sidebotham; A. Sir R. Webster May 20, 935

SCOTLAND

Secretary for—Lord Balfour
Lord Advocate—Mr. A. Graham Murray
Solicitor General—Mr. C. Scott Dickson

- Certificated Teachers, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 24, 1142
- Colonisation Board, Manitoba, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 25, 1261
- Congested Districts (Scotland) Bill, Q. Mr. J. E. B. Baillie; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 7, 10. Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray, Mr. A. J. Balfour May 20, 907. Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 31, 1636
- Crofters' Settlements, Manitoba, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 18, 730
- Deportation of Paupers, Qs. Mr. J. Daly; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 14, 509; May 17, 631
- Dog Licences
  - Drumlithie (Kincardineshire), Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Mr. Hanbury May 14, 501
  - Govan, Q. Mr. J. Wilson (Govan); A. Mr. Hanbury May 21, 1026
- Edinburgh University, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Hanbury May 25, 1263
- Equivalent Grant, Q. Sir L. McIver; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 27, 1406
- Fishery Cruiser, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 24, 1134; May 27, 1418; May 31, 1632
- Glasgow, Telephone Service, Q. Mr. F. F. Begg; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 928
- Govan, Dog Licence, Q. Mr. J. Wilson (Govan); A. Mr. Hanbury May 21, 1026
- Guardians, Powers of, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. J. G. Holburn; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 28, 1508

[cont.

SCOTLAND—cont.

- Herrings
  - Brand Fees, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 31, 1606
  - Duty on, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Curzon May 24, 1136
  - Imported, Q. Sir C. Cameron; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 17, 614
  - Scotch, at St. Petersburg, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Curzon May 13, 380
- Inhabited House Duty, Q. Sir T. Sutherland; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 27, 1404
- Inspectors of Poor, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 31, 1618
- Lewis
  - Designation of, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 25, 1271
  - Port Ness Harbour, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 11, 197. Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 13, 369; May 20, 934; May 24, 1141; May 27, 1418
  - Postal Facilities, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Hanbury May 10, 91
  - Post Office, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Hanbury May 11, 189; May 20, 909
- Local Taxation Returns, Q. Mr. C. B. Renshaw; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 13, 388
- Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill (see that Title)
- Manitoba
  - Colonisation Board, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 25, 1261
  - Crofters' Settlement, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 18, 730
- Moray Firth, Trawling, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Curzon May 25, 1256
- Nethy River, Water Supply, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 10, 90. Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 27, 1425
- Parish
  - Councillors, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 31, 1618
  - Councils, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Hanbury May 13, 368
- Port Ness Harbour, Lewis, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 11, 197. Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 13, 369; May 20, 934; May 24, 1141; May 27, 1418
- Postal Arrangements, Queen's Reign, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1411
- Prison System, Qs. Mr. Hedderwick; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 10, 106; May 24, 1127
- Private Bill Legislation, Qs. Mr. Hedderwick; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour May 13, 391
- Provisional Order (Scotland) Bill (see that Title)
- Public Works, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 13, 369
- Queen's Reign
  - Guardians, Powers of, Q. Mr. J. G. Holburn; A. Mr. H. T. Anstruther May 28, 1508
  - Postal Arrangements, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Hanbury May 27, 1411
- St. Andrews University, Q. Mr. R. Cox; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 14, 500

[cont.

SCOTLAND—cont.
Scottish Fisheries Board, Qs. Sir W. Wedderburn, Mr. J. G. Weir ; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 31, 1608
Stornoway and Carloway Road, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir ; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 24, 1140
Teachers, Certificated, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon ; As. Mr. Graham Murray May 24, 1142
Telegraph Extensions, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 27, 1425
Telephone Service, Glasgow, Q. Mr. F. F. Begg ; A. Mr. Hanbury May 20, 928
Trawling, Moray Firth, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. Curzon May 25, 1256
Water Supply, River Nethy, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 10, 90. Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. Graham Murray May 27, 1425
Weighing of Cattle, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir ; A. Mr. W. Long May 13, 367

SCOTT, Mr. C. P., Lancashire, S.W., Leigh
Turco-Greek War, Armistice May 21, 1039 ; May 24, 1143

SEELY, Mr. CHARLES H., Lincoln
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1310 ; May 31, 1649

SETON-KARR, Mr. H., St. Helens
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill 2R. May 17, 655, 703 ; May 20, 932, 933 ; May 24, (Instr. to Com.) 1153, In Com. 1178, 1211 ; May 25, 1319, 1325 ; May 26, 1366, 1380 ; May 27, 1432, 1461, 1482, 1484 ; May 31, 1645

SHARPE, Mr. W. E. T., Kensington, N.
Wormwood Scrubbs May 14, 504

SHAW, Mr. THOMAS, Hawick Burghs
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1358

SHEEHY, Mr. D., Galway, S.
Supply
£68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 561
£114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1083

Shipwrecks
S.S. Memphis, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell ; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 13
Sunken Wrecks, Plymouth Fishing Ground, Qs. Mr. C. Harrison, Mr. Gibson Bowles ; As. Mr. Ritchie May 17, 616

SIDEBOTHAM, Mr. J. W., Cheshire, Hyde
Voluntary Schools Act May 20, 935

SIMEON, Sir J. S. BARRINGTON, Bart., Southampton
Business of the House, General May 10, 117
Queen's Reign, Royal Naval Reserve May 28, 1509
Supply : £132,291 for Survey of the United Kingdom May 28, 1528

SINCLAIR, Captain JOHN, Forfarshire
Business of the House, General May 31, 1637
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 27, 1463

SINCLAIR, Mr. LOUIS, Essex, Romford
Romford Railway Station, Fatal Accident May 10, 113

SKEWES-COX, Mr. T., Surrey, Kingston
Gipsies May 18, 732
South Kensington Museum May 28, 1522

SMITH, Mr. J. PARKER, Lanarkshire, Partick
Jhalawar May 27, 1428
Queen's Reign
Jubilee Procession May 31, 1615
Naval Review May 31 1615
Supply : £34,291 for Board of Agriculture May 28, 1583
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1312 ; May 26, 1357, 1358 ; May 27, 1472, 1478, 1479

SMITH, Mr. SAMUEL, Flintshire
Indian Budget May 25, 1271
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill, 2R. May 19, 834

SOUTHWELL, Lord Bishop of (Dr. George Ridding)
British Troops in India, Health May 17, 597

SOUTTAR, Mr. R., Dumfriesshire
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1661

Mr. Speaker.

THE RIGHT HON.
WILLIAM COURT GULLY, Q.C.,
Carlisle

Question of Privilege
The Resolution of 1688, to which the right hon. Gentleman has referred, is no doubt still part of the practice and Rules of the House. I need not refer more particularly to the Resolution, as the right hon. Gentleman has read its terms. All I can say as to the course to be taken by a Committee is, that when any case arises to which that Rule is applicable it is obvious that the proper course is to report to the House May 25, 1273

[cont.

SPEAKER, Mr.—cont.

Questions

The hon. Member for North Louth is entirely out of order in making suggestions of that kind. The hon. Member was stopped because he was arguing upon an answer. The hon. Member for West Belfast, as I understand, is strictly confining himself so far to the Question upon the Paper, and is stating that that Question has not been answered May 14, 494

I am not aware there is any precedent, at least in modern times, for making an order on an individual Member to attend the House, except for the purpose either of giving evidence before a Committee, or attending upon a Committee, or obeying a previous order of the House or Committee, or to answer for some alleged breach of privilege or order. I say nothing about the power of the House to make such an order; but I would point out that it would be a very inconvenient course to make Motions with regard to individual Members, because it might lead to retaliatory Motions from other parts of the House May 17, 634

Rules and Order of Debate

The Instruction to the Committee of which the noble Lord the Member for Rochester has given notice, to enable the Education Department to check the increase of the sum expended per scholar for maintenance under any School Board receiving a contribution under the Bill, is out of order, because its object may be obtained by an Amendment. The other Instruction standing on the Paper in the name of the hon. Member for Glamorganshire, providing for the payment of arrears under Section 97 of the Act of 1870, is also out of order, because its object is to increase the grant which was voted in Committee, and it would be quite out of order as an Instruction.

[While Mr. SPEAKER was delivering the above Ruling, several Members passed down the floor of the House amid cries of "Order!" Sir HENRY FOWLER: "I wish to ask you, Sir, whether it is not one of the Standing Orders of the House that when you rise in the Chair every Member should remain seated?" Mr. SPEAKER replied:]

That is the Rule, and it is important in the interests of the order and decency of the proceedings of the House that it should be observed May 10, 122

It is out of order to refer to the Debate, and the hon. Member is not only referring to it, but is replying to a speech by the Lord Chancellor May 11, 222

The numbers being equal, it is my duty to vote, and in accordance with the usual practice of the Chair in such circumstances, I shall give my vote in such a way as will afford the House another opportunity of taking a decision on this matter. I therefore give my vote with the Ayes, and declare that the Ayes have it May 11, 262

[cont.

SPEAKER, Mr.—cont.

Rules and Order of Debate—cont.

As the Tellers are agreed that there was a mistake, if the hon. Member will from his place move that the Journals of the House be corrected accordingly, I have no doubt that the House will agree to the Motion May 12, 265

I must remind the hon. Member, as I have reminded another hon. Member, that the question is not the employment of criminals in English prisons, but the importation of goods made in prisons abroad May 13, 417

I cannot see how an examination of the scheme of a particular company can be entered upon on the Second Reading of this Bill May 17, 680

I do not see how that arises on this Bill. Of course, the hon. Member is entitled to argue that the present schemes of railway companies are schemes which would or would not be allowed by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, but that is really the only point which arises in regard to contracting out May 17, 680

The Money Committee (there is no question of the Committee of Ways and Means) for authorising the grant of Money for the expenses involved in the Bill must be taken before the third section of the second schedule is reached. That is the charging part of the Bill. All that the first clause of the Bill says is that compensation is to be settled by arbitration "in accordance with the second schedule to this Act." That does not fix what the terms of the second schedule are to be. Those are to be settled after the first clause has been passed, and when the second schedule is reached. There is nothing in the first clause to say that terms of the second schedule shall be the identical terms in which it stands. The House may alter it, or even strike out the power to refer to any one of the County Court Judges, and the consequent charges; but no charge can be dealt with by the Committee under that third clause of the second schedule until a Resolution in a Money Committee has been passed May 24, 1151

There are several Instructions on the Paper with reference to the First Order of the Day, Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill. These I will now deal with. The first Instruction, standing in the name of the hon. Member for Carmarthen Boroughs, and the two which stand in the name of the hon. Member for Mid Glamorgan, propose to deal with the relations of lessors and lessees of mines. That subject, I think, is outside the scope of the Bill, which relates wholly to the relations of employers and employed, nor does the fact that the lessee happens to be the employer of a workman in a mine affect the point. The Amendment standing in the name of the hon. Member for Bethnal

[cont.

SPEAKER, Mr.—cont.
Rules and Order of Debate—cont.
Green, and also that of the hon. Member for Northumberland (Tyneside)—the one proposing a scheme of insurance under State supervision, and the other a scheme for State insurance—are both out of order as being outside the scope of the Bill and involving a charge on the revenue. Then there is the Instruction of the hon. Member for North Monmouth, which seeks to insert clauses with a view to amend the law of employers' liability in respect of those trades or industries to which the Bill does not apply. At present the Bill only applies to certain trades, and it will be competent to hon. Members to propose to add other trades, but it will not be competent by Instruction or otherwise to deal by way of Amendment with the law relating to trades which are excluded from the Bill, both as it stands at present and as it ultimately may stand. The Instruction standing in the name of the hon. Member for Berwickshire proposes to empower the Committee to insert provisions to secure compensation to workmen for injuries to health arising out of, and in the course of, their employment. If the Bill were not expressly limited on the face of it to injuries arising from accidents I should have said that that matter might have been dealt with by way of Amendment without an Instruction; but, having regard to the express terms of the Bill, I am of opinion that the Instruction is necessary and it is in order. The Amendment of the hon. Member for York proposes to introduce provisions to abolish the doctrine of common employment as affecting the right to compensation. As regards any trades that are included in, or may be added to, the list in the Bill, of course that might be done by Amendment, and no Instruction is necessary; as regards other trades, the Instruction would not be in order, as the law affecting them is outside the scope of the Bill. The Amendment of the hon. Member for St. Helens, dealing with the case of employers who may be financially unable to pay compensation, is out of order, because the matter can be dealt with by way of Amendment. The Amendment of the hon. Member for the Brigg Division is out of order. It proposes to insert clauses to provide for the compensation of workmen where the employer is a foreign shipowner without assets in this country. Seamen are not at present included in the Bill; if it be intended to include them, such inclusion can only cover the case of seamen employed in the United Kingdom or on British ships. For that no Instruction would be necessary. If it be intended to cover the case of seamen employed by foreign shipowners on foreign ships, that would be outside the scope of an Instruction, if not altogether outside the powers of Parliament. That disposes of all the Instructions except that of the hon. Member for Berwickshire May 24, 1153

[Rulings re Suspension of Mr. John Redmond May 28, 1540]

Miscellaneous Rulings
May 10, 102, 103; May 11, 222, 257; May 14, 492, 493, 494; May 17, 616, 680; May 18, 724; May 21, 1026; May 24, 1130, 1151; May 26, 1346; May 27, 1403, 1412, 1415

Speeches in Parliament
Major Rasch, (Motion) 238; Mr. Radcliffe Cooke, 241; Sir J. Fergusson, 242; Sir Elliott Lees, 243; Mr. H. Hobhouse, 243; Mr. R. G. Webster, 244; Mr. W. Morrison, 244; (Division, 245) May 11

Spencer, Earl
Land Valuation, Ireland May 13, 340

Spicer, Mr. A., Monmouth Boroughs
Elementary Education Act, Age Clause May 17, 631
Supply: £7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 81, 82

Stanhope, Earl
Finance Acts, Works of Art May 28, 1489, 1501

Stanhope, Hon. P. J., Burnley
Charity Scheme, Thornton-in-Craven May 20, 927
Discharge of Weavers, Burnley May 14, 500
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1287

STANLEY, Lord (Lord Commissioner of the Treasury), Lancashire, S.E., Westhoughton
Queen's Reign, Jubilee Day May 31, 1616

Stanley of Alderley, Lord
Finance Acts, Works of Art May 28, 1498

Stanmore, Lord
Royal Niger Company May 24, 1109

Stevenson, Mr. F. S., Suffolk, Eye
Crete May 17, 626
Murder of Yusaf Yunan May 31, 1617

Stewart, Sir Mark J., Bart., Kirkcudbrightshire
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1668

[cont.

STIRLING-MAXWELL, Sir J. M., Bart., Glasgow, College
Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 351

STRACHEY, Mr. EDWARD, Somerset, S.
County Council, Accounts May 13, 378
Local Government Act 1894, Parochial Charities May 25, 1251
Telegraph Posts, Yeovil May 13, 379
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1445, 1446, 1447, 1464

STRAUSS, Mr. A., Cornwall, Camborne
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 670

STUART, Mr. JAMES, Shoreditch, Hoxton
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 130, 147
Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 210
Post Office Establishments May 7, 6, 7

STUART-WORTLEY, Right Hon. C. B. (see WORTLEY)

SULLIVAN, Mr. DONAL, Westmeath, S.
Voters' List, Westmeath May 25, 1270

SUPPLY

£8 for Bankruptcy Department, Board of Trade
In Com., Vote Agreed to May 28, 1577. Report May 31, 1706

£34,291 for Board of Agriculture, Salaries and Expenses
In Com., Mr. F. A. Channing, 1577, 1590; Mr. Lees Knowles, 1578; Mr. Radcliffe Cooke, 1578; Mr. J. W. Mellor, 1583; Mr. J. P. Smith, 1583; Mr. D. Kilbride, 1584; Sir C. Dilke, 1585; Mr. G. Whiteley, 1586; Mr. W. Long, 1586, 1590. Vote Agreed to, 1590 May 28. Report May 31, 1706

£1,243 for Charitable Donations and Bequests Office (Ireland)
In Com., Vote Agreed to May 21, 1105. Report May 24, 1212

£49,705 for Foreign Office, Salaries and Expenses
In Com., Mr. W. S. Robson, (Amendt.) 18; Mr. J. Ellis, 24, 25, 26; Mr. Curzon, 25, 31, 33, 38, 46, 53; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 26, 61; Captain Bethell, 28, 29, 32; Mr. J. Dillon, 29; Sir R. T. Reid, 29, 31, 32, 38; Mr. Swift MacNeill, 46; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 47, 53; Mr. T. W. Legh, 55; Mr. E. J. C. Morton, 58, 60, 61; Mr. E. R. P. Moon, 60, 61; Sir C. Dilke, 62; Sir M. Hicks Beach, 63; (Division, 63); (Motion withdrawn, 63) May 7

[cont.

SUPPLY—cont.

£18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead
In Com., Mr. J. Dillon, 1547, 1548, 1549, 1553, 1554, 1555, 1557; General Russell, 1547, 1548, 1549, 1553, 1554, 1555; Mr. Austen Chamberlain 1550, 1552, 1556; Sir H. Fowler, 1551; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1552; Mr. P. J. Power, 1552, 1556; Mr. J. G. Weir, 1555, (Amendt.) 1556, 1557; Mr. Humphreys-Owen, 1555; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1557); Dr. G. B. Clark, 1557; (Division, 1557). Vote Agreed to, 1557 May 28. Report May 31, 1706

£24,037 for Harbours, Lighthouses, etc.
In Com., Mr. J. J. Clancy, 1537, 1538, 1539, 1541, 1542; [Chairman, 1538, 1539, 1540, 1541, 1542, 1543, 1544, 1545, 1546;] Mr. J. Redmond, 1538, 1539; Mr. Ritchie, (Motion for Suspension of hon. Member for Waterford) 1539; (Divisions, 1540); [Mr. Speaker, 1540;] Mr. W. Redmond, 1542, 1543, 1544, 1545; Mr. W. Field, 1546. Vote Agreed to, 1546 May 28. Report May 31, 1705

£19,576 for House of Commons Offices, Salaries and Expenses
In Com., Vote Agreed to May 28, 1561. Report May 31, 1706

£8,485 for House of Lords Offices, Salaries and Expenses
In Com., Mr. J. J. Clancy, 63, 64, 65; [Chairman, 64, 65, 68, 75;] Mr. Gibson Bowles, 66, 73, 74, 77; Mr. J. Dillon, 67, (Amendt.) 68, 74; Mr. Swift MacNeill, 68, 74, 77; Mr. J. A. Rentoul, 70; Mr. Hanbury, 71, 74, 77; Mr. J. P. Farrell, 73; Mr. J. Daly, 75; Mr. J. Redmond, 76; (Divisions, 78). Vote Agreed to, 78 May 7. Report May 10, 178

£68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses
In Com., Mr. J. Lowther, 513, 515; Mr. T. M. Healy, 513, 514, 515, 523, 524, 530, 531, 533, 540, 550, 551, 553, 557; [Chairman, 513, 526, 561;] Mr. E. H. Carson, 517, 523, 524, 531, 534, 548; Mr. Swift MacNeill, 526; Mr. G. Balfour, 528, 530, 531, 533, 544, 547, 557, 562; Colonel Saunderson, 530, 548, 549, 550; Mr. J. Dillon, 533, 541, 544, 547, 548, 562, 577; Mr. J. Morley, 533, 534; Colonel Waring, 534; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 537, 540, 553; Mr. M. Healy, 549, 562, 569; Mr. J. C. Flynn, (Amendt.) 558; Mr. J. P. Farrell, 561; Mr. D. Sheehy, 561; Sir T. Lea, 562; (Division, 563); Mr. J. A. Rentoul, 563, 569, 572; Mr. D. Kilbride, 571, 572; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 575, 577; Mr. J. Daly, 578, 579; Mr. H. V. Duncombe, 579; R.P. May 14

SUPPLY—cont.

£40,229 for Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions (Ireland)

In Com., Mr. J. Dillon, 1103, 1104; Mr. J. Atkinson, 1103; [Chairman, 1103;] Mr. G. Balfour, 1103; Mr. J. C. Flynn, 1104; Mr. R. M. Dane, 1104, 1105; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1105; (Motion withdrawn, 1105) May 21

£114,389 for Local Government Board (Ireland), Salaries and Expenses

In Com., Mr. T. M. Healy, 1061; Captain Donelan, 1061; Mr. J. P. Farrell, 1062; Mr. J. Daly, 1067, 1071, 1080; [Chairman, 1070, 1073, 1084, 1085, 1086, 1087;] Sir J. Colomb, 1071; Mr. P. J. Power, 1071, 1073; Mr. J. Tully, 1074, 1077, 1081; Mr. G. Balfour, 1077, 1078, 1080, 1081, 1083, 1086, 1091, 1099, 1101; Mr. Serjeant Hemphill, 1082, 1083; Mr. D. Sheehy, 1083; Mr. M. J. Flavin, 1083, 1084, 1085, 1086, 1087; Mr. J. Pinkerton, 1087, 1090; Dr. R. Ambrose, 1089; Mr. D. Kilbride, 1090, 1091; Colonel Waring, 1094; Mr. J. Dillon, 1095; Mr. D. Crilly, 1101, 1102; Dr. Tanner, 1102. Vote Agreed to, 1102 May 21. Report May 24, 1212

£29,215 for Mercantile Marine Fund (Grant in Aid)

In Com., Mr. J. G. Weir, 1575; Captain Bethell, 1576; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1576, 1577; Captain Pirie, (Amendt.) 1576, 1577; Mr. Ritchie, 1576, 1577; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1577). Vote Agreed to, 1577 May 28. Report May 31, 1706

£7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses

In Com., Mr. J. J. Clancy, 78, 79; [Chairman, 78, 79;] Mr. Gibson Bowles, (Amendt.) 79, 80; Mr. Swift MacNeill, 79, 80, (Amendt.) 81; Mr. Hanbury, 80, 82, 83; Mr. W. Hazell, 80, 81; (Division, 81); Mr. A. Spicer, 81, 82; Mr. J. P. Farrell, 82; Mr. T. Bayley, 82; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 83; (Divisions, 83). Vote Agreed to, 83 May 7. Report May 10, 178

£132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses

In Com., Sir C. Dilke, 1561; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1562; Mr. J. C. Macdona, 1562; Mr. Ritchie, 1562, 1568, 1569, 1573; Mr. T. Lough, 1563, 1566; Mr. J. G. Weir, 1563, 1564, (Amendt.) 1573; [Chairman, 1564;] Mr. J. Burns, 1564, 1575; Mr. M. Austin, 1565; Mr. J. Dillon, 1566, 1569, 1572; Captain Norton, 1567, 1572; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1573; Colonel Milward, 1574; Colonel Denny, 1574; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1575). Vote Agreed to, 1575 May 28

[cont.

SUPPLY—cont.

£3,880 for Public Record Office (Ireland)

In Com., Mr. J. C. Flynn, 1105, 1107; [Chairman, 1105, 1106;] Dr. Tanner, 1106; Mr. P. A. M'Hugh, 1106; Mr. G. Balfour, 1107; Mr. D. Kilbride, 1107; R.P. May 21

£189,367 for Rates on Government Property

In Com., Lord H. Cecil, 1557, 1561; Mr. J. C. Flynn, 1557; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1558; Mr. B. L. Cohen, 1558; Captain Pirie, 1559; Mr. J. G. Weir, 1559; Mr. Hanbury, 1559; Dr. Clark, 1561. Vote Agreed to, 1561 May 28. Report May 31, 1706

£132,291 for Survey of the United Kingdom

In Com., Mr. J. Dillon, 1525, 1531, 1532, 1533; Mr. Hanbury, 1525, 1530, 1531, 1533; Sir J. S. B. Simeon, 1528; Mr. J. J. Clancy, 1529, 1530, 1537; Mr. C. J. Monk, 1531; Mr. T. Lough, 1534; Mr. W. Long, 1535. Vote Agreed to, 1537 May 28. Report May 31, 1705

Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland) Act (1877) Amendment Bill

c. Intro., Mr. M. Healy; Read 1° May 14, 512
Read 2° May 18, 816
In Com., R.P. May 19, 872

SUTHERLAND, Sir THOMAS, Greenock
Inhabited House Duty, Scotland May 27, 1404
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1695

TALBOT, Mr. J. G., Oxford University
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 142

TANNER, Dr. C. K. D., Cork, Mid
Supply
£114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1102
£3,880 for Public Record Office, Ireland May 21, 1106

TEMPLETOWN, Viscount
Land Law (Ireland) Acts May 20, 896

TENNANT, Mr. H. J., Berwickshire
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 734; May 24, (Instr. to Com.) 1153, 1155, 1160; In Com. May 26, 1353

THOMAS, Mr. ABEL, Carmarthenshire, E.
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1161; In Com. May 25, 1340; May 31, 1705

THOMAS, Mr. D. A., Merthyr Tydvil
Mines and Quarries, Statistics May 11, 197

THORNTON, Mr. PERCY M., Clapham
Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 256, 257; May 12, 265

THRING, Lord
Copyright Amendment Bill, 2R. May 31, 1599

TOMLINSON, Mr. W. E. M., Preston
Railway Clearing House Bill May 27, 1397, 1403
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 24, 1175, 1207; May 25, 1285, 1325; May 26, 1391; May 27, 1461, 1468

TRADE, BOARD OF

President—Mr. C. T. RITCHIE
Secretary—Earl of DUDLEY

Alien Immigration, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Ritchie May 28, 1505
Argentine Cattle Trade, Q. Sir J. Kinloch; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1131
British
  Pilots, Foreigners as, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 25, 1257
  Seamen
    Discharge of, Abroad, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1406
    Foreign Ports, in, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 732
Custom House, London, Q. Mr. C. H. Wilson; A. Mr. Hanbury May 24, 1135
Cycles, Carriage by Rail, Q. Mr. J. Bryce; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1409
Discharge of British Seamen Abroad, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1406
Fishing Ground, Plymouth, Sunken Wrecks, Qs. Mr. C. Harrison, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Ritchie May 17, 616
Flax, Foreign Bounties, Qs. Mr. A. Cross; As. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 721
Foreigners as British Pilots, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 25, 1257
Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill (see that Title)
Gambling in Futures and Options, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. Ritchie May 10, 92. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie May 28, 1519
Great Northern Railway Company of Ireland, Q. Mr. J. Daly; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 12
King's Lynn, Pilot Commissioners, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1417
Lighthouses
  Keepers, Q. Mr. D. N. Nicol; A. Mr. Ritchie May 28, 1510
  Red Sea, Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1416
London Tilbury and Southend Railway Company, Q. Major Rasch; A. Mr. Ritchie May 31, 1624
Longford Canal Harbour, Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 4

[cont.

TRADE, BOARD OF—cont.
Mercantile Marine
  Accidents to Seamen, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 731
  Foreign Officers and Engineers, Qs. Mr. J. F. Flannery, Sir A. B. Forwood; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Ritchie May 18, 724
Pilot Commissioners, King's Lynn, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1417
Pilots, Foreigners as British, Q. Mr. J. A. Willox; A. Mr. Ritchie May 25, 1257
Railway Drawings and Relics, Q. Mr. F. A. Channing; A. Mr. Ritchie May 31, 1624
Red Sea
  Lighthouses, Q. Mr. W. Redmond; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1416
  Lighting, Q. Sir E. S. Hill; A. Mr. Ritchie May 10, 99
Romford Railway Station, Fatal Accident, Q. Mr. L. Sinclair; A. Mr. Ritchie May 10, 113
Start Bay, Removal of Sand, Q. Mr. F. B. Mildmay; A. Mr. Ritchie May 13, 389
Sunken Wrecks, Plymouth Fishing Grounds, Qs. Mr. C. Harrison, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Ritchie May 17, 616
Tuskar Light, Q. Mr. G. Drage; A. Mr. Ritchie May 27, 1405
Wreck, S.S. Memphis, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Ritchie May 7, 13

Trade of the United Kingdom and the Colonies
Sir H. Vincent, (Notice of Motion) May 11, 189

Trusts (Scotland) Bill
l. In Com., Rep. without Amendt.; re-com. to Standing Com. May 7, 1
Rep. without Amendt. May 11, 185
Read 3ª and Passed May 13, 328

TULLY, Mr. JASPER, Leitrim, S.
Crimean Veteran: Brennan (John) May 31, 1632
Drainage Works, Ireland May 27, 1431
Franchise Acts, 1885 May 25, 1261
Granard Union May 31, 1628
Loan Fund Board, Ireland May 28, 1518
Mohill Burial Ground, Leitrim May 20, 928
Mullingar Union May 21, 1031; May 27, 1424; May 28, 1518
Parliamentary Voters (Ireland) Registration Bill, Intro. May 24, 1216
Shorthorn Bulls, Ireland May 24, 1146
Supply: £114,389 for Local Government Board, Ireland May 21, 1074, 1077, 1081
Westmeath, Appointment of Sheriff May 31, 1628

TWEEDMOUTH, Lord
Provisional Order (Scotland) Bill, 1R. May 13, 336; 2R. May 20, 873, 878

URE, Mr. ALEXANDER, Linlithgow
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1356, 1384, 1385

Vaccination
Lymph Supply, Q. Sir W. O. Priestley; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 27, 1426
Royal Commission, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Mr. H. Chaplin May 13, 361

Vehicles (Lights) Bill
c. 2R., Mr. P. M. Thornton, 256, 257; [Mr. Speaker, 257, 262;] Mr. A. F. Jeffreys, 257; Mr. Grant Lawson, 158; Mr. F. Cawley, 258; Mr. H. Hobhouse, 258; Mr. J. P. Farrell, 259; Mr. R. Ascroft, 259; Mr. H. J. Wilson, 260; Mr. F. G. Banbury, 260; Mr. W. O. Clough, 260; Mr. A. K. Loyd, 261; Mr. J. Daly, 261; Mr. R. G. Webster, 262; Mr. J. Brigg, 262; (Division, 262) May 11
Read 2° May 11, 263
Mr. P. M. Thornton, (Motion to correct Journals of House) 265; [Mr. Speaker, 265;] Mr. J. Daly, 265; (Motion Agreed to, 265) May 12
In Com., R.P. May 18, 815
(For Questions see IRELAND)

Verminous Persons Bill
c. In Com. and Rep. May 28, 1591
Considered as Amended May 31, 1712

VINCENT, Colonel Sir C. E. HOWARD, Sheffield, Central
Alien Immigration May 28, 1505
Army Horses May 13, 365
Budget Resolutions May 10, 173
Cycling in Hyde Park May 10, 94
Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 407, 415, 436, 439
Queen's Reign, Review of Volunteers May 24, 1126
Telegraph Office, Dungeness May 13, 378
Trade, United Kingdom and Colonies May 11, 189

Volunteers Bill
c. In Com., Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, (Amendt.) 179, 180; Sir R. Webster, 180 May 10
In Com., Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, (Amendt.) 233, 234, [New Clause] 234; Sir R. Webster, 233, 234; (Division, 234); [Clause ordered to stand part of Bill, 234] May 11
Rep. as Amended May 11, 234
Considered as Amended May 12, 312
3R., Mr. J. Daly, 1012; Mr. Brodrick, 1012; Mr. H. E. Kearley, 1012; (Division, 1013) May 20
Read 3° and Passed May 20, 1013
l. Read 1ª May 21, 1017
2R., Marquess of Lansdowne, 1114, 1115; Lord Monkswell, 1115 May 24
Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House May 24, 1116

WALES
Berriew School Scheme, Q. Mr. Humphreys-Owen; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1621
Land Tenure (Wales and Monmouthshire) Bill (see that Title)

[cont.

WALES—cont.
Llanbedr School Board, Qs. Lord H. Cecil; As. Sir J. Gorst May 31, 1622
Llandudno Urban District Council Bill (see that Title)
Llangollen School Board, Qs. Mr. J. H. Roberts; As. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 920; May 31, 1632
School Boards
Llanbedr, Qs. Lord H. Cecil; As. Sir J. Gorst, May 31, 1622
Llangollen, Qs. Mr. J. H. Roberts; As. Sir J. Gorst May 20, 920; May 31, 1632
Swansea Grammar School, Q. Sir J. T. D. Llewelyn; A. Mr. Grant Lawson May 31, 1611
Telegram, Non-delivery, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts; A. Mr. Hanbury May 17, 618

WALROND, SIR WILLIAM H., BART. (Patronage Secretary to the Treasury), Devon, Tiverton
Divisions, House of Commons, May 18, 721

WALTON, Mr. J. LAWSON, Leeds, S.
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 24, 1209; May 25, 1304, 1333; May 26, 1377, 1378, 1382; May 31, 1691

WARING, Colonel THOMAS, Down, N.
Supply
£68,431 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses May 14, 534
£114,389 for Local Government Board (Ireland) May 21, 1094

WARKWORTH, Lord, Kensington, S.
South Kensington Museum May 28, 1522

WARNER, Mr. T. COURTENAY T., Staffordshire, Lichfield
East London Water Bill May 13, 358
Supply: £7,074 for Privy Council Office, Salaries and Expenses May 7, 83
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1652

WAR OFFICE
Secretary of State—Marquess of LANSDOWNE
Under Secretary of State—Mr. BRODRICK
Financial Secretary—Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS
(See ARMY)

WARR, Mr. AUGUSTUS F., Liverpool, East Toxteth
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 24, 1186; May 31, 1697

WAYS AND MEANS
In Com., Resolved:
  That it is expedient to Amend the Law relating to Customs and Inland Revenue May 21, 1107
Reso. Rep. and Agreed to May 24, 1214
Finance Bill, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach May 31, 1631
  (For Debate see Title of Bill)

Financial Statement, 1897-98
The Budget
Sir M. Hicks Beach, (Motion for Duty on Tea) 152, 164, 167, 169, 170, 171, 172, 177; Mr. A. O'Connor, (Amendt.) 152, 157, 160, 169, 170, 176; [Chairman, 157, 159, 160;] Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 161; Mr. J. A. Pease, 163, 165; Mr. J. P. Farrell, 165; Mr. H. E. Kearley, 165; Mr. J. Dillon, 166; Mr. Sydney Buxton, 171, 172; Sir H. Vincent, 173; Mr. J. W. Logan, 174; Mr. T. Lough, 175; (Division, 177). Reso. Agreed to May 10
Reso. Rep. and Agreed to May 11, 204

WEBSTER, Mr. R. G., St. Pancras, W.
Speeches in Parliament May 11, 244
Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 262

WEBSTER, SIR RICHARD E. (Attorney General), Isle of Wight
Administration of Oath, Court of Justice May 21, 1038
Covent Garden Theatre Fund May 31, 1603
Powell v. Kempton Park Company May 31, 1634
Statute Law Revision and Consolidation Bills May 20, 935
Voluntary Schools Act May 20, 935
Volunteers Bill, In Com. May 10, 180; May 11, 233, 234
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 18, 756, 762, 766; In Com. May 24, 1209, 1210; May 25, 1286, 1287, 1294, 1298, 1322, 1325, 1337, 1340; May 26, 1350, 1353, 1355, 1357, 1367, 1377, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1381, 1382; May 27, 1432, 1435, 1438, 1441, 1442, 1464, 1465, 1466, 1467, 1468, 1469, 1471, 1472, 1477, 1480; May 31, 1682, 1702, 1705

WEDDERBURN, Sir W., Bart., Banffshire
Ancient Monuments, India May 13, 383
Board of Revenue, Madras May 31, 1606
Compensation Allowance, European and Indian Officials May 20, 934
Exchange Compensation, India May 13, 361
Herring Brand Fees May 31, 1606
Indian Police May 31, 1627
Salt Duty, India May 13, 384
Scottish Fisheries Board May 31, 1608

Weights and Measures (Metric System) Bill
c. Intro., Mr. Ritchie; Read 1° May 27, 1432

WEIR, Mr. J. G., Ross and Cromarty
Business of the House, General May 13, 394
Congested Districts (Scotland) Bill May 20, 907, 908; May 31, 1636
Duty on Herrings May 24, 1136
Edinburgh University May 25, 1263
Fishery Cruisers May 20, 907; May 24, 1134; May 27, 1418; May 31, 1632
Herrings
  Duty on May 24, 1136
  Scotch, St. Petersburg 13, 380
Inspectors of Poor, Scotland May 31, 1618
Lewis
  Designation of the Island May 25, 1271
  Port Ness Harbour, May 11, 197; May 13, 369; May 20, 934; May 24, 1141; May 27, 1418
  Post Offices May 11, 189, 190; May 20, 909
Lochearnhead, St. Fillans, and Comrie Railway Bill May 13, 350
Parish Councils, Scotland May 13, 368; May 31, 1618
Port Ness Harbour, Lewis May 11, 197; May 13, 369; May 20, 934; May 24, 1141; May 27, 1418
Postal Telegraph Office May 25, 1264
Post Office
  Adult Messengers May 31, 1609
  Guide May 25, 1253
  Lewis May 11, 189, 190; May 20, 909
  Savings Bank May 13, 368; May 20, 923; May 25, 1252
Public Works, Scotland May 13, 369
River Nethy, Inverness-shire May 27, 1425
Royal Naval Reserve, Stornoway May 31, 1609
Scotch Herrings, St. Petersburg 13, 380
Scottish Fisheries Board May 31, 1608
Stornoway and Carloway Road May 24, 1140
Supply
  £18,000 for Harbour of Refuge, Peterhead May 28, 1555, 1556, 1557
  £29,215 for Mercantile Marine Fund May 28, 1575
  £132,859 for Privy Council Office for Trade, Salaries and Expenses May 28, 1563, 1564, 1573
  £189,367 for Rates on Government Property May 28, 1559
Telegraph Extensions, Scotland May 27, 1425
Trawling, Moray Firth May 25, 1256
Weighing of Cattle, Scotland May 13, 367
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1675

WEMYSS AND MARCH, Earl of
Industries (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 25, 1239

Westminster (see METROPOLIS)

WHITELEY, Mr. G., Stockport
Supply: £34,291 for Board of Agriculture May 28, 1586
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1356; May 27, 1438, 1449, 1482

WHITMORE, Mr. C. A., Chelsea
South Kensington Museum May 31, 1614

WHITTAKER, Mr. T. P., Yorkshire, W.R., Spen Valley
- Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, 2R. May 13, 404, 432, 433

WILLIAMS, Mr. J. CARVELL, Nottinghamshire, Mansfield
- Business of the House, General May 28, 1523
- Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 143; 3R. May 20, 952
- Honiton
  - Elementary School, Holy Week May 14, 498
  - National Schools May 20, 916
- Liverpool City Churches Bill, 2R. May 24, 1120
- North Mundham School Board May 24, 1129
- Queen's Reign, Jubilee Procession May 21, 1029
- School Boards, Loans May 20, 916

WILLIAMS, MR. J. POWELL (Financial Secretary to the War Office), Birmingham, S.
- Army
  - Food and Forage Supplies May 31, 1625, 1626
  - Regulations, St. Patrick's Day May 28, 1521
  - Remounts May 25, 1270
  - Service Record: Deniston (Joseph) May 27, 1408
- Business of the House, Supply: Ordnance Factory Vote May 20, 924
- Cavalry Recruiting Standard May 27, 1417
- Crimean Veteran: Brennan (John) May 31, 1632
- Queen's Reign, Veterans' Pensions May 27, 1413; May 28, 1510
- Royal Horse Artillery May 31, 1607

WILLOUGHBY DE ERESBY, Lord, Lincolnshire, Horncastle
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 31, 1670

WILLOX, Mr. J. A., Liverpool, Everton
- Foreigners as British Pilots May 25, 1257
- King's Lynn, Pilot Commissioners May 27, 1417

WILSON, Mr. C. H., Hull, W.
- Custom House, London May 24, 1135

WILSON, Mr. H. J., Yorkshire, W. R., Holmfirth
- Vehicles (Lights) Bill, 2R. May 11, 260

WILSON, Mr. JOHN, Durham, Mid
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1163; In Com. May 25, 1286, 1309, 1314, 1324; May 26, 1366, 1381, 1390; May 27, 1440, 1452, 1471, 1472

WILSON, Mr. JOHN, Falkirk Burghs
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 686, 690; In Com. May 25, 1300, 1305, 1313; May 26, 1349, 1354, 1383, 1393; May 27, 1438, 1465

WILSON, Mr. JOHN, Lanarkshire, Govan
- Dog Licence, Govan May 21, 1026
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill 2R. May 12, 303

WILSON, Mr. JOSEPH HAVELOCK, Middlesbrough
- British Seamen in Foreign Ports May 18, 732
- Indian and Australian Mails May 18, 730
- Mercantile Marine, Accidents to Seamen May 18, 731
- Post Office Establishments May 18, 731
- Seamen
  - Accidents to, Mercantile Marine May 18, 731
  - British, in Foreign Ports May 18, 732
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 17, 624; In Com. May 25, 1312, 1318; May 31, 1684, 1689, 1690, 1699, 1701

WILSON, Mr. JOHN WILLIAM, Worcestershire, N.
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 25, 1304

WOLFF, Mr. G. W., Belfast, W.
- American Cattle May 28, 1511
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, In Com. May 26, 1366; May 27, 1473

WOODS, FORESTS, AND LAND REVENUES OF THE CROWN
- Cycling in Hyde Park, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 10, 94
- Government Offices, Sites, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 14, 495
- Hyde Park
  - Cycling in, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 10, 94
  - Footpaths, Qs. Captain Norton; As. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 24, 1131
- Magnetic Observatory, Greenwich, Q. Lord H. Cecil; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 28, 1520
- South Kensington Museum, Q. Sir F. S. Powell, Mr. C. A. Whitmore; As. Mr. Akers-Douglas May 31, 1614

WOODS, Mr. SAMUEL, Essex, Walthamstow
- Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill, 2R. May 17, 653; In Com. May 24, 1184; May 25, 1309; May 27, 1448, 1472; May 31, 1676

Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill

c. 2R., Mr. G. Drage, (Amendt.) 636; Sir F. S. Powell, 644; Mr. E. Bainbridge, 644, 703; Mr. S. Woods, 653; Mr. H. Seton-Karr, 655, 703; Sir C. Dilke, 658, 663; Sir Matthew White Ridley, 663, 694, 702, 703; Sir E. S. Hill, 665; Mr. H. Broadhurst, 667; Mr. A. Strauss, 670; Mr. Atherley-Jones, 673; Mr. A. Helder, 676; Mr. R. Ascroft, 676, 680, 681; Sir W. Houldsworth, 680; Mr. J. Burns, 680; [Mr. Speaker, 680;] Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, 681; Mr. J. Wilson (Falkirk), 686, 690; Mr. A. Birrell, 690; Sir J. Joicey, 702; Mr. T. Burt, 704; Mr. C. A. Cripps, 708; Adj. May 17.

Debate Resumed on Mr. Drage's Amendt.: Mr. H. J. Tennant, 734; Mr. L. R. Holland, 737; Mr. A. D. Provand, 741; Mr. H. H. Asquith, 747, 762; Sir R. Webster, 756, 762, 766; Sir J. T. Brunner, 763, 766; Mr. E. A. Goulding, 766; Sir J. Joicey, 767, 793, 794, 805; Mr. T. Richardson, 773; Mr. C. Fenwick, 775; Sir A. Hickman, 777; Mr. J. W. Logan, 779; Sir A. K. Rollit, 783; Mr. T. G. Ashton, 786; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 789, 793, 794, 795, 805, 811; Mr. H. E. Kearley, 793; Mr. E. Bainbridge, 793; Mr. H. Broadhurst, 794, 795; Mr. J. Samuel, 811; Mr. R. McKenna, 811; Colonel Blundell, 812; Mr. H. J. Reckitt, 812; Mr. G. Drage, 813; (Amendt. withwithdrawn, 813) May 18

Read 2° May 18, 813

Mr. H. H. Asquith, 813; Sir Matthew White Ridley, 813 May 18

On the Order to go into Com.: Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1151, 1172; [Mr. Speaker, 1151, 1153]. Instructions to Com., Ten in number, stood in the following names:—Sir J. Jenkins, Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, Mr. R. McKenna, Mr. S. T. Evans (2), Mr. H. J. Tennant, Mr. J. G. Butcher, Mr. H. Seton-Karr, Mr. H. J. Reckitt, and Mr. J. A. Pease. [Mr. Speaker ruled all the Instructions out of Order except that standing in the name of Mr. H. J. Tennant;] Mr. H. J. Tennant, (Instr. to Com.) 1155, 1160; Sir Matthew White Ridley, 1156; Mr. R. B. Haldane, 1158; Colonel Blundell, 1159; Mr. J. Burns, 1159, 1171; Mr. Stuart-Wortley, 1160; Sir J. Joicey, 1160; Mr. Abel Thomas, 1161; Mr. C. B. Renshaw, 1161; Mr. J. M. Paulton, 1161; Sir E. S. Hill, 1162; Sir C. Dilke, 1162; Sir A. B. Forwood, (Amendt.) 1162, 1172; Mr. G. Wyndham, 1163; Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), 1163; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 1163; Sir J. Pease, 1163; Mr. A. Cross, 1164; Mr. H. H. Asquith, 1164, 1167, 1170; Sir J. Blundell Maple, 1167; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 1168, 1170, 1171; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1172); Mr. H. E. Kearley, 1172; Mr. P. A. Muntz, 1173; Mr. R. McKenna, 1173; Colonel Denny, 1173; (Division, 1174) May 24

In Com., Mr. Tomlinson, 1175, 1207; Mr. T. W. Nussey, (Amendt.) 1175; Mr. H. Seton-Karr, 1178, (Amendt.) 1211; Sir Matthew White Ridley, 1182, 1209, 1210; Mr. H. Broadhurst, 1183; Mr. Stuart-Wortley, 1183; Mr. S. Woods, 1184; Mr. J. M. Maclean, 1184; Mr. A. F. Warr, 1186; Mr. W. J. Galloway, 1186; Sir J. Pease, 1188; Sir A. B. Forwood, 1189, 1193; Mr. F. Cawley, 1189; Colonel Milward, 1191; Mr. J. Burns, 1192, 1193, 1202; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 1195; Sir F. H. Evans, 1196, 1197, 1201, 1203, 1204; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 1197, 1198, 1199, 1201, 1202, 1203, 1204, 1211; Mr. H. H. Asquith, 1199; Mr. R. B. Haldane, 1205; Sir J. Joicey, 1206; Mr. R. McKenna, 1208, (Amendt.) 1208, 1209; (Division, 1208); Sir R. Webster, 1209, 1210; (Amendt. negatived, 1209); Mr. W. J. Galloway, (Amendt.) 1209; (Amendt. negatived, 1209); Mr. J. L. Walton, (Amendt.) 1209; (Amendt. Agreed to, 1210); Colonel Denny, (Amendt.) 1210; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1210); R.P. May 24

In Com., Debate Resumed on Mr. Seton-Karr's Amendt.: Sir C. Dilke, 1274, 1275, 1277, (Amendt.) 1296, 1300; [Chairman, 1275, 1328, 1341;] Mr. C. A. Cripps, 1277; Sir J. Joicey, 1279, 1303, 1307; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 1281, 1297, 1305, 1308, 1309, 1313, 1316, 1327, 1331, 1341; Mr. C. Fenwick, 1284, 1318; Mr. Tomlinson, 1285, 1325; Mr. W. Abraham (Rhondda), 1285; Sir R. Webster, 1286, (Amendt.) 1287, 1294, 1298, 1322, 1325, 1337, 1340; Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), 1286, 1309, (Amendt.) 1314, 1324; Mr. P. J. Stanhope, 1287; Sir A. B. Forwood, 1289; Mr. H. H. Asquith, 1289, 1299, 1305, 1309, 1341, 1342; Sir F. S. Powell, 1290; Mr. B. Pickard, 1290, 1328; Sir Matthew White Ridley, 1290, 1299, 1304, 1305, 1307, 1329; Sir F. Lockwood, 1292; Mr. J. M. Maclean, 1293; Mr. R. McKenna, 1294; Mr. A. Hopkinson, 1295; Sir R. T. Reid, 1298, 1307; Mr. R. Ascroft, 1299; (Amendts. withdrawn, 1300); Mr. J. Wilson (Falkirk), (Amendt.) 1300, 1305, 1313; Sir A. K. Rollit, 1301, 1308; Mr. C. Harrison, 1302, (Amendt.) 1305; Colonel Denny, 1303, 1306, 1314; Mr. J. A. Pease, 1303; Mr. J. W. Wilson, 1304; Sir J. Pease, 1304, 1308; Mr. J. L. Walton, 1304, 1333; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1305); Mr. R. B. Haldane, 1306, (Amendt.) 1329, 1342; Mr. C. B. Renshaw, 1307, (Amendt.) 1327; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1307; Mr. S. Woods, 1309; Mr. C. Seely, 1310; Mr. J. W. Crombie, 1311; Mr. W. J. Galloway, 1311, 1325; Mr. E. Bainbridge, 1312, 1326; Mr. J. P. Smith, 1312; Mr. J. Havelock Wilson, 1312, 1318; Mr. T. R. Leuty, 1313; (Amendts. withdrawn, 1314, 1318); Mr. L. Hardy, (Amendt.) 1318, 1327; Mr. H. Seton-Karr, 1319, 1325; Colonel Blundell, 1324; Sir A. Hickman, 1325; (Amendt. negatived, 1327); (Amendt. withdrawn, 1327); Mr. W. R. Bousfield, (Amendt.) 1327, 1328, 1340; (Amendt. negatived, 1329); Mr. T. T. Bucknill, 1335; Mr. Atherley-Jones, 1335, 1341; Mr S. T. Evans, 1339, 1342; Mr. Abel Thomas, 1340; R.P. May 25

In Com., Debate Resumed on Mr. Haldane' Amendt.: Sir Matthew White Ridley, 1347

[cont.

[cont.

Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill—cont.

(Amendt.) 1348, 1363, 1378; Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, 1347, 1354, 1355; [Chairman, 1347, 1350, 1354, 1378]; Sir R. T. Reid, 1349, 1381, 1383, 1391; Mr. C. A. Cripps, 1349, 1357, 1383; Mr. J. Wilson (Falkirk), 1349, 1354, (Amendt.) 1383, 1393; Sir R. Webster, 1350, 1353, 1355, 1357, 1367, 1377, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1381, 1382; Mr. H. H. Asquith, 1351, 1363, 1382, 1386, 1389; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 1352, 1358, (Amendt.) 1363, 1370, 1379, 1380, 1387, 1389, 1390, 1392, (Amendt.) 1393; Mr. H. J. Tennant, 1353; Sir J. Joicey, 1353, 1391; Mr. C. B. Renshaw, 1354, 1377, (Amendt.) 1378, 1379, 1380, 1381, 1393; Sir A. Hickman, 1355; Mr. A. Ure, 1356, 1384, 1385; Mr. G. Whiteley, 1356; Mr. J. P. Smith, 1357, 1358; Mr. T. Shaw, 1358; Sir E. Clarke, 1359, 1369; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1361, 1393; Mr. E. Robertson, 1361; Mr. Sydney Gedge, 1362; (Amendt. Agreed to, 1363); Mr. J. Burns, 1365; Mr. H. Seton-Karr, 1366, 1380; Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), 1366, 1381, 1390; Mr. G. W. Wolff, 1366; Mr. C. Fenwick, 1367; Mr. Lees Knowles, 1368, 1386; Mr. R. B. Haldane, 1368; Mr. T. Burt, 1370; Mr. M. Oldroyd, 1371; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1372; Sir F. T. Mappin, 1373; (Division, 1374); Mr. J. L. Walton, 1377, 1378, 1382; Mr. J. B. Balfour, 1380; Mr. A. Hopkinson, 1380; Mr. Grant Lawson, 1381; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1382); Mr. R. McKenna, (Amendt.) 1382; (Amendt. Agreed to, 1383); Mr. W. J. Galloway, 1385; Mr. J. M. Paulton, 1387; Mr. Tomlinson, 1391; Mr. R. Ascroft, 1392; Colonel Denny, 1392; R.P. May 26

In Com., Sir Matthew White Ridley, (Motion for Expenses) 1433; Sir C. Dilke, 1433 May 27

Reso. Agreed to May 27, 1433

Debate Resumed on Mr. J. Chamberlain's Amendt. to Mr. J. Wilson's (Falkirk) Amendt.: Mr. W. J. Galloway, 1435, 1447, 1466, 1467, 1468; Sir R. Webster, 1435, 1438, 1441, 1442, 1464, 1465, (Amendt.) 1466, 1467, 1468, 1469, (Amendt.) 1471, 1472, 1477, 1480; Sir J. Pease, 1436; Mr. R. B. Haldane, 1436, 1469; Mr. E. Bainbridge, 1437, 1442, Sir Matthew White Ridley, 1437, 1438. 1453, 1462, 1463, (Amendt.) 1483; Mr. G. Whiteley, 1438, 1449, 1482; Mr. H. H. Asquith, 1438, 1454, 1458, 1480; Mr. J. Wilson (Falkirk), 1438, (Amendt.) 1465; Mr. J. B. Balfour, 1438, 1466; Mr. Atherley-Jones, 1439, 1470; Mr. T. Burt, 1439; [Chairman, 1439, 1444, 1446, 1447, 1464, 1469, 1470, 1471;] Sir J. Joicey, 1439, (Amendt.) 1483, 1485; Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), 1440, 1452, 1471, 1472; Mr. H. Broadhurst, 1441, 1445; Mr. J. Burns, 1441, 1442, 1449, 1472; Mr. C. Fenwick, 1442, 1460, 1471; (Amendts. withdrawn, 1442); Mr. R. Ascroft, (Amendt.) 1442, 1443, 1444, (Amendt.) 1462, 1467; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 1443, 1445, 1446, 1458, 1471, 1472, 1474, 1476, 1477, 1479, 1484, 1485; Mr. E. Strachey, 1445, 1446, 1447, 1464; Mr. S. Woods, 1448, 1472; Colonel Mellor, 1451; Mr. Tomlinson, 1461, 1468; Mr. H. Seton-Karr, 1461, 1482, 1484; (Division, 1462); (Amendt. as Amended Agreed to, 1462); Mr. J. A. Pease, (Amendt.) 1462, 1463, 1467, (Amendt.) 1474, 1476; Mr. A. H. D. Acland, 1463; Captain Sinclair, 1463; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1463); Colonel Denny, (Amendt.) 1464, 1480; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1464); Sir C. Dilke, (Amendt.) 1464, 1465, 1471, 1482; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1465); Mr. R. W. Perks, (Amendt.) 1465, 1484; (Division, 1465;) Mr. T. H. Cochrane, 1466; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1466); (Amendt. Agreed to, 1466); Mr. R. McKenna, (Amendt.) 1468, 1470; Mr. C. A. Cripps, 1470, 1479; (Division, 1470); (Amendt. Agreed to, 1471); Mr. B. Pickard, (Amendt.) 1471, 1474; Mr. J. P. Smith, 1472, 1478, 1479; Mr. T. T. Bucknill, 1472; Mr. G. W. Wolff, 1473; (Division, 1474); (Amendt. withdrawn, 1476); Mr. L. R. Holland, 1476, (Amendt.) 1477; Mr. W. R. Bousfield, 1480; Mr. Stuart-Wortley, 1481; Mr. J. M. Paulton, 1481; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1483); (Amendt. Agreed to, 1483); Mr. J. W. Logan, 1485; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1485) May 27

[cont.

Reso. Rep. and Agreed to May 28, 1591

In Com., Debate Resumed: Mr. R. Ascroft, 1639; Mr. C. Harrison, 1640, 1682, (Amendt.) 1701; [Chairman, 1640, 1682, 1690, 1691, 1704;] Mr. J. M. Maclean, (Amendt.) 1641, 1652; Sir Matthew White Ridley, 1642, 1643, 1656, 1676, 1701, 1703, 1704; Mr. R. McKenna, 1643, 1701; Sir J. Pease, 1644, 1671; Mr. H. Seton-Karr, 1645; Mr. E. Bainbridge, 1646; Mr. Lees Knowles, 1647; Mr. T. W. Legh, 1648; Captain Bethell, 1648; Mr. J. W. Logan, 1649, 1654; Colonel Blundell, 1649; Mr. C. H. Seely, 1649; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 1650, 1664, 1677; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 1652; Mr. F. A. Newdigate, 1652; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1653); Mr. E. A. Goulding, (Amendt.) 1653; Mr. R. W. Perks, 1658; Mr. A. F. Jeffreys, 1659; Mr. R. Souttar, 1661; Major Rasch, 1662; Mr. H. H. Asquith, 1662; Sir C. Dilke, 1666, 1691, (Amendt.) 1701; Sir M. Stewart, 1668; Mr. J. W. Crombie, 1669; Lord Willoughby de Eresby, 1670; Mr. H. Hobhouse, 1672; Mr. Bryn Roberts, 1673; Mr. H. S. Foster, 1673; Sir W. Hart Dyke, 1674; Mr. H. Broadhurst, 1674, (Amendt.) 1702, 1703; Mr. C. T. Giles, 1675; Mr. J. G. Weir, 1675; (Division, 1676); Mr. S. Woods, (Amendt.) 1676; (Amendt. withdrawn, 1676); Sir F. H. Evans, (Amendt.) 1676, 1690, 1696; Sir A. B. Forwood, 1678; Mr. Sydney Buxton, 1679, 1694; Sir E. S. Hill, 1680; Mr. J. Samuel, 1681; Sir H. S. King, 1681, (Amendt. to Amendt.) 1682, 1696; Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, 1681; Sir R. Webster, 1682, 1702, 1705; Mr. J. Burns, 1682, 1700; Captain Norton, 1682, 1702 Mr. W. F. Lawrence, 1683; Mr. J Havelock Wilson, 1684, 1689, 1690, 1699, 1701; Colonel Denny, 1689, 1690; Mr. J. L. Walton, 1691; Sir Donald Currie, 1694; Sir T. Sutherland, 1695; (Amendt. to Amendt. withdrawn, 1696); Mr. A. F.

[cont.

Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill—cont.
- Warr, 1697; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1698, 1700, 1701; Sir J. Colomb, 1699; (Division, 1701); (Amendt. negatived, 1701); (Division, 1702); (Amendt. withdrawn, 1704); Mr. J. A. Pease, (Amendt.) 1704; Mr. Abel Thomas, 1705; R.P. May 31

(For Questions see LABOUR QUESTIONS)

WORKS, FIRST COMMISSIONER
Mr. A. AKERS-DOUGLAS

WORTLEY, Right Hon. C. B. STUART-, Sheffield, Hallam
British Troops in India, Health May 14, 502
Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, 2R. May 11, 219
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1160, In Com. 1183; May 27, 1481

Wrecks (see SHIPWRECKS)

WYNDHAM, Mr. GEORGE, Dover
Workmen (Compensation for Accidents) Bill May 24, 1163

YORK, Lord Archbishop of (Dr. William Dalrymple Maclagan)
Church Patronage Transfers Bill, 2R. May 14, 465, 466

YOUNG, Mr. S., Cavan, E.
Land Sub-Commissions May 13, 364
Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, 2R. May 12, 300

YOUNGER, Mr. W., Lincolnshire, Stamford
Teachers (Superannuation) Bill May 27, 1430

YOXALL, Mr. J. H., Nottingham, W.
Elementary Education Act (1870) Amendment Bill, In Com. May 10, 123, 145
Expulsion of Mr. Macpherson from Paris May 11, 193
Queen's Reign
  School
    Attendances May 20, 914
    Examinations May 21, 1030
Science and Art Schools, Grants May 13, 367
Technical Education May 14, 502

Zanzibar: Slavery in (see AFRICA)

END OF VOLUME XLIX., AND FIFTH VOLUME OF SESSION 1897.

PRINTED BY WATERLOW AND SONS LIMITED, LONDON WALL, LONDON.